Ver. 13. And if the whole congregation of Iſrael ſin through ignorance.] The Jews generally underſtood, by the whole congregation, the great Sanhedrim, who repreſented all the people of Iſrael. Theſe elders ſometimes erred in judgment, and thereby miſled the people; for which reaſon they were obliged, when they diſcovered their error, to offer this ſacrifice. Yet the Talmudiſts have raiſed many diſputes upon this point, and made various caſes; in ſome of which the houſe of judgment were bound to offer the ſacrifice here appointed, and not they who followed their ſentence: And others there were, in which they who followed their ſentence were bound, and not the judges themſelves. But if Moſes's words are well conſider'd, it will appear, that he ſpeaks of a ſin committed by all the people, in doing ſomething that God had forbidden, by making wrong conſtructions of the law, or by common falſe opinions, or popular cuſtoms; for the whole congregation is here plainly diſtinguiſhed from the elders of the people, ver. 15. which is certainly the name for their judges and governours. The learned Mr. Selden thought, that this ſacrifice was not offered for the Sanhedrim, but by them, for the people.

——— And the things be hid from the eyes of the aſſembly.] That is, if they are not ſenſible of their miſtake for the preſent, but afterwards diſcover it either by themſelves or by their rulers.

——— And they have done ſomewhat againſt any of the commandments of the Lord, concerning things which ought not to be done.] Have offended againſt ſome of the negative precepts (as the Jews ſpeak) which forbid ſuch things to be done; ſee ver. 2.

Ver. 16. And the prieſt that is anointed, &c.] That is, the high-prieſt; ſee ver. 3. All the reſt that follows, to ver. 22. is exactly the ſame that is preſcribed in the foregoing offering, for the high-prieſt himſelf. Only R. Solomon Jarchi hath a curious obſervation on the next verſe; that it is not ſaid in this caſe, as it is in the former, he ſhall ſprinkle of the blood ſeven times before the vail of the ſanctuary, but only before the vail, without the addition of hakkodeſh, of the ſanctuary, as it is in ver. 6. "Becauſe, ſaith he, if the high-prieſt only ſin, the holi-"neſs doth not depart; but if all the congregation ſin, "then it doth depart. As if a province rebel againſt a "prince, his family ſtands; but if there be a general de-"fection, he muſt fall." He hath the like obſervation upon ver. 22, 23. but it ſeems too ſubtile: For in ver. 18. Moſes only ſaith, he ſhall put ſome of the blood upon the horns of the altar, without adding, of ſweet incenſe, (as before, ver. 7.) and yet it is manifeſt, he means the ſame altar; and what was done in this ſacrifice was as acceptable as what was done in the other.

Ve. 22. When a ruler hath ſinned and done ſomewhat through ignorance, &c.] The word Naſi, which we tranſlate Ruler, ſignifies the head of a tribe; but the Jews commonly underſtand it peculiarly of the head or prince of the great Sanhedrim; who, when they were under the government of kings, was the king himſelf. Thus the Miſna gathers from theſe words in the text, (where he ſinneth againſt any of the commandments of the Lord his God) which ſignify him, ſay the doctors, who hath no ſuperior but the Lord; and ſo the Gemariſts underſtand it likewiſe: But we think it moſt reaſonable, to extend this expreſſion, to all great officers and judges, who had a peculiar relation to God, and therefore were called by his name.

Ver. 23. Or if his ſin wherein he hath ſinned, come to his knowledge.] If we retain this tranſlation, (and do not render the firſt word and, but or) then the foregoing words in the latter end of ver. 22. veaſhem, muſt be tranſlated (not is guilty, but) and acknowledges his guilt; which ſeems to be the true ſenſe; for when men ſin, they are guilty, tho' the ſin was committed ignorantly; but they do not acknowledge their guilt till they diſcover it, as Moſes here ſuppoſes they might, when they conſidered better, or were informed by others aright: So theſe words ſignify, or his ſin is made known unto him: thus l'Empereur very judiciouſly tranſlates this paſſage, and he acknowledges himſelf guilty, or his ſin be ſhewn to him; otherwiſe here is no room for this disjunctive particle.

———He ſhall bring his offering, a kid of the goats.] His ſacrifice was of a leſs value than the two former. From which Mr. Selden concludes, that the high-prieſt was not always the head of the Sanhedrim; for their ſacrifices were very different, which argues a difference in their perſons. And the Miſna ſays, that if the high-prieſt were diſplaced from his office, his ſacrifice was ſtill the ſame, viz. a bullock without blemiſh; but it was not ſo with the Naſi or Ruler, who offered only the ſacrifice of a private man, if he loſt his office.

——— Male without blemiſh.] It was to be the beſt of this kind, though not equal to the ſacrifice for the high-prieſt, and the whole congregation; ſee ver. 28.

Ver. 24. And he ſhall lay his hand upon the head of the goat, and kill it in the place where they kill the burnt-offering before the Lord.] Where that was, ſee chap. i. 11. Neither of the two fore-mentioned offerings (for the high-prieſt or the whole congregation) are ordered to be killed here, but before the Lord; ver. 14, 15. that is, in any part of the court, except that part which was appropriated to the burnt-offering, and the common ſin-offering, as it here follows.

———It is a ſin-offering.] And therefore was to be killed where the burnt-offering was; for ſo it is ordained, chap. vi. 25. that all ſin-offerings ſhould be there ſlain. Which doth not imply, that the two former were not ſin-offerings, but that they were not of the common ſort; as appears, by the carrying of their blood into the ſanctuary, and burning their fleſh without the camp; which are not ordered either in this, or in the following ſacrifices.

Ver. 27, 28. And if any one of the common people ſin through ignorance, and be guilty; or if his ſin which he hath committed come to his knowledge, &c.] As the perſon who made this offering, was one of the common people, leſs was required of him than of a prince, who was to offer a male, ver. 23. which, in all creatures, were of more value than a female; as Maimonides obſerves, who reckons up forty-three offences of this ſort, that might be committed imprudently (in his treatiſe called Schegagoth) in one of which, viz. worſhipping an idol ignorantly, the ſacrifice was the ſame for a private man, as for the king, or the high-prieſt, or the prieſt anointed for war; but in all the other forty-two, a female goat or lamb ſufficed for a private man; and this ſacrifice the Jews call ſtated or fixed, becauſe no perſons offered more or leſs, whether rich, or poor, man or woman; except only thoſe who ate holy things, or entred into the ſanctuary; whoſe ſacrifices were higher or lower, (as they ſpeak) and there were three things, if we may believe them, which, though committed by error, were expiated by no ſacrifice; namely, blaſphemy, neglect of circumciſion, and not keeping the paſſover: Which ſeems to be an unreaſonable opinion, ſince idolatry committed ignorantly, they ſay, was comprehended within this law.

Ver. 31. And the prieſt ſhall burn it upon the altar, for a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord.] This is a phraſe uſed concerning burnt-offerings, chap. i. 9, 13. and peace-offerings, chap. iii. 5, 16. but it is not ſaid of any of the foregoing ſin-offerings, that the burning of them, or their fat, was for a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord; the reaſon of which we are not able to aſſign, unleſs it was to comfort the loweſt ſort of people with hope of God's mercy, though their offering was mean, in compariſon of thoſe offered by others. Abarbinel gives this reaſon for it, becauſe a ſin of ignorance being a leſs fault in a common man, it was a ſign of great probity in him, to bring a ſacrifice for the expiation of it: But for the high-prieſt, or ſenate, or ruler of the people, to be ignorant of the law, was ſuch an aggravated crime, that it was no commendation to them, to bring a ſacrifice for their purgation.

Ver. 35. And the prieſt ſhall burn them upon the altar, according to the offerings made by fire unto the Lord, and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for his ſin, &c.] And if by the ſame error he had committed ſeveral ſins, there was a diſtinct atonement to be made for every one of them: ſo that if he had committed ignorantly the forty-three offences before-mentioned, tho' it were by one and the ſame error, he was bound to offer as many expiatory ſacrifices, as Maimonides reſolves in the fore-nam'd treatiſe Schegagoth, cap. 4. This, and ſuch like things, made this law a yoke, which they were not able to bear, as St. Peter ſpeaks, Acts xv. 10.

CHAP. V.

1 He that ſinneth in concealing his knowledge, 2 in touching an unclean thing, 4 or in making an oath: 6 His treſpaſs-offering, of the flock, 7 of fowls, 11 or of flour. 14 The treſpaſs-offering in ſacrilege, 17 and in ſins of ignorance.

AND if a ſoul ſin, and hear the voice of ſwearing, and is a witneſs, whether he hath ſeen or known of it; if he do not utter it, then he ſhall bear his iniquity.

2 Or if a ſoul touch any unclean thing, whether it be a carcaſe of an unclean beaſt, or a carcaſe of unclean cattle, or the carcaſe of unclean creeping things, and if it be hidden from him; he alſo ſhall be unclean, and guilty.

3 Or if he touch the uncleanneſs of man, whatſoever uncleanneſs it be that a man ſhall be defiled withal, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he ſhall be guilty.

4 Or if a ſoul ſwear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatſoever it be that a man ſhall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he ſhall be guilty in one of theſe.

5 And it ſhall be, when he ſhall be guilty in one of theſe things, that he ſhall confeſs that he hath ſinned in that thing.

6 And he ſhall bring his treſpaſs-offering unto the LORD for his ſin which he hath ſinned, a female from the flock, a lamb or a kid of the goats, for a ſin-offering: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him concerning his ſin.

7 And if he be not able to bring a lamb, then he ſhall bring for his treſpaſs which he hath committed, two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, unto the LORD: one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering.

8 And he ſhall bring them unto the prieſt, who ſhall offer that which is for the ſin-offering firſt, and wring off his head from from his neck, but ſhall not divide it aſunder.

9 And he ſhall ſprinkle of the blood of the ſin-offering upon the ſide of the altar; and the reſt of the blood ſhall be wrung out at the bottom of the altar: it is a ſin-offering.

10 And he ſhall offer the ſecond for a burnt-offering, according to the manner: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him, for his ſin which he hath ſinned, and it ſhall be forgiven him.

11 ¶ But if he be not able to bring two turtle doves, or two young pigeons; then he that hath ſinned, ſhall bring for his offering the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a ſin-offering: he ſhall put no oyl upon it, neither ſhall he put any frankincenſe thereon: for it is a ſin-offering.

12 Then ſhall he bring it to the prieſt, and the prieſt ſhall take his handful of it, even a memorial thereof, and burn it on the altar, according to the offerings made by fire unto the LORD: it is a ſin-offering.

13 And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him, as touching his ſin that he hath ſinned in one of theſe, and it ſhall be forgiven him: and the remnant ſhall be the prieſts, as a meat-offering.

14 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

15 If a ſoul commit a treſpaſs, and ſin through ignorance, in the holy things of the LORD: then he ſhall bring for his treſpaſs unto the LORD, a ram without blemiſh out of the flocks, with thy eſtimation by ſhekels of ſilver, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, for a treſpaſs-offering.

16 And he ſhall make amends for the harm that he hath done in the holy thing, and ſhall add the fifth part thereto, and give it unto the prieſt: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him with the ram of the treſpaſs-offering, and it ſhall be forgiven him.

17 ¶ And if a ſoul ſin, and commit any of theſe things which are forbidden to be done by the commandments of the LORD; though he wiſt it not, yet is he guilty, and ſhall bear his iniquity.

18 And he ſhall bring a ram without blemiſh out of the flock, with thy eſtimation, for a treſpaſs-offering unto the prieſt: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him concerning his ignorance wherein he erred, and wiſt it not; and it ſhall be forgiven him.

19 It is a treſpaſs-offering: he hath certainly treſpaſſed againſt the LORD.

Ver. 1. If a ſoul ſin, and hear the voice of ſwearing, and is a witneſs.] Being adjured in the name of God, when he is called to be witneſs in a cauſe, to ſpeak the truth. For Judges had this power, to uſe ſuch adjurations, that they might either draw a confeſſion from an accuſed perſon, or a faithful teſtimony from a witneſs. Of the former, there is a ſolemn form remaining in ſcripture, 1 Kings, chap. xvii. 16. 2 Chron. chap. xviii. 15. as Grotius hath obſerved upon Matth. chap. xxvi. ver. 63. And Doctor Hammond, upon the ſame place, hath related inſtances of the latter, 1 Kings, chap. vii. ver. 31. Prov. chap. xxix. ver. 24. and Micha's mother ſeems, by her own authority, to have adjured her family, as they dreaded the vengeance of the Divine Majeſty, to diſcover if they knew any thing of the eleven hundred ſhekels of ſilver, which had been ſtolen from her, Jud. chap. xvii. ver. 2. in all which caſes, men were bound to anſwer, as much as if they had taken a ſolemn oath ſo to do. Inſomuch, that our bleſſed Lord himſelf being thus adjured, made an anſwer to the court of judgment, tho' he ſtood ſilent, before.

———Whether he hath ſeen or known of it, if he do not utter it, then he ſhall bear his iniquity.] Let him not think it is no offence to ſuppreſs the truth, when he is ſo ſolemnly admoniſhed to declare it; but offer ſuch a ſacrifice for his ſin, as is preſcribed, verſe 1. which belongs to all the following caſes. The Jews make four ſorts of oaths in their courts, or commerce one with another: as Mr. Selden hath obſerved out of their writers, which are raſh oaths, vain oaths, (of which they alſo enumerate four ſorts) oaths about truſt (mentioned, chap. vi. ver. 2, 3.) and this which they call the oath of teſtimony; which they ſay, every man was bound to give before the Sanhedrim, when he was required. With this diſtinction between capital and pecuniary cauſes, that in the latter, a man was not bound to come and teſtify, unleſs he was cited by the plaintiff, or by the court; but in capital cauſes, and in ſuch things as the law prohibited, (as if a man ſaw another ſmite his neighbour) he was bound to come of his own accord, without any ſummons, and give his teſtimony in court. Yet in this they make ſome difference, as may be ſeen in R. Levi Barcelonita, Precept. 120.

Ver. 2. Or if a ſoul touch any unclean thing, whether it be a carcaſe of an unclean beaſt, he alſo ſhall be unclean and guilty.] The Hebrew doctors expound this of ſuch perſons, as, having touched any of the unclean things which are mentioned in this verſe and in the next, came into the ſanctuary, or did eat of the holy things. Which they gather out of chap. vii. verſe 20, 21. and Numb. chap. xix. verſe 20. where cutting off is threatned to thoſe, who knowingly were ſo guilty. For otherwiſe, it was ſufficient for the expiation of a perſon who touched any unclean thing, to waſh himſelf; and his uncleanneſs laſted only till the evening. See chap. xi. and Numb. xix.

Ver. 4. Or if a ſoul ſwear, pronouncing with his mouth, to do evil or good, and it be hid from him, he ſhall be guilty in one of theſe.] He ſhall be obliged to offer a ſacrifice, if he have ſworn raſhly in any of the foregoing inſtances.

Ver. 5, 6. And it ſhall be when he is guilty in one of theſe things, that he ſhall confeſs, that he hath ſinned in that thing. And he ſhall bring his treſpaſs-offering unto the Lord, &c.] As the Hebrews call the ſin-offering, mentioned in the foregoing chapter, verſe 27. a fixed ſacrifice, ſo they call this higher, or lower; being brought according to every mans ability, as R. Levi, of Barcelona, ſays, and many others of their doctors obſerve, and is plain of itſelf from the following verſes.

Ver. 7. And if he be not able to bring a lamb, then he ſhall bring for his treſpaſs which he hath committed, two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, unto the Lord.] See the mercy of God, ſays the ſame R. Levi, who, tho' he would not exact an heavy puniſhment of them for theſe offences, (which were ſo very eaſy for men to fall into) yet he would not ſuffer them to eſcape altogether unpuniſhed, that they might not be preſumptuous, but take due care and circumſpection in their words and actions.

Ver. 8, 9. And wring off his head from his neck, and he ſhall ſprinkle of the blood of the ſin-offering; it is a ſin-offering,

ing it is a ſin-offering, &c.] Therefore the blood was there preſſed out: whereas in burnt-offerings of a bird, we read only of ſqueezing out the blood at the ſide of the altar, chap. i. 15. and then he was to preſs out the reſt of the blood at the bottom of the altar; where they were wont to pour out the blood of the ſin-offering, chap. iv. 7, 18, 25, 34.

Ver. 11. But if he be not able to bring two turtle doves, or two young pidgeons, then he that hath ſinned ſhall bring for his offering a tenth part of an ephah of fine flour, &c.] This was ſtill a more merciful proviſion for the poor; for it was but a very ſmall quantity, ſee Exod. chap. xvi. 36. becauſe he would not have his creatures oppreſſed.

——— He ſhall put no oil upon it, neither ſhall he put any frankincenſe upon it.] In commiſeration of his poverty, God required only a little flour, which every one might eaſily procure.

Ver. 12. Then ſhall he bring it to the prieſt, and the prieſt ſhall take his handful of it, even a memorial thereof.] For an acknowledgment of his fault, and as a caution to him hereafter.

Ver. 13. And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him as touching the ſin he hath ſinned, in one of theſe, and the remnant ſhall be the prieſts as a meat-offering.] See chap. ii. 2, 3. where the whole meat-offering (except one handful) is given to the prieſt, who had no part at all of the ſin-offerings mentioned in the foregoing chapter, ver. 12, 21. and which were entirely conſumed.

Ver. 15. If a ſoul commit a treſpaſs, and ſin through ignorance, in the holy things of the Lord, then he ſhall bring for his treſpaſs unto the Lord, a ram without blemiſh out of the flocks, with his eſtimation by ſhekels of ſilver, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary for a treſpaſs-offering.] Beſides his ſacrifice, he was to make ſatisfaction in money, according as the prieſt ſhould eſteem the damage, for that is the ſignification of this expreſſion, with thy eſtimation; according to the value thou ſhalt ſet upon the thing, which he applied to his own uſe, and the amount was equal, at leaſt, to two ſhekels; as the doctors expound this paſſage.

Ver. 16. And he ſhall make amends for the harm he hath done in holy things, and ſhall add a fifth part thereunto, and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him with the ram of the treſpaſs-offering, and it ſhall be forgiven him.] Beſides the compenſation mentioned in the foregoing verſe, for the damage done, according to the valuation made by the prieſt, there was a fifth part more to be added thereunto, and given to the perſon who had ſuffered the damage; for the atonement was not made, nor forgiveneſs obtained, till full ſatisfaction for the wrong had been made.

Ver. 17. And if a ſoul ſin, and commit any of theſe things though he wiſt it not, yet he is guilty and ſhall bear his iniquity.] Although he be not certain, whether the action he had committed were holy or no, yet he ſhall be obliged to offer this ſort of ſacrifice, which was ordained (ſaith R. Levi, Precept. cxxiii) to make men cautious and apprehenſive of ſinning, and to attend diligently in all their conduct, that they tranſgreſſed not the laws of God.

Ver. 18. And he ſhall bring a ram without blemiſh, out of the flock, with thy eſtimation, &c.] The offering before appointed, ver. 15, &c. with this difference only, that no fifth part was, in the preſent caſe to be added; becauſe it was not certain whether he had tranſgreſſed or no.

———The prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him, concerning his ignorance wherein he erred, and wiſt it not, &c.] That is, did not know whether he had offended or not; which diſtinguiſhes this from the ſin of ignorance mentioned ver. 15. but if he afterwards came to have a certain knowledge of his offence, he was not not excuſed by this dubious offering, (as Raſi obſerves) but was bound alſo to offer a ſin-offering.

Ver. 19. It is a treſpaſs-offering.] In this caſe, a ſacrifice muſt be offered, as well as in certain treſpaſs. The words in the Hebrew are, aſcham aſcham lajhovah; he hath certainly treſpaſſed againſt the Lord; which we think, ſhould be tranſlated, a treſpaſs-offering certainly to the Lord; that is, in this doubtful caſe, let him take a ſure courſe, by offering the ſacrifice here preſcribed.

We can't think it proper to conclude this chapter, without taking notice, that Jonathan paraphraſes theſe laſt words thus; "He hath treſpaſſed againſt the name of "the word of the Lord.

We introduce this remark, becauſe ſeveral impious tracts, that have been publiſhed againſt the doctrine of the ever-bleſſed Trinity, make it neceſſary to aſſert, that this doctrine was not unknown to the ancient Jews; as appears even from the frequent mention of the word of the Lord, in the Chaldee paraphraſts, where the Hebrew hath only Jehovah, or the Lord: For which we can ſee no reaſon at all, if there had not been a notion among them, of more perſons than one, who were Jehovah. It doth not always indeed carry this ſignification in it; but there are very many places, where, by the word of the Lord cannot be meant a word ſpoken by the Lord, or any thing elſe, but a perſon ſpeaking or acting, &c. who is the Lord. There is a famous inſtance of it in Gen. xxviii. 20, 21. where Jacob's vow is thus tranſlated by Onkelos; Jacob vowed a vow, ſaying, if the word of the Lord will be with me, and keep me, &c. then ſhall the word of the Lord be my God. Where the word of the Lord is ſo plainly made the object of his adoration, that it evidently ſhews, they had a notion, in thoſe days when Onkelos lived, which was about our Saviour's time, of more perſons than one, who was the Lord. The Jeruſalem Targum alſo expreſſes this with ſo much perſpicuity, that one cannot but be ſomething amazed, to meet with ſuch forms of diction in it, as thoſe upon Gen. iii. 22. The word of the Lord ſaid, Behold, Adam, whom I have created, is my only begotten in this world; as I am the Only begotten in the heavens above. Which may fairly induce a belief, that St. John uſed the known language of thoſe times, when he declared our bleſſed Saviour's Godhead, under the name of the Word, who was in the beginning with God, and was God, John i. 1.

CHAP. VI.

1 The treſpaſs-offering for ſins done wittingly. 8 The law of the burnt-offering, 14 and of the meat-offering. 19 The offering at the conſecration of a prieſt. 24 The law of the ſin-offering.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 If a ſoul ſin, and commit a treſpaſs againſt the LORD, and lye unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, or in fellowſhip, or in a thing taken away by violence, or hath deceived his neighbour;

3 Or have found that which was loſt, and lyeth concerning it, and ſweareth falſly; in any of all theſe that a man doth, ſinning therein:

4 Then it ſhall be, becauſe he hath ſinned, and is guilty, that he ſhall reſtore that which he took violently away, or the thing which he hath deceitfully gotten, or that which was delivered him to keep, or the loſt thing which he found,

5 Or all that about which he hath ſworn falſly; he ſhall even reſtore it in the principal, and ſhall add the fifth part more thereto, and give it unto him to whom it appertaineth, in the day of his treſpaſs-offering.

6 And he ſhall bring his treſpaſs-offering unto the LORD, a ram without blemiſh blemiſh out of the flock, with thy eſtimation, for a treſpaſs-offering unto the prieſt.

7 And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him before the LORD: and it ſhall be forgiven him, for any thing of all that he hath done, in treſpaſſing therein.

8 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

9 Command Aaron and his ſons, ſaying, This is the law of the burnt-offering: (It is the burnt-offering, becauſe of the burning upon the altar all night unto the morning, and the fire of the altar ſhall be burning in it.

10 And the prieſt ſhall put on his linen garment, and his linen breeches ſhall he put upon his fleſh, and take up the aſhes which the fire hath conſumed with the burnt-offering on the altar, and he ſhall put them beſides the altar.

11 And he ſhall put off his garments, and put on other garments, and carry forth the aſhes without the camp, unto a clean place.

12 And the fire upon the altar ſhall be burning in it, it ſhall not be put out: and the prieſt ſhall burn wood on it every morning, and lay the burnt-offering in order upon it, and he ſhall burn thereon the fat of the peace-offerings.

13 The fire ſhall ever be burning upon the altar: it ſhall never go out.

14 ¶ And this is the law of the meat-offering: the ſons of Aaron ſhall offer it before the LORD, before the altar.

15 And he ſhall take of it his handful, of the flour, of the meat-offering, and of the oil thereof, and all the frankincenſe which is upon the meat-offering, and ſhall burn it upon the altar, for a ſweet ſavour, even the memorial of it unto the LORD.

16 And the remainder thereof ſhall Aaron and his ſons eat: with unleavened bread ſhall it be eaten in the holy place: in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation they ſhall eat it.

17 It ſhall not be baken with leaven: I have given it unto them for their portion of my offerings made by fire: it is moſt holy, as is the ſin-offering, and as the treſpaſs-offering.

18 All the males among the children of Aaron ſhall eat of it: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever in your generations concerning the offerings of the LORD made by fire: Every one that toucheth them ſhall be holy.

19 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

20 This is the offering of Aaron, and of his ſons, which they ſhall offer unto the LORD, in the day when he is anointed; the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meat-offering perpetual, half of it in the morning, and half thereof at night.

21 In a pan it ſhall be made with oyl, and when it is baked, thou ſhalt bring it in: and the baked pieces of the meat-offering ſhalt thou offer for a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD.

22 And the prieſt of his ſons that is anointed in his ſtead, ſhall offer it: It is a ſtatute for ever unto the LORD, it ſhall be wholly burnt.

23 For every meat-offering for the prieſt ſhall be wholly burnt: it ſhall not be eaten.

24 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

25 Speak unto Aaron and to his ſons, ſaying, This is the law of the ſin-offering: In the place where the burnt-offering is killed, ſhall the ſin-offering be killed before the LORD: it is moſt holy.

26 The prieſt that offereth it for ſin ſhall eat it: in the holy place ſhall it be eaten, in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation.

27 Whatſoever ſhall touch the fleſh thereof ſhall be holy: and when there is ſprinkled of the blood thereof upon any garment, thou ſhalt waſh that whereon it was ſprinkled, in the holy place.

28 But the earthen veſſel, wherein it is ſodden, ſhall be broken: and if it be ſodden in a braſen pot, it ſhall be both ſcoured and rinſed in water.

29 All the males among the prieſts ſhall eat thereof: it is moſt holy.

30 And no ſin-offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation to reconcile withal in the holy place, ſhall be eaten: it ſhall be burnt in the fire.

Ver. 2. If a ſoul ſin, and commit a treſpaſs againſt the Lord, and lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep.] That is, if he deny the acceptance of the truſt which was repoſed in him; and that when he was brought upon his oath to deliver the truth, as appears by the next verſe; for this is an inſtance of that ſort of oath, which the Jews call the oath about a thing depoſited; for there being no witneſs but God alone

ing it is a ſin-offering, &c.] Therefore the blood was there preſſed out: whereas in burnt-offerings of a bird, we read only of ſqueezing out the blood at the ſide of the altar, chap. i. 15. and then he was to preſs out the reſt of the blood at the bottom of the altar; where they were wont to pour out the blood of the ſin-offering, chap. iv. 7, 18, 25, 34.

Ver. 11. But if he be not able to bring two turtle doves, or two young pidgeons, then he that hath ſinned ſhall bring for his offering a tenth part of an ephah of fine flour, &c.] This was ſtill a more merciful proviſion for the poor; for it was but a very ſmall quantity, ſee Exod. chap. xvi. 36. becauſe he would not have his creatures oppreſſed.

——— He ſhall put no oil upon it, neither ſhall he put any frankincenſe upon it.] In commiſeration of his poverty, God required only a little flour, which every one might eaſily procure.

Ver. 12. Then ſhall he bring it to the prieſt, and the prieſt ſhall take his handful of it, even a memorial thereof.] For an acknowledgment of his fault, and as a caution to him hereafter.

Ver. 13. And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him as touching the ſin he hath ſinned, in one of theſe, and the remnant ſhall be the prieſts as a meat-offering.] See chap. ii. 2, 3. where the whole meat-offering (except one handful) is given to the prieſt, who had no part at all of the ſin-offerings mentioned in the foregoing chapter, ver. 12, 21. and which were entirely conſumed.

Ver. 15. If a ſoul commit a treſpaſs, and ſin through ignorance, in the holy things of the Lord, then he ſhall bring for his treſpaſs unto the Lord, a ram without blemiſh out of the flocks, with his eſtimation by ſhekels of ſilver, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary for a treſpaſs-offering.] Beſides his ſacrifice, he was to make ſatisfaction in money, according as the prieſt ſhould eſteem the damage, for that is the ſignification of this expreſſion, with thy eſtimation; according to the value thou ſhalt ſet upon the thing, which he applied to his own uſe, and the amount was equal, at leaſt, to two ſhekels; as the doctors expound this paſſage.

Ver. 16. And he ſhall make amends for the harm he hath done in holy things, and ſhall add a fifth part thereunto, and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him with the ram of the treſpaſs-offering, and it ſhall be forgiven him.] Beſides the compenſation mentioned in the foregoing verſe, for the damage done, according to the valuation made by the prieſt, there was a fifth part more to be added thereunto, and given to the perſon who had ſuffered the damage; for the atonement was not made, nor forgiveneſs obtained, till full ſatisfaction for the wrong had been made.

Ver. 17. And if a ſoul ſin, and commit any of theſe things though he wiſt it not, yet he is guilty and ſhall bear his iniquity.] Although he be not certain, whether the action he had committed were holy or no, yet he ſhall be obliged to offer this ſort of ſacrifice, which was ordained (ſaith R. Levi, Precept. cxxiii) to make men cautious and apprehenſive of ſinning, and to attend diligently in all their conduct, that they tranſgreſſed not the laws of God.

Ver. 18. And he ſhall bring a ram without blemiſh, out of the flock, with thy eſtimation, &c.] The offering before appointed, ver. 15, &c. with this difference only, that no fifth part was, in the preſent caſe to be added; becauſe it was not certain whether he had tranſgreſſed or no.

———The prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him, concerning his ignorance wherein he erred, and wiſt it not, &c.] That is, did not know whether he had offended or not; which diſtinguiſhes this from the ſin of ignorance mentioned ver. 15. but if he afterwards came to have a certain knowledge of his offence, he was not not excuſed by this dubious offering, (as Raſi obſerves) but was bound alſo to offer a ſin-offering.

Ver. 19. It is a treſpaſs-offering.] In this caſe, a ſacrifice muſt be offered, as well as in certain treſpaſs. The words in the Hebrew are, aſcham aſcham lajhovah; he hath certainly treſpaſſed againſt the Lord; which we think, ſhould be tranſlated, a treſpaſs-offering certainly to the Lord; that is, in this doubtful caſe, let him take a ſure courſe, by offering the ſacrifice here preſcribed.

We can't think it proper to conclude this chapter, without taking notice, that Jonathan paraphraſes theſe laſt words thus; "He hath treſpaſſed againſt the name of "the word of the Lord.

We introduce this remark, becauſe ſeveral impious tracts, that have been publiſhed againſt the doctrine of the ever-bleſſed Trinity, make it neceſſary to aſſert, that this doctrine was not unknown to the ancient Jews; as appears even from the frequent mention of the word of the Lord, in the Chaldee paraphraſts, where the Hebrew hath only Jehovah, or the Lord: For which we can ſee no reaſon at all, if there had not been a notion among them, of more perſons than one, who were Jehovah. It doth not always indeed carry this ſignification in it; but there are very many places, where, by the word of the Lord cannot be meant a word ſpoken by the Lord, or any thing elſe, but a perſon ſpeaking or acting, &c. who is the Lord. There is a famous inſtance of it in Gen. xxviii. 20, 21. where Jacob's vow is thus tranſlated by Onkelos; Jacob vowed a vow, ſaying, if the word of the Lord will be with me, and keep me, &c. then ſhall the word of the Lord be my God. Where the word of the Lord is ſo plainly made the object of his adoration, that it evidently ſhews, they had a notion, in thoſe days when Onkelos lived, which was about our Saviour's time, of more perſons than one, who was the Lord. The Jeruſalem Targum alſo expreſſes this with ſo much perſpicuity, that one cannot but be ſomething amazed, to meet with ſuch forms of diction in it, as thoſe upon Gen. iii. 22. The word of the Lord ſaid, Behold, Adam, whom I have created, is my only begotten in this world; as I am the Only begotten in the heavens above. Which may fairly induce a belief, that St. John uſed the known language of thoſe times, when he declared our bleſſed Saviour's Godhead, under the name of the Word, who was in the beginning with God, and was God, John i. 1.

CHAP. VI.

1 The treſpaſs-offering for ſins done wittingly. 8 The law of the burnt-offering, 14 and of the meat-offering. 19 The offering at the conſecration of a prieſt. 24 The law of the ſin-offering.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 If a ſoul ſin, and commit a treſpaſs againſt the LORD, and lye unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, or in fellowſhip, or in a thing taken away by violence, or hath deceived his neighbour;

3 Or have found that which was loſt, and lyeth concerning it, and ſweareth falſly; in any of all theſe that a man doth, ſinning therein:

4 Then it ſhall be, becauſe he hath ſinned, and is guilty, that he ſhall reſtore that which he took violently away, or the thing which he hath deceitfully gotten, or that which was delivered him to keep, or the loſt thing which he found,

5 Or all that about which he hath ſworn falſly; he ſhall even reſtore it in the principal, and ſhall add the fifth part more thereto, and give it unto him to whom it appertaineth, in the day of his treſpaſs-offering.

6 And he ſhall bring his treſpaſs-offering unto the LORD, a ram without blemiſh blemiſh out of the flock, with thy eſtimation, for a treſpaſs-offering unto the prieſt.

7 And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him before the LORD: and it ſhall be forgiven him, for any thing of all that he hath done, in treſpaſſing therein.

8 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

9 Command Aaron and his ſons, ſaying, This is the law of the burnt-offering: (It is the burnt-offering, becauſe of the burning upon the altar all night unto the morning, and the fire of the altar ſhall be burning in it.

10 And the prieſt ſhall put on his linen garment, and his linen breeches ſhall he put upon his fleſh, and take up the aſhes which the fire hath conſumed with the burnt-offering on the altar, and he ſhall put them beſides the altar.

11 And he ſhall put off his garments, and put on other garments, and carry forth the aſhes without the camp, unto a clean place.

12 And the fire upon the altar ſhall be burning in it, it ſhall not be put out: and the prieſt ſhall burn wood on it every morning, and lay the burnt-offering in order upon it, and he ſhall burn thereon the fat of the peace-offerings.

13 The fire ſhall ever be burning upon the altar: it ſhall never go out.

14 ¶ And this is the law of the meat-offering: the ſons of Aaron ſhall offer it before the LORD, before the altar.

15 And he ſhall take of it his handful, of the flour, of the meat-offering, and of the oil thereof, and all the frankincenſe which is upon the meat-offering, and ſhall burn it upon the altar, for a ſweet ſavour, even the memorial of it unto the LORD.

16 And the remainder thereof ſhall Aaron and his ſons eat: with unleavened bread ſhall it be eaten in the holy place: in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation they ſhall eat it.

17 It ſhall not be baken with leaven: I have given it unto them for their portion of my offerings made by fire: it is moſt holy, as is the ſin-offering, and as the treſpaſs-offering.

18 All the males among the children of Aaron ſhall eat of it: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever in your generations concerning the offerings of the LORD made by fire: Every one that toucheth them ſhall be holy.

19 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

20 This is the offering of Aaron, and of his ſons, which they ſhall offer unto the LORD, in the day when he is anointed; the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meat-offering perpetual, half of it in the morning, and half thereof at night.

21 In a pan it ſhall be made with oyl, and when it is baked, thou ſhalt bring it in: and the baked pieces of the meat-offering ſhalt thou offer for a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD.

22 And the prieſt of his ſons that is anointed in his ſtead, ſhall offer it: It is a ſtatute for ever unto the LORD, it ſhall be wholly burnt.

23 For every meat-offering for the prieſt ſhall be wholly burnt: it ſhall not be eaten.

24 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

25 Speak unto Aaron and to his ſons, ſaying, This is the law of the ſin-offering: In the place where the burnt-offering is killed, ſhall the ſin-offering be killed before the LORD: it is moſt holy.

26 The prieſt that offereth it for ſin ſhall eat it: in the holy place ſhall it be eaten, in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation.

27 Whatſoever ſhall touch the fleſh thereof ſhall be holy: and when there is ſprinkled of the blood thereof upon any garment, thou ſhalt waſh that whereon it was ſprinkled, in the holy place.

28 But the earthen veſſel, wherein it is ſodden, ſhall be broken: and if it be ſodden in a braſen pot, it ſhall be both ſcoured and rinſed in water.

29 All the males among the prieſts ſhall eat thereof: it is moſt holy.

30 And no ſin-offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation to reconcile withal in the holy place, ſhall be eaten: it ſhall be burnt in the fire.

Ver. 2. If a ſoul ſin, and commit a treſpaſs againſt the Lord, and lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep.] That is, if he deny the acceptance of the truſt which was repoſed in him; and that when he was brought upon his oath to deliver the truth, as appears by the next verſe; for this is an inſtance of that ſort of oath, which the Jews call the oath about a thing depoſited; for there being no witneſs but God alone of what was tranſacted between two friends or neighbours, who truſted one another in ſuch affairs, they appealed unto him from whom no ſecret could be concealed. And this oath the Jews ſay, was govern'd by another, which they call the oath of teſtimony; which a man was not obliged to give, unleſs he were adjured to it by the court of judgment: And ſo it was in the oath about things depoſited; he was not guilty who was adjured by private perſons, and denied it; but he who denied it before the court. So they reſolve in Halicah Olam, P. iv. chap. 2.

—Or in fellowſhip.] By the word fellowſhip, a copartnerſhip in trade by a joint ſtock, or in any thing for which he gave his hand unto another, is meant; for ſo the Hebrew words are, putting of the hand, as contracts are often made; which if a man afterwards denied, he fell under the guilt here mentioned: Or if it was by ſtealth and robbery, as the word Gazel ſignifies; for theft not being puniſhed with death, among the Jews, they tendred an oath to thoſe who were accuſed, or ſuſpected of it, that they might have a proper opportunity of clearing themſelves from the imputation.

Ver. 4. Then it ſhall be, becauſe he hath ſinned, and is guilty.] The laſt words ſhould rather be tranſlated, and acknowledges his guilt; for ſo this word aſcham, guilty, ought to be expounded: And this plainly reconciles the contradiction, that would otherwiſe appear between this law, and that in Exod. xxii. 1, 7, 9. where a man that ſtole an ox, is condemned to reſtore five oxen, and four ſheep for one; and if he delivered money to another to keep, and it was ſtolen, the thief was to pay double; whereas, here one ſimple reſtitution is exacted, with an addition of a fifth part; the reaſon is, becauſe, in Exodus, Moſes ſpeaks of thoſe thieves who were convicted by witneſſes in a court of judicature, and then condemned to make ſuch a great reſtitution; but here of ſuch as were touched with a ſenſe of their ſin, and came voluntarily to acknowledge their theft or other crime, of which no perſon had convicted them.

Ver. 5. Of all that about which he hath ſworn falſly, he ſhall even reſtore it in the principal.] That is, the ſame numerical thing which he took away, if it ſtill remain in his poſſeſſion unaltered, or elſe the juſt price of it; as R. Levi expounds it, Præcept. cxxv.

——— And ſhall add the fifth part more thereto, and give it unto him to whom it appertaineth, in the day of his treſpaſs-offering.] Or, in the day of his treſpaſs; that is, aſſoon as he acknowledgeth his guilt, as this word (we ſhewed, ver. 4.) is to be interpreted. And this agrees with what our bleſſed Saviour requires, Matt. v. 23

Ver. 9. Command Aaron and his ſons, ſaying, This is the law of the burnt-offering, &c.] This was the reaſon of its name, becauſe it was burning on the altar, from the evening (at which the Jews began their day) till the morning; for which purpoſe the prieſts watched all night, and put the ſacrifice upon the altar, piece by piece, that it might be conſumed by a ſlow and gentle fire. Hitherto Moſes hath preſcribed the ſacrifices themſelves; now he comes to the manner of them, to wit, of the daily one; of which, Exod. xxix. 38. Numb. xxviii. 3. (as the following words ſhew) the meaning is, that the evening burnt-offering was to be ſo managed, and laid on, piece after piece, that the fire might be conſtantly maintained by it, It is to be underſtood, that the morning burnt-offerings were to be kept burning all the day, from morning till night; but he mentions not that, becauſe there were ſo great a number, and ſuch a conſtant ſucceſſion of ſacrifices in the day-time, that there needed no law for feeding and keeping-in the fire then; the only danger was for the night, when other ſacrifices were not offered, but only the evening burnt-offering; which if it had been conſumed quickly, as the morning burnt-offering was, there had been danger of the going out of that fire, which they were commanded diligently and conſtantly to keep in and maintain, as below, ver. 13.

Ver. 12. And the fire upon the altar ſhall be burning in it, it ſhall be put out, and the prieſts ſhall burn wood on it every morning, and he ſhall burn thereon the fat of the peace-offerings.] This fat of the peace-offerings was to be burnt together with the burnt-offering: and not ſeparate from it, by which means, the burnt-offering was the ſooner conſumed, and more room was made for more occaſional ſacrifices

Ver. 13. And the fire ſhall be ever burning upon the altar.] This fire was not kindled upon the altar by the prieſt, but by God himſelf, who ſent it from heaven, to conſume the firſt ſacrifice that was offered by Aaron; from which time they were bound to take care, that it never went out; that ſo their ſacrifices might be conſtantly offered by celeſtial fire, becauſe it was the continuation of that fire which came from heaven.

——— It ſhall never go out.] This was a thing ſo famous, that it was imitated amongſt the Gentiles, who thought it ominous to have their ſacred fire go out; and therefore appointed perſons on purpoſe to watch it, and keep it perpetually burning, as appears by the Veſtal virgins at Rome, whoſe great buſineſs it was to look after the eternal fire, as they called it; imagining, that the extinction of it purported the deſtruction of their city.

Ver. 16. And the remainder thereof ſhall Aaron and his ſons eat.] If they had no pollution upon them, chap. xxii. 6. See chap. ii. 3. The reaſon of this precept was, (as R. Levi obſerves, Præcept. 133.) that it preſerved the dignity of the ſacrifice, to have it eaten alone by the prieſt; and by him (we may add) only in the holy place, and not carried out from thence.

Ver. 18. All the males among the children of Iſrael ſhall eat of it; it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever in your generations; every one that touches them ſhall be holy.] According to this tranſlation of theſe words, the meaning is, that it was not ſufficient to be deſcended of prieſts, and to be males, but they were alſo to be free from any legal defilement, who were admitted to eat of this offering, chap. xxii. 6. But theſe very words, which we here tranſlate every one, in the 27th verſe we tranſlate whatſoever; and then the meaning is, "every thing that touches them "ſhall be made holy by them;" that is, the very diſhes, into which ſuch holy things were put, or the ſpoons, or knives, wherewith they were eaten, were never to be employed to any other uſe; ſee Exod. xxix. 37.

Ver. 19, 20. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes ſaying. This is the offering of Aaron and his ſons, which they ſhall offer unto the Lord, &c.] At the ſame time, the Lord gave direction about another offering, near of kin to the former, but not yet mentioned. The Jews call this a mincha of initiation which every high prieſt, and every other prieſt (as they underſtand it) were bound to offer when they were conſecrated; and the high prieſt to continue every day, as long as he lived. So Abarbinel (Section 2) reckoning the various ſorts of meat-offerings, makes this the fourth kind; which the high prieſt offered every day, and every other prieſt once in his life, viz. when he firſt was admitted to miniſter at the altar, at the age of twenty years, for both theſe meat-offerings, ſaith he, are comprehended in this verſe, but it may as well be underſtood only of Aaron, and his ſucceſſors in the prieſthood, of whom the following words ſeem to ſpeak, and not of the common prieſts.

———In the day when he is anointed, the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meat-offering perpetual, half thereof in the morning, and half at night.] The high prieſt, ſaith Joſephus, l. iii. Antiq. cap. 10. ſacrificed twice every day, at his own charges: and then he deſcribes this very offering, which was diſtinct from that which attended the daily burnt-offering; as appears by the quantity of this meat-offering, and by the manner of ordering it. For that ſeems to have been raw flour, mixed with oyl; but this baken as it follows in the next verſe. See Exod. chap. xxix. ver. 40, 41. The reaſon why it is here mentioned, is, becauſe it was a mincha or meat-offering, of whoſe rites Moſes is treating; and this is an exception from the reſt.

Ver. 22. It ſhall be wholly burnt.] In which it differed from other meat-offerings, as will appear in the next verſe.

Ver. 23. For every meat-offering for the prieſt ſhall be wholly burnt.] The prieſts had all the meat-offerings which were brought by the people, except one handful which was offered to the Lord, ſee chap. ii. ver. 2, 3. but of their own meat-offerings, they were not to taſte, but wholly burnt them on the altar. For it had not been ſeemly for him, both to offer unto God, and to eat of it, as if it were his own, as Maimonides ſpeaks, P. iii. More Nevoch. cap. 46.

Ver.

Ver. 26. The prieſt that offereth it for ſin, ſhall eat it.] The fleſh of this ſin-offering fell to the ſhare of him who offered the ſacrifice that day, and to his male children: tho' he might invite any other prieſts, and their ſons, to partake with him, if he pleaſed; as appears from ver. 29.

Ver. 28. But the earthen veſſel wherein it is ſodden, ſhall be broken.] For it being very porous, might ſo deeply imbibe a tincture from the fleſh, that it could not be waſhed out; but the ſmell of it might remain a long time.

——If it be ſodden in a braſen pot, it ſhall be both ſcoured and rinſed in water.] Nothing could ſo eaſily ſink into this, being a ſolid metal, but whatſoever ſtuck to it, might be cleanſed by waſhing.

Ver. 29, 30. All the males among the prieſts, ſhall eat thereof, it is moſt holy, and no ſin-offering whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation, to reconcile withal in the holy place, ſhall be eaten, &c.] Such were thoſe ſin-offerings for the high prieſt, chap. iv. ver. 3. and for the whole congregation, upon particular occaſions, chap. iv. ver. 13, &c. or upon the day of a general attonement, chap. xvi. ver. 27. no part of theſe were to be eaten, but intirely burnt in the fire.

CHAP. VII.

1 The law of the treſpaſs-offering, 11 and of the peace-offerings, 12 whether it be for a thankſgiving, 16 or a vow, or a free-will offering. 22 The fat, 26 and the blood are forbidden. 28 The prieſts portion in peace-offerings.

LIkewiſe this is the law of the treſpaſs-offering: it is moſt holy.

2 In the place where they kill the burnt-offering, ſhall they kill the treſpaſs-offering: and the blood thereof ſhall he ſprinkle round about upon the altar.

3 And he ſhall offer of it, all the fat thereof; the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards,

4 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the caul that is above the liver, with the kidneys, it ſhall he take away.

5 And the prieſt ſhall burn them upon the altar, for an offering made by fire unto the LORD: it is a treſpaſs-offering.

6 Every male among the prieſts ſhall eat thereof: it ſhall be eaten in the holy place: it is moſt holy.

7 As the ſin-offering is, ſo is the treſpaſs-offering: there is one law for them: the prieſt that maketh atonement therewith, ſhall have it.

8 And the prieſt that offereth any mans burnt-offering, even the prieſt ſhall have to himſelf the ſkin of the burnt-offering which he hath offered.

9 And all the meat-offering that is baken in the oven, and all that is dreſſed in the frying-pan, and in the pan, ſhall be the prieſts that offereth it.

10 And every meat-offering mingled with oyl, and dry, ſhall all the ſons of Aaron have, one as much as another.

11 And this is the law of the ſacrifice of peace-offerings, which he ſhall offer unto the LORD.

12 If he offer it for a thankſgiving, then he ſhall offer with the ſacrifice of thankſgiving unleavened cakes mingled with oyl, and unleavened wafers anointed with oyl, and cakes mingled with oyl, of fine flour, fryed.

13 Beſides the cakes he ſhall offer for his offering, leavened bread with the ſacrifice of thankſgiving of his peace-offerings.

14 And of it he ſhall offer one out of the whole oblation, for an heave-offering unto the LORD, and it ſhall be the prieſts that ſprinkleth the blood of the peace-offering.

15 And the fleſh of the ſacrifice of his peace-offerings for thankſgiving, ſhall be eaten the ſame day that it is offered: he ſhall not leave any of it until the morning.

16 But if the ſacrifice of his offering be a vow, or a voluntary offering, it ſhall be eaten the ſame day that he offereth his ſacrifice: and on the morrow alſo the remainder of it ſhall be eaten.

17 But the remainder of the fleſh of the ſacrifice on the third day ſhall be burnt with fire.

18 And if any of the fleſh of the ſacrifice of his peace-offerings be eaten at all on the third day, it ſhall not be accepted, neither ſhall it be imputed unto him that offereth it: it ſhall be an abomination, and the ſoul that eateth of it, ſhall bear his iniquity.

19 And the fleſh that toucheth any unclean thing, ſhall not be eaten, it ſhall be burnt with fire: and as for the fleſh, all that be clean ſhall eat thereof.

20 But the ſoul that eateth of the fleſh of the ſacrifice of peace-offerings, that pertain unto the LORD, having his uncleanneſs upon him, even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people.

21 Moreover, the ſoul that ſhall touch any unclean thing, as the uncleanneſs of man, or any unclean beaſt, or any abominable unclean thing, and eat of the fleſh of the ſacrifice of peace-offerings which pertain unto the LORD, even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people.

22 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

23 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, Ye ſhall eat no manner of fat, of ox or of ſheep, or of goat.

24 And the fat of the beaſt that dieth of it ſelf, and the fat of that which is torn with beaſts, may be uſed in any other uſe: but ye ſhall in no wiſe eat of it.

25 For

25 For whoſoever eateth the fat of the beaſt, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, even the ſoul that eateth it, ſhall be cut off from his people.

26 Moreover, ye ſhall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl, or of beaſt, in any of your dwellings.

27 Whatſoever ſoul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people.

28 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

29 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, He that offereth the ſacrifice of his peace-offerings unto the LORD, ſhall bring his oblation unto the LORD, of the ſacrifice of his peace-offerings.

30 His own hands ſhall bring the offerings of the LORD made by fire, the fat with the breaſt, it ſhall he bring, that the breaſt may be waved for a wave-offering before the LORD.

31 And the prieſt ſhall burn the fat upon the altar: but the breaſt ſhall be Aarons and his ſons.

32 And the right ſhoulder ſhall ye give unto the prieſt for an heave-offering of the ſacrifices of your peace-offerings,

33 He among the ſons of Aaron that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings, and the fat, ſhall have the right ſhoulder for his part.

34 For the wave-breaſt and the heave-ſhoulder have I taken of the children of Iſrael, from off the ſacrifices of their peace-offerings, and have given them unto Aaron the prieſt, and unto his ſons, by a ſtatute for ever, from among the children of Iſrael.

35 ¶ This is the portion of the anointing of Aaron, and of the anointing of his ſons, out of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, in the day when he preſented them, to miniſter unto the LORD in the prieſts office:

36 Which the LORD commanded to be given them of the children of Iſrael, in the day that he anointed them, by a ſtatute for ever throughout their generations,

37 This is the law of the burnt-offering, of the meat-offering, and of the ſin-offering, and of the treſpaſs-offering, and of the conſecrations, and of the ſacrifice of the peace-offerings:

38 Which the LORD commanded Moſes in mount Sinai, in the day that he commanded the children of Iſrael to offer their oblations unto the LORD in the wilderneſs of Sinai.

Ver. 1. Likewiſe this is the law of the treſpaſs-offering.] People were directed before, in what caſes they ſhould bring this ſort of offering; but now the prieſts are directed in their office about treſpaſs-offerings.

——It is moſt holy.] In general they were to obſerve, that theſe offerings, as well as ſin-offerings, were to be numbered among the moſt holy things, and there ore to be accordingly uſed, verſe 6.

Ver. 2. In the place where they kill the burnt-offering, ſhall they kill the treſpaſs-offering, and the blood thereof ſhall be ſprinkled round about upon the altar.] This is a different rite, from that which was obſerved in the ſin-offering; whole blood was put upon the horns of the altar, chap. iv. verſe 24, 34. and the blood of ſuch ſin-offerings as were made for the high prieſt, or the whole congregation, were alſo to be ſprinkled, ſeven times before the vail of the ſanctuary, chap. iv. verſe 6, 17. but this to be ſprinkled round about the altar of burnt-offering; according to the manner uſed in the whole burnt-oferings, chap. iii. verſe 2, 8. only with this difference, that there being a ſcarlet thread, or line, which went round about the altar, exactly in the middle: the blood of the whole burnt-offerings was ſprinkled round about, above the line, and the blood of the treſpaſs-offerings, and the peace-offerings, round about below the line. See Codex Middoth, cap. iii. ſect. 1.

Ver. 6. Every male among the prieſts ſhall eat thereof, &c.] All the fat being offered to God, the fleſh became the portion of the prieſts who with their male children, were to eat of it, but not in any place out of the ſanctuary; as it here follows.

Ver. 8. And the prieſt that offereth any mans burnt-offering, even the prieſt, ſhall have to himſelf the skin of the burnt-offering which he hath offered.] All the fleſh of the burnt-offerings being wholly conſumed, as well as the fat, upon the altar, chap. i. (verſe 8, 9.) there was nothing could fall to the ſhare of the prieſt, but only the skin, which is here given him for his pains. 'Tis probable, that Adam himſelf offered the firſt ſacrifices; and had the skin given him by God, to make garments for him and his wife. In conformity to which the prieſts ever after had the skin of the whole burnt-offerings, for their portion, which was a cuſtom among the Gentiles, (as well as the Jews, (chap. iv. verſe 11.) who imployed them in a ſuperſtitious uſe, by laying upon them in their temples, in hopes to have future things revealed to them in their dreams.

Ver. 10. And every meat-offering mingled with oyl, and dry.] The foregoing verſe ſpeaks of ſuch meat-offerings, as were any ways taken; but this of thoſe that were raw, which were of two ſorts; either of flour mingled with oyl, as all voluntary offerings of this ſort were, chap. ii. 1. or dry without any oyl, as ſome ſin-offerings were, ver. 11. and the offering of jealouſy, Numb. v. 15.

—— Shall the ſons of Aaron have, one as much as the other.] All the prieſts, who attended on that day, were to have an equal ſhare in this kind of meat-offering; tho' he alone, who miniſter'd at the altar, had the baked meat-offerings. There are ſome, indeed, who ſee no reaſon for this difference, (tho' this laſt ſort, others think, was more eaſily divided, and therefore ſhared among them all) and conſequently take theſe words to ſignify the ſame with thoſe in the foregoing verſe: Every one in the courſe of his miniſtry ſhall have this benefit, in his turn of waiting at the altar.

Ver. 11. And this is the law of the ſacrifice of peace-offerings.] Theſe are the only ſort of offerings remaining to be ſpoken of; which, when God required them of the people, are mentioned in the third place, after the burnt-offerings and meat-offerings, before the ſin-offerings and treſpaſs-offerings; but are here reſerved for the laſt place, in the directions he gives to the prieſts about them; becauſe, as there were ſeveral ſorts of them, ſo there were various rites to be obſerved about them; which rites, as we obſerved before, are called here the law of ſuch ſacrifices.

Ver. 12. If he offers it for a thankſgiving.] In this, and in the 16th verſe, we have an account of three ſorts of peace-offerings: this, which was the principal, for benefits received from God's bounty; the other two, for the obtaining ſuch bleſſings they deſired leave to receive; and this of thankſgiving was either general for the whole congregation (of which there was but one only, at one time of the year, in the feaſt of Pentecoſt, chap. xxiii. 16. which was accounted moſt holy; or, particularly for private perſons, as occaſion offer'd, which were accounted leſs holy; and they are theſe here mentioned, which might be either of the flock, or of the herd, (but no birds) and either greater or ſmaller of thoſe kinds; that is, of the herd, from the firſt year to the third, and of the flock from the firſt to the ſecond year compleat, if they were older, they were not fit for ſacrifice: All this R. Levi, Præcept. cxxxvii, explains at large.

———Then he ſhall offer with the ſacrifice of thankſgiving, unleavened cakes mingled with oyl, &c.] The ſame R. Levi obſerves, that ſome peace-offerings were offered without any bread; viz. ſuch as they called Hø-gigah and Schimcah, ſacrifices of feſtivity and rejoicing, i. e. at their great ſolemn feſtivals; but theſe here mentioned, were all offered with bread; and that offered with this, which was the firſt of them, was called the bread of thankſgiving: R. Solomon Jarchi, reſtrains this ſort of peace-offerings (of thankſgiving) to ſuch wonderful deliverances, as thoſe mentioned Pſalm cvii. from tempeſts at ſea, or dangerous travels through the wilderneſs, and the like. Aben-Ezra alſo ſeems to have been of the ſame opinion, what he ſaith, that men being delivered out of ſtreights and diſtreſſes, gave thanks to God by this oblation, but we can find no ground for this oblation; it being far more likely, that this ſacrifice was offered by all devout perſons, for any mercy whatſoever, that God beſtowed upon them.

Ver. 13. Beſides the cakes he ſhall offer for his offering leavened bread with the ſacrifice of thankſgiving, &c.] Not upon the altar, for that was abſolutely forbidden in the fore-named chapter of this book, but he was to give it to the prieſt, who waited at the altar, and was to partake of this ſacrifice, and to rejoice together with him that offered it; which is the reaſon, that ſuch different ſorts of cakes are ordered in the foregoing verſe; all unleavened (of which the prieſt was to have his ſhare) and alſo others leavened, which are preſcribed in this verſe; that God's family (his ſervants the prieſts) might want no variety of bread, at their feaſts upon theſe ſacrifices; and that God might ſhew his friendſhip with thoſe who offered the ſacrifice, by accepting the ſame bread at his own table, which they were wont to uſe at theirs.

Ver. 14. And of it he ſhall offer out of the whole oblation, &c.] One of the cakes before-mentioned, ver. 12. was to be preſented to God for an heave-offering, which ſee Exod xxiv. 28.

———And it ſhall be the prieſts that ſprinkled the blood of the peace-offerings.] Having offered one cake out of the whole, all that remained was the portion of the prieſt, who ſprinkled the blood of the peace-offerings upon the altar.

Ver. 15. And the fleſh of the ſacrifice of his peace-offerings for thankſgiving, ſhall be eaten the ſame day it is offered, &c.] The reaſon of this, which was obſerved in moſt of their ſacred feaſts, (particularly in the Paſchal lamb.) Exod. chap. xxii. ver. 10. and in the manna it ſelf, chap. xvi. 19, &c. was to maintain the honour and dignity of the ſacrifices; that they might not be in danger of being corrupted, or turned to any profane uſe, or gratify mens covetouſneſs, for as Philo obſerves (in his book of ſacrifices,) it was not fit that theſe holy things ſhould be put into their cupboards, but immediately ſet before thoſe who were in need; for they were no longer his that offered them, but his to whom they were offered: who being himſelf moſt liberal and bountiful, would have gueſts invited to his table to partake with thoſe who offered the ſacrifices, whom he would not have to look upon themſelves as maſters of the feaſt, for they are but miniſters of the feaſt, not the maſters or entertainers, that belongs to God himſelf, whoſe bounty ought not to be conſecrated by preferring ſordid parſimony before generous humanity: his meaning is, that all the ſacrifice was Gods, who graciouſly granted to him that offered it, a part of it to entertain his friends, and the poor, whom he would have invited forthwith, that no part of it might be converted to any other uſe, but that which God appointed, who ordained the feaſt.

Ver. 16. But if the ſacrifice of his offering be a vow, or a voluntary offering.] Theſe two other ſorts of peace-offerings, where in the nature of prayers, for the obtaining ſuch bleſſings, as they deſired and hoped for; and they were either the performance of a vow, which they made to God, of offering him ſuch a ſacrifice, when they received the benefit, which was called Neder; or, they were freely made before-hand, in hope God would beſtow the benefit; which ſacrifice was called nedebah, a voluntary offering; now theſe were not ſo holy as the former; and therefore, might be eaten on the morrow, as well on the ſame day they were offered. So it here follows, ———It ſhall be eaten the ſame day that he offereth his ſacrifice, and on the morrow alſo, the remainder of it, ſhall be eaten.] But if they could not conveniently eat it all the ſame day, or were deſirous to lay up ſome of it till the next, they had that liberty allowed them; for which Philo gives this reaſon, (in the ſame book) that theſe being for mercies not yet received, (or offer'd by virtue of an obligation) they might take more time to feaſt upon them with their friends, and be more ſparing; but the former being a thankful acknowledgment of bleſſings already beſtowed, their hearts were to be enlarged: That they upon whom God had readily beſtowed his benefits, might make a quick and ſpeedy return, without delay; and what is here ſaid of the fleſh of the ſacrifice, the Jews alſo underſtand of the meat-offerings mentioned, ver. 12, 13. none of which was to be kept longer than two days at the moſt.

Ver. 17. But the remainder of the fleſh of the ſacrifice on the third day, ſhall be burnt with fire.] If there were ſuch plenty, or they and their friends were ſo few, or they were ſo niggardly as not to call a ſufficient number of poor, to eat the whole in two days time, they were to have no farther benefit of the fleſh of this ſacrifice; but what remained of it, on the third day, was to be burnt; which was to preſerve the dignity of the ſacrifice, as the Jews ſpeak, in preventing its ſtinking. And there was no nobler way of conſuming it than by fire, which conſumed the ſacrifice upon the altar. So R. Levi obſerves, Præcept. cxxxviii. where he alſo adds, that God taught them hereby, not to be ſollicitous for the future, nor careful to hoard up more than needed; when they ſaw he commanded the holy fleſh to be deſtroyed, after the time allotted for its uſe was paſt. The heathens themſelves thought this a decent rite; for there was a ſacrifice at Rome, which they called Protervia (as Bochart obſerves, out of Macrobius, l. 2. Saturnal. cap. 2.) in which the cuſtom was, ut ſi quid ex epulis ſuperfuiſſet, igne conſumeretur, that if any thing of the feaſt remained, it was conſumed in the fire. See his Hierozoick, P. 1. l. 2. cap 50.

Ver. 18. And if any of the fleſh of the ſacrifice of the peace-offering be eaten at all on the third day, it ſhall not be accepted, neither ſhall it be imputed to him that offered it; it ſhall be an abomination.] He loſt the fruit of his ſacrifice, which he had offered to God, by this profanation; which deſtroyed the grace and favour it had procured him with God. He ſhould not be thought to have made any offering at all; and more than that, it render'd him abominable, being abominable in itſelf; and made him liable to be ſcourged, as the Jews underſtand the laſt words of this verſe, he ſhall bear his iniquity; which, we think, alſo ſignifies, that he ſhould lie under a great guilt, till it was purged by a treſpaſs-offering.

Ver. 26. Moreover, ye ſhall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl, or of beaſt. (See chap. iii. 17.) Men were very prone to this, in thoſe times, as Maimonides thinks, whereby they ran into idolatrous worſhip; which was the reaſon why God reſtrained them from it, by threatning cutting off, (ver. 27.) to thoſe who were guilty of it, (More Nevoch. P. 3. cap. 41.) and this is added, to ſignify, that they might no more eat of the blood of thoſe beaſts which were killed at home, than of thoſe ſlain at the altar.

The remaining part of this chapter is ſufficiently intelligible, without farther explanation.

25 For whoſoever eateth the fat of the beaſt, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, even the ſoul that eateth it, ſhall be cut off from his people.

26 Moreover, ye ſhall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl, or of beaſt, in any of your dwellings.

27 Whatſoever ſoul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people.

28 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

29 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, He that offereth the ſacrifice of his peace-offerings unto the LORD, ſhall bring his oblation unto the LORD, of the ſacrifice of his peace-offerings.

30 His own hands ſhall bring the offerings of the LORD made by fire, the fat with the breaſt, it ſhall he bring, that the breaſt may be waved for a wave-offering before the LORD.

31 And the prieſt ſhall burn the fat upon the altar: but the breaſt ſhall be Aarons and his ſons.

32 And the right ſhoulder ſhall ye give unto the prieſt for an heave-offering of the ſacrifices of your peace-offerings,

33 He among the ſons of Aaron that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings, and the fat, ſhall have the right ſhoulder for his part.

34 For the wave-breaſt and the heave-ſhoulder have I taken of the children of Iſrael, from off the ſacrifices of their peace-offerings, and have given them unto Aaron the prieſt, and unto his ſons, by a ſtatute for ever, from among the children of Iſrael.

35 ¶ This is the portion of the anointing of Aaron, and of the anointing of his ſons, out of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, in the day when he preſented them, to miniſter unto the LORD in the prieſts office:

36 Which the LORD commanded to be given them of the children of Iſrael, in the day that he anointed them, by a ſtatute for ever throughout their generations,

37 This is the law of the burnt-offering, of the meat-offering, and of the ſin-offering, and of the treſpaſs-offering, and of the conſecrations, and of the ſacrifice of the peace-offerings:

38 Which the LORD commanded Moſes in mount Sinai, in the day that he commanded the children of Iſrael to offer their oblations unto the LORD in the wilderneſs of Sinai.

CHAP. VIII.

1 Moſes conſecrateth Aaron and his ſons. 14 Their ſin-offering. 18 Their burnt-offering. 22 The ram of conſecration. 31 The place and time of their conſecration.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Take Aaron and his ſons with him, and the garments, and the anointing oyl, and a bullock for the ſin-offering, and two rams, and a basket of unleavened bread.

3 And gather thou all the congregation together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 And Moſes did as the LORD commanded him, and the aſſembly was gathered together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

5 And Moſes ſaid unto the congregation, This is the thing which the LORD commanded to be done.

6 And Moſes brought Aaron and his ſons, and waſhed them with water.

7 And he put upon him the coat, and girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound it unto him therewith.

8 And he put the breaſt-plate upon him: alſo he put in the breaſt-plate the Urim and Thummim.

9 And he put the mitre upon his head; alſo upon the mitre, even upon his fore-front did he put the golden plate, the holy crown; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

10 And Moſes took the anointing oyl, and anointed the tabernacle and all that was therein and ſanctified them.

11 And he ſprinkled thereof upon the altar ſeven times, and anointed the altar, and all his veſſels, both the laver and his foot, to ſanctify them.

12 And he poured of the anointing oyl upon Aarons head, and anointed him to ſanctify him.

13 And Moſes brought Aarons ſons, and put coats upon them, and girded them with girdles, and put bonnets upon them; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

14 And he brought the bullock for the ſin-offering: and Aaron and his ſons laid their hands upon the head of the bullock for the ſin-offering.

15 And he ſlew it, and Moſes took the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about with his finger, and purified the altar; and poured the blood at the bottom of the altar, and ſanctified it, to make reconciliation upon it.

16 And he took all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and Moſes burned it upon the altar.

17 But the bullock and his hide, his fleſh and his dung, he burnt with fire without the camp; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

18 ¶ And he brought the ram for the burnt-offering: and Aaron and his ſons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

19 And he killed it, and Moſes ſprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

20 And he cut the ram into pieces, and Moſes burnt the head, and the pieces, and the fat.

21 And he waſhed the inwards and the legs in water; and Moſes burnt the whole ram upon the altar: it was a burnt-ſacrifice for a ſweet ſavour, and an offering made by fire unto the LORD; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

22 ¶ And he brought the other ram, the ram of conſecration: and Aaron and his ſons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

24 And he brought Aarons ſons, and Moſes put of the blood upon the tip of their right ear, and upon the thumbs of their right hands, and upon the great toes of their right feet: and Moſes ſprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

25 And he took the fat, and the rump, and all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and the right ſhoulder.

26 And out of the basket of unleavened bread, that was before the LORD, he took one unleavened cake, and a cake of oyled bread, and one wafer, and put them on the fat, and upon the right ſhoulder.

27 And he put all upon Aarons hands, and upon his ſons hands, and waved them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

28 And Moſes took them from off their hands, and burnt them on the altar, upon the burnt-offering: they were conſecrations for a ſweet ſavour: it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

29 And

29 And Moſes took the breaſt, and waved it for a wave-offering before the LORD: for of the ram of conſecration it was Moſes part; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

30 And Moſes took of the anointing oyl, and of the blood which was upon the altar, and ſprinkled it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his ſons, and upon his ſons garments with him: and ſanctified Aaron, and his garments, and his ſons, and his ſons garments with him.

31 ¶ And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, and to his ſons, Boil the fleſh at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and there eat it with the bread that is in the basket of conſecrations, as I commanded, ſaying, Aaron, and his ſons ſhall eat it.

32 And that which remaineth of the fleſh, and of the bread, ſhall ye burn with fire.

33 And ye ſhall not go out of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation in ſeven days, until the days of your conſecration be at an end: for ſeven days ſhall he conſecrate you.

34 As he hath done this day, ſo the LORD hath commanded to do, to make an atonement for you.

35 Therefore ſhall ye abide at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation day and night, ſeven days, and keep the charge of the LORD, that ye die not: for ſo I am commanded.

36 So Aaron and his ſons did all things which the LORD commanded by the hand of Moſes.

Moſes relates, in this chapter, the ceremonials obſerved at the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons; this ſolemnity was performed agreeably to the directions God gave to the Jewiſh law-giver, in the xxixth chapter of Exodus, where we have ſufficiently explained, in our annotations, all the circumſtances of that tranſaction, and therefore think it unneceſſary to repeat any other particulars here.

CHAP. IX.

1 The firſt offerings of Aaron for himſelf and the people. 8 The ſin-offering, 12 and the burnt-offering for himſelf. 15 The offerings for the people. 23 Moſes and Aaron bleſs the people. 24 Fire cometh from the Lord, upon the altar.

AND it came to paſs on the eighth day, that Moſes called Aaron and his ſons, and the elders of Iſrael;

2 And he ſaid unto Aaron, Take thee a young calf for a ſin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering, without blemiſh, and offer them before the LORD.

3 And unto the children of Iſrael thou ſhalt ſpeak, ſaying, Take ye a kid of the goats, for a ſin-offering; and a calf, and a lamb, both of the firſt year, without blemiſh, for a burnt-offering;

4 Alſo a bullock and a ram for peace-offerings, to ſacrifice before the LORD; and a meat-offering mingled with oyl: for to-day the LORD will appear unto you.

5 ¶ And they brought that which Moſes commanded before the tabernacle of the congregation: and all the congregation drew near, and ſtood before the LORD.

6 And Moſes ſaid, This is the thing which the LORD commanded that ye ſhould do: and the glory of the LORD ſhall appear unto you.

7 And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, Go unto the altar, and offer thy ſin-offering, and thy burnt-offering, and make an atonement for thyſelf, and for the people: and offer the offering of the people, and make an atonement for them; as the LORD commanded.

8 ¶ Aaron therefore went unto the altar, and ſlew the calf of the ſin-offering, which was for himſelf.

9 And the ſons of Aaron brought the blood unto him: and he dipt his finger in the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar, and poured out the blood at the bottom of the altar.

10 But the fat, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver of the ſin-offering he burnt upon the altar; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

11 And the fleſh and the hide he burnt with fire, without the camp.

12 And he ſlew the burnt-offering; and Aarons ſons preſented unto him the blood, which he ſprinkled round about upon the altar.

13 And they preſented the burnt-offering unto him, with the pieces thereof, and the head: and he burnt them upon the altar.

14 And he did waſh the inwards and the legs, and burnt them upon the burnt-offering on the altar.

15 ¶ And he brought the peoples offering, and took the goat which was the ſin-offering for the people, and ſlew it, and offer'd it for ſin, as the firſt.

16 And he brought the burnt-offering, and offered it according to the manner.

17 And he brought the meat-offering, and took an handful thereof, and burnt it upon upon the altar, beſide the burnt-ſacrifice of the morning.

18 He ſlew alſo the bullock and the ram, for a ſacrifice of peace-offerings, which was for the people: and Aarons ſons preſented unto him the blood (which he ſprinkled upon the altar round about)

19 And the fat of the bullock, and of the ram, the rump, and that which covereth the inwards, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver.

20 And they put the fat upon the breaſts, and he burnt the fat upon the altar:

21 And the breaſts and the right ſhoulder Aaron waved for a wave offering before the LORD; as Moſes commanded.

22 And Aaron lift up his hand towards the people, and bleſſed them; and came down from offering of the ſin-offering, and the burnt-offering, and peace-offerings.

23 And Moſes and Aaron went into the tabernacle of the congregation, and came out, and bleſſed the people: and the glory of the LORD appeared unto all the people.

24 And there came a fire out from before the LORD, and conſumed upon the altar the burnt-offering, and the fat: which when all the people ſaw, they ſhouted and fell on their faces.

The offerings deſcribed in this chapter have already been commented on, in our annotations on the xxixth chapter of Exodus, where they are firſt inſtituted by the Deity, we therefore refer our readers to what has been obſerved, on that ſubject, in the notes on that chapter.

Ver. 23. And Moſes and Aaron went into the tabernacle of the congregation.] The ſacrifice being ended, it is likely, Moſes went with Aaron into the ſanctuary, to inſtruct him how to ſprinkle the blood, and to burn incenſe, and order the ſhew-bread, and ſuch like things, as were to be done only in the holy place.

——— And came out, and bleſſed the people.] We ſuppoſe, that all the ſacrifices before-mentioned might be offered after the morning ſacrifice, ver. 17. which took up a great deal of time, before they were all compleated. After which, Moſes and Aaron went into the ſanctuary, and ſtayed there till the time of the evening ſacrifice; and then came out, and diſmiſſed the people with a new bleſſing, when the evening ſacrifice was finiſhed.

——— And the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the people.] That glory which filled the tabernacle, Exod. xl. ver. 34, 35. now appeared without; either at the door of it, or upon it, in the ſight of all the people, as Moſes had foretold, ver. 6.

Ver. 24. And there came a fire out from before the Lord, and conſumed upon the altar the burnt-offering and the fat] Either out of the ſanctuary, from the Holy of Holies; or from that glory which now appeared unto them, and ſent out flaſhes of fire, which burnt up the ſacrifice. In either of theſe ſenſes, it may be ſaid to come from the face of the Lord, as the Hebrew phraſe is.

It ſeems to us the moſt natural and eaſy, to take this burnt-offering and its fat, for the evening ſacrifice; which concluding the work of the day, God gave a ſpecial token of his acceptance of all the other ſacrifices, by conſuming this; and likewiſe publickly teſtified his approbation of all the before-mentioned rites of the miniſtry of Aaron, whoſe authority was hereby eſtabliſhed, in a miraculous manner.

This was ſo notorious, that Julian himſelf acknowledges, that fire came down from heaven in the time of Moſes, and again in the days of Elijah, conſuming the ſacrifices; as we find his words related by St. Cyril, (lx. contra Julianum) and this gave ſuch a Divine authority to the Jewiſh religion, that it is no wonder to find, that the Pagans endeavoured to get credit to their religion, by the like reports of fire, from an inviſible power, conſuming their ſacrifices: which perhaps, was ſometimes done by the prince of the power of the air, as the Apoſtle called the devil; however that be, there are ſeveral inſtances in Pauſanius, Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, Valerius Maximus, and Pliny. But Servius may ſerve inſtead of all; who upon thoſe words of Virgil (in Æneid. xii.) fœdera fulmine ſancit, ſaith, that anciently they did not kindle fires upon their altars, ſed ignem divinum precibus eliciebant, &c. but they procured by their prayers divine fire, which inflamed their altars: and Solinus ſaith, (cap. 2.) that the flame ſprang out of the wood by a divine power, ſi deus adeſt, ſi ſacrum probatur, ſarmenta licet viridia ignem ſponte concipiunt, &c. if God be preſent, if the ſacrifice be acceptable, the faggots, though green, kindle of themſelves; and without any one to ſet them on fire, a flame is raiſed by the deity, to whom the ſacrifice is offered. Thus there roſe up fire out of the rock, and conſumed Gideon's ſacrifice, (Judg. chap. vi. verſe 21.)

CHAP. X.

1 Nadab and Abihu, for offering of ſtrange fire, are burnt by fire. 6 Aaron and his ſons are forbidden to mourn for them. 8 The prieſts are forbidden wine when they are to go into the tabernacle. 12 The law of eating the holy things. 16 Aarons excuſe for tranſgreſſing thereof.

AND Nadab and Abihu the ſons of Aaron, took either of them his cenſer, and put fire therein, and put incenſe thereon, and offered ſtrange fire before the LORD, which he commanded them not.

2 And there went out fire from the LORD, and devoured them, and they died before the LORD.

3 Then Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, This is it that the LORD ſpake, ſaying, I will be ſanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified. And Aaron held his peace.

4 And Moſes called Miſhael and Elzaphan, the ſons of Uzziel the uncle of Aaron, and ſaid unto them, Come near, carry your brethren from before the ſanctuary out of the camp.

5 So they went near, and carried them in their coats out of the camp; as Moſes had ſaid.

6 And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar and unto Ithamar his ſons. Uncover not your heads, neither rend your clothes; leſt ye die, and leſt wrath come upon all the people: but let your brethren, the whole houſe houſe of Iſrael, bewail the burning which the LORD hath kindled.

Nadab and Abihu consumed with Fire from the Lord.

7 And ye ſhall not go out from the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, leſt you die: for the anointing oyl of the LORD is upon you. And they did according to the word of Moſes.

8 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Aaron, ſaying,

9 Do not drink wine nor ſtrong drink, thou nor thy ſons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation; leſt ye die: It ſhall be a ſtatute for ever throughout your generations:

10 And that ye may put difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean.

11 And that ye may teach the children of Iſrael all the ſtatutes which the LORD hath ſpoken unto them by the hand of Moſes.

12 ¶ And Moſes ſpake unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar and unto Ithamar his ſons that were left, Take the meat-offering that remaineth of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and eat it without leaven beſide the altar: for it is moſt holy.

13 And ye ſhall eat it in the holy place, becauſe it is thy due, and thy ſons due of the ſacrifices of the LORD made by fire: for ſo I am commanded.

14 And the wave-breaſt, and heave-ſhoulder ſhall ye eat in a clean place; thou and thy ſons, and thy daughters with thee: for they be thy due, and thy ſons due, which are given out of the ſacrifices of peace-offerings of the children of Iſrael.

15 The heave-ſhoulder, and the wave-breaſt ſhall they bring with the offerings made by fire of the fat, to wave it for a wave-offering before the LORD, and it ſhall be thine, and thy ſons with thee, by a ſtatute for ever; as the LORD hath commanded.

16 ¶ And Moſes diligently ſought the goat of the ſin-offering, and behold, it was burnt; and he was angry with Eleazar and Ithamar, the ſons of Aaron, which were left alive, ſaying,

17 Wherefore have ye not eaten the ſin-offering in the holy place, ſeeing it is moſt holy, and God hath given it you to bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before the LORD?

18 Behold, the blood of it was not brought in, within the holy place: ye ſhould indeed have eaten it in the holy place, as I commanded.

19 And Aaron ſaid unto Moſes, Behold, this day have they offered their ſin-offering, and their burnt-offering before the LORD; and ſuch things have befallen me: and if I had eaten the ſin-offering to day, ſhould it have been accepted in the ſight of the LORD?

20 And when Moſes heard that, he was content.

Ver. 1. And Nadab and Abihu, the ſons of Aaron, took either of them his cenſer, and put fire therein.] Nadab and Abihu were hardly inveſted and inſtalled in the prieſthood, before they violated the obligations thereof. The eminence of their ſtation, rendered their crime the more heinous, and their puniſhment the more ſevere. The words in this verſe, as conciſe as they are, ſufficiently explain the guilt of theſe two ſons of Aaron; but ſeveral of the interpreters charge them with a complication of crimes:

Firſt, They are accuſed, of having fallen into the exceſs of gluttony and intemperance, even at that very time when they ought to have employ'd their minds, in the moſt ſerious meditations. Moſes, after having related their fatal end, gives the following order to Aaron, and the reſt of his ſons, on the part of God; "do not drink "wine, nor ſtrong drink, thou, nor thy ſons with thee, "when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, "leſt ye die: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever, throughout your "generations: And that ye may put difference between "holy and unholy, and between clean and unclean;" ver. 9, 10. The time when this law was publiſhed, has cauſed ſome of the learned to conjecture, that Nadab and Abihu intoxicated themſelves, at the repaſt which they made with the fleſh of the victims that Moſes had offered to God at their inſtallation: but the bare mention of this opinion, is ſufficient to ſhow, that it is but conjecture at beſt.

Secondly, Theſe two ſons of Aaron are charged with a deſign of entering into the moſt holy place. They who advance this notion, pretend to eſtabliſh it after the following manner: it is ſaid, in the words we have quoted, that it was before the Lord, that Nadab and Abihu offered incenſe with ſtrange fire; and Moſes relates in another place, that "after the death of the two ſons of Aaron, "when they offered before the Lord and dy'd, the Lord "ſaid unto Moſes, ſpeak unto Aaron thy brother, that "he come not at all times into the holy place within the "veil, before the mercy-ſeat, which is upon the ark; "that he die not," Levit. chap. xvi. verſe 1, 2. The comparing theſe two paſſages, has induced ſome criticks to think, that Nadab and Abihu had attempted to enter into that auguſt apartment, in which were kept the ark and the mercy-ſeat, but no body can deny, that this altar has often an indifinitive ſignification without imploying any connexion between what is now, and what was before related; and this other expreſſion before the Lord, is frequently applied to all the apartments of the tabernacle, and cannot therefore be reſtrained to denote only the moſt holy place.

Third and laſtly, Nadab and Abihu, are accuſed of having incroached upon the functions of the ſupreme prieſthood, and to have ſinned in that very circumſtance of entering into the holy place to offer incenſe, which is pretended to be a prerogative, that belonged only to the high prieſt. This is the opinion of ſome Jewiſh doctors, and alſo of the learned Bochart; but it ſeems to us very evident, that the ſubaltern prieſts were ordered to offer incenſe in the holy place, when the victims for the continual ſacrifice were offered in the court.

We confine our ſelves therefore to the narration of Moſes, and are of opinion, that the ſin of Nadab and Abihu, conſiſted only in this, that they burnt their incenſe with ſtrange fire. This event is explained by ſeveral circumſtances of the ſacred ſcripture. Firſt, it is ſaid in Lev. chap. ix. ver. 24. that a miraculous fire from before the Lord, (that is to ſay, a fire which either came down immediately from heaven, or out of the cloud that covered the tabernacle) conſumed the firſt victims that Aaron offered for a burnt-offering. Secondly, God had expreſsly commanded, that the fire which was on the altar, ſhould never be ſuffered to go out; which ſignifies, according to the generality of interpreters, that the miraculous fire, which had confirmed the inſtallation of Aaron and his ſons, after ſo ſurpriſing a manner, ſhould be kept alive with the utmoſt care. Thirdly, another law imported, that Aaron was to kindle at this fire, the incenſe he offered to God in the moſt holy place on the day of the great atonement. We take it for granted, that a like law was impoſed on the ſubaltern prieſts, with reſpect to the incenſe they were to offer daily to God in the holy place. We confeſs, there is no mention made of ſuch a law; but the hiſtory we are commenting upon, gives us a ſtrong preſumption, that it was preſcribed, to them likewiſe, they offered ſtrange fire before the Lord, ſays Moſes, which he commanded them not. Theſe laſt words which he commanded them not, are of equal import with thoſe in other places of the holy writ, where it is ſaid, what he had forbidden the crime then, of Nadab and Abihu conſiſted in their kindling, with a fire different from that which burnt continually on the altar of burnt-offerings, the incenſe which their office of prieſts obliged them to offer up to God, every morning and evening in the holy place.

It was neceſſary that the profanation of ſo auguſt a ceremony ſhould be puniſhed after ſo exemplary a manner, as might for ever deter all thoſe who celebrated it unworthily for the future. Severity is the ſoul of a law, eſpecially at the firſt enacting of any ſtatute. One of the Heralds of the Goſpel, began his miniſtry with a clap of thunder, Acts v. The firſt rays he ſhot from his eyes were mortal, and the death of two of his perfidious diſciples were the ſeal of his Apoſtleſhip.

Beſide, Nadab and Abihu, upon whom great favour had been conferred by God, had greater motives than their brothers, ſtrictly to obſerve the laws which were promulgated on that formidable mount, where they had the privilege of ſeeing the ſymbols of the Divine Preſence, without being conſumed; accordingly they were puniſhed for their profanation, at the very inſtant that they committed it. A vapour, ſubtil and inflamed, like that of lightning, which penetrates porous bodies, and which does not act but upon thoſe ſubſtances, which have ſome ſort of ſolidity, pierced their garments, but left no impreſſion upon them; and yet ſlew the men who wore them, either by ſuffocation, or ſome other effect not deſcribed by Moſes, who only ſays, there went out a fire from the Lord and devoured them, and they died before the Lord.

We cannot determine, with any certainty, whence this fire proceeded; whether it came directly from the air, or out of thoſe very cenſers, into which they put ſtrange fire; and it only appears, by the relation of the ſacred hiſtorian, that the bodies of thoſe unhappy perſons, were not reduced to aſhes, nor their ſacerdotal veſtments conſumed. From this inſtance, the Jews borrowed their cuſtom of ſtrangling thoſe they had condemned to be burnt.

That ſtroke, which deprived Nadab and Abihu of their lives, was ſufficient, one would think, to affect their father Aaron with a mortal ſorrow, and yet Moſes obliged him to ſet bounds to his affliction; the exceſs of which he prevented by a terrible maxim, but ſuch a one as ought to be received with an entire ſubmiſſion by all thoſe, who, as dutiful obſervers of the laws of God, love nothing more than him. This maxim was, that it is requiſite, God ſhould be glorified, by the obedience of thoſe who dare to oppoſe them; and this is the meaning of the words, in the third verſe of this chapter; this is that which the Lord ſpake, ſaying, I will be ſanctified in them that come nigh me.

Moſes ordered Aaron not to teſtify any of thoſe tokens of grief which might cauſe it to be thought, that he had more affection for his children, than zeal for the glory of him who had condemned them to periſh after ſo tragical a manner. He would not allow, either the high prieſt himſelf, or his two ſons who were ſtill living, to rend their cloaths, as was the cuſtom in great ſorrows, or tear their hair, or take off their prieſtly ornaments from their heads. He prohibited all kinds of behaviour that might create any ſuſpicion, that the death of his ſons ſhould make him neglect the ſervice of God. A Jewiſh doctor ſays, that it was anciently an indecent thing to appear before kings, with tokens of grief; ſo it would have been a profanation for any one to come into the preſence of God, with a concern that was capable of making him forfeit the privilege of approaching him. And above all, Moſes would not ſuffer Aaron, nor the reſt of his ſons, to go out of the tabernacle, 'till they had quite diſcharged those functions which occaſioned their entring it.

The command that was given to theſe holy men, on this occaſion, became a law for the future, in the commonwealth of Iſrael. It was a maxim of the Jews, that if the high-prieſt ſhould happen to be informed of the death of any of his relations, whilſt he was in the exerciſe of his office, he was bound to continue in it. One of their canons ſpeaks thus: "In caſe a prieſt of the lower rank, "being in the ſanctuary, ſhould hear of the death of a "friend, for whom he ought to mourn, he ſhall forbear "the exerciſe of his office, becauſe he is in affliction, tho' "he do not go out of the tabernacle.—But if the high-"prieſt continues the ſervice, even when he mourns, he is "not guilty of a profanation; only it is not lawful for him "to eat of the conſecrated food."

Moſes, after having thus ſatisfied the laws of religion, reſolved likewiſe to ſatisfy thoſe of nature, which require the ſhedding tears for unhappy perſons, whatever their crime was which brought their calamities upon them. He allowed thoſe of Aaron's family, who were not actually employed in the ſacerdotal function, to bewail the tragical death of Nadab and Abihu; he even conſented, that Eleazar, and Ithamar, ſhould be excuſed from complying with that law which required them to rejoice, after having offered peace-offerings, and inſtead of eating the fleſh of victims, to burn them with fire, as if they had been ſacrifices of atonement; perhaps it may ſeem to ſome, that Moſes was too ſevere in ſtreightening ſome of the laws of nature; and perhaps too, that conſtancy which he endeavour'd to inſpire into the ſoul of Aaron, may appear more worthy of thoſe who purſue an heroick inſenſibility of tenderneſs in their great actions, than of ſuch, whoſe hearts ought to be more ſoft and compaſſionate, from maxims in religion: Should not a father in ſuch circumſtances be permitted to devote ſome time to a grief, which the fatal end of two of his children occaſioned in him? Should faith or religion, reſtrain our tears, when we ſee thoſe whom nature has ſo cloſely united to us, die in obdurateneſs and impenitence? Could any comfort balance ſuch a reflection as this, "my children are dead in their ſins, and the day "which I gave them, has opened the way to an eternal "night of miſery? Can that grief be exceſſive, which is "cauſed by the loſs of a ſoul?"

We anſwer; nothing can be more raſh, than to judge or determine concerning the eternal ſtate of our neighbour: And the ſame religion that enjoins us to tremble for our own ſalvation, requires us always to hope for that of others.

The love we ought to cheriſh in our ſouls for God, ſhould always be the grand principle of that which we teſtify to our fellow-creatures; we are obliged to love them, becauſe like us, they bear his image, and are called to the ſame glory with our ſelves; when we ſee a ſinner venture his ſalvation by a criminal procedure, then ſhould we be affected; and the communion of ſaints, in which we are joined, ſhould intereſt us yet more for them. Thus it was, that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt placing himſelf in that period in which mercy was ſtill offered to the ungrateful Jeruſalem, and in which ſhe had it ſtill in her power to accept it, groaned at her obduracy, and deplored the abuſe ſhe made of that precious time which ſhe ſtill enjoyed. But, if a long ſeries of wickedneſs, if a total perſeverance in rebellion, or rather, if an infallible revelation ſhould aſſure us, that ſuch a man has no ſhare in the covenant of grace, then ought our love to return to its centre, and be ſwallowed up in the boſom of its Creator, from whence it firſt ſprang: If any man love not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, let him be anathema. 1 Cor. xvi. 22.

Aaron however, had not any revelation of this nature, and might therefore preſume, that the Divine juſtice, being ſatisfied with having made thoſe two unhappy ſons examples of a temporal vengeance, would be diſarmed with reſpect to that of eternity; and that the fleſh being deſtroyed, the ſpirit might be ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus. 1 Cor. v. 5. And accordingly, as ſevere as were were the orders of Moſes, Aaron was convinced they were juſt. He ſilently adored the divine hand, which, tho' armed with thunder, was not leſs worthy of his homage; he was dumb, he opened not his mouth, becauſe it was God that did it.

CHAP. XI.

1 What beaſts may, 4 and what may not be eaten. 9 What fiſhes. 13 What fowls. 28 The creeping things which are unclean.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and to Aaron, ſaying unto them,

2 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, Theſe are the beaſts which ye ſhall eat among all the beaſts that are on the earth.

3 Whatſoever parteth the hoof, and is cloven-footed, and cheweth the cud among the beaſts, that ſhall ye eat.

4 Nevertheleſs, theſe ſhall ye not eat, of them that chew the cud, or of them that divide the hoof: as the camel, becauſe he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof; he is unclean unto you.

5 And the cony, becauſe he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof: he is unclean unto you.

6 And the hare, becauſe he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof: he is unclean unto you.

7 And the ſwine, though he divide the hoof, and be cloven-footed: yet he cheweth not the cud: he is unclean to you.

8 Of their fleſh ſhall ye not eat, and their carcaſe ſhall ye not touch: they are unclean to you.

9 ¶ Theſe ſhall ye eat, of all that are in the waters: whatſoever hath fins and ſcales in the waters, in the ſeas, and in the rivers; them ſhall ye eat.

10 And all that have not fins nor ſcales, in the ſeas, and in the rivers, of all that move in the waters, and of any living thing which is in the waters; they ſhall be an abomination unto you.

11 They ſhall be even an abomination unto you: ye ſhall not eat of their fleſh, but you ſhall have their carcaſes in abomination.

12 Whatſoever hath no fins nor ſcales in the waters, that ſhall be an abomination unto you.

13 ¶ And theſe are they which ye ſhall have in abomination among the fowls, they ſhall not be eaten, they are an abomination: the eagle, and the oſſifrage, and the oſpray.

14 And the vulture, and the kite, after his kind:

15 Every raven after his kind,

16 And the owl, and the night-hawk and the cuckow, and the hawk after his kind.

17 And the little owl, and the cormorant, and the great owl,

18 And the ſwan, and the pelican, and the gier-eagle,

19 And the ſtork, the heron after her kind, and the lapwing, and the bat.

20 All fowls that creep, going upon all four, ſhall be an abomination unto you.

21 Yet theſe may ye eat, of every flying creeping thing that goeth upon all four which have legs above their feet to leap withal upon the earth:

22 Even theſe of them ye may eat; the locuſt after his kind, and the bald-locuſt after his kind, and the beetle after his kind, and the graſhopper after his kind.

23 But all other flying creeping things, which have four feet, ſhall be an abomination unto you.

24 And for theſe ye ſhall be unclean: whoſoever toucheth the carcaſe of them, ſhall be unclean until the even.

25 And whoſoever beareth ought of the carcaſe of them, ſhall waſh his clothes, and be unclean until the even.

26 The carcaſes of every beaſt which divided the hoof, and is not cloven-footed, nor cheweth the cud, are unclean unto you: every one that toucheth them, ſhall be unclean.

27 And whatſoever goeth upon his paws, among all manner of beaſts that go on all four, thoſe are unclean unto you: whoſo toucheth their carcaſe, ſhall be unclean until the even.

28 And he that beareth the carcaſe of them, ſhall waſh his clothes, and be unclean until the evening: they are unclean unto you.

29 ¶ Theſe alſo ſhall be unclean unto you, among the creeping things that creep upon the earth: the weaſel, and the mouſe, and the tortoiſe after his kind.

30 And the ferret, and the chameleon, and the lizard, and the ſnail, and the mole.

31 Theſe are unclean to you among all that creep: whoſoever doth touch them when they be dead, ſhall be unclean until the even.

32 And upon whatſoever any of them, when they are dead, doth fall, it ſhall be unclean; whether it be any veſſel of wood, or raiment, or skin, or ſack, whatſoever veſſel it be, wherein any work is done, it muſt be put into water, and it ſhall be unclean until the even; ſo it ſhall be cleanſed.

33 And every earthen veſſel, whereinto any of them falleth, whoſoever is in it ſhall be unclean; and ye ſhall break it.

34 Of all meat which may be eaten, that on which ſuch water cometh, ſhall be unclean: and all drink that may be drunk in every ſuch veſſel, ſhall be unclean.

35 And every thing, whereupon any part of their carcaſe falleth, ſhall be unclean; whether it be oven, or ranges for pots, they ſhall be broken down: for they are unclean, and ſhall be unclean unto you.

36 Nevertheleſs, a fountain or pit, wherein there is plenty of water, ſhall be clean: but that which toucheth their carcaſe ſhall be unclean.

37 And if any part of their carcaſe fall upon any ſowing-ſeed which is to be ſown; it ſhall be clean.

38 But if any water be put upon the ſeed, and any part of their carcaſe fall thereon: : it ſhall be unclean unto you.

39 And if any beaſt of which ye may eat, die; he that toucheth the carcaſe thereof, ſhall be unclean until the even.

40 And he that eateth of the carcaſe of it, ſhall waſh his clothes, and be unclean until the evening: he alſo that beareth the carcaſe of it, ſhall waſh his clothes, and be unclean until the even.

41 And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, ſhall be an abomination: it ſhall not be eaten.

42 Whatſoever goeth upon the belly, and whatſoever goeth upon all four, or whatſoever hath more feet among all creeping things that creep upon the earth; them ye ſhall not eat, for they are an abomination.

43 Ye ſhall not make your ſelves abominable with any creeping thing that creepeth, neither ſhall ye make your ſelves unclean with them, that ye ſhould be defiled thereby.

44 For I am the LORD your God: ye ſhall therefore ſanctify your ſelves, and ye ſhall be holy; for I am holy: neither ſhall ye defile your ſelves with any manner of creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

45 For I am the LORD that bringeth you up out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: ye ſhall therefore be holy, for I am holy.

46 This is the law of the beaſts, and of the fowl, and of every living creature that moveth in the waters, and of every creature that creepeth upon the earth:

47 To make a difference between the unclean and the clean, and between the beaſt that may be eaten and the beaſt that may not be eaten.

Ver. 2, Theſe are the beaſts which ye ſhall eat among all the beaſts that are on the earth.] Of all the food that is forbidden by the Moſaic law, blood may be reckoned in the firſt place, becauſe its prohibition was as old as the deluge; Gen. ix. ver. 4, &c. When God having, immediately after it, given Noah the liberty of eating the fleſh of animals, as is moſt generally ſuppoſed, forbad the eating not only the blood it ſelf, but the fleſh alſo mixed with it; that is, of any animal, either ſtrangled or killed by any other way than drawing the blood thoroughly from it, under very ſevere threatnings. The reaſon given in the text is, that blood is the life of the animal; by which is meant, that no animal can live without it. But it is not improbable, that the end and deſign of this prohibition was, that it might be a kind of acknowledgment, that our privilege for killing, and eating the fleſh of thoſe living creatures, is not delivered to us from the law of nature, which ſeems rather to be againſt it, but from an expreſs permiſſion from the author of nature. And this ſeems to be the reaſon why it was not only enforced by the Moſaic law, but alſo retained in the goſpel, and enjoined to its proſelites from Gentiliſm, Acts xv. 29. This law, we are told by a modern traveller, (Ludolph. Hiſt. Æthiop.) is ſtill ſtrictly obſerved by ſome Eaſtern churches; not, as our author ſays, by virtue of the law of Moſes, but of the apoſtolical canon, which hath been kept ever ſince by the eaſtern, and, for ſeveral ages, by the weſtern church, and confirmed by ſeveral councils, from time to time.

We find the eating of blood no leſs expreſly forbidden by Moſes in ſeveral places, not only to the Iſraelites, but to the ſtrangers that lived among them; even under pain of death. God ſeems even to put it on the level with ſacrificing human offspring to Moloch, when he threatens to ſet his face againſt him that tranſgreſſeth in either caſe; which expreſſion is not uſed in any other prohibition. Only under this typical diſpenſation, God is pleaſed to give a new reaſon for his interdiction, namely, that it is the blood (which is alſo called the life) of the victim, that makes atonement for ſin; purſuant to which, the tabernacle, with all its utenſils, were at firſt purified with it, the covenant between God and the people was ratified with it, and without blood there could be no remiſſion of ſin; all which the Apoſtle fitly applies to that of Chriſt under the Goſpel.

The learned Maimonides, not thinking theſe reaſons ſufficient, has fetched the origin of this prohibition, from his old fountain of oppoſition to the Sabians, Amorites, and the other idolatrous nations, who fancying blood to be the favourite food of dæmons, contented themſelves with the fleſh of beaſts, and poured their blood into a veſſel, or a hole made in the ground; then ſetting and feaſting round it, imagined that thoſe dæmons would come and take their ſhare of the feaſt. From this familiar converſation with their gods, they hoped to procure ſtill a nearer intercourſe with them in their dreams, by which they ſhould gain an in-ſight into futurity: So that according to him, and thoſe that followed him (More Nevoch. P. 3. cap. 46.) the main end of this prohibition was to prevent the worſhip of thoſe dæmons. We need not take notice, how much more effectual the contrary method, that is, the allowing them to eat blood, would have been to have kept them from it; all that we ſhall obſerve here is, that ſuppoſing this ſuperſtitious cuſtom and notion to have been as old as Moſes, it doth not appear to have been ſo old as the flood, or that any of thoſe, who came out of the ark, were addicted to it; and yet it is to them that this prohibition was firſt made, if Moſes may be believed; and who knows how far it might in time contribute to this wild notion of the Sabians and Amorites, by making them fancy, that there was ſomething ſo ſacred in the blood of animals, that it was fit only for the gods?

Next to the blood, was forbidden likewiſe the fleſh of a conſiderable number of beaſts, fowls, fiſhes, and reptiles, which which were therefore to be deemed unclean. This diſtinction, however, of clean and unclean, can hardly be ſuppoſed to have its origin from the Moſaic law, and to have been uſed preloptically, when the divine hiſtorian mentions it even before the flood, Gen. vii. 2. but we ſhall not enter into a nice ſcrutiny about thoſe animals thus forbidden, and ſhall only take notice of the general rule, which Moſes has given, to diſtinguiſh between the clean and the unclean.

Of beaſts, whatever did both chew the cud, and divide the hoof, was to be reckoned clean, and whatever did not both theſe, as the ſwine, which divideth the hoof, but doth not chew the cud, or the camel, hare, rabbit, which chew the cud, and do not part the hoof, was forbidden as unclean; of fowl, all carnivorous birds, ſuch as the eagle, vulture, and the like; all that had four feet, and yet flew, as the bat. Of fiſhes, all that had fins and ſcales were lawful, and all that wanted either were forbidden. Of inſects, all that had wings to raiſe themſelves from the earth, might be eaten; but whatever did only crawl on the earth was unclean. Laſtly, the fat of the clean beaſts was forbidden, not becauſe it was unclean, much leſs becauſe it is hard of digeſtion, which is the reaſon that ſome authors give for this and blood, and ſwines, and other fleſh, being alſo forbidden, ſeeing the laborious life and healthy conſtitution of the Iſraelites made them more able to digeſt them, than many among ours and other nations, who lead an indolent life, and yet can eat them all without any inconvenience; but the reaſon is given in the ſacred text, namely, becauſe, in all ſacrifices, the fat was to be burnt upon the altar, as appertaining unto God, chap. iii. 14. & ſeq. The fleſh of beaſts torn in pieces, or that died of themſelves, was likewiſe forbidden, Exod. xxii. 31. All that needs to be farther added, with reſpect to unclean animals, is, that tho' the touch of them, while alive, was not defiling, yet that of their carcaſes was; inſomuch, that even the veſſels and liquors, into which they fell, were render'd unclean by it; the liquors were to be thrown away, the veſſels, whatever they were, muſt be purified, and the perſon who touched them was to waſh himſelf, and be unclean until the evening. A well, a fountain, or any large receptacle of water, were not defiled by it, but only the perſon that took the unclean creature out of them, ver. 32, &c.

CHAP. XII.

1 The purification of woman after child-birth. 6 Her offerings for her purifying.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, If a woman have conceived ſeed, and born a man-child: then ſhe ſhall be unclean ſeven days; according to the days of the ſeparation for her infirmity ſhall ſhe be unclean.

3 And in the eighth day, the fleſh of his fore-ſkin ſhall be circumciſed.

4 And ſhe ſhall then continue in the blood of her purifying three and thirty days: ſhe ſhall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the ſanctuary, until the days of her purifying be fulfilled.

5 But if ſhe bear a maid-child, then ſhe ſhall be unclean two weeks, as in her ſeparation: and ſhe ſhall continue in the blood of her purifying threeſcore and ſix days.

6 And when the days of her purifying are fulfilled, for a ſon, or for a daughter; ſhe ſhall bring a lamb of the firſt year for a burnt-offering, and a young pigeon, or a turtle-dove for a ſin-offering, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, unto the prieſt:

7 Who ſhall offer it before the LORD, and make an atonement for her, and ſhe ſhall be cleanſed from the iſſue of her blood. This is the law for her that hath born a male or a female.

8 And if ſhe be not able to bring a lamb, then ſhe ſhall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons; the one for the burnt-offering, and the other for a ſin-offering: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for her, and ſhe ſhall be clean.

As the ceremonials inſtituted in this chapter, with reſpect to the particular purification here appointed to be made, are not very material with reference to the Chriſtian diſpenſation; and are likewiſe render'd ſufficiently evident, by the Moſaic account, we think it unneceſſary to offer any comment on this ſubject.

CHAP. XIII.

1 The laws and tokens whereby the prieſt is to be guided in diſcerning the leproſy.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes and Aaron, ſaying,

2 When a man ſhall have in the skin of his fleſh, a riſing, a ſcab, or bright ſpot, and it be in the skin of his fleſh like the plague of leproſy; then he ſhall be brought unto Aaron the prieſt, or unto one of his ſons the prieſts.

3 And the prieſt ſhall look on the plague in the skin of the fleſh: and when the hair in the plague is turned white, and the plague in ſight be deeper than the skin of his fleſh; it is a plague of leproſy: and the prieſt ſhall look on him, and pronounce him unclean.

4 If the bright ſpot be white in the skin of his fleſh, and in ſight be not deeper then the skin, and the hair thereof be not turned white; then the prieſt ſhall ſhut up him that hath the plague, ſeven days.

5 And the prieſt ſhall look on him the ſeventh day: and behold, if the plague in his ſight be at a ſtay, and the plague ſpread not in the skin; then the prieſt ſhall ſhut him up ſeven days more.

6 And the prieſt ſhall look on him again the ſeventh day: and behold, if the plague be ſomewhat dark, and the plague ſpread not in the skin; the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean: it is but a ſcab: and he ſhall waſh his clothes and be clean.

7 But if the ſcab ſpread much abroad in the skin, after that he hath been ſeen of the prieſt for his cleanſing; he ſhall be ſeen of the prieſt again.

8 And if the prieſt ſee, that behold, the ſcab ſpreadeth in the skin; then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean: it is a leproſy.

9 ¶ When the plague of leproſy is in a man, then he ſhall be brought unto the prieſt:

10 And the prieſt ſhall ſee him: and behold, if the riſing be white in the skin, and it have turned the hair white, and there be quick raw fleſh in the riſing:

11 It is an old leproſy in the skin of his fleſh, and the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean, and ſhall not ſhut him up: for he is unclean.

12 And if a leproſy break out abroad in the skin, and the leproſy cover all the skin of him that hath the plague, from his head even to his foot, whereſoever the prieſt looketh;

13 Then the prieſt ſhall conſider: and behold, if the leproſy have covered all his fleſh, he ſhall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: it is all turned white: he is clean.

14 But when raw fleſh appeareth in him, he ſhall be unclean.

15 And the prieſt ſhall ſee the raw fleſh, and pronounce him to be unclean: for the raw fleſh is unclean: it is a leproſy.

16 Or if the raw fleſh turn again, and be changed unto white: he ſhall come unto the prieſt;

17 And the prieſt ſhall ſee him: and behold, if the plague be turned into white; then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: he is clean.

18 ¶ The fleſh alſo, in which, even in the skin thereof, was a bile, and is healed,

19 And in the place of the bile there be a white riſing, or a bright ſpot white, and ſomewhat reddiſh, and it be ſhewed to the prieſt;

20 And if when the prieſt ſeeth it, behold, it be in ſight lower than the skin, and the hair thereof be turned white; the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean: it is a plague of leproſy broken out of the bile.

21 But if the prieſt look on it, and behold there be no white hairs therein, and if it be not lower then the skin, but be ſomewhat dark; then the prieſt ſhall ſhut him up ſeven days.

22 And if it ſpread much abroad in the skin, then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean; it is a plague.

23 But if the bright ſpot ſtay in his place, and ſpread not, it is a burning bile; and the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean.

24 ¶ Or if there be any fleſh in the skin whereof there is a hot burning, and the quick fleſh that burneth have a white bright ſpot, ſomewhat reddiſh, or white;

25 Then the prieſt ſhall look upon it: and behold, if the hair in the bright ſpot be turned white, and it be in ſight deeper then the skin; it is a leproſy broken out of the burning: wherefore the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leproſy.

26 But if the prieſt look on it, and behold, there be no white hair on the bright ſpot, and it be no lower than the other skin, but be ſomewhat dark; then the prieſt ſhall ſhut him up ſeven days.

27 And the prieſt ſhall look upon him the ſeventh day: and if it be ſpread much abroad in the skin, then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leproſy.

28 And if the bright ſpot ſtay in his place, and ſpread not in the skin, but it be ſomewhat dark; it is a riſing of the burning, and the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean: for it is an inflammation of the burning.

29 ¶ If a man or woman hath a plague upon the head or the beard;

30 Then the prieſt ſhall ſee the plague: and behold, if it be in ſight deeper than the skin, and there be in it a yellow thin hair; then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean: it is a dry ſcall, even a leproſy upon the head or beard.

31 And if the prieſt look on the plague of the ſcall, and behold, it be not in ſight deeper then the skin, and that there is no black hair in it; then the prieſt ſhall ſhut up him that hath the plague of the ſcall ſeven days.

32 And in the ſeventh day the prieſt ſhall look on the plague: and behold, if the ſcall ſpread not, and there be in it no yellow hair, and the ſcall be not in ſight deeper than the skin;

33 He ſhall be ſhaven, but the ſcall ſhall he not ſhave: and the prieſt ſhall ſhut up him that hath the ſcall ſeven days more.

34 And in the ſeventh day the prieſt ſhall look on the ſcall: and behold, if the ſcall be be not ſpread in the skin, nor be in ſight deeper than the skin; then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean: and he ſhall waſh his clothes, and be clean.

35 But if the ſcall ſpread much in the skin after his cleanſing:

36 Then the prieſt ſhall look on him: and behold, if the ſcall be ſpread in the skin, the prieſt ſhall not ſeek for yellow hair; he is unclean.

37 But if the ſcall be in his ſight at a ſtay, and that there is black hair grown up therein; the ſcall is healed, he is clean: and the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean.

38 ¶ If a man alſo, or a woman have in the skin of their fleſh, bright ſpots, even white bright ſpots;

39 Then the prieſt ſhall look: and behold, if the bright ſpots in the skin of their fleſh be darkiſh white; it is a freckled ſpot that groweth in the skin; he is clean.

40 And the man whoſe hair is fallen off his head, he is bald: yet is he clean.

41 And he that hath his hair fallen off from the part of his head toward his face, he is forehead-bald: yet is he clean.

42 And if there be in the bald head, or bald forehead a white reddiſh ſore; it is a leproſy ſprung up in his bald head, or his bald forehead.

43 Then the prieſt ſhall look upon it: and behold, if the riſing of the ſore be white reddiſh in his bald head, or in his bald forehead, as the leproſy appeareth in the skin of the fleſh;

44 He is a leprous man, he is unclean: the prieſt ſhall pronounce him utterly unclean, his plague is in his head.

45 And the leper in whom the plague is, his clothes ſhall be rent, and his head bare, and he ſhall put a covering upon his upper lip, and ſhall cry, Unclean, unclean.

46 All the days wherein the plague ſhall be in him, he ſhall be defiled; he is unclean: heſhall dwell alone, without the camp ſhall his habitation be.

47 ¶ The garment alſo that the plague of leproſy is in, whether it be a woollen garment, or a linen garment,

48 Whether it be in the warp, or woof, of linen or of woollen, whether in a skin, or in any thing made of skin:

49 And if the plague be greeniſh or reddiſh in the garment, or in the skin, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin; it is a plague of leproſy, and ſhall be ſhewed unto the prieſt.

50 And the prieſt ſhall look upon the plague, and ſhut up it that hath the plague, ſeven days.

51 And he ſhall look on the plague on the ſeventh day: if the plague be ſpread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in a skin, or in any work that is made of skin: the plague is a fretting leproſy: it is unclean.

52 He ſhall therefore burn that garment, whether warp or woof, in woollen or in linen, or any thing of skin wherein the plague is: for it is a fretting leproſy; it ſhall be burnt in the fire.

53 And if the prieſt ſhall look, and behold, the plague be not ſpread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin;

54 Then the prieſt ſhall command that they waſh the thing wherein the plague is, and he ſhall ſhut it up ſeven days more.

55 And the prieſt ſhall look on the plague after that it is waſhed: and behold, if the plague have not changed his colour, and the plague be not ſpread; it is unclean, thou ſhalt burn it in the fire; it is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without.

56 And if the prieſt look, and behold, the plague be ſomewhat dark after the waſhing of it; then he ſhall rend it out of the garment, or out of the skin, or out of the warp, or out of the woof.

57 And if it appear ſtill in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin; it is a ſpreading plague: thou ſhalt burn that wherein the plague is, with fire.

58 And the garment, either warp, or woof, or whatſoever thing of skin it be, which thou ſhalt waſh, if the plague be departed from them, then it ſhall be waſhed the ſecond time, and ſhall be clean.

59 This is the law of the plague of leproſy in a garment of woollen or linen, either in the warp, or woof, or any thing of skins, to pronounce it clean, or to pronounce it unclean.

Ver. 2. When a man ſhall have in the skin of his fleſh, a riſing, a ſcab, or bright ſpot, and it be in the skin of his fleſh, like the plague of leproſy, then he ſhall be brought unto Aaron the prieſt, or unto one of his ſons the prieſts.] Of all diſeaſes the leproſy was reckon'd the moſt defiling, for which reaſon thoſe who were infected with it were obliged to live ſeparate from the reſt, till they had been cured of it: Monarchs themſelves were not exempted from this law, as appears from the inſtance of king Azariah, or Uzziah, as he is called in the Chronicles, who being ſmitten with that incurable diſtemper, for intruding into the prieſtly office, 2 Kings xv. 5. was deprived of his government, and forced to live apart to the day of his death. And indeed one kind of it was of ſo infectious a nature, that too too much caution could not be uſed to prevent its ſpreading; inſomuch, that even thoſe that died of it were buried ſeparately from the reſt.

Moſes diſtinguiſhes three ſorts of leproſies, namely, that of the body, garments, and of houſes, the firſt of theſe is a cuticular diſeaſe, not unlike an inveterate itch or ſcurvy, which cauſes a violent itching; and whether produced by ſome prolific animalcula communicated by the touch, or by corroſive vitrioline ſalts (tho' the former ſeems the moſt probable) will, in time, corrode the fleſh, even to the bone. We ſhall not diſguſt our readers with repeating the ſymptoms that are given of that diſtemper, nor with what phyſicians have wrote concerning it; but only obſerve, that it was of a much more corroſive and dangerous nature, in hot climates, than in cold. They obſerve three kinds, or rather degrees of it; the firſt of theſe, namely, whilſt it is, as it were, in its infancy, may be eaſily cured; the ſecond, when it hath communicated itſelf to the blood, cannot be maſter'd without great difficulty, and a long regimen of diet and phyſic; the laſt, which is when it is grown inveterate, and has fixed itſelf, and corroded the ſolid parts, is reckoned incurable. However, Monſieur Tournefort, who had ſeen it in the Levant, thinks it rather a kind of Venereal diſeaſe; and that, if taken in time, it might be cured by the ſame method; and indeed the ſymptoms of this, of the leproſy, and of an inveterate ſcurvy, are ſo like, that unleſs a phyſician be very expert and cautious, he may eaſily condemn the innocent, and abſolve the guilty. But be that as it will, it is certain, that this leproſy muſt have been ſufficiently known by the Iſraelites in Egypt, ſince Moſes ſpeaks both of the diſeaſe, and its ſymptoms, as of things which were plain and obvious.

The leproſy of the garments is ſuppoſed to have been owing to ſome defects in the management of the wool, skins, and ſtuffs, of which they were made; thoſe manufactures being then very imperfect, to what they have been ſince, the heat of the climate, and perhaps many other things, might contribute ſtill more towards it. Moſes has likewiſe deſcribed the ſymptoms of this kind of leproſy; they were ſpots either of a reddiſh or greeniſh hue, which appeared upon the garments, whether of linnen, woollen, or skins. In theſe Caſes they were to be brought to the prieſts, and according as they appeared to them, they were either to be burnt, or to be waſhed and cleaned, or the ſpots to be cut out, and the reſt declared clean and wholeſome. This garment leproſy is likewiſe ſuppoſed to be a kind of worm which breeds in thoſe ſtuffs, occaſion'd by the oils, greaſe, and other ingredients, uſed in the dreſſing them.

The ſame may be ſaid of the leproſy in houſes, in the mortar and ſtones of which, another ſort of vermin was bred, which had four jaws continually working, and eating holes in them. This was one of the tokens of its being infected; there were ſome other beſide, which were a kind of ruſt or ſcurf, that ſpread itſelf along the walls. In all theſe caſes, the prieſts were directed to ſhut the houſe up for a week, and it is probable, they made ſome kind of fumigation, during that time, tho' no mention is made of it; elſe we cannot ſee, how the bare ſhutting it up could contribute to the removal of the infection. If, upon the opening it again, the marks diſappeared, they pronounced it clean, if not, they cauſed them to be ſcraped off every where, and the houſe to be ſhut up another ſeven days; and if that did not compleat the purification, they order'd it to be demoliſhed, and ſuch materials of it only to be preſerved, as were free from the infection, in order to rebuild it in ſome other place, ver. 13.

As for the other leproſy, namely, the dry one, it was a diſtemper rather diſagreeable to the beholder, than infectious in itſelf. The prieſts were the proper judges both of the diſeaſe and of the cure; concerning which, Moſes gave them ſeveral plain directions, tho' we find not that he preſcribed any remedy againſt it, becauſe, as the Jews think, it was an immediate judgment from God. The ſame they affirm alſo, of the leproſy of houſes and garments, which they pretend was peculiar to the Iſraelites, and to the land of Judea; becauſe, God had promiſed, that whilſt they continued obedient to his laws, their bodies, houſes, and garments, ſhould be preſerved from that diſeaſe; but when they proved ſtubborn and rebellious, he would inflict it as a puniſhment upon them.

When the prieſt had pronounced a man infected with leproſy, he was not only ſecluded from the ſociety of clean perſons, but was likewiſe obliged to go bare-headed, with his cloaths rent, and his upper lip covered with a kind of muffler, to prevent, in all probability, his infecting others by his breath. But one may reaſonably ſuppoſe, they had places in which they lived together, and conſtituted a kind of community among themſelves. Accordingly, we read of four of them, who went together out of ſome quarter of Samaria into the Aſſyrian camp, when the famine raged in the city, 2 Kings vii. 3, 8. and of the ten in the Goſpel, who applied themſelves, in a body, to Chriſt, to be healed by him, Luke xvii. 12.

We ſhall here beg leave to mention a ſtory, which Manetho, and ſeveral other Heathen writers after him, have advanced, with great appearance of ſeriouſneſs, againſt the Jews; and which, tho' each of them relates it in his own way, amounts in the main to this; that the land of Egypt, being grievouſly infected with the leproſy, and the king, Bochorus, having conſulted the oracle, was adviſed to ſend all the lepers out of his kingdom, into a deſert, where they might periſh with want. This was accordingly done, and they being come to the deſolate place, Moſes obſerved, by tracing the footſteps of a wild aſs, a ſpot, where they might dig for water to allay their thirſt, and they being revived with it, choſe him for their guide, and were by him conducted and ſettled in Canaan, in the ſpace of ſeven days; in memory of which, he ordered the ſeventh day to be obſerved as a day of reſt, and prohibited the eating of ſwine's fleſh, becauſe that creature is very ſubject to the leproſy. They add, that in memory of their kind benefactor (the aſs, who ſaved their lives) he commanded an aſs's head to be ſet up, and worſhipped in their temple. This ſtory, which is falſe in every particular, is likewiſe ridiculous, and, as ſuch, has been ſufficiently confuted by Joſephus; and the care which Moſes took, with reſpect to this diſtemper, makes it evident, that, at leaſt, the far greater part of the Iſraelites were free from it, at their coming out of Egypt, elſe it would have been impoſſible to have ſegregated them from the reſt, and to have forced theſe laws upon them, which excluded them from the commerce of thoſe who were free from it.

CHAP. XIV.

1 The Rites and Sacrifices in cleanſing of the Leper. 33 The ſigns of leproſy in a houſe. 48 The cleanſing of that houſe.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 This ſhall be the law of the leper in the day of his cleanſing: He ſhall be brought unto the prieſt:

3 And the prieſt ſhall go forth out of the camp: and the prieſt ſhall look, and behold, if the plague of leproſy be healed in the leper;

4 Then ſhall the prieſt command to take for him that is to be cleanſed, two birds alive, and clean, and cedar-wood, and ſcarlet, and hyſſop.

5 And the prieſt ſhall command that one of the birds be killed in an earthen veſſel, over running water.

6 As for the living bird, he ſhall take it, and the cedar-wood, and the ſcarlet, and the hyſſop, and ſhall dip them and the living bird, in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water.

7 And he ſhall ſprinkle upon him that is to be cleanſed from the leproſy, ſeven times, times, and ſhall pronounce him clean, and ſhall let the living bird looſe into the open field.

8 And he that is to be cleanſed ſhall waſh his clothes, and ſhave off all his hair, and waſh himſelf in water, that he may be clean: and after that he ſhall come into the camp, and ſhall tarry abroad out of his tent ſeven days.

9 But it ſhall be on the ſeventh day, that he ſhall ſhave all his hair off his head, and his beard, and his eye-brows, even all his hair he ſhall ſhave off: and he ſhall waſh his clothes, alſo he ſhall waſh his fleſh in water, and he ſhall be clean.

10 And on the eighth day he ſhall take two he-lambs without blemiſh, and one ew-lamb of the firſt year, without blemiſh, and three tenth-deals of fine flour for a meat-offering, mingled with oyl, and one log of oyl.

11 And the prieſt that maketh him clean, ſhall preſent the man that is to be made clean, and thoſe things before the LORD, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation:

12 And the prieſt ſhall take one he-lamb, and offer him for a treſpaſs-offering, and the log of oyl, and wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

13 And he ſhall ſlay the lamb in the place where he ſhall kill the ſin-offering, and the burnt-offering, in the holy place: for as the ſin-offering is the prieſts, ſo is the treſpaſs-offering: it is moſt holy.

14 And the prieſt ſhall take ſome of the blood of the treſpaſs-offering, and the prieſt ſhall put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleanſed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

15 And the prieſt ſhall take ſome of the log of oyl, and pour it into the palm of his own left hand:

17 And of the reſt of the oyl that is in his hand, ſhall the prieſt put upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleanſed and upon the thumb of his right-hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the blood of the treſpaſs-offering.

18 And the remnant of the oyl that is in the prieſts hand, he ſhall pour upon the head of him that is to be cleanſed: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him before the LORD.

19 And the prieſt ſhall offer the ſin-offering, and make an atonement for him that is to be cleanſed from his uncleanneſs, and afterward he ſhall kill the burnt-offering.

20 And the prieſt ſhall offer the burnt-offering, and the meat-offering upon the altar: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him, and he ſhall be clean.

21 And if he be poor, and cannot get ſo much; then he ſhall take one lamb for a treſpaſs-offering to be waved, to make an atonement for him, and one tenth-deal of fine flour mingled with oyl, for a meat-offering, and a log of oyl:

22 And two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, ſuch as he is able to get; and the one ſhall be a ſin-offering, and the other a burnt-offering.

23 And he ſhall bring them on the eighth day, for his cleanſing, unto the prieſt, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the LORD.

24 And the prieſt ſhall take the lamb of the treſpaſs-offering, and the log of oyl, and the prieſt ſhall wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

25 And he ſhall kill the lamb of the treſpaſs-offering, and the prieſt ſhall take ſome of the blood of the treſpaſs-offering, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleanſed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

26 And the prieſt ſhall pour of the oyl into the palm of his own left hand.

27 And the prieſt ſhall ſprinkle with his right finger, ſome of the oyl that is in his left hand, ſeven times before the LORD.

28 And the prieſt ſhall put of the oyl that is in his hand, upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleanſed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot; upon the place of the blood of the treſpaſs-offering.

29 And the reſt of the oyl that is in the prieſts hand, he ſhall put upon the head of him that is to be cleanſed, to make an atonement for him before the LORD.

30 And he ſhall offer the one of the turtle-doves, or of the young pigeons, ſuch as he can get:

31 Even ſuch as he is able to get, the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, with the meat-offering. And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him that is to be cleanſed, before the LORD.

too much caution could not be uſed to prevent its ſpreading; inſomuch, that even thoſe that died of it were buried ſeparately from the reſt.

Moſes diſtinguiſhes three ſorts of leproſies, namely, that of the body, garments, and of houſes, the firſt of theſe is a cuticular diſeaſe, not unlike an inveterate itch or ſcurvy, which cauſes a violent itching; and whether produced by ſome prolific animalcula communicated by the touch, or by corroſive vitrioline ſalts (tho' the former ſeems the moſt probable) will, in time, corrode the fleſh, even to the bone. We ſhall not diſguſt our readers with repeating the ſymptoms that are given of that diſtemper, nor with what phyſicians have wrote concerning it; but only obſerve, that it was of a much more corroſive and dangerous nature, in hot climates, than in cold. They obſerve three kinds, or rather degrees of it; the firſt of theſe, namely, whilſt it is, as it were, in its infancy, may be eaſily cured; the ſecond, when it hath communicated itſelf to the blood, cannot be maſter'd without great difficulty, and a long regimen of diet and phyſic; the laſt, which is when it is grown inveterate, and has fixed itſelf, and corroded the ſolid parts, is reckoned incurable. However, Monſieur Tournefort, who had ſeen it in the Levant, thinks it rather a kind of Venereal diſeaſe; and that, if taken in time, it might be cured by the ſame method; and indeed the ſymptoms of this, of the leproſy, and of an inveterate ſcurvy, are ſo like, that unleſs a phyſician be very expert and cautious, he may eaſily condemn the innocent, and abſolve the guilty. But be that as it will, it is certain, that this leproſy muſt have been ſufficiently known by the Iſraelites in Egypt, ſince Moſes ſpeaks both of the diſeaſe, and its ſymptoms, as of things which were plain and obvious.

The leproſy of the garments is ſuppoſed to have been owing to ſome defects in the management of the wool, skins, and ſtuffs, of which they were made; thoſe manufactures being then very imperfect, to what they have been ſince, the heat of the climate, and perhaps many other things, might contribute ſtill more towards it. Moſes has likewiſe deſcribed the ſymptoms of this kind of leproſy; they were ſpots either of a reddiſh or greeniſh hue, which appeared upon the garments, whether of linnen, woollen, or skins. In theſe Caſes they were to be brought to the prieſts, and according as they appeared to them, they were either to be burnt, or to be waſhed and cleaned, or the ſpots to be cut out, and the reſt declared clean and wholeſome. This garment leproſy is likewiſe ſuppoſed to be a kind of worm which breeds in thoſe ſtuffs, occaſion'd by the oils, greaſe, and other ingredients, uſed in the dreſſing them.

The ſame may be ſaid of the leproſy in houſes, in the mortar and ſtones of which, another ſort of vermin was bred, which had four jaws continually working, and eating holes in them. This was one of the tokens of its being infected; there were ſome other beſide, which were a kind of ruſt or ſcurf, that ſpread itſelf along the walls. In all theſe caſes, the prieſts were directed to ſhut the houſe up for a week, and it is probable, they made ſome kind of fumigation, during that time, tho' no mention is made of it; elſe we cannot ſee, how the bare ſhutting it up could contribute to the removal of the infection. If, upon the opening it again, the marks diſappeared, they pronounced it clean, if not, they cauſed them to be ſcraped off every where, and the houſe to be ſhut up another ſeven days; and if that did not compleat the purification, they order'd it to be demoliſhed, and ſuch materials of it only to be preſerved, as were free from the infection, in order to rebuild it in ſome other place, ver. 13.

As for the other leproſy, namely, the dry one, it was a diſtemper rather diſagreeable to the beholder, than infectious in itſelf. The prieſts were the proper judges both of the diſeaſe and of the cure; concerning which, Moſes gave them ſeveral plain directions, tho' we find not that he preſcribed any remedy againſt it, becauſe, as the Jews think, it was an immediate judgment from God. The ſame they affirm alſo, of the leproſy of houſes and garments, which they pretend was peculiar to the Iſraelites, and to the land of Judea; becauſe, God had promiſed, that whilſt they continued obedient to his laws, their bodies, houſes, and garments, ſhould be preſerved from that diſeaſe; but when they proved ſtubborn and rebellious, he would inflict it as a puniſhment upon them.

When the prieſt had pronounced a man infected with leproſy, he was not only ſecluded from the ſociety of clean perſons, but was likewiſe obliged to go bare-headed, with his cloaths rent, and his upper lip covered with a kind of muffler, to prevent, in all probability, his infecting others by his breath. But one may reaſonably ſuppoſe, they had places in which they lived together, and conſtituted a kind of community among themſelves. Accordingly, we read of four of them, who went together out of ſome quarter of Samaria into the Aſſyrian camp, when the famine raged in the city, 2 Kings vii. 3, 8. and of the ten in the Goſpel, who applied themſelves, in a body, to Chriſt, to be healed by him, Luke xvii. 12.

We ſhall here beg leave to mention a ſtory, which Manetho, and ſeveral other Heathen writers after him, have advanced, with great appearance of ſeriouſneſs, againſt the Jews; and which, tho' each of them relates it in his own way, amounts in the main to this; that the land of Egypt, being grievouſly infected with the leproſy, and the king, Bochorus, having conſulted the oracle, was adviſed to ſend all the lepers out of his kingdom, into a deſert, where they might periſh with want. CHAP. XIV.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

6 As for the living bird, he ſhall take it, and the cedar-wood, and the ſcarlet, and the hyſſop, and ſhall dip them and the living bird, in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water.

7 And he ſhall ſprinkle upon him that is to be cleanſed from the leproſy, ſeven times,

8 And he that is to be cleanſed ſhall waſh his clothes, and ſhave off all his hair, and waſh himſelf in water, that he may be clean: and after that he ſhall come into the camp, and ſhall tarry abroad out of his tent ſeven days.

9 But it ſhall be on the ſeventh day, that he ſhall ſhave all his hair off his head, and his beard, and his eye-brows, even all his hair he ſhall ſhave off: and he ſhall waſh his clothes, alſo he ſhall waſh his fleſh in water, and he ſhall be clean.

11 And the prieſt that maketh him clean, ſhall preſent the man that is to be made clean, and thoſe things before the LORD, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation:

12 And the prieſt ſhall take one he-lamb, and offer him for a treſpaſs-offering, and the log of oyl, and wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

13 And he ſhall ſlay the lamb in the place where he ſhall kill the ſin-offering, and the burnt-offering, in the holy place: for as the ſin-offering is the prieſts, ſo is the treſpaſs-offering: it is moſt holy.

14 And the prieſt ſhall take ſome of the blood of the treſpaſs-offering, and the prieſt ſhall put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleanſed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

15 And the prieſt ſhall take ſome of the log of oyl, and pour it into the palm of his own left hand:

17 And of the reſt of the oyl that is in his hand, ſhall the prieſt put upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleanſed and upon the thumb of his right-hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the blood of the treſpaſs-offering.

18 And the remnant of the oyl that is in the prieſts hand, he ſhall pour upon the head of him that is to be cleanſed: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him before the LORD.

19 And the prieſt ſhall offer the ſin-offering, and make an atonement for him that is to be cleanſed from his uncleanneſs, and afterward he ſhall kill the burnt-offering.

20 And the prieſt ſhall offer the burnt-offering, and the meat-offering upon the altar: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him, and he ſhall be clean.

21 And if he be poor, and cannot get ſo much; then he ſhall take one lamb for a treſpaſs-offering to be waved, to make an atonement for him, and one tenth-deal of fine flour mingled with oyl, for a meat-offering, and a log of oyl:

22 And two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, ſuch as he is able to get; and the one ſhall be a ſin-offering, and the other a burnt-offering.

23 And he ſhall bring them on the eighth day, for his cleanſing, unto the prieſt, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the LORD.

24 And the prieſt ſhall take the lamb of the treſpaſs-offering, and the log of oyl, and the prieſt ſhall wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

25 And he ſhall kill the lamb of the treſpaſs-offering, and the prieſt ſhall take ſome of the blood of the treſpaſs-offering, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleanſed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

26 And the prieſt ſhall pour of the oyl into the palm of his own left hand.

27 And the prieſt ſhall ſprinkle with his right finger, ſome of the oyl that is in his left hand, ſeven times before the LORD.

28 And the prieſt ſhall put of the oyl that is in his hand, upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleanſed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot; upon the place of the blood of the treſpaſs-offering.

29 And the reſt of the oyl that is in the prieſts hand, he ſhall put upon the head of him that is to be cleanſed, to make an atonement for him before the LORD.

30 And he ſhall offer the one of the turtle-doves, or of the young pigeons, ſuch as he can get:

31 Even ſuch as he is able to get, the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, with the meat-offering. And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him that is to be cleanſed, before the LORD.

32 This is the law of him in whom is the plague of leproſy, whoſe hand is not able to get that which pertaineth to his cleanſing.

33 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, ſaying,

34 When ye be come into the land of Canaan, which I give to you for a poſſeſſion, and I put the plague of leproſy in a houſe of the land of your poſſeſſion;

35 And he that owneth the houſe ſhall come and tell the prieſt, ſaying, It ſeemeth to me there is as it were a plague in the houſe.

36 Then the prieſt ſhall command that they empty the houſe before the prieſt go into it to ſee the plague; that all that is in the houſe be not made unclean: and afterward the prieſt ſhall go in to ſee the houſe.

37 And he ſhall look on the plague, and behold, if the plague be in the walls of the houſe, with hollow ſtrakes, greeniſh, or reddiſh, which in ſight are lower than the wall;

38 Then the prieſt ſhall go out of the houſe to the door of the houſe, and ſhut up the houſe ſeven days.

39 And the prieſt ſhall come again the ſeventh day, and ſhall look: and behold, if the plague be ſpread in the walls of the houſe;

40 Then the prieſt ſhall command that they take away the ſtones in which the plague is, and they ſhall caſt them into an unclean place without the city.

41 And he ſhall cauſe the houſe to be ſcraped within round about, and they ſhall pour out the duſt that they ſcrape off, without the city into an unclean place.

42 And they ſhall take other ſtones, and put them in the place of thoſe ſtones; and he ſhall take other morter, and ſhall plaiſter the houſe.

43 And if the plague come again, and break out in the houſe, after that he hath taken away the ſtones, and after he hath ſcraped the houſe, and after it is plaiſter'd.

44 Then the prieſt ſhall come and look, and behold, if the plague be ſpread in the houſe, it is a fretting leproſy in the houſe: it is unclean.

45 And he ſhall break down the houſe, the ſtones of it, and the timber thereof, and all the morter of the houſe: and he ſhall carry them forth out of the city into an unclean place.

46 Moreover he that goeth into the houſe all the while that it is ſhut up, ſhall be unclean until the even.

47 And he that lieth in the houſe ſhall waſh his clothes: and he that eateth in the houſe, ſhall waſh his clothes.

48 And if the prieſt ſhall come in, and look upon it, and behold, the plague hath not ſpread in the houſe after the houſe was plaiſter'd: then the prieſt ſhall pronounce the houſe clean, becauſe the plague is healed.

49 And he ſhall take to cleanſe the houſe, two birds, and cedar-wood, and ſcarlet, and hyſſop.

50 And he ſhall kill the one of the birds in an earthen veſſel, over running water.

51 And he ſhall take the cedar-wood, and the hyſſop, and the ſcarlet, and the living bird, and dip them in the blood of the ſlain bird, and in the running water, and ſprinkle the houſe ſeven times.

52 And he ſhall cleanſe the houſe with the blood of the bird, and with the running water, and with the living bird, and with the cedar-wood, and with the hyſſop, and with the ſcarlet.

53 But he ſhall let go the living bird out of the city into the open fields, and make an atonement for the houſe: and it ſhall be clean.

54 This is the law for all manner of plague, leproſy, and ſcall,

55 And for the leproſy of a garment, and of an houſe,

56 And for a riſing, and for a ſcab, and for a bright ſpot:

57 To teach when it is unclean, and when it is clean: this is the law of leproſy.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,] All that is ſaid before, concerning the rules whereby they were to diſcern the leproſy, from other diſeaſes, were given unto Aaron, as well as unto Moſes; chap. xiii. 1. for Aaron and his poſterity were conſtituted the judges of ſuch matters, in which they had need be well verſed. But the way and manner of cleanſing a leper, is delivered to Moſes, to be by him given to Aaron and his ſons, who were to depend on him as God's great miniſter, and their inſtructor in all religious rites.

Ver. 2. This ſhall be the law of the leper in the days of his cleanſing.] The manner and means which God hath ordained of purifying a leper (as Maimonides expounds it) and reſtoring him to the communion of God's people.

———He ſhall bring unto the prieſt.] Not to the houſe of the prieſt, for he was to go out to the gate of the camp, (as appears by the next verſe) and thither the leper was to be brought to him. But theſe words ſeem to import, that the leper was to come towards the camp (unto ſome place which the prieſt, it is likely, appointed) and then the prieſt, having notice of it, was to go out and look upon him.

Ver.

Ver. 4. Then ſhall the prieſt command to take for him that is to be cleanſed, two birds alive, and clean, and cedar-wood, and ſcarlet, and hyſſop.] Why his purification was to be made by theſe things, Maimonides declares, he could never underſtand, (More Nevoch. P. iii. cap. 47.) but Abarbinel adventures to gueſs at the reaſon; and imagines, that theſe four things, the living birds, the cedar, the ſcarlet, and the Hyſſop, ſignified the leper to be cured of the four evils under which he had laboured: in his fleſh, his humours, his colour, and ſmell, which were repreſented by the four things before-mentioned; and were now all become ſound and good. For the living birds, he thinks, were a ſign that his dead fleſh was reſtored to vigour and life; and the cedar wood, which is not eaſily corrupted, denoted the putriſaction was cured, which the leproſy had made in the humours of the body. The ſcarlet thread or wool, was an indication of his good complexion reſtored to him: For this is a bright and grateful colour, as the leproſy was livid and loathſome; ſignifying (ſaith he) his blood was purified, which infuſed a florid colour into his countenance. And laſtly, the hyſſop, which, in that country, was a very odoriferous plant, ſignified, that the impurity and ſtench of that diſtemper was gone. What ever judgment may be formed of this account, We think 'tis very apparent, that the Jews, being poſſeſſed with a great deteſtation of the filthineſs of the leper, it was neceſſary (as Pellicanus obſerved) that they ſhould be as ſtrongly perſwaded, by a great many prolix, laborious, and publick ceremonies, uſed for mens purification from it, that they were fit to be reinſtated into their ſociety.

Ver. 5. And the prieſt ſhall command, that one of the birds be killed.] Not as a ſacrifice, for that could be made no where but at the altar; whereas this was without the camp, at a great diſtance from the ſanctuary, and therefore was uſed only as a rite of cleanſing.

Ver. 6. As for the living bird, he ſhall take it, and the cedar wood, and the ſcarlet wool, &c.] He took a ſtick of cedar wood (as R. Levi deſcribes this rite, and Maimonides ſaith the ſame) which was a cubit long, and tying the bird to it, with its tail uppermoſt, together with a bunch of hyſſop, of a handful long, and as much ſcarlet wool as weighed a ſhekel; he then dip'd the birds tail and wings, with the hyſſop and wool, in the water tinctured with the blood of the other bird.

Ver. 7. And he ſhall ſprinkle upon him that is to be cleanſed from the leproſy, ſeven times, and ſhall pronounce him clean, and ſhall let the living bird looſe into the open field.] The aſperſion was to be performed ſeven times, to indicate a perfect purification, and the living bird, was to be let looſe, to ſhew, that the leper was reſtored to the free ſociety of all his neighbours, as the bird was to the reſt of its kind.

Ver. 10. And on the eighth day he ſhall take two he-lambs without blemiſh, and one ew-lamb of the firſt year without blemiſh, and three tenth deals of fine flour for a meat-offering. To each of theſe ſacrifices there was a meat offering appointed, conſiſting of a tenth part of an ephah of fine flour, i. e. an omer, which is a thing unuſual; for we read of no meat-offerings ordered (in the ivth and vth chapters of this book which treat of them) to accompany either treſpaſs-offerings or ſin-offerings, but theſe were peculiar rites belonging to the cleanſing of a leper, different from the common uſages; to make him ſenſible how great a mercy he had received from God, who alone could cure this diſeaſe which his hand had inflicted.

Ver. 14. And the prieſt ſhall take ſome of the blood of the treſpaſs-offering.] Maimonides declares, that if the prieſt had put the blood upon the left ear, thumb, or toe, all had been of no effect. And he adds (Sect 5.) that blood was put on half of the flap of his ear; and upon the whole breadth of the top of this thumb, and great toe; for if he put it on the ſides, or beneath, it was ineffectual. Which is very reaſonable to be believed, becauſe, there was no natural efficacy in theſe things to cleanſe a leper; but it depended wholly on the will and pleaſure of God, which was punctually therefore to be obſerved; that by the exact performance of all the ceremonial ſigns (as Pellicanus ſpeaks) in the face of the church, all men might be ſatisfied that he was perfectly purified; and he might be publickly authorized to aſſociate himſelf with the reſt of God's people, and be no longer abominated by them for impurity. For the ſignification of theſe ceremonies ſome think to have been, that he was reſtored to free communion with God, and with man (ſee Exod. xxix. 20.) and Abarbinel looks upon them as a ſignification alſo, that the leproſy began in thoſe parts of the body (which are leſs fleſhy and fat) and were now therefore particularly declared clean. But whatever the intention of them was, there was a juſt and wiſe reaſon, no doubt for them, tho' at this diſtance from thoſe ages, countries, and cuſtoms, we may not be able to diſcover it.

Ver. 20. ——— And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him, and he ſhall be clean.] By this time, his atonement was compleated, and he was made ſo perfectly clean, as to be admitted to partake of the altar, when peace-offerings were ſacrificed.

This very long proceſs, through ſo many different rites, and for ſo many days, before men could be purified from the legal defilement in their bodies, was a plain inſtruction to all perſons of good ſenſe, how much more difficult it would prove to cleanſe their ſouls from thoſe moral impurities which they contracted by long habits of ſin, and what great pains muſt be taken, both by the ſinners themſelves, and by God's miniſters, to eradicate them, and with what repeated prayers the mercy of God towards them was to be implored; and on which they ought not raſhly to preſume.

Ver. 21. And if he be poor and cannot get ſo much, He ſhall take, &c.] The Divine goodneſs always made a merciful proviſion, that his ſervice ſhould not be burthenſome to men; and therefore took care the poor ſhould not be charged with too coſtly ſervices; and yet partake of the benefit of them as much as the rich (ſee chap. i. 14.)

Ver. 23. When ye be come into the land of Canaan, which I give to you for a poſſeſſion, and I put the plague of leproſy in a houſe of the land of your poſſeſſion.] What we have already advanced upon this ſubject in our annotations on the preceding chapters, may perhaps be thought ſufficient by the generality of our readers, and as the ceremonies that were to be performed, when any houſe was infected with a leproſy, are eaſy to be underſtood in the Moſaic account of them in this chapter. We hope we ſhall be excuſed if we are not deſirous of multiplying remarks on topicks that are not of much importance to Chriſtians at preſent, and we ſhall endeavour to obſerve the ſame method, through the remaining part of the Levitical law, except with reſpect to thoſe articles of it which may be thought to require any peculiar attention.

CHAP. XV.

1 The uncleanneſs of men in their iſſues. 13 The cleanſing of them. 19 The uncleanneſs of women in their iſſues. 28 Their cleanſing.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and to Aaron, ſaying,

2 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, When any man hath a running iſſue out of his fleſh, becauſe of his iſſue he is unclean.

3 And this ſhall be his uncleanneſs in his iſſue; whether his fleſh run with his iſſue, or his fleſh be ſtopped from his iſſue, it is his uncleanneſs.

4 Every bed whereon he lieth that hath the iſſue, is unclean: and every thing whereon he ſitteth ſhall be unclean.

5 And whoſoever toucheth his bed, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

6 And he that ſitteth on any thing whereon he ſat that hath the iſſue, ſhall waſh waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

7 And he that toucheth the fleſh of him that hath the iſſue, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

8 And if he that hath the iſſue ſpit upon him that is clean; then he ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

9 And what ſaddle ſoever he rideth upon that hath the iſſue, ſhall be unclean.

10 And whoſoever toucheth any thing that was under him, ſhall be unclean until the even: and he that beareth any of thoſe things, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

11 And whomſoever he toucheth that hath the iſſue, (and hath not rinſed his hands in water) he ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

12 And the veſſel of earth that he toucheth which hath the iſſue, ſhall be broken: and every veſſel of wood ſhall be rinſed in water.

13 And when he that hath an iſſue is cleanſed of his iſſue, then he ſhall number to himſelf ſeven days for his cleanſing, and waſh his clothes, and bathe his fleſh in running water, and ſhall be clean.

14 And on the eighth day he ſhall take to him two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, and come before the LORD unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and give them unto the prieſt.

15 And the prieſt ſhall offer them, the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him before the LORD, for his iſſue.

16 And if any mans ſeed of copulation go out from him, then he ſhall waſh all his fleſh in water, and be unclean until the even.

17 And every garment, and every skin whereon is the ſeed of copulation, ſhall be waſhed with water, and be unclean until the even.

18 The woman alſo with whom man ſhall lie with ſeed of copulation, they ſhall both bathe themſelves in water, and be unclean until the even.

19 ¶ And if a woman have an iſſue, and her iſſue in her fleſh be blood, ſhe ſhall be put apart ſeven days: and whoſoever toucheth her, ſhall be unclean until the even.

20 And every thing that ſhe lieth upon in her ſeparation, ſhall be unclean: every thing alſo that ſhe ſitteth upon, ſhall be unclean.

21 And whoſoever toucheth her bed, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

22 And whoſoever toucheth any thing that ſhe ſat upon, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

23 And if it be on her bed, or on any thing whereon ſhe ſitteth, when he toucheth it; he ſhall be unclean until the even.

24 And if any man lie with her at all, and her flowers be upon him, he ſhall be unclean ſeven days: and all the bed whereon he lieth, ſhall be unclean.

25 And if a woman have an iſſue of her blood many days out of the time of her ſeparation, or if it run beyond the time of her ſeparation; all the days of the iſſue of her uncleanneſs ſhall be as the days of her ſeparation: ſhe ſhall be unclean.

26 Every bed whereon ſhe lieth all the days of her iſſue, ſhall be unto her as the bed of her ſeparation: and whatſoever ſhe ſitteth upon, ſhall be unclean, as the uncleanneſs of her ſeparation.

27 And whoſoever toucheth thoſe things ſhall be unclean, and ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

28 But if ſhe be cleanſed of her iſſue, then ſhe ſhall number to herſelf ſeven days, and after that ſhe ſhall be clean.

29 And on the eighth day ſhe ſhall take unto her two turtles, or two young pigeons, and bring them unto the prieſt, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

30 And the prieſt ſhall offer the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for her before the LORD, for the iſſue of her uncleanneſs.

31 Thus ſhall ye ſeparate the children of Iſrael from their uncleanneſs; that they die not in their uncleanneſs, when they defile my tabernacle that is among them.

32 This is the law of him that hath an iſſue, and of him whoſe ſeed goeth from him, and is defiled therewith:

33 And of her that is ſick of her flowers, and of him that hath an iſſue, of the man, and of the woman, and of him that lieth with her which is unclean.

The impurities deſcribed in this chapter, with the ceremonials appointed for their purification, are repreſented, by the ſacred hiſtorian, with as much perſpicuity, as is ſufficient to give thoſe, who are curious to be informed of the particulars, a competent idea of that ſubject; we hope therefore, it will not be imputed to us as an omiſſion, that we paſs over this chapter in ſilence.

CHAP. XVI.

1 How the high-prieſt muſt enter into the holy place. 11 The ſin-offering for himſelf. 15 The ſin-offering for the people. 20 The ſcape goat. 29 The yearly feaſt of the expiation.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, after the death of the two ſons of Aaron, when they offered before the LORD and died.

2 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Speak unto Aaron thy brother, that he come not at all times into the holy place within the vail, before the mercy-ſeat, which is upon the ark; that he die not: for I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy-ſeat.

3 Thus ſhall Aaron come into the holy place: with a young bullock for a ſin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering.

4 He ſhall put on the holy linen coat, and he ſhall have the linen breeches upon his fleſh, and ſhall be girded with the linen girdle, and with the linen mitre ſhall he be attired: theſe are holy garments; therefore ſhall he waſh his fleſh in water, and ſo put them on.

5 And he ſhall take of the congregation of the children of Iſrael, two kids of the goats for a ſin-offering, and one ram for a burnt-offering.

6 And Aaron ſhall offer his bullock of the ſin-offering, which is for himſelf, and make an atonement for himſelf, and for his houſe.

7 And he ſhall take the two goats, and preſent them before the LORD, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

8 And Aaron ſhall caſt lots upon the two goats; one lot for the LORD, and the other lot for the ſcape-goat.

9 And Aaron ſhall bring the goat upon which the LORDs lot fell, and offer him for a ſin-offering.

10 But the goat on which the lot fell to be the ſcape-goat, ſhall be preſented alive before the LORD, to make an atonement with him, and to let him go for a ſcape-goat into the wilderneſs.

11 And Aaron ſhall bring the bullock of the ſin-offering which is for himſelf, and ſhall make an atonement for himſelf, and for his houſe, and ſhall kill the bullock of the ſin-offering which is for himſelf.

12 And he ſhall take a cenſer-full of burning coals of fire from off the altar before the LORD, and his hands-full of ſweet incenſe beaten ſmall, and bring it within the vail.

13 And he ſhall put the incenſe upon the fire before the LORD, that the cloud of the incenſe may cover the mercy-ſeat that is upon the teſtimony, that he die not.

14 And he ſhall take of the blood of the bullock, and ſprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy-ſeat eaſt-ward: and before the mercy-ſeat ſhall he ſprinkle of the blood with his finger ſeven times.

15 ¶ Then ſhall he kill the goat of the ſin-offering that is for the people, and bring his blood within the vail, and do with that blood, as he did with the blood of the bullock, and ſprinkle it upon the mercy-ſeat, and before the mercy-ſeat.

16 And he ſhall make an atonement for the holy place, becauſe of the uncleanneſs of the children of Iſrael, and becauſe of their tranſgreſſions in all their ſins: and ſo ſhall he do for the tabernacle of the congregation that remaineth among them, in the midſt of their uncleanneſs.

17 And there ſhall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation, when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made an atonement for himſelf, and for his houſhold, and for all the congregation of Iſrael.

18 And he ſhall go out unto the altar that is before the LORD, and make an atonement for it; and ſhall take of the blood of the bullock, and of the blood of the goat, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about.

19 And he ſhall ſprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger ſeven times, and cleanſe it, and hallow it from the uncleanneſs of the children of Iſrael.

20 ¶ And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he ſhall bring the live goat:

21 And Aaron ſhall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confeſs over him all the iniquities of the children of Iſrael, and all their tranſgreſſions in all their ſins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and ſhall ſend him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderneſs.

22 And the goat ſhall bear upon him all their iniquities, unto a land not inhabited: and he ſhall let go the goat in the wilderneſs.

23 And Aaron ſhall come into the tabernacle of the congregation, and ſhall put off the linen garments which he put on when he went into the holy place, and ſhall leave them there.

24 And he ſhall waſh his fleſh with water in the holy place, and put on his garments, and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering, and the burnt-offering of the people, and make an atonement for himſelf, and for the people.

25 And the fat of the ſin-offering ſhall he burn upon the altar.

26 And he that let go the goat for the ſcape-goat, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe his fleſh in water, and afterward come into the camp.

27 And the bullock for the ſin-offering, and the goat for the ſin-offering, whoſe blood was brought in to make atonement in the holy place, ſhall one carry forth without the camp, and they ſhall burn in the fire, their ſkins, and their fleſh, and their dung.

28 And he that burneth them, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe his fleſh in water, and afterward he ſhall come into the camp.

29 ¶ And this ſhall be a ſtatute for ever unto you: that in the ſeventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye ſhall afflict your ſouls, and do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country, or a ſtranger that ſojourneth among you.

30 For on that day ſhall the prieſt make an atonement for you, to cleanſe you, that ye may be clean from all your ſins before the LORD.

31 It ſhall be a ſabbath of reſt unto you; and ye ſhall afflict your ſouls by a ſtatute for ever.

32 And the prieſt whom he ſhall anoint, and whom he ſhall conſecrate to miniſter in the prieſts office in his fathers ſtead, ſhall make the atonement, and ſhall put on the linen clothes, even the holy garments.

33 And he ſhall make an atonement for the holy ſanctuary, and he ſhall make an atonement for the tabernacle of the congregation, and for the altar, and he ſhall make an atonement for the prieſts, and for all the people of the congregation.

34 And this ſhall be an everlaſting ſtatute unto you, to make an atonement for the children of Iſrael, for all their ſins, once a year. And he did as the LORD commanded Moſes.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes after the death of the two ſons of Aaron, &c.] This Chapter would naturally have followed the tenth, where the death of thoſe two perſons is related, if that inſtance of the divine diſpleaſure had not occaſioned the inſertion of ſome other laws that have a reference to uncleanneſs: Theſe being now delivered, the jewiſh legiſlator proceeds to give directions about the great ſacrifice of expiation, in which the whole community of the Iſraelites were greatly intereſted; and in order to make the account of this ſolemnity as intelligible to our readers, as poſſible, we ſhall chuſe to collect the obſervations neceſſary to illuſtrate this ſubject into the following form.

The day of expiation, or atonement, is the laſt ſolemn day that was of divine inſtitution, in the levitical œconomy, and differed from all the reſt, in that they were days of feſtivity and thankſgiving, but this a day of faſting, humiliation and confeſſion of ſins; and the only one of that kind of divine appointment, if we except that occaſional one which God enjoined the Iſraelites, after their ſetting up the golden calf, but which we do not find to have been made annual by Moſes, or obſerved by the people, till after the captivity, when they became ſo religious, that they appointed as many faſts for every miſcarriage and misfortune that happen'd to their nation before it, as filled near a fourth part of their calendar. Thoſe who conjecture, that this day of expiation was ordained in memory of the golden calf, limit the deſign of its inſtitution too much, ſince it rather ſeems intended to expiate the ſins of the whole nation, both publick and private, but more particularly thoſe of the foregoing year. This is plainly inferred from the name which Moſes aſſigns to it, as well as from the confeſſion of ſins, and other remarkable occurrences, which he enjoined to be uſed on that day, of which we are now proceeding to treat.

The original calls it yom hakphurim, the day of expiations or atonements; becauſe on that day there was an atonement made for the ſins of the whole preceding year, and of the whole people. For which reaſon, the Talmud calls it by way of excellence, yoma, the day; and perhaps likewiſe, from a tradition they had, that it was on that day that Adam began to repent of his tranſgreſſion, and God was reconciled to him: For the world, and conſequently our firſt parents, according to them, were created on the firſt day of this month; their tranſgreſſion and puniſhment followed immediately after, and conſequently their repentance; for which reaſon, ſome of them think, that this day was appointed to commemorate the fall.

This day was to commence, like other ſolemn days, on the evening of the ninth day of the ſeventh month, and to laſt till the evening of the tenth; during which time, they were obliged to abſtain from all labour and pleaſure, and to continue in the work of mortification, under the penalty of being cut off from among the people. They were likewiſe to hold a ſolemn convocation, confeſs their ſins, and to offer a peculiar ſacrifice for them by fire, chap. xxiii. 27, &c.

The high-prieſt's office, of this day, was ſtill more ſolemn and awful: It was the only time in the whole year, in which he was permitted to enter into the moſt holy place, under pain of ſudden death from the Lord, chap. xvi. 2. and therefore, he was obliged to prepare himſelf for that grand ceremony, in the extraordinary manner preſcribed by God himſelf, which was as follows; he was, firſt of all, to waſh himſelf, not his hands and feet only, as at other times, but his whole body. The Talmud adds, that he was to abſtain during ſeven whole days, from all all matrimonial commerce, and from every thing that might cauſe an accidental pollution, and thereby render him unfit for his duty. Secondly, his mitre, breaſt-plate, and other ſacerdotal ornaments, were to be laid aſide that day, and he was only to appear cloathed in linnen. This garb conſiſted only of a linnen mitre or cap, a coat, breeches, and a girdle. He was, in the third place, to offer, as ſoon as he came to the holy place, a young bullock for a ſin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering, for himſelf and his whole houſe; confeſſing his and their ſins over them. After this, he received, from ſome of the heads of the congregation, a couple of kids for a ſin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering, for the whole congregation. Then were two goats ſet before the tabernacle, and the high-prieſt caſt lots for them, which of the two ſhould be ſacrificed on that day, and which ſhould be ſent away; and this latter was called hazazel or ſcape-goat.

We have here followed our verſion, and the generality of commentators, who derive the word ghazazel, from ghaz a goat, and azal to eſcape; in which they have followed the Septuagint, who have render'd it ἀποπομπαῖος, and the Latin after them emiſſarius; and it is certain, that the verb azel is often uſed in that ſenſe in the Old Teſtament. However, from the words of Moſes, it ſhould rather ſeem, that ghazazel is the name of the place whither the goat was led; for he ſays, that the man who lets the goat go, lehazazel, which laſt cannot properly be rendered in any other way, than to hazazel, and in this ſenſe moſt of the Jews and ſome Chriſtians have taken it; and ſome of the former tell us, that it is a mountain diſtant about ninety furlongs, or about eleven thouſand paces, from Jeruſalem.

And here we cannot but take notice of a ſtrange notion which Spencer has taken into his head, that this hazazel was neither the name of a place, nor of the ſcape-goat, but of a devil, unto whom the goat was ſent by the meſſenger. (Spenc. differt. in hirc. emiſſar.) He mentions one Mark, an arch-heretic, who pretended to have a dæmon of that name, by whoſe aſſiſtance he performed wonders, and from this, and ſome expreſſions, which he found in ſome cabaliſtical writings, and in thoſe of Julian the apoſtate, he pretends, that this ſcape-goat was ſent, with its load of ſins, to the devil, in which notion he is followed by ſome others, who believe that both the ſacrificed goat and the ſcape one, were typical of Chriſt; and think the firſt to be ſignificative of his death, and the other of his being expoſed to, and overcoming the power of ſatan. But as for us, we ſhould rather prefer Mr. Le Clerc's opinion, that hazazel was a ſteep and craggy precipice, down which the goat was thrown: And this is not only more agreeable to the original, and to the Jewiſh notion of its being a rocky mountain, but the ſame author has farther proved it from the words of Moſes, that it ſhould bear all their iniquities, el eretz gezarah, which properly ſignifies, not only an uninhabited land, or a land of ſeparation, as our verſion renders it, but a land that is cut off or broken from another, ſuch as precipices are. It might alſo be probably enough called hazazel, from its being inhabited only by goats, as Hottinger obſerved in his notes upon Goodwin. Le Clerc further confirms it, by a new etymon of the word azazel, which we ſhall not dwell upon: Neither is it eaſy to gueſs what was done to the goat, or what became of it, after it was brought to the place appointed. The Talmudiſts, if we may rely on them, affirm, that it was thrown down a precipice, and broken in pieces by the fall. They add, that during the high-prieſthood of Simon, ſurnamed the Juſt, which was ſignalized by many remarkable indications of the divine favour, the goat uſed to fall in pieces before it had deſcended half way to the place, but that after his days, it uſed to be caught and eaten by the Saracens.

When the lot had decided the deſtiny of the two goats, the high-prieſt enter'd into the Holy of Holies, with his cenſer in one hand, and a large quantity of fine incenſe, beaten ſmall, in the other, that the ſmoak of it might fill the place, ſo as to cover the mercy-ſeat from ſight: and aſſoon as he had placed the cenſer upon the altar, he came out, and dipped his fingers into the blood of the bullock, which he had offer'd for himſelf, and went and ſprinkled it towards the mercy-ſeat eaſtward ſeven times. When this ceremonial was compleated, he killed the goat for the people's ſin-offering, and went and ſprinkled the mercy-ſeat with the blood of it, as he had done with that of the bullock: and by theſe aſperſions the tabernacle was purified from all the pollutions it had contracted, by ſtanding in the midſt of that ſinful people. During all this ceremony, that is, till this ſolemn atonement had been made for the ſins of the prieſts and people, neither prieſts nor any perſon was permitted to come either within the tabernacle, or even into the courts of it.

Aſſoon as theſe ablutions were ended, and the prieſt and people purified, the goat, whoſe lot it had been to eſcape, was brought to the high-prieſt. How theſe lots were caſt, doth not appear from ſcripture. What the ancient Jews tell us of them is, that there was an urn brought unto the high-prieſt, into which he threw two wooden lots, upon one of which were written the words, FOR THE LORD, and on the other, FOR AZAZEL; and after he had ſhaken them, he put both his hands into the urn, and brought up the lots, the one in his right hand, and the other in his left; and as the goats ſtood on each ſide of him, their fate was determined by the lot that came up in the hand next to them. They alſo uſed to draw a good omen of God's being pacified with them, if the right hand chanced to draw the lot that was for the Lord, as they ſay it happen'd all the time of the high-prieſt Simon the Juſt.

One particular is worth obſerving, namely, that on the eve of this ſolemnity, the Jews of old uſed to take a white cock, if it was to be had; if not, then of any other colour, but red; and after a prayer, they ſtruck their heads with that of the cock three times, ſaying, Bear thou my ſins, ſuffer thou the death I have deſerved, die thou for me, and make thou reconciliation for me, that I may be admitted into a bleſſed life, with all the people of Iſrael; after which they killed the cock, confeſſing they deſerved the death they had inflicted on him, and threw his entrails on the top of the houſe, in hopes that the crows would bear them and their ſins into the wilderneſs. 'Tis true, this ceremony is look'd upon by the Dutch Jews as ſinful; and Leo de Modena, who owns it was practiſed heretofore in the Levant and Italy, adds, that it was afterwards left off, becauſe it was found to be a meer piece of ſuperſtition, for which no tolerable reaſon could be aſſigned; but he ſeems to have forgot, that they gave one which, however ridiculed by our learned Goodwin, is not without a ſingular meaning. It is this, the word geber, in the Scripture, ſignifying a man, and, in the Talmud and Chaldee, a cock, the Divine juſtice requir'd, that as geber in the firſt ſenſe had ſinned, geber in the other ſenſe ſhould bear his ſin. Now what other foundation can this cuſtom have, than the prophecies that the Meſſiah, as Geber in his human nature, ſhould expiate for the ſins of man; unto whom therefore they ſubſtituted this typical geber, or cock, till the antitypical one ſhould accompliſh that expiation by his death. And might not the Chriſtians urging this againſt them be the motive of their aboliſhing it?

The high-prieſt laid his hand upon the head of the ſcape-goat, and confeſſed his own ſins, and thoſe of the whole nation, in words to this effect; O Lord, thy people, the houſe of Iſrael, have ſinned, have rebelled againſt thee; and now, O Lord, I beſeech thee, forgive their ſins, rebellions and back ſlidings, by which they have offended thee, according as it is written in the laws of thy ſervant Moſes: In that day we ſhall make atonement for you, he ſhall cleanſe you, and you ſhall be clean from all your ſins before the Lord.

He was likewiſe to make ſuch another confeſſion when he offered the bullock for himſelf and family, before he ventur'd to enter into the Holy of Holies; only inſtead of the houſe of Iſrael, he only mentioned that of Aaron. It is plain, however, from the ceremonies which he was to perform there, that he was to enter four times into it that day; firſt, to ſet the incenſe a burning; for he went in with both his hands full, and could carry nothing elſe with him, ch. xvi. ver. 12, 13. 2. When he carried ſome of the blood of the bullock that was offered for himſelf. 3. When he carried ſome of that which he offered for the people: and, 4. When he went to fetch out the cenſer and fire. The Talmud adds, that it was death for him to go in the fifth time. And therefore when the Apoſtle ſays, that he went in but once a year, Heb. ix. 7. it is plain, he has followed the verſion of the Septuagint, which render the words achad baſhanah by ἅπαξ τῷ ἐνιαυτῷ; but it is certain, certain, it might have been more properly render'd one day in a year.

The confeſſion being ended, the high-prieſt deliver'd the ſcape-goat to a man appointed for that purpoſe, who conducted it into a deſert place; and there left it to ſhift for itſelf, according to ſome, or threw it down a ſteep precipice, according to others, as we have already intimated. After this ceremony, the high-prieſt waſhed himſelf all over, and having changed his cloaths, or (which ſeems moſt likely) having put on the ephod, mitre, breaſt-plate, and his other prieſtly garments, he was to offer a burnt-offering of two rams, one for himſelf, and the other for the people. As for the man who conducted the ſcape-goat, he was deemed unclean, till he had bathed himſelf, and waſhed his cloaths, as were alſo thoſe who carried away the fleſh, blood and entrails of the bullock, and goat of the ſin-offering, to be burnt without the camp, Lev. xvi.

It was likewiſe on this day, that the high-prieſt gave the people the ſolemn bleſſing preſcribed by Moſes, Numb. vi. 24, &c. in which he pronounced the unutterable name of God. For, according to the Jews, the uttering that word had been forbidden upon any other occaſion, by a particular law, ever ſince the ſtoning of a notorious blaſphemer, Lev. xxvi. 10, &c. but whether true or not, the pronouncing that tremendous name, joined to the ſacred awfulneſs of the place, may be reaſonably ſuppoſed to have filled him with uncommon dread, whilſt he ſtayed in it; which is the reaſon why he uſually made what haſte he could decently out of it, leſt he ſhould be ſtruck dead for ſome accidental miſcarriage, or inadvertency, during his ſhort continuance there; and when he came out, he went backwards, keeping his face ſtill towards the mercy-ſeat, and bending towards the ground. All theſe ceremonials undoubtedly took up a conſiderable time; the reſidue of the day was ſpent in prayers, and other works of mortification; and they were ſo afraid of ſhortening it, that they began it half an hour ſooner, and ended it half an hour later than other feaſt-days; after which, the trumpet gave notice, that the ſolemnity was expired, and then they dreſſed themſelves in white, or at leaſt put on clean linnen; and, after a bleſſing, ſat down to break their faſt. They ſeldom failed to make a plentiful meal, and to rejoice that their ſins were now expiated; but above all, the high-prieſt expreſſed more than ordinary joy, that he had gone through the ſolemn and dangerous office of that day, and was come out alive from the moſt holy place.

The Jews add ſeveral other particularities relating to this day, which we dare not affirm to have been in uſe during the firſt temple; ſuch as theſe, that the ſcape goat was eſcorted all the way, by prieſts and laymen, to the place appointed; that between the temple and it, there was a cauſey made on purpoſe, with ten different ſtages on it; that aſſoon as the goat was thrown down the precipice, and broken in pieces by the fall, notice was immediately given to the people, who waited impatiently for the news in the temple, by proper ſignals ſet up at convenient diſtances; with many more of the like nature.

We cannot cloſe our comment on this chapter, without attempting to anſwer the exclamation of our modern Sceptics, who are ſo induſtrious to charge the Deity with ſeverity and implacableneſs, for requiring an expiation and ſatisfaction for the ſins of mankind. They indeed may flatter themſelves, that God has nothing in him but mercy; but if they would remit ſome of their partiality to themſelves, they would find that the great creator has regard to his juſtice, likewiſe, in the diſpenſation of his laws to the children of men. We will not aſſert, that it is impoſſible that God, as ſuch, ſhould forgive the ſins of men, without a ſatisfaction to his juſtice; but yet we ſay, that conſidering God as a legiſlator, who deſigns to govern men by his own precepts, it is not agreeable to his wiſdom to ſuffer theſe to be trampled upon with impunity, by inſolent and regardleſs ſinners. And, indeed, all the attributes of the Almighty are directed by his infinite reaſon and wiſdom; and his mercy is not, as many imagine, a ſort of feminine ſoftneſs, that cannot hold out againſt the cries of ſuffering offenders; but ſuch a good and wiſe relaxation of the puniſhment which his juſtice, in rigour, might demand, as may ſecure the honour of his laws, his eternal juſtice and purity, and make all poſſible allowances for the infirmities of mankind: And upon this reaſon we take the nature of expiatory ſacrifices to have been grounded in all ages, to teſtify the great averſion God has always had to ſin, and to deter men from committing it, by ſhewing the great ſatisfaction which he required for it. We, therefore, cannot approve the reaſon which the author of A diſcourſe concerning natural and revealed religion, p. 100. aſſigns, that the end of ſacrifices was to make ſin coſtly to the offender, and to appeaſe the conſciences of penitent tranſgreſſors, by ſhewing, that God accepted the death of the beaſt, in lieu of theirs. For theſe are only general ends, but the moſt principal end which was aimed at in the ſacrifices of beaſts, was, that they might be types and forerunners of the great ſacrifice of our bleſſed Lord, from the efficacy of whoſe infinite ſatisfaction they derived all their expiatory nature. For, as the Apoſtle argues, Heb. x. 6. It is not poſſible that the blood of bulls and goats ſhould take away ſins; and therefore theſe muſt all have reference to the infinite ſatisfaction of Chriſt, which alone is inveſted with that virtue. So that theſe ſacrifices of animals, both before and under the law, were to the ſacrifice of Chriſt, as the tabernacle was to the temple. The Almighty creator was pleaſed to accept them as expiatory, till ſuch time as that great ſacrifice was compleated; but as the tabernacle was deſtroyed, when the temple was erected, ſo theſe ritual ſacrifices were aboliſhed, when the ſufferings of the Meſſiah were finiſhed. Nay, we have rather the utmoſt reaſon to adore the infinite mercy of God, than to charge him with ſeverity, for requiring and accepting ſuch vicarious and repreſentative ſufferings: For he might, in juſtice, have demanded the perſonal puniſhment of the offender himſelf, and required his life for his tranſgreſſions, which would ſoon have extinguiſh'd the race of ſinful man. To have forgiven all, without any ſatisfaction, would have been, in effect, to have granted an unlimited licenſe for ſin; and, on the other hand, to have puniſhed with the utmoſt rigour, would have left no room for men to adore his amiable mercy: But by this admirable intermixture of juſtice and compaſſion, his own honour is preſerved, and the ſins of mankind pardoned.

Neither can we aſſent to the opinion of thoſe, who aſſert, that ſacrifices are the pure invention of men; for it is highly probable, that they were at firſt inſtituted by God Almighty, and directions for the performance of theſe ſacrificial rites given to the firſt of mankind, and ſo have been handed down to the ſeveral branches of their poſterity ever ſince. Indeed Grotius, and ſome others, are of opinion, that ſacrifices owe their original to the gratitude of mankind, who, in thanks to God, were willing to return back to him ſome part of the good things which they enjoyed; and that, before the flood, there was no ſacrifice offered of animals: But granting that gratitude gave origin to euchariſtical ſacrifices, we are as much at a loſs to find a reaſon for the piacular, unleſs we allow they came by the inſtitution of God. Neither is the reaſon convincing, by which they would prove, that no beaſt was ſacrificed till after the deluge; viz. becauſe ſacrifices are never but of ſuch things whereof men uſed to eat: Now there being no fleſh eaten before the deluge, that indulgence being afterwards granted to Noah, they conclude, that no fleſh was ſacrificed. But this argument is weak; for it is very much to be doubted, whether the antediluvians did not eat fleſh. And Bochart contends ſtrongly that the grant to Noah, Gen. ix. was not larger than what was afforded to Adam Gen. i. and beſide, in piacular ſacrifices, in many nations, they never ſtood upon the edibility of the ſacrifices; but frequently offer'd horſes, or men. Beſide, it is probable, that theſe expiatory ſacrifices of blood commenc'd from the firſt fall of mankind, to be the ἀντίψυχα, or vicarious puniſhments, for the lives of Adam's offſpring, then forfeited. And then there is ſome reaſon for their inſtitution at that time; but there is none, that we know of, for their being ſet up in the time of Noah. And when the Scripture ſays expreſly, that Abel offered of the firſtlings of his flocks, and the fat thereof; we think it is a jejune interpretation, to ſay he offered only lanam & lac pinguiſſimum, wool and very fat milk, that is, cream. We are therefore perſuaded, and think upon good grounds, that a model of ſacrificial rites, or, at leaſt, a command in general for piacular ſacrifices, was given to our firſt parents, and by them tranſmitted down to all their poſterity. For otherwiſe it is impoſſible to give a ſatisfactory account, why we ſhould meet with the ſame in all all ages, in all countries, from the Eaſt to the Weſt Indies, from Africa to Scythia; and there find men practiſing the ſame piacular rites almoſt in an uniform manner. If their ſacrifices were owing to the gratitude or reaſoning of the different inhabitants, they would be as different as their cuſtoms and manners are; but when we find ſo many different people, who have no intercourſe one with another, performing exactly the ſame thing, as if it were by confederacy, killing the ſacrifice, burning the fleſh, and that too upon an altar, by the miniſtry of a prieſt, and with an opinion that their ſins are diſcharged by that vicarious puniſhment of the devoted animal, with many other like circumſtances; this muſt needs prove, that they could not all jump upon theſe things by chance, but had them delivered down to them by ſome ancient predeceſſor, who was progenitor to them all.

CHAP. XVII.

1 The blood of all ſlain beaſts muſt be offered to the Lord at the door of the tabernacle. 7 They muſt not offer to devils. 10 All eating of blood is forbidden, 15 and all that dieth alone, or is torn.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Speak unto Aaron, and unto his ſons, and unto all the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded, ſaying,

3 What man ſoever there be of the houſe of Iſrael, that killeth an ox, or lamb, or goat in the camp, or that killeth it out of the camp,

4 And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer an offering unto the LORD before the tabernacle of the LORD; blood ſhall be imputed unto that man he hath ſhed blood; and that man ſhall be cut off from among his people:

5 To the end that the children of Iſrael may bring their ſacrifices which they offer in the open field, even that they may bring them unto the LORD, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, unto the prieſt, and offer them for peace-offerings unto the LORD.

6 And the prieſt ſhall ſprinkle the blood upon the altar of the LORD, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and burn the fat for a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD.

7 And they ſhall no more offer their ſacrifices unto devils, after whom they have gone a whoring: This ſhall be a ſtatute for ever unto them throughout their generations.

8 ¶ And thou ſhalt ſay unto them, Whatſoever man there be of the houſe of Iſrael, or of the ſtrangers which ſojourn among you, that offereth a burnt-offering or ſacrifice,

9 And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer it unto the LORD; even that man ſhall be cut off from among his people.

10 ¶ And whatſoever man there be of the houſe of Iſrael, or of the ſtrangers that ſojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood; I will even ſet my face againſt that ſoul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people.

11 For the life of the fleſh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your ſouls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the ſoul.

12 Therefore I ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, No ſoul of you ſhall eat blood, neither ſhall any ſtranger that ſojourneth among you, eat blood.

13 And whatſoever man there be of the children of Iſrael, or of the ſtrangers that ſojourn among you, which hunteth, and catcheth any beaſt or fowl that may be eaten; he ſhall even pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with duſt.

14 For it is the life of all fleſh, the blood of it is for the life thereof: therefore I ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, Ye ſhall eat the blood of no manner of fleſh: for the life of all fleſh is the blood thereof: whoſoever eateth it, ſhall be cut off.

15 And every ſoul that eateth that which died of itſelf, or that which was torn with beaſts (whether it be one of your own country, or a ſtranger) he ſhall both waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even: then ſhall he be clean.

16 But if he waſh them not, nor bathe his fleſh; then he ſhall bear his iniquity.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] God having inſtituted the great and ſolemn anniverſary ſacrifice, in the preceding chapter, delivers his command to Moſes in this, with reference to other oblations for which there would daily be occaſion.

Ver. 3. Whatſoever man there be of the houſe of Iſrael, that killeth an ox, or lamb, or a goat.] viz. For a ſacrifice or offering, (as it follows ver. 24.) theſe being the only creatures of the herd and the flock, that were permitted to be brought to God's altar. There are thoſe indeed, who think Moſes ſpeaks of killing theſe creatures for common uſe; which it was lawful for them to do any where, after they came to the land of Canaan, Deut. xxii. 15. but now they were not to kill them for their food, unleſs they brought them to the door of the tabernacle, and there firſt ſacrificed ſome part of them to the Lord, before they taſted of them themſelves, by which their ſacrificing to Dæmons was prevented (to which they were prone, ver. 7.) and they alſo conſtantly feaſted with God, while they were in the wilderneſs. But this is better founded (upon Deut. xii. 20, 21.) where it is ſuppoſed they had thus done, while they remained in the wilderneſs; and were ſo near the houſe of God, that they might eaſily bring thither every beaſt they killed for ordinary uſe. But they were diſpenſed withal as to this, when they came into Canaan, and could not poſſibly, when they had a mind to eat fleſh, go ſo far as the tabernacle or the temple, which was many miles from ſome of them. Inſtead whereof, they were bound to be preſent at the three great feſtivals, and appear before God at his houſe, whereſoever they dwelt.

——— In the camp, or that killeth it out of the camp.] This ſeems to ſhew, that God doth not ſpeak of killing theſe beaſts, ad uſum veſcendi, as St. Auſtin's words are, for the uſe of eating, for that they did not do out of the camp, but in their tents, but de ſacrificiis, he ſpeaks concerning ſacrifices. For he prohibits (as he goes on) private ſacrifices, leſt every man ſhould take upon him to be a prieſt, &c.

Ver. 4. And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer an offering unto the Lord.] In ancient time, every man performed the office of a prieſt in his own family: But now that liberty is taken away, becauſe they had abuſed it to idolatry; and every man was bound to bring his ſacrifice to the houſe of God, where none but the ſons of Aaron could officiate, and had the moſt ſacred obligations upon them to offer only to the Lord. The very Heathens themſelves, in future times, found it neceſſary to exact the very ſame; as appears by Plato, in the latter end of the Tenth book of Laws, where he hath theſe memorable words: Let this be a law impoſed abſolutely upon all, that no man whatſoever have a ſacred place in private houſes; but when he intends to offer ſacrifice, let him go to the publick temples, and deliver his ſacrifice to the prieſt, whether men or women, whoſe buſineſs it is to take care, that theſe things are performed in an holy manner. By which it appears, that theſe were two eſtabliſh'd principles of religion in the minds of wiſe men, to ſacrifice publickly and to bring their ſacrifices to the prieſts; who were to take care to offer them purely. Unto which Moſes adds one circumſtance more, namely, that their publick ſacrifices ſhould be offered only at one place: Which was a moſt efficacious preſervative againſt all idolatrous worſhip; nothing being tranſacted but under the immediate inſpection of the miniſters of religion, and the governors of the people. Inſomuch, that St. Chryſoſtome calls Jeruſalem, which was afterwards appointed to be this place of general reſort, a kind of bond or knot, whereby the whole nation were ſtrongly united to the Judaical religion.

——— Before the tabernacle of the Lord.] Before the Divine majeſty, who dwelt in the tabernacle; round about which they all inhabited, and were ſo near it while they travelled in the wilderneſs, that, as there was no trouble in bringing all their ſacrifices thither, ſo they knew certainly whither to go. And thus the Hebrew doctors obſerve it was, when they came into Canaan, where, while the tabernacle was fixed at Shilo, none might ſacrifice any where elſe. But when it wandered uncertainly (after Shilo was deſtroyed) being ſometimes in Miſpeh, ſometimes at Gilgal, and at Nob, and Gibeon, and the houſe of Obed-Edom, they fancy it was lawful to ſacrifice in other places. For ſo we find Samuel did, 1 Sam. chap. vii. 9. chap. ix. 13. (where he ſacrificed in an high place) chap. ii. 15. chap. xvi. 2. and David, 2 Sam. chap. xxiv. 18. and Elias, Kings xviii. 23. But theſe may be thought extraordinary acts, done by an immediate warrant from God; for none of theſe perſons were prieſts, but prophets, guided by divine inſpiration.

———Blood ſhall be imputed unto that man, he hath ſhed blood.] He was to be puniſhed with death as a murderer; for to have blood imputed to a man, in the Hebrew phraſe, or to be guilty of blood, is to be liable to have his blood ſhed, or to loſe his life. Which, as of old, was the puniſhment of every one who killed another man, Gen. ix. 6. So here he is condemned to die, who ſacrificed any where but at the tabernacle.

———And that man ſhall be cut off from among his people.] This is not another puniſhment, (unleſs we ſuppoſe it relates to his poſterity) and therefore the firſt word ſhould be tranſlated, not and, but for; and the meaning either is, that the magiſtrate ſhould paſs the ſentence of death upon him, or God would deſtroy him himſelf. The latter ſenſe is moſt probable, becauſe he threatens, ver. 10. to execute vengeance, with his own hand, upon him that was guilty of eating blood. It is thought, indeed, by ſome, that cutting off doth not ſignify death; but, as in other places in this book, cutting off is ſo evidently joined with death, that ſo little cannot be meant by it, as depriving ſuch perſons of the privileges of God's people (for inſtance, when any offered his children to Moloch, ch. xx. ver. 2, 3, 4, 5. or did not afflict his ſoul on the day of atonement, ch. xxiii. ver. 29, 30.) ſo here, in this place, it moſt certainly ſignifies, the putting him that was guilty of this crime, to death; becauſe he was to be puniſhed as a murderer; which ſevere penalty was enacted, in this caſe, to preſerve the Iſraelites from idolatry. For if they had been permitted to offer ſacrifice where they pleaſed, they might eaſily have apoſtatized from God, by altering the rites which he had ordained; nay, by offering to ſtrange gods, particularly to the dæmons, which are ſaid in thoſe days, and by ſome believ'd, to have frequented the fields; and endeavour'd to perſuade the ignorant that they were gods.

Ver. 5. To the end that the children of Iſrael may bring their ſacrifices which they offer in the open field.] Where the Pagans erected their altars, to procure fruitfulneſs in their fields. Inſomuch, that Libanius ſaith (in his oration), that the temples, or holy places, were the very ſoul, or life of the fields; and that in them lay the hope of the husbandmen. How old this idolatry was, we cannot certainly tell; but it continued a long time among the Iſraelites, as we learn from the prophet Jeremiah, ch. xiii. 27. and Hoſea xv. 11. where he ſaith, Their altars were as heaps in the furrows of the field; that is, there were abundance of them, notwithſtanding this early prohibition given by Moſes. And, among the Gentiles, Feſtus tells us, they offered ſacrifices to the terreſtrial gods, in terra, upon the very ground (according to the Hebrew phraſe here, on the face of the field); but to the infernal gods, in terra effoſſa, in holes, or pits, dug in the earth; and to the celeſtial, in ædificiis a terra exultatis, in buildings exalted above the earth, i. e. upon altars: Which had their names from hence, ab altitudine, from their height. And every one knows, that they delighted to ſet them in high places, on the tops of mountains and hills, eſpecially where there were groves and ſhady trees; under which they placed them, even in vallies, and in highways, fields, and meadows. For they were ſo fond of them, that thoſe who were againſt erecting temples to their gods, as Zeno was, never ſacrificed without altars, which they ſet up in the open air, to ſignify they believed he whom they worſhipp'd could not be circumſcribed.

———Even that they may bring them unto the Lord.] Or, they ſhall bring them even unto the Lord; who had ſettled his habitation at the tabernacle, and would be worſhipped no where elſe with ſacrifices.

———Unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation unto the prieſts.] Here ſeems to be another reaſon, why they were not permitted to offer in the field; becauſe God would have none but the prieſts (men appointed by himſelf to attend, for this purpoſe, at his houſe) to offer ſacrifices to him, according to the rites he had preſcribed.

———And offer them for peace-offerings unto the Lord.] Upon theſe words Nachmanides grounds the opinion, that whilſt the Jews continued in the wilderneſs, they ate no meat at their own private tables, but what had been firſt offered to God at the tabernacle. Behold, ſaith he, God commanded that all which the Iſraelites did eat, ſhould be peace-offerings. Which was afterwards altered, when they came to Canaan, and lived remote from the houſe of God. And ſuch a cuſtom prevailed among the Gentiles, who would not ſit down to eat at their tables, till they had offer'd bread and wine to their gods. Thus it was among the Chaldeans, as appears from Dan. i. 8. but then they had many altars every where, even in their own private houſes; whereas here, in the wilderneſs, there was but one altar, which could not contain all the fat that was to be burnt on it every day, if we ſuppoſe the Iſraelites to have commonly kill'd beaſts for their own eating. It ſeems to be the truer opinion, that they ſeldom or never did that, while they were in the wilderneſs; but all the beaſts they killed were for ſacrifice, of which Moſes here ſpeaks. So Rabbi Levi Barcelonita, præcept. 187. and other Jewiſh doctors, ſay, they are here forbidden to offer a ſacrifice to God any where, without the tabernacle. He mentions, indeed, only peace-offerings; but the reaſon is, becauſe they were moſt common, being offered not only for all the mercies they had received, but for all they deſired to obtain from from God; as Abarbinel obſerves, upon the ſeventh chapter of this book, where the ſeveral ſorts of them are mentioned. Men were more forward, alſo, to bring theſe offerings, than any other; becauſe they were to have their ſhare of them, and feaſt upon them.

Ver. 7. And they ſhall no more offer their ſacrifices unto devils.] Theſe words ſhew the reaſon why God commands them, under ſuch a ſevere penalty, to offer only in one place, at the tabernacle; becauſe, while they ſacrificed in the open fields, they had been in danger to be ſeduced by dæmons, who were ſuppoſed to frequent thoſe places, eſpecially in deſerts, and preſent themſelves to ignorant people, as if they were gods, and entice their devotion towards them; which dæmons, or evil ſpirits, appeared, as ſome imagine, in the form of goats; and therefore are here called ſeirim, which properly ſignifies goats; and hath induced ſome to conjecture, that they really ſacrificed to theſe creatures, as ſome of the Egyptians did, who held goats to be ſacred animals. So Diodorus tells us, lib. 2. they deified a goat, upon the ſame account that the Greeks worſhipped Priapus. Herodotus, in his Euterpe, cap. 46. ſaith the ſame of the Mendeſii, who, according to him, worſhipp'd the males more than the females. But we queſtion whether the Egyptians were guilty of ſuch idolatry in the days of Moſes. Nor is there more truth in their opinion, who think the Iſraelites now worſhipped images in this form of goats; which the LXX ſeem to have thought when they tranſlated it τοῖς μάταιοις, to vain things, as idols are called in Scripture. And yet this very word ſeirim is by the Greek tranſlators render'd δαίμονια, dæmons, Iſa. xiii. 21. which we here follow; only inſtead of dæmons, tranſlating it devils, whom the ancient Zabii worſhipped, they appearing to them in the form of goats. And this cuſtom was univerſally ſpread, as Maimonides thinks, in the time of Moſes, which was the cauſe of this precept. More Nevoch, p. 3: ch. xlvi.

And, indeed, nothing is more common in the writings of the ancient Heathens, than the mention of Fauns, and Satyrs, and Ægipanes, whoſe ſhape below was that of a goat; and our famous countryman, Alexander Hales, in his diſcourſe upon the Scape Goat, derives the reaſon of it from the frequent appearance of dæmons in this ſhape, in the wilderneſs, as Mr. Selden obſerves in his prolegomena to his book De Diis Syris.

One Vandale, indeed, hath endeavoured to explode all theſe fancies, as he eſteems them, of dæmons, which he would have to be the mere invention of the ancient Chaldæans; and from them derived to other nations. But he will never be able to make any wiſe man believe, that the world was ſo ſottiſh, as to worſhip the images of goats (which he takes to be meant by ſeirim) if there had not been an appearance of ſomething in that ſhape which they accounted divine.

———After whom they have gone a whoring.] i. e. With whom they have committed idolatry. For this ſin was juſtly called by the name of whoredom, ever after they were ſolemnly contracted and eſpouſed to God, to be his peculiar people, Exod. xix. 5. which is the reaſon that he is ſaid ſo often to be a jealous God; (particularly Exod. xx. 5.) highly incenſed at their worſhipping other deities beſide him. For this, and ſuch like words, are never uſed but concerning idolatry; which Ezekiel deſcribes as the impureſt whoredoms, ch. xvi. 22. and particularly mentions this whoredom with the Egyptians, ver. 26. and the Aſſyrians, ver. 28, &c.

———This ſhall be a ſtatute for ever unto them throughout all generations.] Theſe words ſeem to determine the ſenſe of the foregoing precept, to which they relate, from ver. 2, &c. not to be, that all the meat they killed for their own tables, ſhould be peace-offerings: For that, all confeſs, was not a ſtatute for ever (if it were one at all) throughout all generations; but only while they were in the wilderneſs.

Ver. 8. And thou ſhalt ſay unto them, whatſoever man there be of the houſe of Iſrael, or of the ſtrangers which ſojourn among you.] Theſe words, alſo, ſhew, that God ſpake, in the foregoing verſe, of bringing all ſacrifices whatſoever, to the tabernacle; the ſame law which was given before to the Iſraelites, being now extended to all ſtrangers who ſojourned among them. By whom he means all ſuch as were proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion. So the LXX here tranſlate it; and they add the very ſame words to ver. 3. where the houſe of Iſrael is only mentioned in the original Hebrew. The only queſtion is, what ſort of proſelytes are here intended? And we ſuppoſe God ſpeaks of the proſelytes of righteouſneſs, as the Jews call them, who were circumciſed, and thereby embraced the whole religion of Moſes. And this, we find, is the common opinion; tho' ſome few learned men contend, that any ſtranger, who had renounced idolatry, and whom they called a proſelyte of the gate, might bring his ſacrifice to the altar. Which one can hardly allow, tho' aſſerted by ſo great a man as Grotius, lib. i. De jure belli & pacis, cap. 16. becauſe God ſpeaks of the ſame ſtrangers here, as are mentioned ver. 10. where all ſuch ſtrangers are forbidden to eat blood. Which plainly belongs to ſuch ſtrangers as were become Jews by circumciſion; for other ſtrangers might eat it, as appears from Deut. xiv. 21. where the Iſraelites are allowed to ſell what died of it ſelf, to a ſtranger, that he might eat it, if he pleaſed; and ſuch creatures had their blood in them.

———That offereth a burnt-offering, or ſacrifice.] i. e. Any other ſacrifice beſides burnt-offerings, viz. Sin-offerings, or treſpaſs-offerings, or peace-offerings. None of which were accepted, but from ſuch as were admitted into the Jewiſh religion; tho' the pious Gentiles, the Jews ſay, might bring burnt-offerings.

Ver. 9.——— Shall be cut off from among his people.] This demonſtrates, that the foregoing precept, and this, belong to the ſame matter, being inforced with the ſame penalty, ver. 4. and it alſo ſhows, that the ſtrangers beforementioned, ſignify ſuch Gentiles as were circumciſed, for otherwiſe they were not of the body of the people of Iſrael, from which they are threatned to be cut off, if they did not obſerve this law.

Ver. 10. And what man ſoever he be of the houſe of Iſrael, or of the ſtrangers that ſojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood.] This is forbidden before, chap. iii. 17. and repeated again, chap. vii. 26. nothing is ſaid of fiſhes becauſe they were not offer'd at the altar, and have little blood in them: Nor is there any direction given any where, how they ſhould be killed. It is ſaid indeed in this place, that they ſhould not eat any manner of blood; but the meaning ſeems to be, neither of blood offered at the altar, nor of beaſts killed for their own uſe: Or elſe it is to be limitted, as before, to the blood of beaſts and birds, ver. 13. for fiſhes were not at all conſidered, and here the reaſon is added, why they ſhould not eat blood, (which was not mentioned in the fore-named places) becauſe it was the life of the beaſt, and was therefore reſerved to make atonement for their ſouls.

———I will even ſet my face againſt that ſoul, &c.] That is, I will be extremely angry with him, and ſeverely puniſh him, by cutting him off (as it here follows) from the body of the nation. Maimonides obſerves, (More Nevoch. P. 3. cap. 46.) that this is the ſame expreſſion which is uſed againſt him, who offered his children to Moloch, xx. 3. and that this phraſe is never uſed in Scripture, concerning any other ſin but only theſe two, idolatry, and eating blood, for the eating of blood gave occaſion (he ſhows) to one kind of idolatry, in the worſhipping of dæmons whoſe food the ancient idolators imagined the blood was; by eating of which their worſhippers had communion with them.

Ver. 11. For the life of the fleſh is in the blood, and I have given it unto you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your ſouls, &c.] Some think here are two diſtinct reaſons againſt eating of blood: But the words, as they lie in the Hebrew, may well be tranſlated, Becauſe the life of the fleſh (of any beaſt, that is) is in the blood, therefore, I have given it to you (or appointed it for you) upon the altar, to make an atonement, &c. which is as much as to ſay, the life of the beaſt lying in the blood, I have ordained it to expiate your ſins, that, by its death in your ſtead, your life may be preſerved: And therefore, I require you not to eat that, which is appointed for ſo holy an end. For it would have been very unſeemly, if they had vulgarly uſed that, to which they owed the favour of God, and their very lives.

Nothing could be more rational than this precept, viz. That a thing ſo ſacred, as to be peculiarly appointed for them upon the altar, ſhould not loſe the honour and eſteem that was due to it. As the blood would have, if it had been allowed to be commonly eaten; for that is very contemptible temptible which goes into the draught, as our bleſſed Saviour declares.

——— For it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the ſoul.] The blood, that is, of the ſacrifices, which by God's appointment, are offered to expiate your ſins; that is, to preſerve you from periſhing. For to make an atonement, and to be a ranſom, are the very ſame thing; as appears from Exod. xxx. 12.) compared with ver. 15, 16. and to be a ranſom, is to deliver from death, as appears from the words in that place, they ſhall every man give a ranſom for his ſoul, unto the Lord, that there be no plague among them; for the ſins of the ſacrificer being laid upon the beaſt which he offered, by impoſition of his hand on its head, and confeſſing them there, they were taken away by the blood of that beaſt, unto which they were tranſlated, and that not meerly by the obedience of him who offered the ſacrifice (which the followers of Socinus ſay, God accepted) but by the blood of the ſacrifice itſelf, as theſe words expreſly declare, which was offered in his ſtead. Thus Theodoret upon theſe words, God commanded the ſoul of the irrational creature, with its blood to be offered, inſtead of thy rational and immortal ſoul. And thus the Jews themſelves underſtand it; particularly, Aben Ezra upon theſe words, ſaith, the ſoul inſtead of the ſoul, i. e. the ſoul of the beaſt inſtead of the ſoul of the man: And R. Solomon Jarchi to the ſame purpoſe, one ſoul comes and makes expiation for another ſoul. And Maimonides more largely; I have ſpared the ſoul of the man, and given this blood upon the altar; that the ſoul of the beaſt may make expiation for the ſoul of the man.

Ver. 12. Therefore I ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, no ſoul of you ſhall eat blood, neither ſhall any ſtranger that ſojourneth among you eat blood.] What other reaſon ſoever there was before, for not eating blood, this is the reaſon why God forbad it to the children of Iſrael, and to all who joyned themſelves unto their religion; ſee Gen. ix. 4.

Ver. 13. And whatſoever man there be of the children of Iſrael, or of the ſtrangers that ſojourn among you, which hunteth and catcheth any beaſt or fowl that may be eaten.] Tho' no other beaſts or fowls be mentioned, but thoſe that were taken in hunting, that being very common in thoſe days, yet the precept extends to all thoſe that were bred at home, and were allowed by the law for their food.

——— He ſhall even pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with the duſt.] Tho' it was not the blood of a ſacrifice offered at the altar, but of a beaſt or bird killed for their own uſe, they might not eat it, but bury it in the ground; leſt any beaſt ſhould lick it up, as it is commonly interpreted. Maimonides hath found a deeper reaſon for this, which is, that no body might meet and feaſt about it. By which means Moſes broke their ſociety and fellowſhip with dæmons, who, in thoſe times, were thought to feed upon the blood in a bowl, or cavity in the earth, whilſt their worſhippers ſat about it feaſting on the fleſh. And this was the more neceſſary while they remained in the wilderneſs, becauſe dæmons were ſaid to haunt ſuch ſolitudes, and there appear; but not in cities or habitable places. See Mr. Selden, lib. 2. de Synedr, cap. 4. p. 201.) If a man therefore ſaw his neighbour kill a beaſt, and neglect to cover its blood with duſt, he was bound to go and do it himſelf, becauſe God ſpeaks here unto the Children of Iſrael, i. e. to all of them, ver. 12. as R. Levi gloſſes, Præcept, clxxxv. and as a MS. mentioned by Wagenſeil ſaith, that they covered the blood with this form of benediction, Bleſſed be the Lord our God, the king of the world, who hath ſanctified us with his precepts, and commanded us to cover blood. Which ſhews they thought this was a precept of great weight.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 Unlawful marriages. 19 Unlawful luſts.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, I am the LORD your God.

3 After the doings of the land of Egypt, wherein ye dwelt, ſhall ye not do: and after the doings of the land of Canaan whither I bring you, ſhall ye not do: neither ſhall ye walk in their ordinances.

4 Ye ſhall do my judgments, and keep mine ordinances, to walk therein: I am the LORD your God.

5 Ye ſhall therefore keep my ſtatutes, and my judgments: which if a man do, he ſhall live in them: I am the LORD.

6 ¶ None of you ſhall approach to any that is near of kin to him, to uncover their nakedneſs: I am the LORD.

7 The nakedneſs of thy father, or the nakedneſs of thy mother, ſhalt thou not uncover: ſhe is thy mother, thou ſhalt not uncover her nakedneſs.

8 The nakedneſs of thy fathers wife ſhalt thou not uncover: it is thy fathers nakedneſs.

9 The nakedneſs of thy ſiſter, the daughter of thy father, or daughter of thy mother, whether ſhe be born at home, or born abroad, even their nakedneſs thou ſhalt not uncover.

10 The nakedneſs of thy ſons daughter, or of thy daughters daughter, even their nakedneſs thou ſhalt not uncover: for theirs is thine own nakedneſs.

11 The nakedneſs of thy fathers wives daughter, begotten of thy father (ſhe is thy ſiſter) thou ſhalt not uncover her nakedneſs.

12 Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy fathers ſiſter: ſhe is thy fathers near kinſwoman.

13 Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy mothers ſiſter: for ſhe is thy mothers near kinſwoman.

14 Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy fathers brother, thou ſhalt not approach to his wife: ſhe is thine aunt.

15 Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy daughter in law: ſhe is thy ſons wife, thou ſhalt not uncover her nakedneſs.

16 Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy brothers wife: it is thy brothers nakedneſs.

17 Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of a woman and her daughter, neither ſhalt thou take her ſons daughter, or her daughters daughter, to uncover her nakedneſs; for they are her near kinſwomen: it is wickedneſs.

18 Neither ſhalt thou take a wife to her ſiſter, to vex her, to uncover her nakedneſs beſides the other in her life-time.

19 Alſo thou ſhalt not approach unto a woman woman to uncover her nakedneſs, as long as ſhe is put apart for her uncleanneſs.

20 Moreover, thou ſhalt not lie carnally with thy neighbours wife, to defile thy ſelf with her.

21 And thou ſhalt not let any of thy ſeed paſs through the fire to Molech, neither ſhalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the LORD.

22 Thou ſhalt not lie with mankind as with womankind: it is abomination.

23 Neither ſhalt thou lie with any beaſt to defile thy ſelf therewith: neither ſhall any woman ſtand before a beaſt to lie down thereto: it is confuſion.

24 Defile not you your ſelves in any of theſe things: for in all theſe the nations are defiled which I caſt out before you.

25 And the land is defiled: therefore I do viſit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land it ſelf vomiteth out her inhabitants.

26 Ye ſhall therefore keep my ſtatutes and my judgments, and ſhall not commit any of theſe abominations; neither any of your own nation, nor any ſtranger that ſojourneth among you:

27 (For all theſe abominations have the men of the land done, which were before you, and the land is defiled)

28 That the land ſpue not you out alſo, when ye defile it, as it ſpued out the nations that were before you.

29 For whoſoever ſhall commit any of theſe abominations, even the ſouls that commit them, ſhall be cut off from among their people.

30 Therefore ſhall ye keep mine ordinance, that ye commit not any one of theſe abominable cuſtoms, which were committed before you, and that ye defile not yourſelves therein: I am the LORD your God.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] It is not ſaid, when the Lord delivered theſe laws to Moſes; but it is likely, after the other, and before thoſe that follow.

Ver. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them.] They were all concerned in theſe laws about marriage; and therefore they are directed to the whole body of the people, who received them, we ſuppoſe, by their elders, and heads of their tribes, to whom Moſes delivered them, and charged they ſhould be communicated to every family and houſhold, ſee xvii. 2.

—— I am the Lord your God.] I have a right to give you laws (being your ſovereign, upon more titles than one) to which all human cuſtoms muſt yield, tho' long practiſed, and ſpread every where in the world. This reaſon is mentioned ſix times in this chapter, and oftner in the next.

Tho' the Moſaic law doth no where oblige men to marry, yet the Jews have always looked upon it as an indiſpenſible duty, implied in the words increaſe and multiply. So that a man who did not marry, before he was twenty years of age, was accounted acceſſory to any irregularities which the young women might be tempted to, for want of being timely married. They had a proverb in the Talmud, who is he that proſtitutes his daughter, but he who keeps her too long unmarried, or gives her to an old man? For this reaſon, they uſed to marry them aſſoon as they came of age, which, with them, was at twelve; but if their fathers married them before, they might, when they came to it, be parted from their husband, if they did not like him.

The Deity contented himſelf with reſtraining the Iſraelites from marrying within certain degrees of conſanguinity, which had till then been permitted; to prevent their taking wives from among the idolatrous nations, with whom they lived. This was the reaſon which Abraham gave for chuſing a wife for Iſaac, from his own kindred, and his deſcendants, for following his example; but which now was entirely ceaſed, by their being ſo exceedingly multiplied. Theſe are therefore the degrees which that law-giver prohibited as inceſtuous, under pain of death. 1. To marry one's own father or mother. 2. Father or mother-in-law. 3. The brother or ſiſter of one's father or mother. 4. A grand-ſon or grand-daughter. 5. An uncle or aunt. 6. A ſon or daughter-in-law. 7 Two brothers or ſiſters; by which the Jews underſtood thoſe only by the mother's ſide, becauſe they looked upon this conſanguinity to be greater than the paternal; perhaps from a belief, that the mother contributed moſt to the generation of the child. 8. A brother or ſiſter-in-law. 9. The husband or wife of an uncle or aunt. 10. The father and ſon, or mother and daughter, either together, or one after the death of the other: As for the other laws relating to matrimony, they ſeem rather to be taken from the practice of the patriarchs. Thus he forbids the firſt-born to be diſ-inherited, out of favour or affection to another wife; as when a man has two wives, and loves one more than the other: In ſuch a caſe it was not lawful for him to transfer the inheritance to the children of the favourite wife, if that of the other was the firſt-born. This is in imitation of Abraham, who gave portions to all his other children, and the inheritance to Iſaac. The only difference here is, that Moſes orders but a double portion to the eldeſt. Herein is alſo a ſecond law, tacitly implied at leaſt, for a man to have two wives; to which he adds a third, namely, that upon marriage of the ſecond wife, a man ſhall ſtill be bound to continue to the former, her food, her raiment, and the duty of marriage: This laſt is alſo conformable to what Laban exacted of Jacob, when he married the ſecond ſiſter, after the firſt. Theſe laws are in imitation of the practice of ſeveral of the old patriarchs.

The Jews did not content themſelves with this ſmall allowance of two wives, as we may infer from the examples of David and Solomon, and many others. But it muſt be obſerved, that they made a diſtinction between the wives of the firſt rank, and thoſe of the ſecond: The firſt they called naſhim, and the other pilgaſhim; which laſt, tho' moſt verſions render by the word, concubines, harlots, and proſtitutes, yet in none of thoſe places of ſcripture, where that word occurs, which are about thirty-ſix, is any ſuch ſiniſter ſenſe implied. However, there is a two-fold difference between theſe, and wives of the firſt rank; firſt, with reſpect to the manner of taking them, namely, the latter with the uſual ceremonies, and the former without; and, ſecondly, with reſpect to their authority, and the honour paid to them, and their children. One thing Maimonides (Halak Iſhoth, c. 14.) tells us, from the Talmud, that a man might have as many wives as he could maintain, even to an hundred; and that it was not in their power to hinder him, provided he had riches ſufficient for them all.

Ver. 21. And thou ſhalt not let any of thy ſeed paſs through the fire to Molech, neither ſhalt thou profane the name of thy God; I am the Lord.] Molech or Moloch was the chief and peculiar deity of the Ammonites. He is thought alſo to be underſtood, under the names of Baal, Milcom, Melech, Adramelech, Anamelech, and the like. Theſe names or titles ſignify no more than lord or king, and ſometimes have a prejunctive epithet, as in the two laſt, where he is ſtiled the mighty and rich Melech, Moloch, or king. Theſe two were the gods of the Sepharvites; but we ſhall only ſpeak of the Ammoniſh Moloch in this place. The learned are not poſitively agreed in all the particulars that relate to him, but it is univerſally allowed, that they addreſſed him under the title of King, or Moloch. His image is ſaid to have been hollow, and divided into ſeven receptacles: The firſt was opened for an offering of fine flour; the ſecond for an offering of turtles; the third for a ſheep; the fourth for a ram; the fifth for a calf; the ſixth for an ox; the ſeventh for a child: It had the head of an ox, and the arms of a man ſtretched out, in order to receive. Now theſe ſeven receptacles are alſo called ſeven chappels; and inſtead of being within the image itſelf, are placed orderly before it. Whatever was the diſpoſition of the ſeven places, their number correſponding with that of the ſun, moon, and five planets, has given room to ſuppoſe, that they worſhipped the ſun intentionally; and the rather, as the oblations ſeem to riſe in ſuch proportion, as might, according to this people, beſt ſuit the degree of each of theſe heavenly bodies. But it were endleſs to expatiate, in a conjectural way, upon ſo obſcure a ſubject, as the learned have done. Some accounts there are farther, concerning this idol, but they are very doubtful. Moloch has been taken for Priapus, for Mercury, for Saturn, and for Venus, or the Morning-ſtar; but, as fancy chiefly rules over theſe ſuppoſitions, it is enough that we barely mention them.

As to the ſuperſtitions paid to Moloch, there is a wide diſcrepancy among authors. In the ſcripture it is often ſaid, that the Ammonites paſſed their ſeed through fire to Moloch. This expreſſion is taken in a literal ſenſe by ſome, in a figurative ſenſe by others. The firſt ſentiment is embraced by the Jewiſh writers, who, for the moſt part, hold, that the children were barely carried or led between two fires, by way of purification: The latter is adopted by the Chriſtian writers chiefly, who think, that they actually burnt their children, by way of ſacrifice to this grim idol. Some of the Jewiſh writers maintain, that the children were ſolemnly delivered to the prieſts; who returning them again, they were carried, by their parents, upon their ſhoulders, between two fires: According to others, the prieſt himſelf carried them. Maimonides ſays, that the prieſts, or ſervants, of fire, perſuaded them their children would die, if they did not paſs them through fire. Wherefore, parents being anxious for the lives of their children, and perceiving there was neither danger nor difficulty in performing the ceremony, no one neglected it, conſidering the children were not to be conſumed by fire, but only to paſs through it. This alſo is the opinion of Solomon Jarchi, Joſeph Karo, and others; but Aben-Ezra diſſents from them, and affirms, that paſſing through fire muſt be here underſtood of burning. Voſſius inſiſts on it, that wherever the expreſſion of paſſing through fire is met with, it muſt be taken in the ſtrictneſs of the letter; but allows, that in caſes of great calamity, and upon other particular occaſions, they gave up their offſpring as an expiatory ſacrifice to their god. Selden is of a quite different ſentiment, and will have it, that they not only led their children through fire, but burnt them alſo at the ſame time. This he proves as far as a matter of this nature can be aſcertained.

There was a place near Jeruſalem, where this horrid cuſtom was obſerved; it was called the valley of the ſons of Hinnom, ſo named from the ſhrieks of the children ſacrificed; as alſo topheth, from a Hebrew word toph, ſignifying a drum or tabret, which they uſed, among other inſtruments, to drown the dreadful outcries of the unhappy victims.

This valley was a very delightful place, watered by the ſprings of Siloah. It was ſhady, and beautified with gardens. And, indeed, it is remarkable, that the Heathens commonly choſe fountain-heads, and ſolemn groves, for the ſcenes of homage they paid their deities.

An ancient Jewiſh traveller ſays, that when he was in thoſe parts, there were yet ſtanding, remains of the ancient temple of the Ammonites, and therein their idol ſeated upon a throne. This idol was of gilt ſtone, and had, on each ſide, the image of a woman, in a ſitting poſture: Before the idol was an altar, on which the Ammonites offered their ſacrifices and incenſe. Selden thinks, this idol and this temple cannot be thought to have been erected to Moloch, that moſt ancient deity of the Ammonites. And, indeed, we think this traveller muſt have been ſome how or other impoſed on, or miſtaken. However, we muſt not apprehend, that the images of Moloch were always large and fixed; they were likewiſe ſmall and portable, and carried up and down in ſhrines, according to appearance, and as the cuſtom was with other idolaters, as will be obſerved in due time.

In all other caſes, except thoſe of ſacrifices, the religion of the Iſraelites was pure, ſimple, and uniform, and might have continued ſuch, after their deliverance out of Egypt, had not their degeneracy and ſtubbornneſs obliged their Divine Law-giver to clog it with a numerous train of rites and ceremonies, in order to prevent their intermixing thoſe of other nations with their own, as the ſequel of their hiſtory will ſhew. We ſhall only add, that as other nations ſeem to have received, from the ancient patriarchs, the ceremony of ſacrificing beaſts to their gods, that is, of ſubſtituting an innocent lamb, ſheep, &c. in their guilty ſtead, without retaining the notion of the deſign, or typical inſtitution of them; ſo it is very probable, that the intended ſacrifice of Iſaac, by the Father of the faithful, by which he gave ſuch a glorious teſtimony of his confidence in the divine promiſes, may have given birth to the bloody cuſtom of ſacrificing children, which became afterwards ſo univerſal, not only among all other nations, but even among the Iſraelites themſelves. The notion of its being enjoined to that patriarch only, as a trial of his faith, might wear off by degrees, and nothing more be remember'd of it, than the great applauſe and bleſſings he received upon that account; from which they might conclude, as it were a fortiori, that if his noble intentions proved ſo meritorious, much more would the real ſacrificing of their own children be: And when they had once imbibed the notion, that the main merit of ſuch a bloody ceremony conſiſted chiefly in ſtifling all ſenſe of humanity and natural affection, it was eaſy for them to infer, that the more they did ſo, by the cruel torments they put the poor infants to, the more it would enhance the value of the ſacrifice.

The reſt of the crimes, enumerated in the following verſes of this chapter, and which the Iſraelites are commanded not to commit, need no explication.

CHAP. XIX.

A repetition of ſundry laws.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, Ye ſhall be holy: for I the LORD your God am holy.

3 ¶ Ye ſhall fear every man his mother and his father, and keep my ſabbaths: I am the LORD your God.

4 Turn ye not unto idols, nor make to your ſelves molten gods: I am the LORD your God.

5 ¶ And if ye offer a ſacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD; ye ſhall offer it at your own will.

6 It ſhall be eaten the ſame day ye offer it, and on the morrow: and if ought remain until the third day, it ſhall be burnt in the fire.

7 And if it be eaten at all on the third day, it is abominable: it ſhall not be accepted.

8 Therefore every one that eateth it, ſhall bear his iniquity, becauſe he hath profaned the hallowed thing of the LORD; and that ſoul ſhall be cut off from among his people.

9 ¶ And

9 ¶ And when ye reap the harveſt of your land, thuo ſhalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither ſhalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harveſt.

10 And thou ſhalt not glean thy vineyard, neither ſhalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou ſhalt leave them for the poor and ſtranger: I am the LORD your God.

11 ¶ Ye ſhall not ſteal, neither deal falſly, neither lye one to another

12 ¶ And ye ſhall not ſwear by my name falſly, neither ſhalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the LORD.

13 ¶ Thou ſhalt not defraud thy neighbour, neither rob him: the wages of him that is hired, ſhall not abide with thee all night until the morning.

14 ¶ Thou ſhalt not curſe the deaf, nor put a ſtumbling block before the blind, but ſhall fear thy God: I am the LORD.

15 ¶ Ye ſhall do no unrighteouſneſs in judgment; thou ſhalt not reſpect the perſon of the poor, nor honour the perſon of the mighty: but in righteouſneſs ſhalt thou judge thy neighbour.

16 ¶ Thou ſhalt not go up and down as a tale-bearer among thy people; neither ſhalt thou ſtand againſt the blood of thy neighbour: I am the LORD.

17 ¶ Thou ſhalt not hate thy brother in thine heart: thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy neighbour, and not ſuffer ſin upon him.

18 ¶ Thou ſhalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge againſt the children of thy people, but thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf: I am the LORD.

19 ¶ Ye ſhall keep my ſtatutes: Thou ſhalt not let thy cattle gender with a divers kind: Thou ſhalt not ſow thy field with mingled ſeed: neither ſhall a garment mingled of linnen and woollen come upon thee.

20 ¶ And whoſoever lieth carnally with a woman that is a bond-maid betrothed to an husband, and not at all redeemed, nor freedom given her; ſhe ſhall be ſcourged: they ſhall not be put to death, becauſe ſhe was not free.

21 And he ſhall bring his treſpaſs-offering unto the LORD, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, even a ram for a treſpaſs-offering.

22 And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him with the ram of the treſpaſs-offering, before the LORD, for his ſin which he hath done: and the ſin which he hath done, ſhall be forgiven him.

23 ¶ And when ye ſhall come into the land, and ſhall have planted all manner of trees for food; then ye ſhall count the fruit thereof as uncircumciſed: three years ſhall it be as uncircumciſed unto you: it ſhall not be eaten of.

24 But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof ſhall be holy to praiſe the LORD withal.

25 And in the fifth year ſhall ye eat of the fruit thereof, that it may yield unto you the increaſe thereof: I am the LORD your God.

26 Ye ſhall not eat any thing with the blood: neither ſhall ye uſe inchantment, nor obſerve times.

27 Ye ſhall not round the corners of your heads, neither ſhalt thou mar the corners of thy beard.

28 Ye ſhall not make any cuttings in your fleſh for the dead, nor print any marks upon you: I am the LORD.

29 ¶ Do not proſtitute thy daughter, to cauſe her to be a whore; leſt the land fall to whoredom, and the land become full of wickedneſs.

30 ¶ Ye ſhall keep my ſabbaths, and reverence my ſanctuary: I am the LORD.

31 ¶ Regard not them that have familiar ſpirits, neither ſeek after wizards, to be defiled by them: I am the LORD your God.

32 ¶ Thou ſhalt riſe up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man, and fear thy God: I am the LORD.

33 ¶ And if a ſtranger ſojourn with thee in your land, ye ſhall not vex him.

34 But the ſtranger that dwelleth with you, ſhall be unto you as one born amongſt you, and thou ſhalt love him as thy ſelf; for ye were ſtrangers in the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.

35 ¶ Ye ſhall do no unrighteouſneſs in judgment, in mete-yard, in weight, or in meaſure.

36 Juſt ballances, juſt weights, a juſt ephah, and a juſt hin ſhall ye have: I am the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt.

37 Therefore ſhall ye obſerve all my ſtatutes, and all my judgments, and do them: I am the LORD.

Ver. 3. Ye ſhall fear every man his mother and his father.] This duty is called honour, in the fifth commandment, Exod. xx 12. and the father there put before the mother; which being here called fear, and the mother placed before the father, ſhews, ſaith Maimonides, that honour and fear are equally due to both, without any difference ference. And the proper expreſſions of fear and reverence are (according to thoſe doctors) not to ſit in their ſeat nor to contradict them in any thing they ſay; much leſs to cavil againſt them; nor to call them by their proper names, but to add the title of Sir, &c. as we ſpeak, or the like. And the expreſſions of honour, are not to ſit down in their preſence; and to provide them with neceſſaries, if they fall into poverty, &c. See Selden, lib. ii. De ſynedriis, cap. xiii. p. 557, &c. and R. Levi, præcept. xxvii.

Ver. 4. Turn ye not unto idols, nor make to your ſelves molten gods.] This ſeems to have reſpect to the golden calf which they made to worſhip, and is called a molten calf, Exod. xxxii. 4. but all graven images are no leſs forbidden: For if to look towards an idol was a ſin, much more was it to make an image of any ſort, to worſhip it. The Jews are ſomething curious in their obſervations upon this precept; for, in the book of Siphra, they ſay, that they might not make molten gods for others, much leſs for themſelves. Whence that ſaying, He that makes to himſelf an idol, violates a double precept; firſt, in making it, and then in making it to himſelf. See R. Levi before mentioned, præcept. ccxxvi.

Ver. 9. And when ye reap the harveſt of your land, thou ſhalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither ſhalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harveſt.] That is, if an ear or two of corn fell, as they cut or bound it up, out of the ſheaves, or from under their ſickle, they were not to gather them up from the ground, but leave them for the poor, as often as they fell.

Ver. 10. And thou ſhalt not glean thy vineyard, neither ſhalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard, thou ſhalt leave them for the poor and the ſtranger.] Tho', by ſtranger, the Jews think is underſtood a proſelyte of righteouſneſs (as they call him who had embraced their religion, by receiving circumciſion), yet they did not hinder any poor Gentile from partaking of this charity; as the ſame R. Levi ſays. And if any one tranſgreſſed any of the precepts contained in theſe two verſes, he was beaten; as Mr. Selden ſhews, lib. ii. De ſynedr. cap. 13. n. 8.

Ver. 11. Ye ſhall not ſteal.] Here are ſeveral moral precepts briefly enumerated, for the maintaining juſtice and truth; without which, ſocieties cannot be preſerved. And firſt god forbids theft; the coveting of other mens goods being the ſource of the other ſins that follow. And whether they were the goods of an Iſraelite, or of a Gentile idolater, that any man ſtole, he was bound to make reſtitution, as R. Levi obſerves, præcept. ccxxxii. See Exod. xxii. 1.

———Neither deal falſly.] This is a divine caution, as the Hebrew doctors obſerved, againſt denying a thing that was depoſited with them, or which they had found, &c. which they never would pretend they had not, if they were diſpoſed to be ſincere and upright in their dealings.

———Neither lie one to another.] Words being intended to declare the mind, and for no other end; he that hears us ſpeak, hath a right in juſtice to be done him, that what we ſpeak be true; for otherwiſe he doth not know our mind by our words: And then we had better be dumb. But tho' all kind of lying be contrary to the intention of God, in giving us ſpeech; yet this relates, particularly, to ſuch falſhoods whereby a man's neighbour was injured: Defrauded, for inſtance, of his goods, which he had depoſited with another; or of the juſt debts which were owing him, &c. But tho' the ſimple denying of ſuch things was not puniſhed with beating, as Mr. Selden repreſents the opinion of the Talmudiſts, lib. ii. De Synedr. cap. 11. yet he that denied a thing depoſited with him, was not admitted to be a witneſs in any caſe, tho' he had not forſworn himſelf, unto which this lying diſpoſed him. See R. Levi, præcept. ccxxxiii.

Ver. 12. And ye ſhall not ſwear by my name falſly.] Much leſs was it lawful for them to confirm the lies before-mentioned, with an oath. So the Jewiſh doctors interpret it, as Mr. Selden obſerves, in the ſame place. If any man did, and was found guilty, he was adjudged to reſtore the principal, and a fifth part more, ch. vi. ver. 5. and whether he forſwore himſelf knowingly, or ignorantly, he was to expiate his crime with a ſacrifice. But if he was ignorant of that command concerning a ſacrifice, or if, tho' he had the thing, which he denied, in his keeping, yet he had really forgotten it when he ſwore he had it not; he was freed, both from the fifth part, and from the ſacrifice. See ch. v. ver. 4.

———Neither ſhalt thou profane the name of thy God.] By calling God to witneſs unto a frivolous thing, or to a raſh reſolution: As if a man ſwore, in his anger, he would not ſpeak to ſuch a perſon, but afterwards did; or he would not eat of ſuch meat, &c. in ſuch caſes, the Jews ſay, when a man's heart was touch'd with repentance for his raſhneſs and incogitancy, he was to go to ſome wiſe man, or to three neighbours, and deſire them to abſolve him from his oath, of which he truly repented. Which they did, when they found him ſincerely penitent; ſaying, be thou looſed, or it is remitted to thee, or the like. So Selden obſerves out of Maimonides, lib. xi. De Synedr. cap. 11. n. 9.

Ver. 13.———The wages of him that is hired, ſhall not abide with thee all night till the morning.] For this was a kind of force and robbery, to detain what was owing to him, againſt his will. In Deut. xxiv. 15 the words are, Thou ſhalt give him his hire, neither ſhall the ſun go down upon it. From whence the Hebrew doctors conclude, there were two ſorts of people who laboured for hire; one were day-labourers, whom Moſes ſpeaks of in this verſe; another, labourers by night, of whom he ſpeaks in Deuteronomy: Neither of whom were to ſtay for their wages beyond the time appointed; but the one were to have it before ſun-ſet, the other before morning; for it was due as ſoon as the day, or the night was ended. So the Miſna, The day-labourer requires his wages all night, and the night-labourer all day. See the fore-nam'd R. Levi, præcept. ccxxxviii. who gives this reaſon for it; That the merciful God would have his creatures ſubſiſt; which poor labourers cannot do, if they want their wages to buy them proviſions. Upon which account, the detaining of their wages is ſaid to be a crying ſin, in Deut. xxiv. 14. and in St. James, ver. 4.

Ver. 14. Thou ſhalt not curſe the deaf.] No Iſraelite, neither man or woman, was to be curſed, tho' he could not hear the curſe, and ſo was inſenſible of the injury, as R. Levi explains it, præcept. ccxxxix. For there was the addition of barbarous baſeneſs in it, to curſe or revile a perſon who was not capable to anſwer for himſelf, nor to do himſelf right: And the caſe of the ſick, and the infirm, or the abſent, was the ſame with the deaf. As for others who were not deaf, it was forbidden to curſe them, ſaith Maimonides, becauſe it provoked to anger and rage, which incited men to take revenge.

———Nor put a ſtumbling-block before the blind.] This is as inhuman as the former, proceeding from ſo great a malice, that the Hebrew doctors ſeem to think men incapable of it; and therefore expound it of giving ill counſel to ſimple people, and adviſing them to their damage. So R. Levi, præcept. ccxl. which is no leſs contrary to nature, than laying a ſtumbling-block in the way of thoſe who cannot ſee to avoid it; and a far greater ſin, becauſe it abuſed their minds, and might tend to the detriment of their ſouls.

Ver. 15. Ye ſhall do no unrighteouſneſs in judgment.] The Jews take this to be an admonition to their judges, that they ſhould have an equal regard to the plaintiff and defendant, and not prefer the one before the other. Whence theſe words are thus explain'd in Siphra: Thou ſhalt judge thy neighbours juſtly, not letting one party ſtand, and bidding the other ſit; nor ſuffering one to ſpeak as much as he pleaſes, and commanding the other to be ſhort. De Synedr. lib. ii. cap. 13. n. 9. But none hath explain'd this ſo largely as Maimonides, in the whole xxiſt chapter of Sanhedrim; where he, in general, defines the due adminiſtration of juſtice to conſiſt in an equal reſpect to both parties in the ſuit; ſo that one of them have not the liberty to ſay what he will, and the other be cut ſhort: And then deſcends to many particulars, wherein equal reſpect to both parties is to be preſerved; ſome of which it will be fit to mention, becauſe they illuſtrate the words of St. James, in the ſecond chapter of his Epiſtle, ver. 2, 3, 4. "If two parties appear in a cauſe, one of which "is clothed in precious garments, the other is ragged, or "in a poor habit; let it be ſaid to him that is the more "honourable, either do you beſtow upon your adverſary as "good apparel as you have on your ſelf, or elſe put on "ſuch as he wears, that you may be both alike, and then " appear before the court of judgment. By no means let " the one sit and the other stand: But let them be both " commanded to stand: Or, if it please the judges to give " them both leave to sit, let not one of them sit on a " high place, the other on a low; but both on the same " bench one by the side of the other." See R. Levi, Præcept. ccxvii. who observes, that mankind are preserved by righteous judgment; and therefore if a judge was found to have given an unjust sentence, he was condemned to make restitution to him, whose cause he had perverted, Præcept. ccxli.

Ver. 16. Thou shalt not go up and down as a tale bearer among thy people, neither shalt thou stand against the blood of thy neighbour.] Much less be a false witness against him, to the endangering of his life. So it is commonly interpreted, because the accusers and witnesses stood before judges, who sat in the courts of judgment. But R. Levi, and the rest of the Hebrew doctors, generally understand it otherwise; that no man should suffer his neighbour to perish in judgment, or other ways, when he could free him by his testimony, or assistance, Præcept. ccxliv. So it is said in Siphra, in so many words; whence do we gather, that he who can clear another by his testimony, must not suppress it by silence? Because it is said thou shalt not stand against the blood of thy neighbour. Whence it follows, that if a man saw his neighbour any way in danger, he was bound, if he could, to deliver him; not only when his life was in hazard, but that which is as dear as life, one's honour and chastity. Thus if any one attempted to corrupt the virtue of a woman, espoused to another, &c. he who beheld any such proceeding, was bound to rescue such a person, with the death of him who made the attempt. For this was a piece of justice which they consigned to private men, as Mr. Selden shews out of the Jewish Authors, lib. 4. de Jure N. and G. cap. 3. P. 481, &c. But then, they restrain this charity only to themselves; and from the word neighbour argue, that they are bound to do thus only to an Israelite. Nay, (which is strange) some of them are so selfish, and ill natured, that they fancy they are forbidden to do such kindness to a Gentile.

Ver. 18. Thou shalt not avenge.] Or, in other words, thou shalt not deny to do their brethren a kindness, out of a remembrance of any injury received from them; as R. Levi interprets it, Præcept. ccxlvii. by which means, as he observes, strife and contention were abolished, and peace and concord established among men. It may be also thought, that as they are forbidden to take revenge themselves, for the wrongs any one had offered them, so likewise to seek for redress from the publick, meerly to gratify their resentment and impatience to have the injurious person suffer, and not with a view to prevent the like or greater mischiefs for the future.

——— Nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people.] When thou dost thy neighbour a kindness, do not spoil it, by upbraiding him with all his faults, for the Hebrew word natar signifies, having something in reserve in one's own mind, particularly, anger or wrath, which our translation frequently supplies to make out this sense, Jer. iii. 12. Psalm ciii. 9. Nahum. i. 2. and so the LXX understand it here, and thou shalt not be angry with the children of thy people.

——— But thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy self.] The only question is, who is to be understood here by their neighbour? Which the Jews would restrain to themselves; and have the meaning to be, that one Israelite should love another; but is not bound to love a stranger in the same manner: Which is directly against the command of Moses, ver. 34 and certain it is, the word neighbour comprehends more than Israelites; as appears by the last commandment, which forbids them to covet their neighbours wife; which surely did not allow them to covet the wife of a Gentile, provided they did not covet the wife of an Israelite: a neighbour, therefore, is every other man, as in Deut. xxii. 26. and more plainly in Exod. xi. 2. where the Egyptians are called their neighbours. And therefore, D. Kmchi declares very honestly, upon Psalm xv. 3. a neighbour is every one with whom we have any dealings or conversation, which justifies our blessed Saviour, in making this command, of loving their neighbours as themselves, extend to all men with whom they had any intercourse, Luke x. 27, 28.

Ver. 19. Ye shall keep my statutes.] This may be thought to be premised to what follows, lest such commands as are contained in this verse, seeming small, should be neglected by them.

——— *Thou shalt not let thy cattle (*or rather make them) gender with a divers kind.] As horses with asses, goats with sheep, &c. whose mixture, one with another, they were by no means to procure. But if they came together of themselves, it was lawful to use such heterogeneous creatures, as were so produced. For they did not abhor the use of mules, which were either engendered by accident among them, or brought from other countries to them.

The reason the Jews commonly give for this precept, is, because God having made all things perfect in their kind, it was a presumptuous attempt, to go about to mend his creation, and add to his works. By this means also, men were deterred from unnatural mixtures, which they saw to be abominable in brutes. So R. Levi (Præcept. ccxlix.) and Philo, whose words are very remarkable. Things of the same kind were made for society one with each other; but things heterogeneous (as we call them) were not intended to be mixed, and associated, and therefore he who attempts to mingle them, impiously subverts the laws of nature.

To the same purpose Josephus: See Selden, lib. 7. de Jure N. and G. sect. Heb. cap. iii. p. 798. Maimonides also assigns the following reason for this precept. More Nevoch. P. 3. cap. 79. where he saith, no creature hath a desire commonly to mix with a creature of another kind; and therefore men ought not to promote such a desire. But after all, there might possibly be a respect, in this precept, to some idolatrous customs, which Moses intended to prevent or abolish, for there is good ground to think the following precepts in this verse were so intended; and in after times, some Gentiles did procure such mixtures of creatures, as are here forbidden, mules for instance, in honour of their gods. See our learned Doctor Spencer, lib. xi. de Leg. Heb. Ritualibus, cap. 20. where he endeavours to prove, that by cattle in this place, is peculiarly meant, oxen and asses, which were used in husbandry; and were of such different natures, that none would ever have thought to procure their conjunction, unless he had been moved to it by the devil.

——— Thou shalt not sow thy field with mingled seed.] The reasons for this, according to the Jews, are the same with the former: And R. Levi extends it to trees, which, he saith, they were not to ingraft of different kinds one upon another. But it concerns, they say, only such seeds and plants as are for mens food; not those which are for medicine, Præcept. ccl. But Maimonides found a particular reason for this precept, from the idolatrous customs of the old Zabii, who not only sowed different seeds, and grafted trees of divers kinds one upon another, in such or such aspects of the planets, and with a certain form of words and fumigations; but also with abominable impunity, at the very moment of the incision. Which he proves out of a book, concerning the incision of an olive into a citron; and doubts not, that God prohibited his people from sowing with mingled seed, that he might root out that detestable idolatry, and those preternatural lusts which abounded in those days, More Nevoch. P. iii. cap. 37.

——— Neither shall a garment mingled with linnen and wool come upon thee] In the Hebrew the words are, a garment of mixtures of Schaatnez, come upon thee. But that they might certainly know what Schaatnez was, it is explained (in Deut. xxii. 11.) to signify, as we translate it, a garment of woolen and linnen mixed together. The Jews have taken abundance of pains to find out the original of this word; which Bochart derives from the Arabic word Saat, which signifies to mingle, and Nez, which signifies to weave. Hierozoicon p. 1. lib. 2. cap. 45. But John Braunius, we think hath demonstrated, that it doth not import the weaving any different things together, but only of linnen and woolen; and that by woolen is to be understood only, what is made of the wool of sheep, not of camels or goats, which they called by the same name, lib 1. de Vestitu sacerd. Heb. cap. iv. 12. ii. 3. 6. Where he observes out of Maimonides, in his Halach. Kelaim, that if a man saw an Israelite wear such a garment, it was lawful for him to fall upon him openly, and rend it in pieces; altho' he were his master, who taught him wisdom. And the reaſons for this abhorrence are commonly ſuch as are given with reſpect to the former precepts; to preſerve them from the horrid confuſion which prevailed among the Gentiles, by inceſtuous and unnatural intermixtures. But Maimonides takes it to have been principally intended, as a preſervation againſt idolatry; the prieſts of the Gentiles, in thoſe times, wearing ſuch mixed garments, of the product of plants and animals, with a ring on their finger, made of ſome metal; as he ſays he found in their books, More Nevoch p. 3. cap. 37. By which mixture, it is likely, they hoped to leave the beneficial influence of ſome lucky conjunction of the planets or ſtars, to bring down a bleſſing upon their ſheep and their flax.

Ver. 23. And when ye ſhall come into the land, and ſhall have planted all manner of trees for food.] The precept is ſo general, that the boldneſs of R. Zerika is unaccountable, who would have it underſtood, only of the vine, which, if it be not cut, its grapes are not ſo large, nor the vine ſo good, nor fit to be offered at the altar, &c. as his opinion is repreſented in Pirke Eliezer, cap. xxix. But Moſes expreſly mentioning all manner of trees for food, there is no colour for this limitation; and a very good account may be given of the prohibition, if we have reſpect only to natural reaſon, for young trees grow better, if they be ſtripped of their fruit; the juice of which is wateriſh and unconcocted, having neither a pleaſant ſmell nor flavour, as Nachmanides obſerves; and therefore not proper for food; and upon that account, not fit to be offered as the firſt fruits to God.

But beſide all this, Maimonides affirms, there was an idolatrous cuſtom among the Zabii, to which this law of Moſes may reaſonably be thought to be oppoſed: For they imagined all trees would be blaſted, or their fruit fall off, when part of it was not offered in their idol temples, and the other part eaten there: As their children, they thought, would not thrive, unleſs ſome of them paſſed through the fire, And therefore God commanded his people to forbear to eat the fruit of any tree, till the fourth year, and not doubt of the fruitfulneſs of their plantations, tho' they did not conſecrate the fruit of the years foregoing, after the manner that the Gentiles did. (More Nevoch p. 111. cap. 47.) where he obſerves ſome trees brought forth fruit the firſt year, ſome not till the ſecond; and others not till the third, according to the different manners in which they were planted.

——— Ye ſhall count the fruit thereof as uncircumciſed.] That is, as unclean, and therefore to be caſt away, as the foreskin was.

——— Three years it ſhall be as uncircumciſed to you; it ſhall not be eaten of.] And therefore they plucked off the buds, when they put forth, that they might not grow into fruit, or if any by chance did, they threw it away, as unfit for food. But this is meant only of ſuch fruit trees as they planted after they came into the land of Canaan; not of ſuch as they found already planted there. And it was the ſame thing, whether he planted them himſelf, or bought an orchard or vineyard, &c. of another Iſraelite, or had it left him as an inheritance, or beſtowed on him as a gift; the three firſt years the fruit was not to be uſed.

Ver. 24. But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof ſhall be holy, to praiſe the Lord withal.] It was to be offered as the firſt fruit to God, and eaten by the prieſts; which as Maimonides obſerves in the forecited book, cap. xlix. was to inſpire them with liberality, and check their appetites as well as their avarice. Yet there are thoſe who ſay, this fruit of the fourth year was to be eaten by the owners, before the Lord at Jeruſalem (when his dwelling was ſettled there) as they eat the ſecond tithe. So R. Levi, Præcept. ccxx. ſhews at large. And they obſerve many benefits, which the Iſraelites received by theſe means; not only in exciting their gratitude to God, but their love to that ſacred place; for which ſome of their family might conceive ſuch an affection, as to ſettle there, and learn the law.

Ver. 25. In the fifth year ſhall ye eat of the fruit hereof, that it may yield unto you the increaſe thereof.] He would not have them think, that they ſhould loſe any thing, by ſtaying till the fifth year for the fruit of their trees; but promiſes them here, that, by forbearing ſo long, their trees ſhould be render'd abundantly the more fruitful.

——— I am the Lord.] Who beſtowed this land upon them, to hold of him by what tenure he pleaſed; by whoſe bleſſing they might expect to receive the increaſe thereof abundantly, without the aid of ſuch impious arts as Maimonides ſays the Zabii uſed; who letting certain things lie till they were purified, and, when the ſun was in ſuch, or ſuch a degree, ſprinkling them about the trees which they had planted, with certain magical ceremonies, they fancied flowers and fruits would be produced ſooner than they could have been without theſe practices.

Ver. 26. ——— Neither ſhall ye uſe inchantment.] In the hebrew the words are lo tenakaſhu, which all agree, ſignify ſome ſuperſtitious obſervation or other, whereby they made omens, and gueſſed what ſhould happen to them; either from mens ſneezing, or the burſting of a ſhoe-latchet, or the name of a man whom they met; or ſome creatures croſſing their way, or paſſing upon their right hand, or their left. And moſt, following the LXX and the vulgar Latin, take it for divination, by the flying, or crying, or pelting of birds. But the word Nachaſh ſignifying a ſerpent, and having no relation at all to birds, the famous Bochart thinks tenachaſhu (which ſeems to be derived from thence) to relate rather to the antient divination by ſerpents, than to their divination by birds; for it was antiently much in uſe among the Gentiles, as appears from Homer, in his ſeventh Iliad, where Chalchas ſeeing a ſerpent devour eight ſparrows with their dam, divined how long the Trojan war would continue: R. Levi (præcept. ccliii.) refers this to any kind of divination; by their ſtaff falling out of their hand; by a ſerpent creeping on their right hand; or a fox going by their left, &c. which made them forbear any work they were about; but he likewiſe thinks, it may ſignify, as we tranſlate it, inchantment; to cure wounds (for inſtance) by reading a verſe in the law, or the laying the book of the law, or a phylactery upon a child's head to procure ſleep; which are ſuch ſuperſtitions as are now in uſe among ſome chriſtians, who hang the firſt verſe of St. John's Goſpel about peoples neck to cure an ague.

——— Nor obſerve times.] That is, take no notice of days, according to the precepts of aſtrologers, who repreſented ſome to be lucky, others unlucky. For the Jews generally think ſomething of this nature is here forbidden; the Hebrew word Teonenu being derived, as they imagine, from Onah, which ſignifies time. Such an hour being thought, by ſuperſtitious people, to be fit for buſineſs, but another very croſs to it. Which opinion God ſeems to have intended to extinguiſh, by appointing the ſabbath, as the only day of the week upon which they ſhould reſt from their labours, leaving all the other ſix days, to be imployed in their buſineſs, without any difference of days or hours. But there being no ſuch ſignification, as many think, of that word in the hebrew language, they rather derive Teonenu from Anan, a cloud, imagining Moſes commanded them not to regard the flying of the clouds, or to make obſervations from their motion which was a thing common among the Gentiles. But Maimonides, who in the xi chap. of Avoda Zara, interprets it as we do, of obſerving times, by eſteeming one day fortunate, and another unproſperous, mentions another notion of this word from Ain, an eye, and ſaith, in the ſame treatiſe, that juglers, who delude mens ſight in playing off their feats, are comprehended under the name of Meonim, and there are thoſe alſo, who deriving this word from Anah, to anſwer, think it intends ſuch as pretended to tell their fortunes.

We ſhall not determine which of theſe opinions is moſt probable; but only obſerve, that there was no ſuperſtition of this ſort more ancient than that of aſtrology, which was uſed among the old Chaldeans, who pretended to caſt mens nativities, and thence to prognoſticate their future fortunes. But this claſs of men were rejected, as Strabo tells us, lib. 15. by the aſtronomers of that country, and likewiſe by the beſt philoſophers in other nations, as we are informed by Tully, who calls their pretences Chaldæorum monſtra, (lib. de Divin.) And therefore no wonder God cautions his own people againſt them, not only here, but by his prophets, eſpecially Jeremiah x. 2, 3. Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not diſmayed at the ſigns of heaven, for the heathen are diſmayed at them, &c. But then this caution was moſt neceſſary, when they were going captives into that country, which, at that time, was undoubt-undoubtedly infected with this error, but may be thought, perhaps, not to have been ſo in the days of Moſes, and therefore we ſay no more of it but this, that all thoſe, whom we call jugglers, were formerly comprehended under the name of Chaldeans; who ſeemed to perform wonderful operations, ſuch as ejecting fire out of their mouths, and transforming ſtraws into birds, &c. which relate to the other notion of meononu, derived from ain, an eye; which they deluded by the ſlight of their hands, or other means.

Ver. 27. Ye ſhall not round the corners of your head.] Or, the ends of the hair of your head; for the Hebrew word peah, which we tranſlate corners, ſignifies alſo the ends or extreams of any thing: and the meaning is, they were not to cut their hair equal, behind and before; as the worſhippers of the ſtars and the planets, particularly the Arabians, did; for this made their head aſſume the form of an hemiſphere.

The LXX. tranſlate it ὃ ποιήσεις ζισθλω ἐπὶ τ κεφαλῆς ὑμῶν. Where ζισὴ is the ſame with the Hebrew ſiſith, which ſignifies, that lock which was left in the hinder part of the head, the reſt of the hair being cut in a circle. And thus the ancient Arabians cut their hair, as Herodotus tells us, in imitation of Bacchus. Whence, as Bochart notes, (l. 1. Canaan, cap. 6.) the Idumæans, Ammonites, Moabites, and the reſt of the inhabitants of Arabia Deſerta, are called circumciſed in the corners, i. e. of the head, Jer. ix. 26. and the Greek ſcholiaſt on that place, ſaith, that, in his time, the Saracens were ſo cut.

But there are thoſe, who think, this refers to a ſuperſtitious cuſtom among the Gentiles, in their mourning for the dead. For they cut off their hair, and that round about, and threw it into the ſepulchre with the bodies of their relations and friends; and ſometimes laid it upon the face, or the breaſt of the deceaſed, as an offering to the internal gods, whereby they thought to appeaſe them, and render them propitious to the deceaſed. For that this relates to the dead, is probable from the like law, repeated Deut. xiv. 1. and from the next verſe to this. See Maimonides, de Idol. c. xii. 1, 2, 5.

———Neither ſhalt thou mar the corners of thy beard.] There were five corners (as their phraſe is) of their beards; one on either cheek, and one on either lip, and one below the chin; none of which, much leſs all, they might ſhave off, as the manner of the idolatrous prieſts was, if we may believe Maimonides, P. 3. More Nevoch. cap. 37. But if the former relates to their mourning for the dead, we do not ſee, why this ſhould not alſo be ſo interpreted; it being cuſtomary for the Gentiles, as Theodoret obſerves, to ſhave their beards, and ſmite their cheeks at the funerals of their friends.

Ver. 28. Ye ſhall not make any cuttings in your fleſh.] Either with their nails, or with knives, or other ſharp inſtruments, in imitation of the Pagan practice.

———For the dead.] To pacify the infernal ſpirits, and make them benevolent to the dead; which was the end the Gentiles aimed at, in laſhing themſelves. Otherwiſe, the meer laceration of their fleſh, in conſequence of extraordinary affliction, and anguiſh, ſeems not to be prohibited, any more than tearing off their hair, which was practiſed by the Jews, without any offence againſt this law, Jer. xvi. 6, 7. and xli. 5. and other places. Huetius thinks, that law of Solon's, which was tranſcribed by the Romans into the twelve tables, that women in mourning ſhould not ſcratch their cheeks, had its original from the law of Moſes. Demonſtr. Evang. propoſ. iv. cap. 12. n. 2.

———Nor print any mark upon you.] If this refer to the dead, as the foregoing prohibition doth, then theſe marks were made by the Gentiles in their fleſh, at the funeral of their friends; that by the compunction and pain they felt in their bodies, they might appeaſe the infernal powers. And ſo Aben Ezra underſtands it; tho' there be no footſteps, that we can find, of this, in any other author: But it is probable only, from what goes before, that there is far greater reaſon for another expoſition, that theſe prints were made in the fleſh, that they who had them might be known to belong to ſuch or ſuch a god. For it was the cuſtom of idolaters to devote themſelves to their gods, by notes, or ſigns, ſignifying they were their ſervants (for every one knows, in future times, ſlaves had marks ſet upon them to certify to whom they belonged), redeemed with their price, and ſtamped with their mark. And theſe marks were made with a hot iron, in their hands, foreheads, or necks; or they were prick'd with a needle dipp'd in glaſtum, as he ſays, which made blue ſpots in their skin; as the manner was among the Arabians, eſpecially the Scenitæ. And they expreſſed either the very name of the god to whoſe ſervice they were conſecrated; or elſe, by a proper character, denoted whom they honoured; as a thunderbolt ſignified they were devoted to Jupiter; a ſpear, or helmet, to Mars; a trident, to Neptune, &c. and theſe were ſigns (or ſacraments, as we may call them) whereby they were ſolemnly addicted to their worſhip.

It is poſſible there were ſome nations then, that might impreſs ſome marks on their fleſh, as an ornament; for, at this day, the women in Greenland do not paint their faces, which are very ſwarthy, but ſtigmatize them in ſeveral places, by drawing a needle and thread, dipp'd in whale's greaſe, thro' the skin, in what figure they pleaſe. Such Tho. Bartholinus ſaith he had ſeen, tho' he fancied they did not this as an ornament, but as an indication that they were marriageable; for they who were not, had no ſuch marks. But if any ſuch practices were uſed in ancient times, it eaſily might degenerate into the idolatrous cuſtom before-mention'd: For nothing is more certain, than that they made ſuch marks in honour to Mars, the god of battle; and that he who devoted himſelf to Hercules, received ſacred marks, giving up himſelf to that god; as Herodotus ſpeaks, lib. ii. cap. 13. of one that fled to his temple in Egypt. And Lucian ſaith of the prieſts of the Syrian goddeſs, that they were all marked; ſome on their wriſts, others in their necks: From whence all the Aſſyrians carry ſuch brands, or marks, in their fleſh. And ſo are the Jews, that were initiated in the Egyptian rites, ſaid (by the author of the third book of Maccabees) to be ſtigmatized with the leaves of ivy, which were the inſignia of Bacchus. From which ancient practice, it is probable that Chriſtians have deriv'd the cuſtom of printing the Jeruſalem croſs upon the arms of thoſe who go to viſit our Saviour's ſepulchre. We ſhall only add, that the Jews themſelves were ſo inclined to receive ſuch a badge as this, that they made no ſcruple to print the name of their own God in their fleſh; as appears by that ſaying mention'd by Schickard out of the title Sopherim: If any man write the name of God in his fleſh, let him neither waſh, nor anoint in that place. See his Miſhpal Hamelech, cap. 2. theorem 5.

Ver. 31. Regard not them that have familiar ſpirits.] It is uncertain what is here meant by oboth, which we tranſlate familiar ſpirits; but the word ob ſignifying a bottle, or hollow veſſel, Job xxxii. 19. the Jews think it probable, that oboth here ſignifies ſuch as the Greeks call Ἐγγαστρίμυθοι, who had a ſpirit or dæmon ſpeaking out of the belly, or cheſt, with an hollow voice, as if it came out of a bottle. So the woman whom Saul went to conſult, is called baalath ob, a miſtreſs of ſuch a ſpirit; where it is plain, ob ſignifies the ſpirit, or dæmon; ſee ch. xx. 27. and he or ſhe who had familiarity with ſuch a ſpirit, was properly called baal, or baalath ob, the maſter or miſtreſs who poſſeſſed it, and gave anſwers by it, with a voice that ſeemed to come out of the lower regions of the belly. In one place, indeed, the LXX tranſlate it ὁι ἐκ τ γῆς φωνοῦντο, they that ſpeak out of the earth, Iſa. xix. 3. becauſe the voice coming from the lower parts of her that was poſſeſſed, ſeemed to riſe out of the earth, as Mr. Selden explains it in De Diis Syris.

R. Levi Barcelonita ſaith, the manner of it was thus, (præcept. 258.) After certain fumes, and other ceremonies, a voice ſeemed to come from under the arm-holes (ſo he takes it, and ſo it is ſaid in the Sanhedrim, cap. 7. n. 7.) of the perſon who had the familiar ſpirit, which anſwered to the queſtions that were asked. For this he quotes Siphra; but if it came from under the arm-holes, ſtill it was ſo low and hollow, as if it had been out of the belly, or the cavities of the earth. Others imagine, ſuch perſons had the name of Oboth, becauſe they were ſwelled with the ſpirit, as a bladder is when it is blown. However it was, this continued till the time of the Goſpel, as appears from Acts xvi. 16. for ſhe that had the ſpirit of Python was the ſame with an ἐγγαστρίμυθος, as Plutarch informs us. See Caſaubon, and L. de Dieu, on that place. The famous Pythia, who delivered the oracles of Apollo, ſat over a hole, and from thence received the ſpirit which inflated

There are thoſe, who look upon all that theſe authors ſay, as ridiculous ſtories, to which no credit is to be given. But Auguſtus Eugabinus affirms, that he himſelf had ſeen ſuch women, called Ventriloquæ (which is the ſame with the Greek ἐγγαστρίμυθοι) from whom, as they ſat, a voice came out of the lower regions of their bodies, and gave anſwers to enquiries. And Cælius Rhodoginus (lib. 8. Antiq. Lect. cap. 10.) ſaith, this is not to be entertained with laughter; for not only he ſaw ſuch a woman, and heard a very ſmall voice coming out of her belly; but innumerable other people, not only at Rhodigium, but in a manner through all Italy; among whom were many great perſons (who had her ſtripped, that they might be ſure there was no fraud) to whom a voice anſwered unto ſuch things as they enquired. Hieron. Oleaſter alſo, upon Iſa. xxiv. 4 ſaith, he ſaw ſuch a one at Lisbon, from under whoſe arm-holes, and other parts of her, a ſmall voice was heard, which readily anſwer'd to whatever was asked.

——— Neither ſeek after wizards.] The Hebrew word jideonim, importing knowledge, as all confeſs, ſignifies ſuch as we call cunning men; who pretend to tell what was loſt, or what fortune people ſhould have; and theſe were men (as far as we can judge) as the other were moſtly women, who held intelligence with ſome dæmon; for this word ſeems to have the very ſame derivation in Hebrew, which the other hath in Greek; for all allow, that Δαίμονες are as much as Δαήμονες, knowers; and jideonim are as much as joadim, which is the very ſame; futurorum conſcii, as Mr. Selden obſerves, and ſo the Seventy tranſlate it, γνῶσαι, 2 Kings xxi. 7. tho' here, and chap. xx. ult. they render it ἐπαοιδοί, and elſewhere, τελεσθλοσκόποι. This knowledge they pretended to obtain (as ſome think) by looking into the intrails of their ſacrifices; or, as Maimonides will have it, by putting the bone of a certain bird, called Jadua, into their mouths, with certain fumes and adjurations; which made them fall into an ecſtacy, and foretell things to come. R. Levi, præcept. cclix. And there are thoſe who think, that theſe jideonim were ſuch as pretended by charms to cure diſeaſes, &c. of which we can have no certainty; and it ſeems to rely on the LXX. in this place, who, as we obſerved, tranſlate it by a more general word, in another.

——— To be defiled by them.] With the moſt impure ſins. For, ſeeking to theſe was a forſaking of God, and one peculiar kind of idolatry; and therefore they who were guilty of it were to be ſtoned (as the ſame R Levi obſerves) if they committed this ſin knowingly, and there were witneſſes of it; but if there were none, then they were left to God, to be cut off with his hand, chap. xx. 6.

Ver. 35. Ye ſhall do no unrighteouſneſs in judgment, in mete-yard.] By which they meaſure lands, cloth, and ſuch like things; for middah (as Foſterus obſerves) is the meaſure of continued quantity, viz. in dry things.

———In weight.] By which they paid and received money in thoſe days; and ſold braſs and iron, and things of like nature.

———Or in meaſure.] The Hebrew word meſurah (from whence ſeems to come the Latin menſura, and our Engliſh word meaſure) denotes the meaſure of diſcreet quantity, as we ſpeak, as of corn; and all continued fluid quantity, as of wine and oil. And the forenamed R. Levi, will have it to ſignify, the very leaſt of ſuch meaſures; about which, ſaith he, the law concerns itſelf, that men ſhould be exact in them, as well as in the greateſt. And ſo Heſychius here notes, that Moſes provides againſt all injuſtice in ſmall things, as well as in great; for what the poſſeſſion of the field, or a houſe is to a wealthy man, that the meaſure of wine or corn, or the weight of bread is to the poor, who have daily need of ſuch things for the ſupport of their life.

Ver. 36. Juſt ballances, juſt weights.] This verſe only poſitively requires ſtrict juſtice in thoſe things, wherein the former verſe prohibited all deceit. And theſe two words refer to things ſold by weight.]

——— A juſt ephah and a juſt hin ſhall ye have.] Theſe two words, ephah and hin, comprehend all ſorts of meaſures of things, whether wet or dry.

And that they might have ſuch juſt weights and meaſures among them, the ſtandard of them was kept in the ſanctuary, by which all were to be governed; as appears from 1 Chron. xxiii. 29. See Exod. xxx. 13. The Jewiſh doctors alſo ſay, that it was a conſtitution of their wiſe men, for the prevention of all fraud in theſe matters, that no weights, ballances, or meaſures ſhould be made of any metal, as of iron, lead, tin, &c. which were obnoxious to ruſt, or might be rent or eaſily impaired, but of marble, ſtone, or glaſs, which were leſs liable to be abuſed.

For theſe conſtitutions Moſes was ſo famous, that his name was celebrated on account of them in other nations. Nay, Lucius Ampelius, a rude kind of writer, but who had collected much out of better authors, ſaith Mochus, was the inventer of ſcales and weights; and that his memory is preſerved in the conſtellation called Libra. Now if for Mochus we read Moſchos, it is the very name of Moſes in the Hebrew, viz. Moſcheh, who is called ſo by other authors, as the learned Huetius obſerves in his Demonſtr. Evang. Propoſ. iv. cap. vii. 11, 16.

———I am the Lord your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt.] This is the general reaſon for their obedience; which is repeated in this chapter above a dozen times. Sometimes more briefly, I am the Lord; and ſometimes a little larger, I am the Lord your God: and here with this addition, which brought you out of the land of Egypt. Whereby he in a ſpecial manner demonſtrates himſelf both to be their Lord, faithful to his promiſe, Exod. vi. 3. and their God, who obliged them to his ſervice, by the moſt ſingular benefactions.

Ver. 37. Therefore ſhall ye obſerve all my ſtatutes, and all my judgments, and do them.] Theſe words ſtatutes and judgments, comprehend all the laws of God: Some of which were prohibitions, which they were to mark and obſerve diligently, ſo as to abſtain from ſuch things; and other precepts, or commands which they were to practice, and conform to, in the courſe of their conduct.

———I am the Lord.] No more need be ſaid to engage your obedience in every thing than this, that I am your ſovereign, and the ſovereign of the whole world.

CHAP. XX.

2 Of him that giveth of his ſeed to Molech. 4 Of him that favoureth ſuch a one. 6 Of going to Wizards. 7 Of ſanctification. 9 Of him that curſeth his parents. 10 Of adultery. 11, 14, 17, 19 Of inceſt. 13 Of ſodomy. 15 Of beſtiality. 18 Of uncleanneſs. 22 Obedience is required with holineſs. 27 Wizards muſt be put to death.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Again, thou ſhalt ſay to the children of Iſrael, Whoſoever he be of the children of Iſrael, or of the ſtrangers that ſojourn in Iſrael, that giveth any of his ſeed unto Molech, he ſhall ſurely be put to death; the people of the land ſhall ſtone him with ſtones.

3 And I will ſet my face againſt that man, and will cut him off from among his people: becauſe he hath given of his ſeed unto Molech, to defile my ſanctuary, and to profane my holy name.

4 And if the people of the land do any ways hide their eyes from the man, when he giveth of his ſeed unto Molech, and kill him not:

5 Then I will ſet my face againſt that man, and againſt his family, and will cut him off, and all that go a whoring after him, to commit whoredom with Molech, from among their people.

6 ¶ And

6 ¶ And the ſoul that turneth after ſuch as have familiar ſpirits, and after wizards, to go a whoring after them, I will even ſet my face againſt that ſoul, and will cut him off from among his people.

7 ¶ Sanctify yourſelves therefore, and be ye holy: for I am the LORD your God.

8 And ye ſhall keep my ſtatutes, and do them: I am the LORD which ſanctify you.

9 ¶ For every one that curſeth his father or his mother, ſhall be ſurely put to death: he hath curſed his father or his mother; his blood ſhall be upon him.

10 ¶ And the man that committeth adultery with another mans wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbours wife, the adulterer and the adultereſs ſhall ſurely be put to death.

11 And the man that lieth with his fathers wife, hath uncovered his fathers nakedneſs: both of them ſhall ſurely be put to death; their blood ſhall be upon them.

12 And if a man lie with his daughter-in-law, both of them ſhall ſurely be put to death: they have wrought confuſion; their blood ſhall be upon them.

13 If a man alſo lie with mankind, as he lieth with a woman, both of them have committed an abomination: they ſhall ſurely be put to death; their blood ſhall be upon them.

14 And if a man take a wife and her mother, it is wickedneſs: they ſhall be burnt with fire, both he and they; that there be no wickedneſs among you.

15 And if a man lie with a beaſt, he ſhall ſurely be put to death: and ye ſhall ſlay the beaſt.

16 And if a woman approach unto any beaſt, and lie down thereto, thou ſhalt kill the woman and the beaſt: they ſhall ſurely be put to death; their blood ſhall be upon them.

17 And if a man ſhall take his ſiſter, his fathers daughter, or his mothers daughter, and ſee her nakedneſs, and ſhe ſee his nakedneſs; it is a wicked thing; and they ſhall be cut off in the ſight of their people: he hath uncovered his ſiſters nakedneſs, he ſhall bear his iniquity.

18 And if a man ſhall lie with a woman having her ſickneſs, and ſhall uncover her nakedneſs; he hath diſcovered her fountain, and ſhe hath uncovered the fountain of her blood: and both of them ſhall be cut off from among their people.

19 And thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy mothers ſiſter, nor of thy fathers ſiſter: for he uncovereth his near kin: they ſhall bear their iniquity.

21 And if a man ſhall take his brothers wife, it is an unclean thing: he hath uncovered his brothers nakedneſs, they ſhall be childleſs.

22 ¶ Ye ſhall therefore keep all my ſtatutes, and all my judgments, and do them: that the land whither I bring you to dwell therein, ſpue you not out.

23 And ye ſhall not walk in the manners of the nation, which I caſt out before you: for they committed all theſe things, and therefore I abhorred them.

24 But I have ſaid unto you, Ye ſhall inherit their land, and I will give it unto you to poſſeſs it, a land that floweth with milk and honey: I am the LORD your God, which have ſeparated you from other people.

25 Ye ſhall therefore put difference between clean beaſts and unclean, and between unclean fowls and clean: and ye ſhall not make your ſouls abominable by beaſt or by fowl, or by any manner of living thing that creepeth on the ground, which I have ſeparated from you as unclean.

26 And ye ſhall be holy unto me: for I the LORD am holy, and have ſevered you from other people, that ye ſhould be mine.

27 ¶ A man alſo or woman that hath a familiar ſpirit, or that is a wizard, ſhall ſurely be put to death: they ſhall ſtone them with ſtones: their blood ſhall be upon them.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] Some time after the delivery of the laws mentioned in the two foregoing chapters; the chief of them were inforced with the addition of penalties which are ſet down in this chapter.

Ver. 10. And the man that committeth adultery with another mans wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbours wife, the adulterer and the adultereſs ſhall ſurely be put to death.] It will ſcarce be thought needful to enquire how far the words, thou ſhalt not commit adultery, excluded all other gratifications which were not confined within the bounds of wedlock. That all impurities of this nature were comprehended in the prohibition againſt adultery is indeed the received opinion of many Jews and Chriſtians, who by the word naph, underſtand all kind of illicite intercourſe, and unnatural luſts. Yet we beg leave to take notice, that ſome of the ancients, underſtood it of the breach of conjugal faith. Accordingly we find by Philo and Tertullian, that ſome of the Greek copies placed this law againſt adultery, before that againſt murder in the de-calogue; and theſe two great orators have taken the pains to prove the former to be the moſt heinous crime of the two, and to deſcribe its injurious effects in human ſociety; the latter concluding it to be the greater crime, becauſe forbidden before murder. However, it is certain, that Moſes has no where given ſuch weighty reaſons againſt that, as he doth againſt this, when he ſays, for in the image of God created he man, Gen. ix. 6.

It is ſufficient to ſay, that inceſt, Rape, and beſtiality, are prohibited by other expreſs laws, and made capital as well as adultery. As for fornication, though it was not made capital in ſome caſes, yet was it forbidden by ſeveral laws; the difference was, that any woman who ventured to marry under the notion of being a virgin, and was proved to be otherwiſe, was to be ſtoned; whereas if a man deflowered a virgin, he was to pay her fifty ſhekels of ſilver and to marry her, without having it in his power to put her away during her life. Adultery was puniſhable with death in both parties; whether they were both married, or only the woman; but we cannot affirm the puniſhment of a married man to have been the ſame, who committed adultery with an unmarried woman; for beſides, that the crime was not alike, with reſpect to ſociety, it is plain, that Moſes was forced to indulge them in ſome other particulars, as unjuſtifiable as this, ſuch as poligamy, divorce, and the like, which are juſtly condemned in the goſpel.

Ver. 23. And ye ſhall not walk in the manners of the nation, which I caſt out before you.] viz. of the Amorites, as the Hebrews rightly expound it; for they were the principal nation in Canaan, and extreamly addicted to idolatry. R. Levi Barcelonita, extends this to all their cuſtoms, in cutting their hair, and ſuch like, præcept. cclxii; but it ſeems here particularly to relate to their marriages and idolatry. See chap. xviii. 3.

——— For they committed all theſe things.] Theſe words ſhew, that the foregoing have particular reſpect to their abominable marriages and idolatry.

——— Therefore I abhorred them.] So as to caſt them out of their country, ch. xviii. 25. Onkelos tranſlates it, my word (Memri) abominated them; which is a plain intimation, of a notion they had in antient times, of more perſons than one in the deity; and particularly here denotes him whom St. John calls the word; for Memri, word, plainly ſignifies a perſon in this place; and a perſon of the ſame eſſence as Jehovah.

Ver. 24. ——— I am the Lord your God, which have ſeparated you from other people.] This may refer, either to what goes before, that they ſhould not live like other nations, becauſe God had, by peculiar laws, as well as by ſignal deliverances, diſtinguiſhed them from all the people of the earth; or to what follows, that he had made ſuch a difference between them and other people, that in their very diet they ſhould not agree with them, much leſs in the impurities.

Ver. 25. Ye ſhall therefore put difference between clean beaſts and unclean, &c.] According to the deſcriptions in the eleventh chapter, which are here briefly repeated, to inforce the obſervation of the foregoing precepts againſt ſuch inceſtuous marriages as other nations allowed; their law not permitting them ſo much as to eat ſuch meat as thoſe nations did, but to account many things, which they freely uſed, unclean and abominable.

Ver. 27. A man alſo or woman that hath a familiar ſpirit, or that is a wizard, &c.] The conſulting ſuch perſons is forbidden, chap. xix. 31. And the penalty added, ver. 6. of this Chapter; and here the perſons themſelves who are proved to have familiar ſpirits, or to be wizards, are condemned to the ſevereſt puniſhment, which was being ſtoned to death. For which ſeverity Maimonides aſſigns this reaſon: "Becauſe it is the very ſcope of the "whole law to root out idolatry, and aboliſh the very "name of it. And therefore God ordered magicians to "be ſtoned, becauſe, without doubt, they are idolaters; "tho' in a manner peculiar and different from the vulgar. "And the greater part of ſuch evil arts being practiced "by women (which is the ground he thinks of that Law. "Exod. xii. 18.) towards whom men are naturally com-"paſſionate; therefore Moſes ſaith in this place, A man "alſo or woman that hath a familiar ſpirit, &c. the like to "which we find in no precept, not about the profanation "of the ſabbath, but in this caſe it was neceſſary, expreſly "to mention women, as well as men; becauſe of mens "natural tenderneſs and clemency towards them." Thus he, More Nevoch. p. 3. cap. 37. Procopius Gazæus, his gloſs upon theſe words is very pious, but ſomething fanciful; He that is hardned like a ſtone to virtue, deſerves to be ſtoned, for magi commits murders, digs up ſepulchres, diſturbs the ſouls of men; for magicians are men who corrupt human nature.

CHAP. XXI.

1 Of the prieſts mourning. 6 Of their holineſs. 8 Of their eſtimation. 7. 13. Of their marriages. 16 The prieſts that have blemiſhes muſt not miniſter in the ſanctuary.

AND the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Speak unto the prieſts the ſons of Aaron, and ſay unto them, There ſhall none be defiled for the dead among his people.

2 But for his kin that is near unto him, that is, for his mother, and for his father, and for his ſon, and for his daughter, and for his brother,

3 And for his ſiſter a virgin, that is nigh unto him, which hath had no husband: for her may he be defiled.

4 But he ſhall not defile himſelf, being a chief man among his people, to profane himſelf.

5 They ſhall not make baldneſs upon their head, neither ſhall they ſhave off the corner of their beard, nor make any cuttings in their fleſh.

6 They ſhall be holy unto their God, and not profane the name of their God: for the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and the bread of their God they do offer: therefore they ſhall be holy.

7 They ſhall not take a wife that is a whore, or profane; neither ſhall they take a woman put away from her husband: for he is holy unto his God.

8 Thou ſhalt ſanctify him therefore, for he offereth the bread of thy God: he ſhall be holy unto thee: for I the LORD which ſanctify you, am holy.

9 ¶ And the daughter of any prieſt, if ſhe profane herſelf by playing the whore, ſhe profaneth her father: ſhe ſhall be burnt with fire.

10 And he that is the high prieſt among his brethren, upon whoſe head the anointing oyl was poured, and that is conſecrated to put on the garments, ſhall not uncover his head, nor rent his clothes:

11 Neither ſhall he go in to any dead body, nor defile himſelf for his father, or for his mother:

12 Neither ſhall he go out of the ſanctuary, nor profane the ſanctuary of his God; for for the crown of the anointing oyl of his God is upon him: I am the LORD.

13 And he ſhall take a wife in her virginity.

14 A widow, or a divorced woman, or profane, or an harlot, theſe ſhall he not take: but he ſhall take a virgin of his own people to wife.

15 Neither ſhall he profane his ſeed among his people: for I the LORD do ſanctify him.

16 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

17 Speak unto Aaron, ſaying, Whoſoever he be of thy ſeed in their generations, that hath any blemiſh, let him not approach to offer the bread of his God:

18 For whatſoever man he be that hath a blemiſh, he ſhall not approach: a blind man, or a lame, or he that hath a flat noſe, or any thing ſuperfluous,

19 Or a man that is broken-footed, or broken-handed,

20 Or crook-backt, or a dwarf, or that hath a blemiſh in his eye, or be ſcurvy, or ſcabbed, or hath his ſtones broken:

21 No man that hath a blemiſh, of the ſeed of Aaron the prieſt, ſhall come nigh to offer the offerings of the LORD made by fire; he hath a blemiſh, he ſhall not come nigh to offer the bread of his God.

22 He ſhall eat the bread of his God, both of the moſt holy, and of the holy.

23 Only he ſhall not go in unto the vail, nor come nigh unto the altar, becauſe he hath a blemiſh; that he profane not my ſanctuaries: for I the LORD do ſanctify them.

24 And Moſes told it unto Aaron, and to his ſons, and unto all the children of Iſrael.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, ſpeak unto the prieſts, the ſons of Aaron, there ſhall none be defiled for the dead.] By touching the dead body, or coming (as the Hebrews ſay) within four cubits of it, or entring into the houſe where it lay, tho' it were to take care of the funeral, or by following the corps to the grave, or making any mourning for the dead: Becauſe by theſe things they were legally polluted, for no leſs than ſeven days, Numb. xix. 11, 14. and conſequently unfit for the ſervice of God, and for converſation with their neighbours, who had the greater reverence alſo for them, when they ſaw their dignity to be ſo great, that they were not permitted to perform ſuch offices, as others were obliged unto. For this, no doubt, was intended very much, to confer an honour upon the prieſthood: As it was alſo in other nations, particularly among the Romans, who would not permit their Pontifex to look upon a funeral, as Bochart obſerves out of Seneca (Hieroz. p. 1. lib. 3. cap. 4.) And the Flamen Dialis might not go into the place where the coffin was. For which reaſon, as Servius tells us (ad lib. 3. Æneid) they ordered a bough of a cypreſs tree to be ſtuck at the door of the houſe where a dead perſon lay, that the high prieſt might not ignorantly go into it. It appears alſo by Plato, that it was thus likewiſe among the Greeks, for he would have the prieſts, of both ſexes, to accompany one who had diſcharged the office of a cenſor well, unto his grave when he was buried, as unto a pure funeral; but for this, he ſays, they muſt ask leave of Apollo. Lib. 12. de Legibus, p. 947.

Ver. 2. But for his kin that is near unto him.] Here is an exception to the general rule; becauſe it would have been very hard to reſtrain natural affection from carrying them to their parents and children, and brethren, and ſiſters, when they died; and they are particularly named, that there might be no miſtake, nor any colour to extend this indulgence to relations more remote.

Ver. 3. And for his ſiſter a virgin, Which hath had no husband.] To take care of his funeral; which her brother therefore, tho' a prieſt, might. It is commonly obſerved, that there is no mention here of his wife. But Maimonides, with great reaſon, thinks it was lawful for him to mourn for her; but it was needleſs to mention her, who, by the law of God, was dearer to him than father, or mother. And there is this argument for it, that Ezekiel, who was a prieſt, is forbidden, by a ſpecial command, to mourn for his wife; which otherwiſe he would have done. chap. xxiv. 16. &c.

Ver. 4. But he ſhall not defile himſelf, being a chief man among his people.] But tho' he might defile himſelf for ſuch very near relations, yet he might not for the greateſt man in the nation, who was not ſo nearly related to him. This ſeems to us, to be the eaſieſt, and the moſt natural ſenſe of this verſe, by adding the particle lamed (which in the two foregoing verſes, is placed before mother, father, ſon, Daughter, brother and ſiſter) to Baal, i. e. chief man, as we tranſlate it, nothing being more uſual, than to omit ſuch a particle, which yet muſt be underſtood, when it hath been often before mentioned. And thus the vulgar Latin underſtands it; and the ſenſe is the ſame, if we take it as our tranſlation ſeems to intend it; But he ſhall not defile himſelf, for any other, being a chief man. As for the marginal tranſlation, we can ſee no ground for it; and there muſt be a greater ſupplement, by adding (for his wife) which we cannot well think is here forbidden; they alſo who tranſlate it, a chief ruler ſhall not defile himſelf, &c. have ſtill leſs reaſon; the whole diſcourſe in this place, being concerning the prieſts.

——— To profane himſelf.] He himſelf, in ſacred offices, being the greateſt perſon, would have been profaned, i. e. rendered a common man; if he had mourned for any, but thoſe whom nature had very cloſely linked him unto.

Ver. 5. They ſhall not make baldneſs upon their head, neither ſhall they ſhave off the corners of their beard, nor make any cuttings in their fleſh.] Tho' they were allowed to mourn for ſome perſons, yet for none after this manner: that is, according to the cuſtom of ſome places in Chaldæa, as Aben-Ezra gloſſes upon theſe words. And he might have added alſo of the Egyptians; among whoſe ceremonies we find theſe in after times, and its likely it had been very ancient. For Jul-Firmicus tells us, in the beginning of his book, that in their annual lamentations for Oſiris, it was cuſtomary to ſhave their heads, that they might bewail the deplorable misfortune of their king, by depriving themſelves of the ornament of hair, &c. And he adds, that they tore their fleſh, and cut open the ſcars of their old wounds, &c. where Johan Wouver obſerves the ſame out of ſeveral other authors. And Plutarch, in his book of Superſtition, declares it was their general cuſtom to be ſhaven in a time of mourning; whereas the Hebrews ſuffer'd their hair to grow. See chap. x. ver. 6. chap. xix. 37.

Ver. 7. They ſhall not take a wife that is a whore, or profane: Neither ſhall they take a woman put away from her husband.] For commonly women were put away for ſome fault, as Abarbinel notes; and were preſumed not to be ſuch as a prieſt ſhould deſire. To the ſame purpoſe Porcopius Gazæus. A prieſt, ſaith he, ſhould not only fly from manifeſt evils, as fornication for inſtance, but decline whatever might blemiſh his reputation: Nay, a woman who is put away by her husband, lies under a ſuſpicion of ſome bad conduct, for which reaſon, as Mr. Selden obſerves, a prieſt might not marry her, whom her husband's brother refuſed to eſpouſe after his death.

For

——— For he is holy unto his God.] That is, he is conſecrated after a ſpecial manner, to the ſervice of the Divine majeſty; and therefore, was not to diſhonour his prieſthood, by ſuch marriages as were diſreputable. If he did, he was not ſuffered to miniſter, till he had given ſuch a wife a bill of divorce; as Maimonides obſerves, in Biath Hamikdaſch, cap. 6. An example of which there was in Manaſſeh, brother of Jaddua the high-prieſt; who marrying, contrary to the law, the daughter of Sanballat the Samaritan, was commanded either to put her away, or not come to the altar.

Ver. 8 Thou ſhalt ſanctify him therefore.] This ſeems to be ſpoken to Moſes and to all who ſhould ſucceed him in the ſupreme authority, that they ſhould take care, the prieſts ſhould not marry with ſuch perſons; or if they did, not to be ſuffered to miniſter in the ſacerdotal office, till they had put them away. Accordingly we find, that to keep the prieſthood pure, and avoid all ſuſpicion of any ſuch pollution, the name of the prieſt's parents were carefully preſerved in the genealogical tables; as we learn from Ezra ii. 62. Nehem. vii. 64.

Ver 9. And the daughter of any prieſt, if ſhe profane herſelf, by playing the whore, ſhe profaneth her father: She ſhall be burnt with fire.] Which was the ſevereſt puniſhment among the Jews, ſee chap. xx. 14. and was not inflicted upon other perſons in this caſe, who were barely ſtoned, Deut. xxii. 14. but only upon the daughter of a prieſt, from whom greater virtue was expected. But if the witneſſes of this fact were convicted of perjury by other credible witneſſes, produced by the woman, or her father; then both her husband who accuſed her, and thoſe falſe witneſſes, ſuffered the ſame puniſhment that ſhe ſhould have ſuſtained.

Ver. 10. He that is the high-prieſt among his brethren, upon whoſe head the anointing of oil was poured, and that is conſecrated to put on the garments, ſhall not uncover his head, nor rend his cloaths.] This is another token of mourning, which he was to forbear; tho' the Talmudiſts will have it, that might rend his garments at the bottom, about his feet, but not at the top, down to his breaſt; as P. Cunæus obſerves out of Maſſ. Horajoth, lib. ii. de Rep. Heb. cap. 3. Before his anointing and conſecration, and putting on the holy garments, it was not unlawful for him to attend the funeral obſequies of his father; and therefore Eleazer was preſent when Aaron died, Numb. xx. being as yet in a lower miniſtry, and not compleatly advanced to the office of high-prieſt, but only declared Aaron's ſucceſſor, by putting on his garments, ſee chap. x. 6.

Ver. 11. Neither ſhall he go in to any dead body; nor defile himſelf for his father, or for his mother.] He might not go into the houſe, where the body of his father or his mother lay dead, (which was permitted to the inferior prieſt, ver. 2, 3.) and conſequently, he was not to make any external ſigns of mourning, for ſon or daughter, brother or ſiſter.

Ver. 12. Neither ſhall ye go out of the ſanctuary.] That is, if he was there, when he heard of the death of his father or mother, he was not to ſtir out from thence, till he had finiſhed his miniſtry; ſee chap. x. 7. for he had a little houſe, after the temple was built, within the precincts of it, where he commonly remained all the day time, which was called Liſchathcohen gadol, the parlour of the high-prieſt; as Cunœus obſerves, out of Maſſ. Midoth, lib. ii. de Repub. Heb. cap. 3. At night, he went to his own habitation, which was in Jeruſalem, and no where elſe; there he might perform all the offices of a mourner, except thoſe which are here forbidden; and the people came to comfort him, as Maimonides relates in his treatiſe on this ſubject, and ſitting upon the ground, while he ſat in his chair, at the funeral feaſt, they ſaid, Let us be thy expiation, i. e. let all the grief that is upon thee, fall upon us, unto which he anſwered, Bleſſed be ye from heaven, as their words are reported in Sanhedrim, cap, ii. n. 1.

——— Nor profane the ſanctuary of his God.] By preferring his affection to the dead, before the ſervice of God in the ſanctuary; Or, by returning thither to his miniſtry; when he had been defiled by the dead; which had been a great profanation: For he who touched a dead body, was unclean ſeven days, Numb. xix. 11, 12.

Ver. 13. And he ſhall take a wife in her virginity. And not ſo much as eſpouſed to any other perſon. Nor was any ſort of virgin thought fit for his wife, but only one who was newly come out of her minority, and had not yet attained to her full puberty; as Maimonides explains the ſenſe of their ancient doctors. See Selden lib. i. Uxor. Hebr. 7. where he obſerves, alſo, that this is to be underſtood of the high-prieſt after he was in his office: For if he had married a widow, before his promotion to that dignity, he was to keep her, and not put her away, when he was advanced to it. But there are thoſe who imagine this law obliged all the common prieſts to marry none but virgins; as they are perſuaded from Ezek. xliv. 22. and no leſs a man than Grotius ſeems to be of this opinion, both here, and in his book De jure belli & pacis, lib. ii. cap. 5. n 9. in his annotations on that ſection. But the Hebrew doctors are all of a contrary mind, and ſo are Joſephus and Philo, as Mr. Selden obſerves, in his Addenda to the ſeventh chapter of his firſt book Uxor. Hebr. and lib. 2. De ſucceſſ. in Pontif. cap. 2. p. 208. and ſo Cunæus, alſo, treating of this very law, Non enim ſacerdotibus poſita eadem lex fuit; quippe viduam illi rite duxerunt, &c. But, above all, a later moſt learned writer, Joh. Wagenſeil, hath largely confuted this opinion, in which he hath ſhewn that Grotius was ſingular: For, beſides that Ezekiel there ſuppoſes they might marry the widow of a prieſt, it is evident, both from Jewiſh and Chriſtian interpreters, that the ſtate of things under the law, is not to be meaſured by what the Prophet Ezekiel declares concerning the future temple and prieſts. But, as Kimchi himſelf ſaith upon this place, if this verſe muſt be expounded of every prieſt, it relates to the greater ſanctity of the future temple: For the law at firſt undoubtedly was, that none but the high-prieſt was confined to marry a virgin.

Ver. 16. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] Upon this occaſion, God gave ſome other precepts concerning the prieſts who were to wait upon him in his houſe, and at his table.

Ver. 17. Speak unto Aaron, ſaying.] Having forbidden ſuch marriages as would have been a diſhonour to the prieſthood, had they been permitted, God now prohibits any to ſerve at his altar, who had the leaſt blemiſh in his body; for that would have diſparaged his divine ſervice.

——— Whoever he be of thy ſeed.] Whether high-prieſt, or common prieſts.

——— In their generations.] In future ages, as well as the preſent.

——— That hath a blemiſh.] From theſe general words, the Hebrew doctors conclude, that not only the particular blemiſhes (afterwards mentioned) made them incapable to miniſter, but all others whatſoever, which appeared in the body; of which theſe here named are but a ſpecimen. So Maimonides, in Biath Hammikdaſh, whoſe words are, The blemiſhes expreſſed in the law, are propounded for examples of the reſt; which they reckon to be, in all, cxlii. accounting only thoſe which openly appeared, and not thoſe which were inward, in the kidnies, bladder, or bowels; becauſe there are no examples of ſuch in the particulars which here follow. They are divided, by the doctors, into three claſſes; ſuch as made beaſts unfit to be offered, ch. xxii. 20. as well as prieſts unfit to miniſter; of which ſort they reckon fifty. And ſuch as only rendered prieſts incapable of their miniſtry; of which ſort they reckon ninety. And ſuch as only gave men a diſagreeable appearance; which were but two. See Mr. Selden, lib. ii. De Succeſſione in Pontific. cap. 5.

Ver. 18. For whatſoever man he be that hath a blemiſh, he ſhall not approach.] The Deity makes it a ſtanding law, that no man who had a blemiſh, ſhould come to miniſter unto him at his altar. And a reaſonable law it was, approved by Pagans themſelves; for it is the very firſt qualification which Plato requires in him who was to be received into the prieſthood, that he ſhould be perfect in all his parts, and not a baſtard; and that he ſhould be the ſon of reputable parents, who had lived without the blemiſh of murder, or any other impiety. And ſuch a law there was among the ancient Romans, ſacerdos integer ſit; that a prieſt ſhould be entire in all his parts. Which Seneca mentioning, controv. iv. 2. explains it by the example of Metellus, who, loſing his eyes by adventuring to ſnatch the Palladium out of the flames, when the temple of Veſta was burnt, was denied the prieſthood; for tho' he had done great ſervice, which did him great honour, yet their opinion was, that ſacerdos non integri corporis, quaſi quaſi mali ominis res, vitandus eſt; a prieſt who was mutilated in any part of his body, was to be avoided, as ominous. For thus it was in ſacrifices, and therefore they thought, with much more reaſon, it ſhould be ſo in the prieſts who offered them.

——— A blind man, or a lame.] Such natural defects, which befal us without, or againſt our will, as Procopius Gazæus obſerves, are not imputable to us as any fault: And therefore he thinks ſuch vices in the mind as correſpond with theſe blemiſhes in the body, are here intended by Moſes: Yet he could not but acknowledge, that if we will follow the literal ſenſe (which, no doubt, is meant by theſe words) it is offenſive to ſee a man perform prieſtly functions, who hath any viſible defect in his body. But Moſes, he ſtill thinks, had a reſpect to higher matters, namely, to all the good qualities that St. Paul requires in a biſhop; and therefore, by a blind man, he underſtands one without knowledge; and by a lame, one who walks not upright in the ways of God's commandments. Such accommodations are ſo eaſy, that we need not take further notice of them.

——— Or he that hath a flat noſe.] In the two firſt words, blind or lame, there was no difficulty; but the word harum, which we tranſlate, hath a flat noſe, is not ſo plain; yet the Hebrews generally agree, it ſignifies one, the upper part of whoſe noſe was ſo depreſſed, that the two eye-brows ſeemed to meet, and to be but one; as Bochart obſerves out of R. Solomon, in his Canaan, lib. i. cap. 35. p. 655.

———Or any thing ſuperfluous.] The Hebrew word ſarua ſignifies any member diſproportionable to the reſt; but more eſpecially (as their doctors take it) the inequality of thoſe members that are pairs; as when one of a man's eyes, or ears, or legs, was larger than the other.

Ver. 19. Or a man that is broken footed.] Tho' a man did not halt, yet if his foot was ſo broken, that it look'd deformed, he was rendered incapable of miniſtring to the Divine Majeſty; becauſe it gave him a contemptible appearance in the eyes of the people; at leaſt, not ſo graceful a mien, as the ſervants of the moſt High ought to have.

——— Or broken handed.]. Any fracture in the hand made a man more remarkably unfit, than the foregoing blemiſh; becauſe, by this part, all the divine offices were to be performed.

Ver. 20. Or crooked back'd.] The Hebrew word gibben properly ſignifies bunch-back'd: Whether the bunch came from the luxation of the back-bone, or from a ſwelling in the fleſh.

———Or a dwarf.] Who, beſide that he looked deſpicably, was not able to reach up to the altar. The marginal tranſlation may be juſtified from the Hebrew, for dak in that language ſignifies lean, or ſlender; but then the meaning muſt be, one whoſe fleſh was emaciated by a conſumption. The Vulgate took it for one blear-eyed, and the LXX. alſo thought it ſignified ſome diſeaſe in the eyes, if the Complutenſian edition be right, where this word is tranſlated ἐφηλῷ τὸς ὀφθαλμὸς. But other editions leave out the two laſt words, and then it is uncertain what ἐφηλῷ ſignifies; but, moſt likely, ſome diſagreeable ſpots or puſtles in the face.

——— Or that hath a blemiſh in his eye.] The Hebrew words teballul beeno ſignify one who hath a confuſed ſpot in the eye, which is called, by the Chaldee paraphraſts, and likewiſe by the Talmudiſts, chillez and chaluzon, which is the very ſame with the Greek word χάλαζα, importing a concretion of a white humour, like a hail-ſtone, as Ægineta obſerves, and Galen alſo. See Bochart in his Hierozoicon, P. 2. lib. 5. cap. 9. But this ſpot did not diſqualify a prieſt for his miniſtration, unleſs it was a little prominent, which render'd the blemiſh more apparent.

Ver. 22. He ſhall eat of the bread of his God.] But tho' ſuch a blemiſhed prieſt might not offer any ſacrifice, yet he might eat, with his brethren, of that part of the ſacrifices which was given to them for their portion; which no man, in his uncleanneſs, might do. Therefore theſe natural infirmities were not legal impurities, but incapacities only, which diſabled them for their office.

Ver. 23. Only he ſhall not go in unto the vail.] He was not to enter into the ſanctuary, to burn incenſe, or to trim the lamps, &c.

——— Nor come nigh unto the altar.] No, nor go to the altar of burnt-offerings, which was in the court of the Lord's houſe; but he was to ſit in the wood-room, where he was employed in picking out all the wood which had any worms in it, that it might be laid aſide, and not carried to the altar; as Maimonides and others relate. He had alſo another employment. See chap. xiii. ver. 2. If any man was ſo preſumptuous, or ſo forgetful, as to miniſter, notwithſtanding the manifeſt blemiſh which was upon him, he was obnoxious to cenſure, and was puniſhed according to the degree of his offence.

——— That he profane not my ſanctuaries.] That he might not cauſe others to think meanly of the ſervice of God, and conſequently of the Deity himſelf; who would have men, in their greateſt perfection, miniſter unto him, to preſerve in peoples minds a ſenſe of his moſt excellent being, to whom they miniſter'd. For which reaſon, all the foregoing prohibitions were given, againſt marrying ſuch perſons as had been vitiated, &c. and againſt mourning for the dead, that they might not profane the name of their God, ver. 6. by doing as vulgar people did, or making themſelves incapable of miniſtring to God, as they were when they were defiled. And thus Maimonides diſcourſes upon this ſubject, More Nevoch. P. 3. cap. 45. God commanded his miniſters ſhould wear precious apparel, and that none ſhould be admitted to the miniſtry, who had any defect in his body; nay, they who were deformed and ill-favoured were excluded, becauſe the vulgar do not judge according to mens true worth or beauty (which lies in the ſoul) but according to their external appearance, in the comelineſs of their bodies, and the richneſs of their habits; and therefore the end of all theſe inſtitutions was, that the houſe of God might be had in due honour and reverence.

The word ſanctuaries being in the plural number, relates to the two parts of the ſanctuary; the court, where the altar of burnt-offering ſtood (which was an holy place) and that which was properly called the ſanctuary, wherein the altar of incenſe was; into neither of which, a prieſt, who had any bodily defect, might enter.

For I the Lord do ſanctify them.] I have appropriated both thoſe places to my ſervice, and therefore no man with a blemiſh ſhall be admitted into them, to perform any ſacred function there; yet they might come into the court, to eat with their brethren, of holy things, but not in their prieſtly garments, which it was not lawful for them to uſe.

CHAP. XXII.

1 The Prieſts in their uncleanneſs muſt abſtain from the holy things. 6 How they ſhall be cleanſed. 10 Who of the Prieſts houſe may eat of the holy things. 17 The ſacrifices muſt be without blemiſh. 26 The age of the ſacrifice. 29 The law of eating the ſacrifice of thankſgiving.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.

2 Speak unto Aaron, and to his ſons, that they ſeparate themſelves from the holy things of the children of Iſrael, and that they profane not my holy name in thoſe things which they hallow unto me: I am the LORD.

3 Say unto them, Whoſoever he be of all your ſeed, among your generations, that goeth unto the holy things, which the children of Iſrael hallow unto the LORD, having his uncleanneſs upon him, that ſoul ſhall be cut off from my preſence: I am the LORD.

4 What man ſoever of the ſeed of Aaron is a leper, or hath a running iſſue; he ſhall not eat of the holy things, until he be clean.

And whoſo toucheth any thing that is unclean by the dead, or a man whoſe ſeed goeth from him:

5 Or whoſoever toucheth any creeping thing, whereby he may be made unclean, or a man of whom he may take uncleanneſs, whatſoever uncleanneſs he hath:

6 The ſoul which hath touched any ſuch ſhall be unclean until even, and ſhall not eat of the holy things, unleſs he waſh his fleſh with water.

7 And when the ſun is down, he ſhall be clean, and ſhall afterward eat of the holy things, becauſe it is his food.

8 That which dieth of it ſelf, or is torn with beaſts, he ſhall not eat to defile himſelf therewith: I am the LORD.

9 They ſhall therefore keep mine ordinance, leſt they bear ſin for it, and die therefore, if they profane it: I the LORD do ſanctify them.

10 There ſhall no ſtranger eat of the holy thing: a ſojourner of the prieſt, or an hired ſervant ſhall not eat of the holy thing.

11 But if the prieſt buy any ſoul with his money, he ſhall eat of it, and he that is born in his houſe: they ſhall eat of his meat.

12 If the prieſts daughter alſo be married unto a ſtranger, ſhe may not eat of an offering of the holy things.

13 But if the prieſts daughter be a widow, or divorced, and have no child, and is returned unto her fathers houſe, as in her youth, ſhe ſhall eat of her fathers meat; but there ſhall no ſtranger eat thereof.

14 ¶ And if a man eat of the holy thing unwittingly, then he ſhall put the fifth part thereof unto it, and ſhall give it unto the prieſt, with the holy thing.

15 And they ſhall not profane the holy things of the children of Iſrael, which they offer unto the LORD.

16 Or ſuffer them to bear the iniquity of treſpaſs, when they eat their holy things: for I the LORD do ſanctify them.

17 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.

18 Speak unto Aaron, and to his ſons, and unto all the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, Whatſoever he be of the houſe of Iſrael, or of the ſtrangers in Iſrael, that will offer his oblation for all his vows, and for all his free-will-offerings, which they will offer unto the LORD for a burnt-offering:

19 Ye ſhall offer at your own will a male without blemiſh of the beeves, of the ſheep, or of the goats,

20 But whatſoever hath a blemiſh, that ſhall ye not offer: for it ſhall not be acceptable for you.

21 And whoſoever offereth a ſacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD, to accompliſh his vow, or a free-will-offering in beeves, or ſheep, it ſhall be perfect, to be accepted: there ſhall be no blemiſh therein.

22 Blind, or broken, or maimed, or having a wen, or ſcurvy, or ſcabbed, ye ſhall not offer theſe unto the LORD, nor make an offering by fire of them upon the altar unto the LORD.

23 Either a bullock, or a lamb that hath any thing ſuperfluous or lacking in his parts, that mayſt thou offer for a free-will-offering; but for a vow it ſhall not be accepted.

24 Ye ſhall not offer unto the LORD that which is bruiſed, or cruſhed, or broken, or cut; neither ſhall you make any offering thereof in your land.

25 Neither from a ſtrangers hand ſhall ye offer the bread of your God of any of theſe; becauſe their corruption is in them, and blemiſhes be in them: they ſhall not be accepted for you.

26 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

27 When a bullock, or a ſheep, or a goat is brought forth, then it ſhall be ſeven days under the dam; and from the eighth day and thenceforth, it ſhall be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

28 And whether it be cow or ew, ye ſhall not kill it and her young both in one day.

29 And when ye will offer a ſacrifice of thankſgiving unto the LORD, offer it at your own will.

30 On the ſame day it ſhall be eaten up, ye ſhall leave none of it until the morrow: I am the LORD.

31 Therefore ſhall ye keep my commandments, and do them: I am the LORD.

32 Neither ſhall ye profane my holy name, but I will be hallowed among the children of Iſrael: I am the LORD which hallow you,

33 That brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God, I am the LORD.

Ver.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] Theſe commands that follow were delivered at the ſame time with the preceding, as they related to the ſame matter; for tho' the prieſts, who had a blemiſh, might eat of the holy things, yet God would have them know, that neither they, nor ſuch as were unblemiſhed, ſhould preſume to do it in their uncleanneſs.

Ver. 2. Speak unto Aaron, and to his ſons, that they ſeparate themſelves.] Viz. When they were in their uncleanneſs, ver. 3.

——— From the holy things of the children of Iſrael.] Abſtain from eating that part of the ſacrifices which belonged to the prieſts, but was to be eaten only by ſuch of them as were free from legal impurities, chap. vii. 20, 21. Nor were they to eat of the firſt fruits, which were alſo their portion, Numb. xviii. 12, 13. but they might eat of tythes, which were allowed for their conſtant ſuſtenance.

——— And that they profane not my holy name.] This is the very foundation of this prohibition; that they might preſerve in their minds a due veneration for the Divine Majeſty; unto whom, as they might not approach, ſo they were not permitted to meddle with any thing conſecrated to him, while they were in a ſtate of legal impurity. All great perſons are to be approached with ſuitable reſpect and ceremony, eſpecially when perſons are invited to their tables; and therefore much more was this reverence to be ſhewn to the great Lord of the univerſe, that they might entertain high apprehenſions of him, by abſtaining from all things appropriated to his ſervice, when they labour'd under any pollution.

Ver. 10. There ſhall no ſtranger eat of the holy thing.] The holy thing, here mentioned, is that before named, ch. x. 14. and by a ſtranger the Deity doth not mean one of another natio, but one who is not of the ſeed of Aaron, or is not one of his family; for the word in the Hebrew is not nechar, which properly ſignifies ſuch a ſtranger as is not an Iſraelite; but zar, which imports any one to whom a thing doth not belong; as holy things did not belong to thoſe, who were not, at leaſt, part of the prieſt's family, tho' not of his race: For that ſuch might eat of them who were not of their race, provided they belonged to them as a part of their family, appears from the next verſe.

——— A ſojourner of the prieſt.] Who boards with him, (as we now ſpeak) or dwells in a part of his houſe, (as ſome underſtand it) but hath a diſtinct family.

Ver. 11. But if the prieſt buy any ſoul (i. e. perſon) with his money.] There were thoſe of their own nation, who, by their poverty, were compelled to ſell themſelves, or their children, chap. xxv. 39. and others they bought of other nations, ver. 44, 45. who becoming proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion, were permitted to eat of the proviſion belonging to the prieſts, becauſe they became part of his family.

——— And he that is born in his houſe.] They who were born of ſuch purchaſed ſervants, were their maſters property, and ſuch a part of their family, that they left them to their children who ſucceeded them; and therefore they alſo were allowed to eat of the meat of the prieſt.

Ver. 12. If a prieſt's daughter alſo be married unto a ſtranger.] Unto one who is not of the family of the prieſts.

——— She may not eat of an offering of the holy things.] She abdicated her prerogative to eat of thoſe holy things, of which ſhe was entitled to a participation, while ſhe remained a member of her father's family; for that entitled perſons to this privilege, inſomuch that a prieſt taking a wife out of another family, ſhe might eat of them, becauſe ſhe was one with him, and therefore had more right than a ſervant. But for the ſame reaſon, a prieſt's daughter, married to a ſtranger, might not eat of them, becauſe ſhe was gone out of his into another family.

Ver. 13. But if the prieſt's daughter be a widow, or divorced, and have no child.] If ſhe had any children, they and ſhe conſtituted another family; and being the offſpring of a father who was not a prieſt, had no right to eat of the prieſt's meat: But if ſhe was left without children, then ſhe was accounted ſtill one of her father's family, provided ſhe returned to live with him.

Ver. 15. And they ſhall not profane the holy things of the children of Iſrael, which they offer unto the Lord.] This ſeems to refer to the perſons before named, none of whom ſhould preſume to profane ſacred things, by eating them, when they did not belong to them. The prieſts ſeem alſo to be concerned in it, who were not to ſuffer them to eat ſuch ſacred food; as it follows in the next verſe. Or, if it entirely relate to the prieſt, the meaning is, they ſhould not profane holy things, by eating them in their uncleanneſs, ver. 9. and one reaſon was, becauſe the children of Iſrael, whoſe offerings theſe were, might be diſcouraged from bringing them to the Lord, when they ſaw them ſo profaned.

Ver. 17. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] The following laws, no doubt, were delivered at the ſame time with the former; becauſe they ſtill concern the ſame matter.

Ver. 19. Ye ſhall offer at your own will.] So theſe words are commonly underſtood; that the ſacrifices, both of Jews and Gentiles, ſhould be ſpontaneous, as well as immaculate.

——— A male without blemiſh, of the beeves, of the ſheep, or of the goats.] See ch. i. ver. 3, and 10. All burnt-offerings were to be males; tho' peace-offerings might be females, ch. iii. 1, 6. and ſo might ſin-offerings alſo, ch. iv. 32. but all without blemiſh. For as God accepted only ſome kind of creatures, viz. beeves, ſheep, and goats, and no other of the herd, ſo he would have the very beſt to be ſelected from them, as had been often before directed.

Ver. 21. And whoſoever offereth a ſacrifice of peace-offerings unto the Lord.] Which were either to obtain bleſſings, or to give thanks for them when they were obtained.

———To accompliſh his vow.] It was uſual to make ſuch vows, for procuring from God what they deſired, when they undertook a journey, or went to ſea, or were ſick, or in danger, &c. an example of which we have in Jonah, i. 16. where we read, the mariners in a ſtorm offered a ſacrifice to the Lord, and made vows, i. e. they vowed a ſacrifice to God (for they could not ſacrifice on ſhip-board) when he had brought them to a ſafe port. And ſo Cicero ſpeaks of certain mariners, who being toſſed in a tempeſt, vowed, if they gained their haven, Ei deo, qui ibi eſſet, ſe vitulum immolaturos; they would offer a calf to the god of that place. And Homer, in like manner, brings in the mother of Telemachus vowing perfect hecatombs unto all the gods, if ſhe might obtain her deſires, Odyſſ. xvii. ver. 59.

———Or a free-will-offering.] This alſo was a peace-offering for obtaining bleſſings; not when they were in diſtreſs, but, in general, to procure God's favour to them and theirs.

———In beeves or ſheep.] And likewiſe goats; for all theſe were allowed in peace-offerings, ch. iii. 1, 6, 12.

———It ſhall be perfect, to be accepted.] That was accounted perfect, which wanted none of its parts, nor had any defect in any of them. The Heathens themſelves did not think any other would be accepted, and therefore made a careful choice of their ſacrifices; as appears by thoſe words of Virgil, lib. iv. Æneid. v. 57.

Mactant lectas de more bidentes.

Which he calls elſewhere eximii, ſingled out as moſt excellent, lib. iv. Georg. v. 550.

Quatuor eximios præſtanti corpore tauros.

And that they might be ſuch, there was probatio victimarum, proof made of ſacrifices; as Pliny ſpeaks, lib. viii. cap. 45. where he ſaith, ſuch as were lame, or had one leg ſhorter than the other, were rejected. Which probation was to be made by thoſe who brought the ſacrifices; but if they did not do their duty, the prieſt, upon examination, refuſed to admit them to be offered.

———There ſhall be no blemiſh therein] This is an explication of what was meant by perfect, which Solon (who ſeems to have taken the rites of his religion from Moſes) called ἀφελῆ; in the explication of which word, Heſychius, after ſeveral other expreſſions, concludes with this, which neither hath any part more or leſs than it ſhould have.

Ver. 22. Blind or broken, &c.] In this, and the following verſes, the Deity enumerates twelve blemiſhes, which render'd any beaſt unfit for ſacrifice.

Ver. 23. Either a bullock, or a lamb, that hath any thing ſuperfluous.] This word we had before (which we tranſlate ſuperfluous) ch. xxi. 18. but it properly ſignifies the inequality or diſproportion that there is between thoſe parts that are pairs, as the eyes or legs; and particularly, when one of them exceeds its juſt bigneſs.

——Or lacking in its parts.] This word ſignifies juſt the quite contrary to the other; when one part is leſs, and more contracted, than it ſhould be: one leg ſuppoſed ſhorter than ordinary. So all the Hebrews underſtand theſe words; particularly Onkelos and Jonathan.

——That may'ſt thou offer for a free will offering.] A very learned perſon takes theſe words for an exception to the foregoing general rule; that ſuch defects as theſe two ſhould not hinder the acceptation of a beaſt for a free will offering, tho' not for a vow; and it muſt be acknowledged, that is the moſt plain and ſimple ſenſe. But the Jews, as he obſerves, particularly R. Solomon Jarchi, expound them otherwiſe, and will not have this offering to ſignify the ſacrifice of ſuch things at the altar, but the giving them to the prieſt for ſome ſacred uſe: To be ſold, for inſtance, for the reparation of the temple, for which they were accepted. See Dr. Owtram, lib. 1. De Sacrificiis, cap. 9. n. 2.

——But for a vow it ſhall not be accepted.] Free will offerings were much different from vows, there being no obligation upon them to offer the former, as there was to offer the latter, and a leſs perfect creature would be accepted in the one caſe, tho' not in the other.

Ver. 25. Neither from a ſtranger's hand ſhall ye offer the bread of your God, &c.] By Bennechar, the ſon of a ſtranger (as it is in the Hebrew), who is called, ch. xxv. 47. a ſtranger and ſojourner (viz. a Gentile that dwelt among them), is meant a pious man of another nation, who had renounced idolatry, and abſtained from blood, and obſerved the reſt of the precepts of the ſons of Noah (as they called them), but was not circumciſed, which would have obliged him to conform to the whole law of Moſes. Such perſons being worſhippers of the true God, were permitted to bring him oblations to be offered at the altar.

Some have taken theſe words, as if no ſacrifice was to be accepted from a Gentile, but only money, with which the prieſt might purchaſe an oblation, and offer it for him. But this is confuted by ver. 18. and here it is evident, he only forbids them to accept of any ſacrifice which had the forenamed blemiſhes, from a Gentile, who might think it not unacceptable, becauſe the Gentiles made no ſcruple to offer ſuch as theſe laſt mentioned, to their gods, tho' their laws in ſome places were againſt it. The bread of your God: The Hebrews underſtand hereby to be meant, only burnt-offerings; which, Maimonides ſaith, were acceptable from a Gentile, even burnt-offerings of birds, tho' he had not yet renounced idolatry. But they were not to accept from him peace-offerings, or meat-offerings, or ſacrifices for ſins of ignorance, ch. iv. 27. or treſpaſs-offerings, mention'd ch. vi. 6. nor was a burnt-offering to be accepted, unleſs it was a free will offering, or a vow, as Mr. Selden obſerves, lib. 3. De Jure Nat. & Gent. cap. 4.

But if he brought ſuch ſpontaneous offerings as had the forementioned blemiſhes, the prieſt was to reject them (tho' the Gentile might ſay they were ſuch as had been accepted by his gods), or elſe he was to be ſcourged. So this law is briefly expounded by the Jews, when they reckon it up among their precepts, that a defective ſacrifice is not to be accepted, no not from the hand of a Gentile. And it need not ſeem ſtrange, that a Gentile ſhould bring any ſuch ſacrifices; for they were not ſo curious in their choice, as the Hebrews: But, as Tertullian upbraids them, ſacrificed enecta, tabidoſa, & ſcabioſa, Apolog. adv. Gentes, cap. 13. which the better ſort of people, perhaps, did not offer, but the vulgar did: And the prieſts made no ſcruple to accept them.

Ver. 26. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes ſaying.] Theſe laws following being of the ſame nature, were, in all likelyhood, delivered at the ſame time with the foregoing.

Ver. 27. And when a bullock, or ſheep, or goat, is brought forth.] Theſe were the only beaſts that were allowed to be ſacrificed. ver. 19.

——Then it ſhall be ſeven days under the dam, and from the eighth day and thenceforth, it ſhall be accepted for an offering, &c.] They were not fit for food, when they were not ſeven days old, and therefore not for ſacrifice: which was the bread or food of God, as it is called, ver. 25. We ſhall only add, that the Gentiles were ſo far from offering creatures ſo young, that they thought them fitteſt for ſacrifice, when they were two years old.

Ver. 28. And whether it be cow, or ewe, ye ſhall not kill it and her young both in one day.] Leſt the young one, ſaith Maimonides, ſhould happen to be killed before the dam; which would have cauſed her to pine away, More Nevoch, p. 3. cap. 48. Any action that looked like cruelty therefore, was by this law baniſhed from among them; for they might not ſo much as kill both the young and the dam on the ſame day, to offer them to God himſelf; of which he is here ſpeaking.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 The feaſts of the Lord. 3 The ſabbath. 4 The paſſover. 9 The ſheaf of firſt fruits. 15 The feaſt of pentecoſt. 22 Gleanings to be left for the poor. 23 The feaſt of trumpets. 26 The day of atonement. 33 The feaſt of tabernacles.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, concerning the feaſts of the LORD, which ye ſhall proclaim to be holy convocations, even theſe are my feaſts.

3 Six days ſhall work be done, but the ſeventh day is the ſabbath of reſt, an holy convocation; ye ſhall do no work therein: it is the ſabbath of the LORD in all your dwellings.

4 ¶ Theſe are the feaſts of the LORD; even holy convocations, which ye ſhall proclaim in their ſeaſons.

5 In the fourteenth day of the firſt month at even, is the LORD's paſſover.

6 And on the fifteenth day of the ſame month, is the feaſt of unleavened bread unto the LORD: ſeven days ye muſt eat unleavened bread.

7 In the firſt day ye ſhall have an holy convocation: ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein.

8 But ye ſhall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD ſeven days: in the ſeventh day is an holy convocation, ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein.

9 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

10 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, when ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and ſhall reap the harveſt thereof, then ye ſhall bring a ſheaf of the firſt-fruits of your harveſt unto the prieſt:

11 And he ſhall wave the ſheaf before the LORD, to be accepted for you: on the morrow after the ſabbath the prieſt ſhall wave it.

12 And ye ſhall offer that day when ye wave the ſheaf, an he-lamb, without blemiſh, of the firſt year, for a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

13 And the meat-offering thereof ſhall be two tenth-deals of fine flour mingled with oyl, an offering made by fire unto the LORD for a ſweet ſavour: and the drink-offering thereof ſhall be of wine, the fourth part of an hin.

14 And ye ſhall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the ſelf-ſame day that ye have brought an offering unto your God: It ſhall be a ſtatute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

15 ¶ And ye ſhall count unto you from the morrow after the ſabbath, from the day that ye brought the ſheaf of the wave-offering; ſeven ſabbaths ſhall be complete.

16 Even unto the morrow after the ſeventh ſabbath, ſhall ye number fifty days, and ye ſhall offer a new meat-offering unto the LORD.

17 Ye ſhall bring out of your habitations two wave-loaves, of two tenth-deals: they ſhall be of fine flour, they ſhall be baken with leaven, they are the firſt-fruits unto the LORD.

18 And ye ſhall offer with the bread ſeven lambs without blemiſh, of the firſt year, and one young bullock, and two rams: they ſhall be for a burnt-offering unto the LORD, with their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, even an offering made by fire of ſweet ſavour unto the LORD.

19 Then ye ſhall ſacrifice one kid of the goats, for a ſin-offering, and two lambs of the firſt year, for a ſacrifice of peace-offerings.

20 And the prieſt ſhall wave them with the bread of the firſt-fruits, for a wave-offering before the LORD, with the two lambs: they ſhall be holy to the LORD for the prieſt.

21 And ye ſhall proclaim on the ſelf-ſame day, that it may be an holy convocation unto you: ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein: It ſhall be a ſtatute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations.

22 ¶ And when ye reap the harveſt of your land, thou ſhalt not make clean riddance of the corners of thy field when thou reapeſt, neither ſhalt thou gather any gleaning of thy harveſt: thou ſhalt leave them unto the poor, and to the ſtranger: I am the LORD your God.

23 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes ſaying,

24 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, In the ſeventh month, in the firſt day of the month ſhall ye have a ſabbath, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation.

25 Ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein; but ye ſhall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

26 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

27 Alſo on the tenth day of this ſeventh month, there ſhall be a day of atonement, it ſhall be an holy convocation unto you, and ye ſhall afflict your ſouls, and offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

28 And ye ſhall do no work in that ſame day: for it is a day of atonement, to make an atonement for you before the LORD your God.

29 For whatſoever ſoul it be that ſhall not be afflicted in that ſame day, he ſhall be cut off from among his people.

30 And whatſoever ſoul it be that doth any work in that ſame day, the ſame ſoul will I deſtroy from among his people.

31 Ye ſhall do no manner of work: It ſhall be a ſtatute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

32 It ſhall be unto you a ſabbath of reſt, and ye ſhall afflict your ſouls in the ninth day of the month at even: from even unto even ſhall you celebrate your ſabbath.

33 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

34 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, The fifteenth day of this ſeventh month ſhall be the feaſt of tabernacles for ſeven days unto the LORD.

35 On the firſt day ſhall be an holy convocation: ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein.

36 Seven days ye ſhall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: on the eighth day ſhall be an holy convocation unto you, and ye ſhall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: It is a ſolemn aſſembly, and ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein.

37 Theſe

37 Theſe are the feaſts of the LORD, which ye ſhall proclaim to be holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, a burnt-offering, and a meat-offering, a ſacrifice, and drink-offerings, every thing upon his day:

38 Beſide the ſabbath of the LORD, and beſide your gifts, and beſide all your vows, and beſide all your free-will-offerings, which ye give unto the LORD.

39 Alſo in the fifteenth day of the ſeventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye ſhall keep a feaſt unto the LORD ſeven days: on the firſt day ſhall be a ſabbath, and on the eighth day ſhall be a ſabbath.

40 And ye ſhall take you on the firſt day the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm-trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook; and ye ſhall rejoice before the LORD your God ſeven days.

41 And ye ſhall keep it a feaſt unto the LORD ſeven days in the year: It ſhall be a ſtatute for ever in your generations, ye ſhall celebrate it in the ſeventh month.

42 Ye ſhall dwell in booths ſeven days: all that are Iſraelites born ſhall dwell in booths.

43 That your generation may know that I made the children of Iſrael to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt; I am the LORD your God.

44 And Moſes declared unto the children of Iſrael the feaſts of the LORD.

Ver. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael. And ſay unto them, concerning the feaſts of the Lord.] It hath been anciently obſerved, that the Syrians were great lovers of feaſts. Which made it the more reaſonable (if they were ſo in Moſes's days) that the Iſraelites, who were to be their neighbours in the land of Canaan, ſhould have ſo many feaſts appointed them, weekly, monthly, and yearly, all in honour of their God. From whence they are called feaſts of the Lord. But this word moed, which we tranſlate a feaſt, properly ſignifies an aſſembly. And ſo Mr. Thorndike would have it tranſlated, becauſe the name of feaſts is proper to thoſe ſolemnities which are to be celebrated with joy and chearfulneſs; whereas under this general word moed, is comprehended the day of atonement, which is one of the aſſemblies here mentioned, ver. 27. but was no feaſt, being to be obſerved with the greateſt humiliation and affliction that could be expreſſed. He therefore exactly tranſlates theſe words in this manner; The aſſemblies of the Lord (for the word concerning, is not in the Hebrew) which ye ſhall proclaim for holy convocations, theſe are my aſſemblies: All that can be ſaid for our tranſlation is, that the day of atonement, being a ceſſation from labour, it may go under the name of a feaſt, in oppoſition to working days.

Ver. 3. Six days ſhall work be done, but the ſeventh day is the ſabbath of reſt, &c. Whether the obſervation of the ſabbath, or ſeventh day, be as old as the creation, as ſome authors both Jews and Chriſtians contend for, from theſe words of Moſes, And the Lord bleſſed the ſeventh day and ſanctified it, Gen. ii. 3. has already been ſufficiently conſidered in our annotations on the fourth commandment. (Exod. xx.) and therefore we think it needleſs to add any thing farther on that particular.

A learned jewiſh author declares, that they were obliged, in all diſtricts and towns throughout Iſrael, to blow the trumpet on the evening of the ſixth day, ſix different times, from ſome eminence, whence it might be eaſily heard, at a due diſtance. So that they who were abroad in the fields, might have timely notice to repair to their habitations, before the ſabbath began. Accordingly, at the ſound of the firſt trumpet, they left off work, and began to march homeward: At the ſecond ſounding, all ſhops, ſtalls, and places of trade, were ſhut up: At the third, the pots and kettles were taken off the fire, the tables covered, and the meat dreſſed for the ſabbath, was ſet upon them, &c. —— The laſt trumpet was generally about Sun-ſet; and on the next night, as ſoon as they could perceive two or three ſtars in the ſky, the trumpets blew from the ſame places, to proclaim the end of the ſabbath; at which the head of the family, after a ſhort prayer, wiſhed himſelf and the reſt a good week, as he did a good ſabbath at the entrance of it. From this blowing of theſe trumpets from ſome high places, a cabbaliſtical philologiſt hath concluded, that the Muſſakhaſſabath, the vail, or, as our verſion renders it, the covering of the ſabbath, which king Ahaz took away from the temple, was ſome kind of watch tower on the top of it, from which the prieſts uſed to proclaim the entrance and exit of the ſabbath to thoſe who lived at Jeruſalem. But for ought we can ſee, it might as well have been any thing elſe.

The Jews are fallen into ſeveral extravagant notions about the ſabbath, ſome of which we ſhall but juſt hint; ſuch as the obligation of ſanctifying it, is of much greater force than any other command; that it is the ſoul and totum of all the reſt. So that he who violates it, breaks all the reſt. That on that day, the dæmons, ſatyrs, and other ſuch hurtful creatures, ſhun the light of it, and do not return from deſerts and dark caverns, to infeſt mankind till it is over, with many more of the like nature, which the reader may ſee at full length in Leo. de Midena.

It muſt be owned however, that many of the wiſer Jews, make the ſanctification of the ſabbath to conſiſt in duties of a more noble nature, than theſe Talmudical trifles; namely, in meditation on the wonderful works of God; in the ſtudy of his law, and inſtructing thoſe who are under them in it. Some of them even maintain, that they uſed to aſſemble themſelves every ſabbath; and even from the time of Moſes, to hear the law read and expounded. And this is likewiſe believed by ſeveral learned men among the Chriſtians, who infer it from the words of St. James, that Moſes has, in every city, them that preach him, being read in the ſynagogue every ſabbath day. All that we dare ſay is, that the much greater number are of opinion, that this cuſtom was not ſet on foot till the time of Eſdras. All that the prieſts were commanded to do on the ſabbath, was only to ſet the new ſhew-bread on the tables, to take away the old, and to offer the meat, drink, and burnt-offerings, peculiar to that day; However, their ancient doctors have ſince clogged it with ſuch a number and variety of precepts and ſubtilties; that thoſe who came after, have been ſo divided about the right meaning of them, and their practice has ſo often varied, that it is impoſſible for them to know whether they kept it right or not. This made ſome of their Rabbies ſay, that if they could but obſerve two ſabbaths as they ought, God would ſoon put an end to all their miſeries.

We muſt beg leave to cloſe this annotation with taking notice of that expreſſion in Luke vi. ἐν Σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ, in the ſecond prime ſabbath, or, as our verſion more clearly renders it, on the ſecond ſabbath after the firſt, which has puzzled a number of commentators, till Joſ. Scaliger offered an explication which has been univerſally approved and followed ever ſince. We need not trouble our readers with the various conjectures of other writers, ſince that of our author carries its own evidence, being founded on the jewiſh manner of computing the ſabbaths ſabbaths from the feaſt of the paſſover to that of the weeks, or from Eaſter to Whitſunday. The firſt of theſe, namely, that which followed the two great feaſts, or the firſt and laſt day of the paſſover, was by them called Sabbath Shenireſhon, the ſecond prime ſabbath; the next was called the ſecond, or the ſecond after the ſecond prime; the third, ſecond third, and ſo on unto the ſeventh, which laſt did immediately precede the feaſt of the weeks or pentecoſt. The fact for which this ſabbath is recorded by the evangeliſt, namely, Chriſt's diſciples plucking and rubbing the ears of corn, confirms this expoſition, their harveſt happening always between Eaſter and Whitſunday.

Ver. 5. In the fourteenth day of the firſt month at even, is the Lord's paſſover.] We have already ſpoken of the inſtitution of the paſſover, and the occaſion and deſign of it, in our annotations on the twelfth chapter of Exodus, the laws relating to it, are to the following purpoſe.

It ſhall be of perpetual obligation, both to the Iſraelites, and to all circumciſed proſelites.

No circumciſed perſon, whether of the ſeed of Abraham, or admitted into the common-wealth by circumciſion, unleſs hindred by ſickneſs, journeying, or ſome legal impurity, ſhall omit the annual celebration of it, under the penalty of being cut off from his people: Either by an immediate death, or elſe by the hand of providence; or, laſtly, he was to be excommunicated, and thereby reſcinded from all the promiſes made to the ſeed of Abraham. And as the principal end of this inſtitution was, not only to perpetuate the memory of all the wonders which God did in Egypt at the red-ſea, but alſo to make it a ſtanding and irrefragable monument to all poſterity, of the truth and certainty of thoſe amazing works; nothing could be more expedient then to enforce the obſervation of it under ſome ſevere penalties. However, it is evident by the ſequel, that they did not underſtand it of a capital puniſhment, ſuch as was to be inflicted on blaſphemers, idolaters, ſabbath-breakers, and the like, ſeeing they not only omitted to celebrate it during their abode in the wilderneſs, without any viſible excuſe; but were afterward guilty of a moſt ſhameful neglect of it, during ſeveral wicked reigns, till Hezekiah, and after him, Joſiah revived it, as we ſhall ſee in the proper place.

As for thoſe who, by reaſon of any legal impurity, whether accidental or voluntary, were unfit for, and thoſe who were hindred by any lawful impediment, from celebrating this feſtival, with the reſt of the people, on the month Niſan, they were ordered to keep it with the uſual ſolemnity on the following month Jair. This indulgence was granted by God himſelf, in favour of ſome men who had defiled themſelves, by aſſiſting at the funeral of ſome relation; and was afterwards made uſe of by the prieſts and Levites, who being under ſome legal impurities, when the king commanded them to revive this feſtival at its uſual time, were forced to poſtpone it to the next month.

The feaſt was to begin on the eve of the fourteenth day of the month Abib, or, as the original expreſſes it, between the two evenings, at which time the paſchal lamb was to be killed; and the feſtival continued till the one and twentieth day of the ſame month at evening.

This feſtival is called in the original Peſach, from the verb Paſſach, which ſignifies to paſs by, or leap over, and not from the Greek πάσχω, to ſuffer, as if it had been prophetical of Chriſt's ſuffering at that feaſt, as ſome ancient fathers have imagined, for want of underſtanding Hebrew. God himſelf explained the Etymon, where he commanded them to tell their children, that this was the ſacrifice of the Lord's paſſover, Aſher-Paſſach, who paſſed by, or leaped over the houſes of the Iſraelites. It was to begin Ben-haharvaim, between the two evenings, of the fourteenth of the month, called by Moſes, Abib, which properly ſignifies the ſtalk that bears the ear of corn, becauſe wheat begins to be ripe about this time. This month was afterwards called Niſan, and correſponds with our March and April. The expreſſion, between the two evenings, is variouſly taken. Some reckon the firſt evening, from noon to ſun-ſet; others between two and ſix; but the moſt rational opinion, and the moſt received, is, that the firſt evening is that which immediately follows ſun-ſet; and that the ſecond begins when that planet is ſunk ſo far below the horizon, that the ſtars viſibly appear above it.

The computation of this new year, began at the firſt new moon that happen'd neareſt, or upon the vernal equinox; with this rule, that the preceding full moon how near ſoever to it, belonged to the laſt month of the former year. Now as they had no aſtronomical tables to regulate theſe conjunctions, but were forced to guide themſelves by the firſt appearance of the new moon, all their diligence in ſending out people to obſerve it, from high places at ſun-ſet, could not prevent great irregularities happening in their months and years; becauſe ſometimes it is not to be ſeen, till the ſecond or third night, nor even then, if clouds interpoſe. Add to this, that they were, in all other reſpects, ſo negligent of their chronology, that it is no wonder if ſo many learned men have laboured ſo much to correct and adjuſt it, and with ſo little ſucceſs. However, as to the new moons, and thoſe feſtivals which depend upon them, and indeed all other computations of time, they were committed to the care of the prieſts and judges, and the people were obliged to abide by their calculations, whether they proved right or wrong.

The firſt and laſt day was to be kept holy and free from all ſervile work, even as the ſabbath, except only, that on the former, proviſions might be dreſſed, but not on the latter; thoſe two days were likewiſe to be ſolemnized by an holy convocation.

No leaven of any kind was allowed to be uſed, or even kept in the houſe, during thoſe ſeven days, and whoſoever uſed any leaven on thoſe days, was to be cut off from Iſrael, all leaven therefore was ordered to be removed out of the houſe before the paſchal lamb was killed.

This curſe is underſtood to extend, only to the perſon who ate any thing which had any intermixture of leaven, and not to him who only kept it within his doors, and whoſe tranſgreſſion was only puniſhed with a certain number of ſtripes. But in the former caſe, their doctors are ſo ſtrict, that they even forbid eating a fowl, in whoſe crop is found one ſingle grain of corn, becauſe it is apt to ferment where it meets with moiſture. They have likewiſe ſeveral wild diſtinctions, with regard to liquors that are, or are not apt to ferment, which are more nice than true, and conſequently not worth being dwelt upon.

There are ſome other ordinances of leſſer moment relating to this feſtival, and interſperſed in the Pentateuch, but not material enough for any further comment.

Ver. 10. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, when ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and ſhall reap the harveſt thereof, then ye ſhall bring a ſheaf of the firſt fruits.] There were ſeveral things comprehended under the name of firſt fruits, which are commanded to be offered to God, Exod. xxiii. 19. The Greeks have accurately diſtinguiſhed them by proper and peculiar names. Πρωτόγονα were the firſt-born of men, or of cattle, mentioned, Exod. xiii. then Προσλογενήματα were the firſt corn that was ripe, or the firſt-fruit of trees, which they brought from the field, or from their plantations, before they ate any themſelves. And then Ἀπαρχαὶ (which the Hebrews call terumoth, or trumoth) were the firſt-fruits of their wine and oil, Numb. xviii. 12. and the firſt loaves or cakes made of their wheat, mentioned below ver. 17.

——— Of your harveſt.] Of barley harveſt, which began at the paſſover, when they offered the firſt-fruits here mentioned; as the wheat-harveſt began at pentecoſt, when they offered the firſt-fruits mentioned ver. 17. as at the feaſt of tabernacles, thoſe of the vine, and other fruit-trees, were brought and offered. And ſo much ſtreſs was laid on this, and there were ſo many of them, and ſuch care taken of their payment, becauſe this was held, by all mankind, as a principal part of religion, to make this early acknowledgment to God for his goodneſs; inſomuch, that they who offered no firſt fruits were look'd upon as Atheiſts. So Porphyry lib. iii. ſect. 78. And indeed this was a practice derived from the beginning of the world, Gen. iv. 3, 4. Ariſtotle himſelf teſtifies as much, when he ſaith, lib. viii. ad Nichomachum. The ancient ſacrifices and aſſemblies were after the carrying-in of the harveſt, when they offered the firſt-fruits, for they chiefly relaxed themſelves at thoſe ſeaſons.

———Unto the prieſt.] Who offered part of it to God, and had the reſt himſelf. For thus the Jews deſcribe the gathering and offering of them. On the evening of the firſt day of the paſſover week, ſome were ordered by the Sanhedrim, hedrim, to take ſickles and baskets, &c. and go out when it was dark, (having a great company with them) and cut a ſheaf of corn; which they brought into the court of God's houſe, and parch'd it, (as may be gathered from the ſecond chapter of this book, ver. 14, 15, 16.) and having ground it, they ſifted it often, no leſs than thirteen times, till it was very fine flour. After which, they took out a tenth deal, an omer, which was the tenth part of an ephah, and brought it to the prieſt, who took an handful, and put it on the altar with oil and frankincenſe; and the remainder he had for himſelf.

Ver. 11. And he ſhall wave the ſheaf before the Lord.] They did not offer the corn green in the ears, but parch'd, dried, ground, and ſearſed; and then they waved a tenth deal of the flour which came from the ſheaf, as a preſent to the Lord of the whole earth.

——— To be accepted for you.] To procure God's bleſſing for the reſt of the harveſt; and that they may have liberty to uſe the corn it procured; which was not lawful for them to do, till the firſt-fruits were given to God.

——— On the morrow after the ſabbath the prieſt ſhall wave it.] We are not to underſtand by the ſabbath, the ſeventh day's reſt, which was the opinion of the Sadducees; as R. Levi Ben Gerſom declares, but the day here mentioned, ver. 7. which was a kind of ſabbath, becauſe no ſervile work might be done therein. And therefore this morrow after the ſabbath, was the ſixteenth day of Niſan, or the next day to the firſt of unleavened bread. So the LXX tranſlate it, the morrow after the firſt: And Joſephus more plainly. On the ſecond day of unleavened bread, which is the ſixteenth day of the month, &c. lib. iii. antiq. cap. 10. This was the firſt of the fifty days, which they reckoned till pentecoſt, chap. v. 15. and was the day on which manna ceaſed when they came into Canaan, becauſe they ate of the fruits of that country, Joſ. v. 10, 11, 12. And indeed it was not lawful for them to eat of the fruits of the earth, till after the paſſover; becauſe then the ſheaf of the firſt-fruits was waved, which conſecrated the reſt of the corn. And ſo God continued manna to them till they had other food to eat.

Ver. 12. And ye ſhall offer that day when ye wave the ſheaf, an he-lamb without blemiſh.] Tho' this day was not ſo holy as the firſt day of unleavened bread, yet it was a part of the feſtival, and was called Moed Katon a leſſer ſolemnity; as all the reſt of the days were, between the firſt and ſeventh. And therefore a ſpecial offering is here ordered, upon this day, beſide the daily burnt ſacrifice; and beſide the ſacrifice that was appointed, ver. 8. to be offered on every one of the ſeven days.

Ver. 15. And ye ſhall count unto you from the morrow after the ſabbath, from the day that ye brought the ſheaf of the wave-offering; ſeven ſabbaths ſhall be compleat.] This is called the feaſt of weeks, or the pentecoſt, and it was inſtituted to commemorate the promulgation of the law upon mount Sinai, fifty days after the Exodus of the Iſraelites, who came out of Egypt on the fifteenth day of the firſt month Abib or Niſan and arrived at Sinai, on the third day of the third month, two days after which, the law was delivered in the preſence of all the people, who were obliged, by this feſtival, to appear before the Lord and offer the firſt-fruits of their harveſt, as an acknowledgment of his abſolute right and dominion over them, and their land, and of their dependency upon him.

Some commentators are of opinion, that every family was bound to offer two loaves of the firſt-fruits of the new corn, but it is more reaſonable to think, that there were but two in all, offered in the name of the whole nation, as the firſt barly ſheaf was. Theſe loaves were made of wheat, becauſe the wheat-harveſt was ended about the time of this feſtival.

Seven weeks, or fifty days, were to be reckoned from the ſixteenth day of the month Niſan, which was the ſecond of the paſſover, and the fiftieth day was to be the firſt day of this feſtival, It is therefore called in the original Chagg Shebugheth, or the feaſt of weeks, from the ſeven weeks which were reckoned from that of the paſſover; as from the fifty days, the Greeks gave it the name of pentecoſt. Neither the text, nor Joſephus, nor any ancient Hebrew writer tells us, whether or no this feaſt laſted ſeven days, like thoſe of the paſſover and of the tabernacles. However, the modern Jews, keep it but two days, during which all ſervile work, except dreſſing their proviſions, is entirely diſcontinued.

The ſacrifices ordained upon this day, were to be, beſide the two loaves, ſeven lambs of the firſt year, one young bullock, and two rams, for a burnt-offering, together with their uſual meat and drink-offering; and, likewiſe, a kid for a ſin-offering, and two lambs, for a peace-offering. No ſervile work was to be done on that day, only food might be dreſs'd, and a holy convocation was to be called, as on other ſolemn feſtivals.

There is ſome difference between the ſacrifices that are ordered on this feſtival, in this chapter, and in Numbers xxviii. 27. Joſephus joins them together; but whoever compares them, will rather think, that there is ſome error in the tranſcriber, either in one or the other of theſe places. Buxtorf tells us, that the Jews were ſo apprehenſive leſt they ſhould be miſtaken in their calculation of this feſtival, and that of the paſſover, that they kept it two days, inſtead of one. He inſtances in Judith, and the Greek ſeems to confirm his aſſertion, and by that means removes the difficulty which has been ſtarted of our Saviour's eating the paſſover one day before the reſt of the Jews.

Ver. 24. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, in the ſeventh month, in the firſt day of the month, ſhall ye have a ſabbath, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation.] We have already taken notice that the month Tiſri was the firſt of the civil, as that of Abib, or Niſan, was of the ſacred year: This feaſt was appointed to be kept on the firſt and ſecond day of that month. It was to be uſhered in by the ſound of trumpets, to be kept holy, free from all ſervile work, and to be diſtinguiſhed from other new moons by particular ſacrifices.

As the ſcripture doth no where aſſign the reaſon for the inſtitution of this feſtival; authors are much divided about it: The Jews, in general, believe it was ordained to commemorate the work of creation, which, they ſuppoſe, happened in that month. The Gemarrah poſitively affirms, that the world was created in the month Tiſri; for which reaſon it is thought that this feaſt was appointed to prevent the old or civil year from being obliterated by the ſacred: And obſerves, that the feaſt of tabernacles was to be kept at the revolution, or return, or, as our verſion renders it, tho' not ſo properly, at the end of the year. And the Miſhnah adds, that the firſt day of this month is the head of the year, from which the ſeventh year, the jubilee, &c. are to be computed.

Several Rabbi's think this feſtival was inſtituted in memory of Iſaac's deliverance, and of the ram that was caught by the horns, and ſubſtituted for him. Some of the fathers imagine, it was in memory of the promulgation of the law upon mount Sinai, at which time the trumpet and thunder were heard. Others, from ſome of the preparatory ceremonies obſerved by the Jews, and from ſome of their notions with relation to this feſtival, have fancied it was to inculcate on mankind the doctrine of the general reſurrection, which is to be uſhered in by the ſound of a trumpet. The ancient Jews had a notion that God paſs'd a kind of judgment upon men, at this time, for the good or bad actions of the preceding year; according to which he diſpenſed his bleſſings and puniſhments in the next.

The Miſhnah expreſly ſays——that at the beginning of the year they paſs before him like ſheep, according to the ſaying of the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. xxxiii. 14, 15. From the place of his habitation, he looketh upon the inhabitants of the earth, he formed their hearts alike, and conſiders (or takes notice of) all their works. For this reaſon, they thought that nothing could be more proper to awaken men from their ſleep of ſin, than the ſound of the trumpets, according to that of the prophet Joel, ch. ii. Blow the trumpet in Sion, ſanctify a faſt, &c. Accordingly, Maimonides obſerves, from the Megillah-Tahanith, that the trumpets, which were more ſolemnly blown on faſt days, were proper to excite men to prepare themſelves, during the ten days that were between this feaſt and the next faſting day, or day of expiation, for the work of repentance Remarkable is the ſpeech which a learned Jewiſh Rabbi has tranſmitted to us, which then uſed to accompany the ſound of the trumpets: Awake, awake from your ſleep; awake ye that deal in vanity, for deadly is the ſleep that holdeth you. Conſider ſeriouſly in your hearts, who it is that ye are going to appear before to give an account, &c. the Apoſtle ſeems to allude to this in his Epiſtle to the Epheſians, ch. v. ver. 14.

Hitherto there is nothing either improbable, or abſurd; but that is more than we can ſay of the additions ſince made to the Talmud; we ſhall only inſtance in two or three of them: They believe that God keeps three books, one of the good, a ſecond of the bad, and a third of thoſe who are neither one nor the other. The firſt is the book of life, the ſecond that of death, and thoſe that are in the third, are to be transferred either to the firſt or ſecond, on the next expiation day, according as they grow better or worſe. Thoſe two books have two kinds of pages, the one for this life, the other for the next; and it is on this day they think their names are written for that year. Upon this account, they take particular care, whatever they do the reſt of the year, to be well employed about this time: Some appear at the ſynagogue in white, others in their ſhrouds, in token of repentance; others will plunge themſelves gradually into the water, confeſſing their ſins, and ſmiting their breaſts as they ſink lower and lower, till they are quite immerſed in the water: And, laſtly, others will give themſelves 49 laſhes on their bare backs, or procure ſome body to do it for them; and after theſe mortifications, and ſuitable prayers, &c. they wiſh one another the happineſs of being written down for a good year.

There are ſeveral other conjectures relating to the inſtitution of this feaſt, but the moſt probable reaſon for it, and for proclaiming the entrance of the civil year by the ſound of the trumpets, ſeems to be in order to render it more obſervable; ſince all contracts, mortgages, bargains, and ſuch like, as well as their ſabbatic years and jubilees, were to be regulated by it: For which reaſon, the trumpets ceaſed not to ſound every where, from ſun-riſing to ſun-ſetting.

The proper ſacrifices for this ſolemnity, were a bullock, two rams, and ſeven lambs, offered up in a ſolemn burnt-offering, with the uſual addition of flour and wine, in the name of the whole nation, beſide the kid for a ſin-offering, and the daily and monthly ſacrifices, Numb. xxix. 3, &c.

Ver. 34. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, the fifteenth day of this ſeventh month ſhall be the feaſt of tabernacles.] This feſtival was ordained in memory of the forty years abode of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs; for which reaſon, it is call,d the feaſt of the tabernacles, or tents; not only becauſe they liv'd in tents, or booths, during all that time, but becauſe it was to be celebrated in ſuch kind of booths, made of the branches of ſeveral ſort of trees; ſuch as willows, palms, olives, and the like; and erected in the moſt decent and convenient manner.

The original calls it chagg haſſukoth, the feaſt of the tents, or booths; from which the Greeks gave it the name of σκηνοπήγια. Tho' the text ſays, it was appointed in memory of their abode in the wilderneſs, yet the Chaldee paraphraſe ſeems to have underſtood it, not of their living in tents, but in the open air; when he renders the word ſuccoth, tents, by words which ſignify the ſhade of the clouds. It is likewiſe thought to have been inſtituted as a feaſt of thankſgiving, for the concluſion of their harveſt and vintage, which did generally end there, about this time, which anſwers to the beginning of our October.

Moſes gives us a fuller deſcription of this feaſt, ver. 40. than of any other; probably, becauſe it was not to be celebrated till after they were ſettled in the promiſed land; but as to the particular trees of which the booths were made, and the manner of their ſtructure, they are not ſo eaſily underſtood. The firſt wood that is mentioned there, is ghetz hadar, goodly tree; or, as the original imports, rich, or magnificent wood; which the Jews will have to be the citron tree. The others are, the thamar, or palm; the original name of the third ſignifies any thick or buſhy wood; and the laſt certainly imports, river, or water-willows. But when Nehemiah, chap. viii. 16. directs the people what branches to gather for the revival of this feaſt, he calls the firſt zajith, the olive; the ſecond, ghetz-ſhemen, fat or oily wood; which is applicable to any wood that abounds with turpentine; as the pine, fir, &c. the third is called hadas, concerning which, we know little but the name; and to theſe three he adds the palm and thick wood, with reſpect to which we are alſo in the dark, tho' the Jews think it was the myrtile, which they have uſed ever ſince; and ſeveral interpreters have rendred it ſo. In particular, Joſephus, the Syriac, the generality of Rabbies, and Chriſtians. However, the two firſt, are differently named from thoſe in Leviticus, but whether they are the ſame trees or not, is neither certain, nor of great importance. It is rather more likely, by this difference of names in thoſe two places, that they were not ſo ſcrupulous, with reference to the exact choice of them, as about procuring ſuch as were the moſt beautiful, warm, and convenient, that the land could afford, and eſpecially thoſe as would beſt retain their verdure during thoſe ſeven days. This at laſt was the caſe of the wiſe Karaites, who deſpiſing the niceties of the Cabbaliſts, thought they ſufficiently anſwered the deſign of the law-giver, if they lived in ſuch tents or booths, as their foreſathers had done in the wilderneſs; whilſt the Talmudiſts, and their commentators have rather obliterated the inſtitution, by their numberleſs additions to it.

This feaſt was to continue ſeven days, the firſt and laſt of which were kept with the greateſt ſtrictneſs, by repairing to the tabernacle, or temple, with palms and other branches in their hands, by marching round the altar, and ſinging the praiſes of God, by ſacrifices peculiar to the ſolemnity, over and above the uſual ones, and by a ceſſation from all ſervile works except cookery.

The firſt day of this feſtival was uſhered in by a general proceſſion, in which the men carried branches of thoſe trees before mentioned, ſome in one hand and ſome in the other, waving them about to the four winds, and ſinging ſome pſalms or hymns ſuitable to the ſolemnity, and crying Hoſannah! which word properly ſignifies ſave we beſeech thee; from this word, the laſt day of the feaſt, on which this ceremony of carrying palms round the altar was performed ſeven times, and with greater ſolemnity, in memory, as is pretended, of the taking of Jericho, was called Hoſannah Rabbah, or the day of the great Hoſannah.

The Jews add, that every Iſraelite who neglected to carry theſe branches any morning of the ſolemnity, and to go with them round the altar of burnt-offering, was not to eat during all that day. The cxviiith pſalm is likewiſe ſuppoſed to have been ſung on, if not compoſed for, that feſtival, becauſe there are not only ſeveral expreſſions in it that have an affinity to it, ſuch as theſe; ana adonai hoſhihah-na, ana adonai hatzlichah-na, but alſo from the very analogy of the whole compoſure, with the ceremonies of that feaſt; ſuch as praying more particularly for the coming of the Meſſiah, for the proſperity of the next year, the fetching of water from the pool of Siloah, and the like; but whether theſe, and ſeveral other particulars, which they obſerved in it, were uſed during the ſtanding of the firſt temple, or were afterwards introduced by Eſdras, and others of their great ſynagogue, in proceſs of time, is too uncertain to be dwelt longer upon. As for the ceremony of fetching water from Siloah's pool, it ſeems to be of much later date, and to have been introduced but a little before the time of our bleſſed Saviour, tho' ſome of the Jews attribute the inſtitution of it to the prophets Haggai and Zachariah. Our Saviour is thought to have alluded to this, when he cried in the temple, on the laſt day of this feaſt, If any man thirſt let him come unto me, &c. John vii. 37.

All the Iſraelites were likewiſe obliged to dwell in thoſe booths the whole ſeven days, and to eat, drink, and ſleep in them, unleſs lawfully prevented.

The Jews except out of this number, the ſick and their nurſes, and thoſe who could not bear, either the dampneſs of the earth, or the heat of the boughs. They add, that as theſe booths were not to be covered by any thing but branches, and thoſe not to be ſet up ſo thick, but that they might ſee the ſtars through them. It is not unlikely, that from theſe ceremonies of carrying branches in their hands, &c. Plutarch might take it into his head to affirm, that the Jews celebrated this feaſt to Bacchus, and that they entered into their temples with branches of the vine and thyrſus in their hands, tho' he knew not what was tranſacted in the inſide of them. It is true, that Joſephus, ſpeaking of this feaſt, and of the noſe-gay or bunch of greens which the Jews wore in it, calls it εἰρεσιώνη, which among the Greeks, ſignified a bunch of olive tyed up with wool, on which hung a great variety of fruit. This noſegay was carried by a child, and laid at the gate of the temple of Apollo. But the Greek author here tells us, that the jewiſh one was made up of myrtle, willow and palm, on which hung little ſprouts of peach, or, as others render it, young citrons. However that be, Spencer has, from thence, fancied, that it was inſtituted by Moſes, in imitation of the Heathens, who, about that time, uſed to celebrate ſome feſtival to their gods, with the ſame mirth and ſolemnity; but Moſes gives us a quite different reaſon, namely, that their poſterity might know that God had cauſed the Iſraelites to dwell in booths, at their coming out of Egypt. And elſewhere, that they departed from Rameſes, and encamped at Succoth, Exod. xii. 37. So called from the booths which they reared up there, the place abounding with proper materials for them.

Walton adds another reaſon to this of Moſes, namely, that it was on the tenth day of the month Tizri, that Moſes came down the ſecond time from the mount, and brought them the joyful news that God was appeaſed for the ſin of the golden calf; and that he had ordered the tabernacle of the congregation to be reared up (which that idolatrous defection had obſtructed for a time) in token that he did now no longer diſdain to be among them, ſeeing he vouchſafed to dwell with them in the tabernacle; and as he obſerves there, that this happened ſix months after their departure from Egypt, it accounts for the inſtitution of that feaſt in the month Tizri, rather than in the firſt; in which the people began to live in booths or tents. Maimonides aſſigns indeed another reaſon for it, declaring, that this ſeaſon rendered it more commodious for them to dwell in booths than the other; but he forgets that if there be any difference between the months Niſan and Tizri, that is between March and April, and September and October, the former ſeems to have the preference. And therefore the learned R. Jacobi Levita judiciouſly obſerves, that God choſe the latter for the celebration of that feaſt, becauſe that was the time in which the coldmornings, winds, and rains, obliged people to quit thoſe kind of habitations, after they had reſided in them all the ſummer, for the benefit of coolneſs; whereas, had he appointed it in Niſan, the fifteenth of which nearly correſponds with the beginning of our April, there would have been nothing ſingular enough to have reminded them of the occaſion of ſuch an inſtitution; ſince that was the ſeaſon in which people left their houſes for ſuch airy booths. However, as this feſtival was likewiſe ordained as a thankſgiving, for the concluſion of their harveſt and vintage; upon which account it was alſo called, the feaſt of branches, and the feaſt of gathering; this is reaſon ſufficient for its being appointed in that month, in which the whole was generally compleated. Several Interpreters, both Jewiſh and Chriſtian, have thought, that the pſalms which are entiitled Gaal-Hagittith, which are the viiith, lxxxiſt, and lxxxivth, were compoſed for this ſolemnity, becauſe the word Gittith ſignifies a wine-preſs. But Leo de Modena tells us, that the pſalms which begin with Hallelujah, namely, the cxiith, cxiiith, cxiiiith, &c. to the cxviiith, were proper to be ſung on that day. Thoſe who are curious to know how the Jews obſerve this feaſt, ſince their diſperſion, may find a full account of it in the ſame author.

The ſacrifices peculiar to this feaſt were, on the firſt day, thirteen bullocks, two rams, fourteen lambs, a year old; all without blemiſh, which were offered up in a burnt-offering, with their uſual meat and drink-offerings, conſiſting of a certain quantity of flour mingled with oyl, and ſome wine. To theſe was added likewiſe a kid, for a ſin-offering, which was offered up in the name of the whole people of Iſrael; beſides the uſual morning and evening ſacrifices, which were never to be intermitted, and thoſe which any one might offer out of devotion. On the ſecond day, they offered twelve bullocks, fourteen lambs, with their concommitant-offerings of flour and wine, and a kid, as on the firſt day; and thus, on the third, fourth, fifth, ſixth, and ſeventh, they offered the ſame ſacrifices, with this difference only, that they leſſened every day one bullock, ſo that on this laſt day they ſacrificed but ſeven.

The reaſon which the Jews give, for leſſening one bullock every day is, that the whole number of them offered in thoſe ſeven days, amounted to ſeventy, which, they ſay, is the number of the nations for whom theſe ſacrifices were offered, that they might dwindle by little and little, till they were all brought under the ſcepter of the Meſſiah, who is emphatically called the deſire of all nations (Haggai ii. 7) Thoſe who have called this eighth day, the Hoſanna-rabba are certainly contradicted by all the Jews, who affirm it was the ſeventh day. As for this eighth day, on which there was to be what moſt interpreters read with our tranſlators, a ſolemn aſſembly; the Hebrew word Ghetzereth, ſignifies a retention, or, as our margin expreſſes it, verſe 36. reſtraint, for which reaſon they affirm, that after the ſeventh day was over, and conſequently the feſtival, it was cuſtomary for the people to ſtay, or to be detained, one day longer. On this day it is that the Jews end the laſt paraſha, or ſection of the pentateuch; and, immediately after, begin the firſt, that they may not ſeem to be better pleaſed with having ended the one, than with beginning the other, and for this reaſon it is called the feaſt of joy of the law.

As to the day of expiation, we have already commented upon it at large in a former chapter.

CHAP. XXIV.

1 The oyl for the lamps. 5 The ſhewbread. 10 Shelomith's ſon blaſphemeth. 13 The law of blaſphemy. 17 Of murder. 18 Of damage. 23 The blaſphemer is ſtoned.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Command the children of Iſrael, that they bring unto thee pure oil-olive, beaten: for the light, to cauſe the lamps to burn continually.

3 Without the vail of the teſtimony, in the tabernacle of the congregation, ſhall Aaron order it from the evening unto the morning before the LORD continually; it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever in your generations.

4 He ſhall order the lamps upon the pure candleſtick before the LORD continually.

5 ¶ And thou ſhalt take fine flour, and bake twelve cakes thereof: two tenth-deals ſhall be in one cake.

6 And thou ſhalt ſet them in two rows, ſix on a row, upon the pure table before the LORD.

7 And thou ſhalt put pure frankincenſe upon each row, that it may be on the bread for a memorial, even an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

8 Every ſabbath he ſhall ſet it in order before the LORD continually, being taken from the children of Iſrael by an everlaſting covenant.

9 And it ſhall be Aarons and his ſons, and they ſhall eat it in the holy place: for it is moſt holy unto him of the offerings of the LORD made by fire by a perpetual ſtatute.

The Blasphemer Stoned without the Camp

10 ¶ And the ſon of an Iſraelitiſh woman, whoſe father was an Egyptian, went out among the children of Iſrael; and this ſon of the Iſraelitiſh woman, and a man of Iſrael ſtrove together in the camp;

11 And the Iſraelitiſh womans ſon blaſphemed the Name of the LORD, and curſed: and they brought him unto Moſes (and his mothers name was Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan)

12 And they put him in ward, that the mind of the LORD might be ſhewed them.

13 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

14 Bring forth him that hath curſed, without the camp, and let all that heard him, lay their hands upon his head, and let all the congregation ſtone him.

15 And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, Whoſoever curſeth his God, ſhall bear his ſin.

16 And he that blaſphemeth the Name of the LORD, he ſhall ſurely be put to death, and all the congregation ſhall certainly ſtone him; as well the ſtranger as he that is born in the land, when he blaſphemeth the Name of the LORD, ſhall be put to death.

17 ¶ And he that killeth any man, ſhall ſurely be put to death.

18 And he that killeth a beaſt, ſhall make it good; beaſt for beaſt.

19 And if a man cauſe a blemiſh in his neighbour; as he hath done, ſo ſhall it be done unto him.

20 Breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth: as he hath cauſed a blemiſh in a man, ſo ſhall it be done to him again.

21 And he that killeth a beaſt, he ſhall reſtore it: and he that killeth a man, he ſhall be put to death.

22 Ye ſhall have one manner of law, as well for the ſtranger, as for one of your own country: for I am the LORD your God.

23 ¶ And Moſes ſpake unto the children of Iſrael, that they ſhould bring forth him that had curſed, out of the camp, and ſtone him with ſtones: and the children of Iſrael did as the LORD commanded Moſes.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] Directions having been given, after the erection of the tabernacle, for the ſeveral ſorts of ſacrifices that were to be offer'd there (particularly upon the great day of atonement) and Aaron and his ſons having been conſecrated, and care taken, that none of their poſterity ſhould miniſter before God, but ſuch only as were without blemiſh; nor any other ſacrifices be offered, but ſuch as were perfect in every particular; and only ſuch feaſts obſerved, as are mentioned in the preceding chapter; the Deity proceeds now to give orders for the daily ſervice of his Sacred Majeſty in the ſanctuary, which had not been regulated, till all the princes had made their offerings, &c. Numb. vii. 1, 2, &c. ch. viii. 1.

Ver. 2. Command the children of Iſrael, that they bring unto thee pure oil-olive.] The daily ſacrifices were to be maintained at the public expence, as were the incenſe and the lamps; and therfore it was proper to ſpeak to the whole body of the people, in whoſe name the prieſts performed all theſe ceremonials, to take care they ſhould be furniſhed with them; ſee Exod. xxx. 13, &c.

Ver. 3. Without the vail of the teſtimony, &c.] This is a ſhort expreſſion, which, in Exod. xxvii. 21. is delivered more fully, without the vail which is before the teſtimony, that is, before the ark.]

——— Shall Aaron order it.] He or his ſons, as it hath been explained, Exod. xxvii. 21.

——— From the evening unto the morning.] The Hebrew word boker properly ſignifies that part of the morning, which is from break of day till ſun riſe; and the other word arvaim, the evening, after ſun-ſet, till it be dark. Therefore very early in the morning, and late at night, the prieſts were to tend the lamps.

——— Before the Lord continually.] For the lamps burned on one ſide of the ſanctuary, as the table ſtood on the other ſide, with the ſhew-bread on it, and both of them before the Lord, that is, before the ark of the teſtimony, where the Divine Majeſty condeſcended to reſide, Exod. xxv. 30. xxvi. 35.

Ver. 5. And thou ſhalt take fine flour, and bake twelve cakes thereof.] The ſubſtance of this bread was flour of wheat, moiſten'd perhaps in oil; but whether with a mixture of leaven or not, is left uncertain by the ſacred hiſtorian. The Jews ſay, this flour was to be ſifted eleven times. But this is no better proved than what St. Jerom was told by the Rabbins, that none but the prieſts were to ſow, reap, and grind the corn, which was uſed for theſe cakes, nor to mould the paſte of them.

Nor have we any greater certainty, whether they were baked on the eve of the ſabbath, or on that very day. A paſſage in 1 Sam. xxi. 6. renders the latter more probable; which is likewiſe the opinion of Joſephus. It is there ſaid, that when the ſhew-bread was taken away, which Abimelech gave to David, they put hot bread in the place of it. Now it was on the ſabbath day, that this hot bread was put there: If the bread then, mentioned in this text, was really hot, and if the expreſſion in the original may not be render'd new bread, it was baked the ſame day; and Joſephus had no more reaſon than ſeveral commentators after him, to ſay it was baked the eve before the ſabbath.

Each loaf or cake conſiſted of two tenth-deals of flour, or two omers; for an omer was the tenth part of an ephah. Some interpreters have thought, that this law alluded to the manna that fell in the wilderneſs, and of which every Iſraelite gathered two omers, on the eve of the ſabbath-day. Some learned men have thought, that a cake, which was made of two tenth-deals of flour, weighed eight pounds; and others raiſe them to thirty. We find very exact calculations upon this ſubject in the Epiſtles of Salmaſius, in the treatiſe of the Hebrew meaſures by Conringius, and in the excellent work of the late biſhop of Peterborough, where that learned author has carefully examined into the weights and meaſures mentioned in the holy ſcriptures.

Neither do we think ourſelves any more obliged to ſcrutinize into the different conjectures of the Jews, about the manner of ranging or placing the ſhew-bread; the common opinion is, that they were placed in two piles or heaps, in each of which there were ſix cakes, ſeparated from one another, by a layer of ruſhes, ſay ſome of the Jews, but without proving it, any more than that other opinion of theirs, that little tubes, or pipes, were ſtuck in them to let out the air.

The cakes were called bread with faces, or ſhew-bread, not becauſe they had four ſides, as Maimonides imagines, or that they had little protuberances, as ſeveral Jewiſh doctors maintain, but becauſe they were expoſed in the preſence of God, in conformity to his ſacred command. And they were ſaid to be placed in his preſence, not only becauſe the table was ſet in the holy place, near the moſt holy, where the ark ſtood; but alſo becauſe it being conſider'd as the table of God, for that ſame reaſon the bread placed upon it ought to be deemed the food prepared for him.

It need not ſeem ſtrange, that this bread, which was not burnt upon the altar, as meat-offerings were, ſhould be reckoned among the offerings made by fire; for as the altar, where thoſe meat-offerings were burnt, is called God's table, Malachi, i. 12. ſo this table, where the ſhew-bread ſtood, was really God's altar; inſomuch that the bread, which was ſet upon it before him, was looked upon as offered unto him; and the frankincenſe ſet upon the bread, as a part of it, being really burnt, it may be called an offering made by fire. Thus the Gentiles alſo, as an excellent perſon of our own hath obſerved, thought tables, rightly dedicated unto their gods, to ſupply the place of altars. So Macrobius declares, lib. 3. Saturnal. cap. 11. it evidently appeared, by Papyrian's law, that aræ vicem præſtare poſſe menſam dicatam, a table conſecrated might ſerve inſtead of an altar. Of which he relates an inſtance, in the temple of Juno Populonia; and then aſſigns a reaſon for it, namely, becauſe altars and tables, eodem die, quo ædes ipſæ, dedicari ſolent, were wont to be dedicated on the ſame day with the temples themſelves. From whence it was, that a table, hoc ritu dedicata, dedicated in this manner, was of the ſame uſe in the temple with an altar. See Dr. Owtram, De ſacrificiis, lib. 1. cap. 8. n. 7.

It was God's pleaſure, that there ſhould be a table in the tabernacle, becauſe this edifice was to be conſider'd as his pavilion. It is ſurpriſing, that Maimonides ſhould not have been able to find out the reaſon, why God ordered the table of ſhew-bread, ſince it was natural, that there ſhould be, in God's tent, a table for him and his miniſters. It is for the ſame reaſon called the table of the Lord, and the bread which was ſet upon it was called his meat. It was alſo one of the moſt glorious privileges of the Iſraelites, to have this ſymbol of the Divine Preſence among them, and nothing could better denote the ſtrict union between God and this nation. The noble ſpeculations of Cudworth upon this ſubject; the parallel he draws between this table, and the Euchariſt, or the Lord's ſupper, are worthy the attention of all Chriſtians. Thoſe have ſome reaſon on their ſide, who aſſert, that the Iſraelites, by providing the table in the ſanctuary with bread, teſtified that they owed to God all that they enjoyed for their own ſupport, and that it was a homage to him; but they have not declared the whole. The deſign of the table was, as we have already intimated, to denote the ſtrict union which ſubſiſted between the Deity and the Jewiſh nation. God order'd, that twelve of thoſe loaves or cakes ſhould be ſet upon the table of the ſanctuary, to adumbrate the twelve tribes of Iſrael. They kept to the ſame number, after the ſchiſm or ſeparation among the tribes; and theſe cakes, which were continually before God, were an invitation which he made to the ſchiſmatical tribes, to adhere to his worſhip, and not to forſake the rites which he himſelf preſcribed to Moſes. It was likewiſe the grand argument, that Abijah, the king of Judah, made uſe of, to bring them back, 2 Chron. xiii. 9, &c.

Finally, our Lord explains in his Goſpel, after what manner we are to underſtand the order given to the prieſts with reference to eating the ſhew bread. The meaning whereof is, that this bread is chiefly deſigned for the ſupport of thoſe miniſters, who were in the execution of their office: They were to eat it in a holy place; not in that which was called the holy place by excellence, but in that part of the tabernacle where they uſually refreſhed themſelves with food, during the courſe of their miniſtration. But this law, which appropriated the ſhew-bread to the ſons of Aaron, was not one of thoſe that admitted of no exception. They were allowed, in caſes of neceſſity, to diſtribute it to thoſe who were not of the tribe of Levi; and it is what David alledged to Abimelech the prieſt, when he gave him ſome of that ſort of bread; neither did the great Meſſiah himſelf condemn that action.

Philo places loaves of ſalt on the ſame table that held the ſhew-bread; but Moſes is ſilent in this particular, and only declares, that veſſels of gold (which ſerved for the ſprinklings) were ſet thereon. Interpreters have taken great pains to aſcertain the uſe and figure of theſe veſſels: But the way they have taken to ſucceed is none of the ſureſt. They have compared them with thoſe which the Heathens uſed in the temples of their gods. Fortunatus Scacchus has been very circumſtantial on this head, but we ſhall not follow his conjectures, contenting ourſelves with obſerving this conformity between the worſhip which God preſcribed to the Iſraelites, and that which the idolaters rendred to their falſe deities in the enſuing ages, namely, that the Heathens devoted tables to their gods alſo, and that they had more or leſs ſublime notions of thoſe tables, according as their divinity was more or leſs groſs. Nothing could be more ſo, than the cheats of the prieſts of Bell, an account of which we have in the additions to the book of Daniel, which are to be met with in the Greek verſion of the writings of that prophet. It is there ſaid, that they ſpent daily, for the uſe of that idol, twelve great meaſures of fine flour, and forty ſheep, and ſix veſſels of wine. The prieſts of that idol pretended, that it conſumed all thoſe offerings, which they themſelves ate. There is a remarkable paſſage in Iſaiah, with reference to the tables belonging to the temples of the Gentiles, and he reproaches the Jews in the following manner; Ye are they which forſake the Lord, that forget my holy mountain, that prepare a table for that troop, and that furniſh the drink-offering unto that number, Iſa. lxv. 11.

Upon which paſſage, St. Jerom gloſſes thus, It was an ancient cuſtom of the idolaters in Egypt, and at Alexandria, on the laſt day of the laſt month of the year, to place tables covered with various proviſions, in the temple of their gods. The deſign of this ceremony was, to ſhew the plenty of the year paſt, and of that which was to follow.

Ver. 10, &c. And the ſon of an Iſraelitiſh woman, whoſe father was an Egyptian, &c.] Among the examples of ſeverity which are related in the Old Teſtament, there are ſome which cannot be explained but by the particular circumſtances in which the Jews were at that time, and by that ſpirit of rigour which attended the Levitical miniſtry. One cannot read, without aſtoniſhment, that a man ſhould be ſtoned for gathering a few ſticks on the ſabbath day, Numb. xv. 32. that Uzzah ſhould be ſmitten with a ſudden and miraculous death, for only endeavouring to ſupport the tottering ark, 2 Sam. vi. 7. and that the Bethſhemites ſhould be decimated for looking inconſiderately into the ark, in conſequence of which, there periſhed above fifty thouſand of them, 1 Sam. vi. 19. But we are ſurpriſed at ſome of theſe examples, only through the ill habit we have acquired of conſidering crimes, not according to the law of God, but according to the temper and diſpoſition of an age accuſtomed to behold the greater exceſſes with indifference. Such is the example of the blaſphemer, whoſe tragical hiſtory we are about to relate.

He was the ſon of one of the Egyptians, of whom Moſes tells us, there went out a greater number with the Iſraelites from the land of Egypt, Exod. xii. 38. This man, who had married a woman of the tribe of Dan, named Shelomith, was, doubtleſs, a proſelyte, but he had taught his ſon the inclinations towards a crime which is ſaid to be common enough in Egypt. If we may give credit to the philoſopher Porphyry, the Egyptians were great blaſphemers, (Porph. Epiſt. ad Anebo præfix. Jambl. de Myſt.) They demanded favours of their gods, threatning to puniſh them if they did not grant what they required. This was a vice of the Heathens in general, but chiefly of their heroes; and their authors furniſh us with numberleſs examples to that effect.

Moſes has not informed us, wherein conſiſted the blaſphemy of this unhappy perſon.

The ſame ſcruple which hinders men from committing a crime, does ſometimes prevent them from relating the circumſtances of thoſe committed by others. The ſacred hiſtorian only ſays, that the ſon of an Iſraelitiſh woman, whoſe father was an Egyptian, and a man of Iſrael, ſtrove together in the camp, and the Iſraelitiſh woman's ſon, blaſphemed the name of the Lord, and curſed.

The Jews, in explaining theſe words, have followed, either that ſuperſtitious reſpect they have for the name of Jehovah, or that humour of theirs to ſupply the ſilence of the ſacred hiſtory, with circumſtances that are not to be found found no where but in their own imaginations, and which, without ſcruple, they incorporate into the inſpired text. The ſuperſtitious reſpect which they ſhew to the name of Jehovah has made them fancy that the crime of the blaſphemer conſiſted ſimply in his pronouncing that name. Some of them even maintain, that there can be no blaſphemy without the pronunciation of it. Their honour and fondneſs of ſupplying the ſilence of the Scripture, has induced them to invent a genealogy for this blaſphemer; and they ſay, that he was the ſon of one of thoſe task-maſters, who were ſet over the works of the Iſraelites in Egypt; that the ſaid task-maſter had ſurprized the virtue of Shelomith, getting into her houſe in the night, and perſonating her husband, whoſe place he uſurped; that he alſo beat that unfortunate husband; that Moſes perceiving ſuch cruelty and injuſtice ſlew the guilty man; and that it was the ſame Egyptian, who is mentioned in the book of Exodus; that the ſon, who is here mentioned, quarrell'd with a man of the tribe of Dan, who would not let him encamp in the diſtrict of his tribe; that they carried their cauſe before Moſes; that the ſon of Shelomith was condemned at his tribunal; and his reſentment on that occaſion cauſed him to blaſpheme. But Moſes himſelf ſays nothing of all this, and only acquaints us, with this uſual conciſeneſs, that ſtriving with an Iſraelite, he blaſphemed the name of the Lord, and curſed. This therefore is all we are allowed to affirm of the matter. At this news, all the people were ſtruck with horror; even Moſes himſelf was at a loſs how to behave; but he found it neceſſary to ſecure the man, whilſt he conſulted God in a caſe that had never yet occurred, and upon which nothing had been then decided. The oracle anſwered; Bring forth him that hath curſed without the camp, and let all that heard him lay their hands upon his head, and let all the congregation ſtone him. And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, whoſoever curſeth his God, ſhall bear his ſin. He that blaſphemeth the name of the Lord, he ſhall ſurely be put to death, and all the congregation ſhall ſtone him. ver. 14. &c.

Theſe words deſerve to be conſidered, Firſt, bring forth him that hath curſed without the camp; as was the cuſtom in relation to accurſed perſons, and ſuch as devoted themſelves to deſtruction. Thus it was that Joſhua took Achan ——and the ſilver, and the garment, and the wedge of gold, and his ſons, and his daughters, and his oxen, and his aſſes, and his ſheep, and his tent, and all that he had; and they brought them to the valley of Achor, Joſh. vii. 24.

Secondly, Let all that heard him lay their hands upon his head.] This was the practice afterwards of ſuch as gave their evidence againſt a blaſphemer. He was treated as an expiatory victim, which was loaded with the crimes for which it was to be ſacrificed; and they ſaid to the unhappy man, Let thy blood be upon this head, it is thou thy ſelf, who, by thy blaſphemy, haſt brought evil upon thee. Maimonides ſays, that this ceremony was not practiced, but only in the caſe of thoſe who were guilty of this very crime: But he is miſtaken, for hiſtory furniſhes us with inſtances to the contrary. Witneſs thoſe perfidious elders, who attempted the chaſtity of Suſanna, and accuſed her of the crime which they themſelves would have committed. It is related, that they brought her out before the people, and in their preſence laid their hand on the innocent perſon, in order to accuſe her as a criminal; Suſan. i. 34. Finally, Moſes commanded all the congregation to ſtone the ſon of Shelomith; and, that for the future, every one ſhould caſt a ſtone at blaſphemers, to teſtify, that he found himſelf wounded with the blow which thoſe impious perſons levelled at the Deity.

This law was rigorouſly executed againſt the ſon of Shelomith, and no leſs ſtrictly obſerved in the following ages by the Jewiſh church. The laws of the Jews ordained that all ſuch as heard the name of God blaſphemed, ſhould rend their cloaths; and that thoſe who were guilty of that crime, ſhould be put to death without mercy. Accordingly, the moſt heinous crime that the ſynagogue thought they could lay to the charge of our Saviour, and the accuſation the moſt proper to ſatiate the rage of the Jews, and their barbarous impatience to feaſt their eyes with blood and death, was, that he blaſphemed, Matth. xxvi. 65. and the ſentence which followed was, that he was guilty of death. A ſentence which they declared to be founded on one of their laws. Upon hearing this pretended blaſphemy, the high-prieſt, as the cuſtom was, rent his cloaths, not thoſe ſacerdotal garments which he wore in the temple, for that would have been a crime in him to do, it being expreſsly forbidden to tear them, but thoſe which he wore in his political or civil capacity.

The crime of the witneſſes againſt the bleſſed Jeſus, and of his judges, conſiſted in their accuſing that Divine Perſon with blaſphemy, not in their declaring that, as a blaſphemer, he ought to die. The law which God enacted on this head, was not one of thoſe political laws reſtrain'd to the Jews alone, but was likewiſe a moral law, and obligatory on all men. The emperor Juſtinian condemned blaſphemers to death: ſome bored their tongues through with a hot iron; and others cauſed them to be drowned. Lewis, the eighth of France, branded them on the forehead, that this mark of infamy, applied to ſo viſible a part of the body, might be a warning to every one, to avoid all correſpondence with ſo infamous a perſon. And altho' this diſcourſe is leſs calculated to declaim againſt the manners of our own, than to illuſtrate the events of paſt ages, yet we cannot but be aſtoniſhed at the diſorders of Chriſtians, the heinouſneſs of blaſphemy, and the criminal indulgence of thoſe who hear it uttered.

Men ruſh into this daring impiety, which formerly armed the revengeful hands of all the Iſraelites; they commit this inſolent and abominable wickedneſs with a brutal rage, which we know not how to deſcribe. We ſee, men ſhall we call them, or wild beaſts? who cannot be moved with the leaſt paſſion, but they muſt ſhew it externally, by the moſt execrable oaths, uttered in contempt of the God of terrible majeſty, who, in a moment, could plunge them into eternal perdition, did not his mercy incline him to allow even ſuch wretches as theſe a gracious opportunity for repentance. One that has formed a deſign of ſhining in the world, and to appear free from the pedantry of the ſchools, but cannot draw from his own genius a ſufficient ſtock for that purpoſe, calls blaſphemy to his aid; and diſcovers his wonderful proficiency in that diabolical accompliſhment. The vileſt impiety is ſubſtituted in the room of ſolid arguments, by theſe polite candidates for everlaſting deſtruction; and ſuch is their wiſdom, that they imagine this infernal elocution muſt needs create irreſiſtable impreſſions to their advantage, in the midſt of all who hear him. 'Tis not a leſs crime (ſays one of the fathers) to blaſpheme againſt the glorious Jeſus, than it was to crucify him on earth. Let every Chriſtian, eſpecially all thoſe whom God has entruſted with the ſword of juſtice, examine how far they are bound by this law, which proceeded from the mouth of God himſelf; Bring forth him that hath curſed without the camp, and let all that heard him lay their hands upon his head, and let all the congregation ſtone him; and let every one who curſeth his God bear his ſin.

CHAP. XXV.

1 The ſabbath of the ſeventh year. 8 The jubilee in the fiftieth year. 14 Of oppreſſion. 18 A bleſſing of obedience. 23 The redemption of land. 29 Of houſes. 35 Compaſſion of the poor. 39 The uſage of bondmen. 47 The redemption of ſervants.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes in mount Sinai, ſaying,

2 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, When ye come into the land which I give you, then ſhall the land keep a ſabbath unto the LORD.

3 Six years thou ſhalt ſow thy field, and ſix years thou ſhalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruit thereof.

4 But in the ſeventh year ſhall be a ſabbath of reſt unto the land, a ſabbath for the LORD: thou ſhalt neither ſow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard.

5 That which groweth of its own accord of thy harveſt, thou ſhalt not reap, neither gather the grapes of thy vine undreſſed: for it is a year of reſt unto the land.

6 And the ſabbath of the land ſhall be meat for you; for thee, and for thy ſervant, and for thy maid, and for thy hired ſervant, and for thy ſtranger that ſojourneth with thee,

7 And for thy cattle, and for the beaſts that are in thy land, ſhall all the increaſe thereof be meat.

8 ¶ And thou ſhalt number ſeven ſabbaths of years unto thee, ſeven times ſeven years, and the ſpace of the ſeven ſabbaths of years ſhall be unto thee forty and nine years.

9 Then ſhalt thou cauſe the trumpet of the jubilee to ſound, on the tenth day of the ſeventh month; in the day of atonement ſhall ye make the trumpet ſound throughout all your land.

10 And ye ſhall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof: it ſhall be a jubilee unto you, and ye ſhall return every man unto his poſſeſſion, and ye ſhall return every man unto his family.

11 A jubilee ſhall that fiftieth year be unto you: ye ſhall not ſow, neither reap that which groweth of it ſelf in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undreſſed.

12 For it is the jubilee, it ſhall be holy unto you: ye ſhall eat the increaſe thereof out of the field.

13 In the year of this jubilee ye ſhall return every man unto his poſſeſſion.

14 And if thou ſell ought unto thy neighbour, or buyeſt ought of thy neighbours hand; ye ſhall not oppreſs one another.

15 According to the number of years after the jubilee, thou ſhalt buy of thy neighbour, and according unto the number of years of the fruits he ſhall ſell unto thee:

16 According to the multitude of years thou ſhalt increaſe the price thereof, and according to the fewneſs of years thou ſhalt diminiſh the price of it: for according to the number of the years of the fruits doth he ſell unto thee.

17 Ye ſhall not therefore oppreſs one another; but thou ſhalt fear thy God: For I am the LORD your God.

18 ¶ Wherefore ye ſhall do my ſtatutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; and ye ſhall dwell in the land in ſafety.

19 And the land ſhall yield her fruit, and ye ſhall eat your fill, and dwell therein in ſafety.

20 And if ye ſhall ſay, What ſhall we eat the ſeventh year? behold, we ſhall not ſow, nor gather in our increaſe:

21 Then I will command my bleſſing upon you in the ſixth year, and it ſhall bring forth fruit for three years.

22 And ye ſhall ſow the eighth year, and eat yet of old fruit, until the ninth year; until her fruits come in, ye ſhall eat of the old ſtore.

23 ¶ The land ſhall not be ſold for ever: for the land is mine, for ye are ſtrangers and ſojourners with me.

24 And in all the land of your poſſeſſion, ye ſhall grant a redemption for the land.

25 ¶ If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath ſold away ſome of his poſſeſſion, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then ſhall he redeem that which his brother ſold,

26 And if the man have none to redeem it, and himſelf be able to redeem it:

27 Then let him count the years of the ſale thereof, and reſtore the overplus unto the man to whom he ſold it; that he may return unto his poſſeſſion.

28 But if he be not able to reſtore it to him, then that which is ſold, ſhall remain in the hand of him that hath bought it, until the year of jubilee: and in the jubilee it ſhall go out, and he ſhall return unto his poſſeſſion.

29 And if a man ſell a dwelling houſe in a walled city, then he may redeem it, within a whole year after it is ſold: within a full year may he redeem it.

30 And if it be not redeemed within the ſpace of a full year; then the houſe that is in the walled city, ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever to him that bought it, throughout his generations: it ſhall not go out in the jubilee.

31 But the houſes of the villages which have no walls round about them, ſhall be counted as the fields of the country: they may be redeemed, and they ſhall go out in the jubilee.

32 Notwithſtanding, the cities of the Levites, and the houſes of the cities of their poſſeſſion, may the Levites redeem at any time.

33 And if a man purchaſe of the Levites, then the houſe that was ſold, and the city of his poſſeſſion ſhall go out in the year of jubilee: for the houſes of the cities of the Levites are their poſſeſſion among the children of Iſrael.

34 But the field of the ſuburbs of their cities may not be ſold, for it is their perpetual poſſeſſion.

35 ¶ And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee; then thou ſhalt relieve him: yea, though he be a ſtranger, or a ſojourner; that he may live with thee.

36 Take thou no uſury of him, or increaſe: but fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee.

37 Thou ſhalt not give him thy money upon uſury, nor lend him thy victuals for increaſe.

38 I am the LORD your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, to give you the land of Canaan, and to be your God.

39 ¶ And if thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be ſold unto thee; thou ſhalt not compel him to ſerve as a bond-ſervant:

40 But as an hired ſervant, and as a ſojourner, he ſhall be with thee, and ſhall ſerve thee unto the year of jubilee.

41 And then ſhall he depart from thee, both he and his children with him, and ſhall return unto his own family, and unto the poſſeſſion of his fathers ſhall he return.

42 For they are my ſervants, which I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: they ſhall not be ſold as bond-men.

43 Thou ſhalt not rule over him with rigour, but ſhalt fear thy God.

44 Both thy bond-men, and thy bond-maids, which thou ſhalt have, ſhall be of the heathen that are round about you; of them ſhall ye buy bond-men and bond-maids.

45 Moreover, of the children of the ſtrangers that do ſojourn among you, of them ſhall ye buy, and of their families that are with you, which they begat in your land: and they ſhall be your poſſeſſion.

46 And ye ſhall take them as an inheritance for your children after you, to inherit them for a poſſeſſion, they ſhall be your bond-men for ever: but over your brethren the children of Iſrael, ye ſhall not rule one over another with rigour.

47 ¶ And if a ſojourner or ſtranger wax rich by thee, and thy brother that dwelleth by him wax poor, and ſell himſelf unto the ſtranger or ſojourner by thee, or to the ſtock of the ſtrangers family:

48 After that he is ſold, he may be redeemed again; one of his brethren may redeem him:

49 Either his uncle, or his uncles ſon may redeem him, or any that is nigh of kin unto him, of his family, may redeem him; or if he be able, he may redeem himſelf.

50 And he ſhall reckon with him that bought him, from the year that he was ſold to him, unto the year of jubilee: and the price of his ſale ſhall be according unto the number of years, according to the time of an hired ſervant ſhall it be with him.

51 If there be yet many years behind; according unto them he ſhall give again the price of his redemption, out of the money that he was bought for.

52 And if there remain but few years unto the year of jubilee, then he ſhall count with him, and according unto his years ſhall he give him again the price of his redemption.

53 And as a yearly hired ſervant ſhall he be with him: and the other ſhall not rule with rigour over him in thy ſight.

54 And if he be not redeemed in theſe years, then he ſhall go out in the year of jubilee, both he and his children with him.

55 For unto me the children of Iſrael are ſervants, they are my ſervants whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes in mount Sinai, ſaying.] That is, in the wilderneſs of Sinai, Numb. i. 1. For they ſtayed almoſt a whole year, not far from this mountain; from whence they did not remove till the 20th day of the ſecond month of the ſecond year, after their coming out of Egypt. See Numb. x. 11, 12. And thus the Hebrew particle beth is often uſed for by, or near: as in Gen. xxvii. 13. Joſh. v. 13. And we find this expreſſion, again, in the end of the next chapter, and in the concluſion of this book; which ſhews, that all here related was delivered to Moſes in the firſt month of the ſecond year after their coming out of Egypt, immediately after the tabernacle was ſet up, Exod. xl. 17.

Ver. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them.] For what follows was of univerſal concernment.

——When ye come into the land which I give you.] This law, tho' deliver'd before they left mount Sinai, could not take place till they came into Canaan.

——Then ſhall the land keep a ſabbath.] Reſt from being tilled, or ſown, &c. See Exod. xxiii. 11.

The ſabbatic, or ſeventh year, is to be conſidered as a ſolemn period. It was appointed by God, and deſigned for reſt; and as it was analogous to, or rather conſequential of the ſabbath, or ſeventh day, it may, upon that account, be alſo enumerated among their ſolemn feſtivals.

The Moſaic law diſtinguiſhes four ſorts of years: 1. The civil, according to which, all political affairs were regulated: This conſiſted of twelve ſolar, and afterwards of lunar months, beginning at the Month Tizri, or September. 2. The ſacred year, which began at the month Niſan, or March, which was the ſeventh of the civil year, and regulated the order of all their religious ceremonies; ſo that the paſſover, which happened in the middle of that month, was, as it were, the ſource of all the other feſtivals. 3. The ſabbatic, or ſeventh year. And, 4. The jubilee, or 50th year, which was ſolemnized at the cloſe of ſeven weeks of years.

It is evident, by the calculation which Moſes gives us of the days of the flood, Gen. vii. and viii. and elſewhere, that the year conſiſted of 365 days, and, conſequently, of 12 ſolar months, the laſt of which conſiſted of 35 days; and it is more than probable, that as he was educated among the Egyptians, he had learned that manner of computation from them; becauſe they are generally allowed to be the firſt inventors of it. Beſide, it muſt have been the moſt known and eaſy method to the Iſraelites, who had been accuſtomed to it during their long continuance in that country. Scaliger, and others after him, have indeed ſuppoſed, that they had an intercalary month once in ſixſcore years; but it is plain that the ſcripture intimates nothing like ſuch an intercalation, or year of 13 months; tho' it is not eaſy to gueſs how they diſpoſed of the ſix additional hours of the Egyptians to the 365 days, without ſome ſuch ſuppoſition. Moſes, however, by the expreſs command of God, Exod. xii. 2. did afterwards compute the year by moons; for that is the meaning of the word chodeſh, from its radical word, which ſignifies to renew, tho' our Engliſh verſion renders it month; and theſe correſponded partly with each of our months, and partly with the next.

The ſame authors have imagined, that the Iſraelites had no names for their months before the captivity, becauſe they are often diſtinguiſhed only by their numbers; as firſt, ſecond, &c. yet it is certain, we find ſome of them called by particular names, long before. Thus we have ſeen, that the firſt month of the ſacred year was originally called Abib; we find, likewiſe, that of Zif, 1 Kings vi. 1. Ethanim, ibid. viii. 2. and Bull, ibid. vi. 38. from which, it is not improbable that the others might likewiſe have their particular names, tho' they are not recorded, and are oftener mentioned by their numbers. As for the etymology of thoſe names, as well as of thoſe which they uſed after the captivity, about which, the learned have taken more pains than the ſubject merits; we think them altogether uncertain, and ſhall therefore content our ſelves with ſubjoining a liſt of the names themſelves, in the following order:

1 Tizri	30	Anſwering to our	September
2 Marcheſhvan	29		October
3 Chaſlew	30		November
4 Thebet	29		December
5 Sebat	30		January
6 Adar	29		February
7 Niſan	30		March
8 Yiar	29		April
9 Sivan	30		May
10 Thammuz	29		June
11 Abib	30		July
12 Elul	29		Auguſt

To this liſt they added, in proceſs of time, the intercalary month, which they called Veadar, that is, and, or, the ſecond, Adar, as that was the laſt of the ſacred year.

The ſabbatic year was to be ſolemnized every ſeventh year, and the obſervation of it conſiſted chiefly in the five following articles:

1. A total ceſſation from all manner of agriculture, ver. 4.

2. In leaving all the product of their ground to the poor, the orphan, and the ſtranger, ver. 6.

3. In the releaſe of all Hebrew ſlaves, unleſs they voluntarily renounced their proffered liberty, and choſe to continue in the ſervice of their old maſters; in which caſe, they were to be brought before the judges, and to have their ears bored, in their preſence, as a teſtimonial that they voluntarily ſubmitted to a perpetual ſervitude, or, at leaſt, till the year of jubilee, Exod. xxi. 2, &c.

4. In the remiſſion of all debts from one Iſraelite to another; but this did not extend to ſtrangers, who were excluded that benefit, Deut. xv. 1, &c.

5. It was to begin and end on the month Tizri, or September, that ſo there might be ſufficient time for gathering all the fruits of that year, and for ſowing the land againſt the next, that it might not lie fallow two years together.

Moſes has called this year by ſeveral names, as Shanah haſh-bighith, the ſeventh year; ſabbath haaretz, the ſabbath, or reſt of the earth; Shemitah ladonai, the releaſe of the Lord; and the like. The time of year in which it was to begin, is no where fixed by him, but is eaſily gathered from that of the jubilee, which was to begin on the tenth of the ſeventh month, Lev. xv. 9. and from the reaſon of the inſtitution, aſſigned under that article, as well as from the generality of Jewiſh authors. Neither is it agreed how ſoon this ſabbatic year was obſerved, after their entrance into Canaan; concerning which, it would be endleſs to mention all the different conjectures of the learned, both Jews and Chriſtians. All, therefore, that we dare advance on the ſubject, is, that if any opinion appears to us more probable than another, it is that of the great archbiſhop Uſher, who fixes it on the ſeventh year after the manna ceaſed, at which time, they began to till and ſow the ground. Cunæus ſpeaks ſtill more particularly to the ſame effect; "There is no neceſſity, ſays he, "for beginning the epocha of the ſeven years, at the di- "viſion of the land of Canaan, but rather at the death "of Moſes, which was the forty-firſt year after the de- "parture of the Iſraelites from Egypt," and then the firſt ſabbatic year will be on the ſeventh after the paſſage of Jordan. So that after having been taken up ſix years in the conqueſt and diviſion of the land, the ſeventh proved in all reſpects, a year of reſt, becauſe they then reſted from their conqueſts, and peaceably enjoyed the fruits of them; and of the conquered land.

There is likewiſe no ſmall diſpute, whether the releaſe of debts and of ſlaves, was to take place at the beginning or end of the ſabbatic year. The original orders it to be performed at, or from, the end of ſeven years, from whence Maimonides would infer, that it was not to take place till the ſeventh year was expired; but tho' there is ſome difference between ſaying at the end of ſeven years, and at the end of the ſeventh year, yet it is generally believed to have taken place ta the beginning of it, becauſe the week of years was then compleat.

Some other laws we find relating to this year; ſuch as that, thoſe ſervants who were releaſed in it, ſhould not go away empty, but that a compenſation ſhould be made to them for their ſervice. Deut. xv. 23. &c. That they ſhould not withdraw any needful aſſiſtance from their poor brethren, by reaſon of the nearneſs of the ſeventh year, with ſome others, relating to the opening of their fields, orchards and vineyards to all comers.

It may perhaps be asked what they lived upon this year, if they were obliged to relinquiſh the product of all their lands to the poor? But it muſt be remembred, that they were allowed to take as much out of it as was ſufficient for themſelves, and their families, ver. 6. However, as ſome of them ſcrupled to touch any of theſe, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that they made what proviſion they could againſt that time, of ſuch things as could be eaſily preſerved, ſuch as corn, wine, oil, olives, raiſins, figs, dates, pulſe, and the like; and as to herbs, roots, fruits, and all ſpontaneous productions, they might gather them in their own or any other ground. Tho', even this, ſome of their rigid ſcribes pronounce unlawful, not ſo much becauſe the law expreſly prohibits it, as from an apprehenſion of tranſgreſſing by too great a liberty. But the misfortune is, that, before the Babyloniſh captivity, they were ſo far from being ſuch ſcrupulous obſervers of thoſe laws, that their prophets were continually reproaching them with the univerſal violation of them, and in particular, for defrauding and oppreſſing the poor in this particular; but after they had been chaſtiſed for their incorrigible diſobedience, they gave into the contrary extreme, and this produced that vaſt number of gloſſes and ordinances, which we find in their Talmud and Rabbinical writings, and which grew up to ſuch a height of ſuperſtition, that it almoſt obliterated the main ends and deſigns of the law. Tho' it muſt alſo be acknowledged, that they were not alike ſtrict, and that ſome of their principal doctors and lawyers took as much pains to find out pretences for eluding the law, as others employed for the ſcrupulous obſervation of it. We ſhall give but one inſtance, which relates to the expreſs command of remitting all debts on this and the Jubilee year, where, beſides their excepting ſeveral articles, the famous Hillel, a man in the higheſt repute amongſt them, next to the inſpired writers, obſerving that the rich forbore to lend to the poor, by reaſon of the approaching year of releaſe, made an ordinance, that, upon a perſons offering a caveat in the judges court to this effect: This I deliver to you, the judges of this place, to the end, that whatever money I lend, I may challenge it whenever I pleaſe, He ſhould ſhould be free from this law of remiſſion. This plainly ſhews, that the command was deſigned to extend to all debts; otherwiſe, there would have been no occaſion for their refuſing their aſſiſtance to the poor upon that account, much leſs for God's forbidding it ſo expreſly as he did, Deut. xv. 9.

The reaſons and excellence of theſe laws, as well as of thoſe that relate to the Jubilee, are obvious to every one, being extremely proper to train up a faithleſs and untractable nation in a conſtant dependance upon the divine providence, and a dutiful ſubjection to it, and to inſpire them with ſentiments of mercy and beneficence towards their poor brethren, ſervants, ſlaves, and ſtrangers, by reminding them of their own ſlavery in Egypt, which is aſſigned as one of the reaſons of this inſtitution; to which we may add another, namely, the great advantage the land received by being left fallow, every ſeventh year. The generality of the Jews, however, and a great number of Chriſtians both ancient and modern, have looked upon the main deſign of theſe inſtitutions to be typical of the Millenium, or thouſand years reſt, for as the Pentateuch conſecrates the ſeventh day, the ſeventh year, and the ſeven times ſeventh year, to reſt, they conclude, that the world will laſt ſix thouſand years in its preſent ſtate; or, as R. Elias in the Talmud expreſſes it, two thouſand years without the law, two thouſand under the law, and two thouſand under the Meſſiah; after which comes the grand ſabbath of one thouſand years: The diſcuſſion of which point will have its place in the ſequel of this work. We ſhall therefore only obſerve at preſent, from a modeſt hint of the learned Mr. Mead, that as long as we perſiſt in denying the ſecond appearance of Chriſt, upon earth, in as glorious a manner as his firſt was obſcure, we ſhall hardly be able to convince the Jews, that he is the true promiſed Meſſiah; becauſe we can aſſign no tolerable reaſon why the prophecies relating to his humiliation and ſufferings, ſhould be underſtood in a literal, and thoſe of his exaltation and glorious reign, in a ſpiritual ſenſe. Whereas, were the doctrine of the Millenium, which is far from being anti-evangelical, in any but a Jewiſh and carnal ſenſe, generally received, it would effectually anſwer one of their ſtrongeſt objections, without caſting the leaſt reflection on the Chriſtian religion, whilſt the Jews were left at their liberty to take it in as groſs, and we in as ſpiritual and refined a ſenſe, as ſhould be thought fit.

With reſpect to the expectation entertained by the Jews, of a glorious Meſſiah, it is ſo ſtrongly riveted in them, that they have even gone ſo far as to acknowledge two Meſſiahs; namely, one ſuffering and obſcure, deſpiſed and perſecuted, who, they believe, made his appearance at the time predicted by the prophets; and the other a glorious Meſſiah, of the ſeed of David, whoſe kingdom is to continue to the end of the world, and is ſtill expected by them; tho' they own themſelves altogether in the dark, concerning the time of his coming. But this notion of a twofold Meſſiah is plainly oppoſite to that prophecy of Iſaiah, which appropriates both thoſe characters to one and the ſame perſon, chap. liii. However, as to this firſt character, it is evident, that the ancient Jews were not fond of publiſhing it, whatever ſentiments they might entertain concerning it. This is plain from the Septuagint's paraphraſe of that verſe of the Pſalmiſt, Pſalm xl. 6. in which the Meſſiah is repreſented as voluntarily taking upon him the form of a ſervant, by an expreſſion alluding to the law of boring thoſe ſervants ears that refuſed to be releaſed. The words in the original are, Oznaim carita li, mine ears haſt thou bored: Theſe interpreters fearing, in all probability, leſt ſuch a ſervile mark ſhould be thought too derogatory to his character, have rendered it, a body haſt thou prepared me, or adapted for me, which, in the main, comes near to the ſame purpoſe, and only ſoftens the idea very much by the expreſſion; the firſt implying, by the boring of the ears, that Chriſt freely ſubmitted himſelf to become God's perpetual ſervant, and the other, that God had given him a body fit for the ſervice he had voluntarily undertaken at his coming into the world. This is therefore the reaſon of the difference between the words in the original, and in the quotation from it, by the apoſtle to the Hebrews, Heb. x. 5. and is a further confirmation that the writers of the New Teſtament uſed the Septuagint verſion.

Ver. 9. Then ſhalt thou cauſe the trumpet of the Jubilee to ſound, on the tenth day of the ſeventh month, &c.] This ſolemnity is the laſt, and moſt conſiderable, that God enjoyned the Iſraelites to obſerve. It was to be celebrated every fiftieth year, ver. 8. and had this advantage over that of the ſeventh, that it releaſed all ſlaves who had, till then, refuſed their liberty: it likewiſe annihilated all debts, and reinſtated every man in the poſſeſſion of his lands, houſe, wife, children, and poſſeſſions, however alienated, and replaced every Hebrew ſervant or ſlave, in his own tribe and family, liberty and property, how, and upon what account ſoever he had been deprived of them, during thoſe fifty years: for this reaſon it is that we think, after many commentators, that it was called Jubilee or Yobel, becauſe it reſtored every thing to its priſtine ſtate.

Authors, however, have entertained various opinions with reſpect to the etymology of this word, ſome thinking it is ſo called, from the Hebrew, Yobel, as we have already intimated, and which ſignifies a trumpet made of rams horns, from the Arabick, Johelah, a ram; becauſe the Jubilee was proclaimed by the ſound of that inſtrument. Others, that it is a fictitious word, in imitation of the ſound of that trumpet; others, again, think that it received its derivation from Jubal, the firſt inventor of muſical inſtruments; but we prefer that which deduces it from the antiquated root yabal, in hiphil, which ſignifies to recal, reſtore, bring back, &c. and which was the effect of the Jubilee. The reader may ſee that word occur in many paſſages of ſcripture, and particularly in the Pſalms, where, among others, he may obſerve this expreſſion, Yobilu ſai lammorah, bring preſents to him that is to be feared, Pſalm lxxvi. ver. 11.

It muſt be obſerved, that the privileges derived from the Jubilee, extended no farther than the original Iſraelites, or to thoſe who had been incorporated into their religion and community, by circumciſion; theſe, indeed, might claim the benefit of it, tho' they had been ſold for ſlaves for any crimes, even by the ſentence of the grand Sanhedrim, ver. 40. but as for the Gentiles, they were wholly excluded from it, ver. 46.

Some think, that it was cuſtomary for the Iſraelites to make their computation of time by Jubilees, as the Greeks did by Olympiads, the Romans by Luſtra, and the Chriſtians by Indictions: and in all probability, they did ſo, becauſe they were always to have regard to that year in all bargains of lands, houſes, and the like, which generally ſold for more or leſs, according to their nearneſs to, or diſtance from it, ver. 27, &c. The caſe was ſomewhat different, with reſpect to the ſale of houſes that were within walled towns, tho' not of ſuch as were in the country, for the former might be redeemed at any time, within the ſpace of twelve months, by refunding the whole ſum of the purchaſe; but if they were not redeemed within that period, they were not to revert to their original proprietor at the year of the Jubilee, ver. 29, 30.

The Jewiſh lawyers add another exception, but from what authority we cannot find, that thoſe who ſold their houſes, lands, &c. in order to traffic, and derive gain from the purchaſe money, or indeed upon any other account than meerly to ſupply the neceſſities of life, were excluded the benefit of the Jubilee.

As for the poſſeſſions of the prieſts and Levites, they had certain privileges, and immunities, which ſhall be ſpoken of in a more proper place.

During the whole twelve months, all kind of agriculture was expreſly prohibited; the poor had the benefit of the harveſt and vintage, and of all the product of that year, and all other things of that nature went on after the ſame manner as they did in the ſabbatic year. The beginning of it was, by God's own appointment, fixed to the ſeventh month Tiſri, which is about the time of the Autumnal equinox: but in what year after they entred into the land of Canaan they celebrated the firſt Jubilee, and whether from the beginning of every forty-ninth or fiftieth year, is not eaſy to determine. As to the former, the Jews begin to compute the firſt of the fifty years, from the fourteenth after Joſhua's paſſing the Jordan. Their calculation ran thus, according to the learned Maimonides. "From their entrance into Canaan, to "their being carried out of it, are ſeventeen Jubilees, "and the year in which they went into captivity, and the " temple was deſtroyed, was the ſeventh or ſabbatic year, " and the thirty-ſixth of the eighteenth Jubilee, which " they prove thus: The firſt temple ſtood 110 years, " after which, there was an end of that epocha; the " land then lay waſte ſeventy years, and then the ſecond " temple was built, which ſtood likewiſe 120 years. In " the ſeventh year after its reſtoration, Ezra went up to " Jeruſalem; and, from this time, began the ſecond epo- " cha. On the thirteenth, after the rebuilding of the tem- " ple, they celebrated the ſecond ſabbatic year, and ſeven " weeks of years, or forty-nine years, being elapſed, they " conſecrated the fiftieth; for tho' they did not celebrate " the Jubilee after their return from the captivity, they " yet continued to compute the years of it, in order to cele- " brate the ſabbatic years."

There is ſome difficulty in apprehending what that author means, by keeping up the computation of the Jubilee, in order to obſerve the ſabbatic years, for the latter uſed to regulate the former, while it continued, but after it ceaſed, the ſabbatic years could eaſily be kept in their courſe, without it; and ſo they did accordingly, for Joſephus tells us, that Alexander the Great remitted to the Jews, the ſeventh years tribute upon that very account. It will be neceſſary to obſerve, that Maimonides followed the computation of Joſephus, Philo, and all the Jews in general, who not only placed the firſt ſabbatic year, and conſequently the Jubilee, ſeven years later than Archbiſhop Uſher, and Cunæus, namely, from the fourteenth year after their entrance into Canaan, but allow fifty compleat years to every Jubilee; whereas that learned primate, and, with him, a great number of judicious Chriſtians think, that it was celebrated every forty-ninth year, as we ſhall ſee preſently. However, as that great prelate has rectified the Jewiſh chronology, in ſome other reſpects, ſo he reckons but the ſame number of Jubilees that are mentioned by Maimonides, before the deſtruction of the temple; as the reader may ſee in the table at the end of his annals under the word Jubilee.

The firſt of them he fixes on the 3318th year of the Julian period, which is the 2609th of the world, or 1396 years before the nativity of our bleſſed Saviour, and the ſeventeenth, or laſt, before the captivity, in 4102 of the Julian period, 3393 of the world, and 612 before Chriſt. As for the remainder, which he has carried down to the thirtieth, or the year of the world 4030, they are only added, in order to make a compleat calculation of them to the thirtieth year of Chriſt, or to the beginning of the Goſpel. For it is plain, as Maimonides obſerves in the place above quoted, that the Jews obſerved no Jubilee after their return from the Babyloniſh captivity, either with reſpect to the ceſſation of agriculture, the reſtitution of lands, manumiſſion of ſlaves, or any of thoſe ends for which it had been inſtituted. Neither indeed was it practicable; for the ſeventy years captivity having quite obliterated their pretenſions to the land of their forefathers, and the remembrance of its particular ſituation, every one at their return ſettled himſelf as well as he could, in the confuſion that then reigned; after which, their affairs aſſumed a very different appearance in Judæa, whilſt a very conſiderable number of their brethren choſe to continue in the place of their captivity.

The next controverted point is, whether it was celebrated on the forty-ninth or on the fiftieth year? We have already mentioned the principal authors who declare for the former; but thoſe who contend for the latter (without reckoning Philo, Joſephus, the Targums, and all the Jews in general, Karaites as well as Talmudiſts) are ſtill more conſiderable. Among theſe we may reckon ſome of the fathers, and a great number of moderns. The truth is, that either hypotheſis may be defended from the different expreſſions which are uſed by Moſes in the inſtitution of it; and, on the other hand, there are certain difficulties in each of them which cannot be eaſily ſolved. In one place he expreſly commands them to number ſeven ſabbaths of years, or forty and nine years, and on this laſt to proclaim the Jubilee by the ſound of the trumpet, ver. 8, 9. and in the two following verſes he declares, that the fiftieth year ſhall be that of the Jubilee. The grand objection againſt the firſt of theſe is, that if Moſes had meant, that the forty-ninth ſhould be the Jubilee year, there would have been no neceſſity for his prohibiting all kinds of agriculture, and the like, on that year; ſince that was forbidden of courſe, by its being likewiſe the ſabbatic year; for ſeven times ſeven make forty-nine. On the other hand it is objected, that if the fiftieth year was to be the Jubilee, it will follow, that the land muſt have had two ſabbaths, or lain fallow two years; which is thought an unreaſonable ſuppoſition, ſince, without a miracle, it muſt in all probability have cauſed a dearth in the land. This Cunæus inſiſts very much upon, in favour of the forty-ninth year, tho' he paſſes over the great difficulty above-mentioned as of no weight; but we think this objection of the two concurring ſabbaths may be more eaſily anſwered. For, in the firſt place, thoſe who are for the fiftieth year rightly enough obſerve, that there is no neceſſity for ſuppoſing, that the land reſted two years, ſince the intention of the legiſlator ſeems ſufficiently anſwered by the repoſe of one, and that upon the account of its being ſabbatical; and therefore, when Moſes declares, that the fiftieth year ſhall be a year of reſt, he uſes only that round number to expreſs the uneven one of forty-nine. There is indeed hardly any other way of reconciling the ſeeming contrariety of the Moſaic expreſſions; and we may add, that as the ſolemnity began on the firſt month of the civil, which was the ſeventh of the ſacred year, it might be called indifferently the forty-ninth or fiftieth year, without any contradiction or difficulty. What convinces us further, that this is more than a bare conjecture, is, that Moſes has recourſe to the ſame calculation for the feaſt of Pentecoſt. The analogy which ſeven weeks of days bear to ſeven weeks of years, is obvious to every eye; now as it is plain, that the Pentecoſt did not commence on the forty-ninth, but on the fiftieth day; ſo we ſee no reaſon why the ſame may not be allowed with reſpect to the Jubilee.

However, as to thoſe who will not eaſily renounce the notion of the land reſting two years in this caſe, we beg leave to obſerve, ſecondly, that even ſuch a ſuppoſition may be well enough granted, without the pretended inconveniency of cauſing a dearth in the land. For, to ſay nothing of the extraordinary bleſſing which was promiſed to them upon ſuch occaſions, as long as they religiouſly obſerved theſe ordinances, it is certain that the natural fertility of the land, and the proviſion which every one might lay up, during the preceding years, might eaſily prevent any ſuch danger. We meet with a more ſignal inſtance of it in the time of Hezekiah, when the prophet Iſaiah ſent him word, that he ſhould be delivered from the threatning power of the king of Aſſyria; and as a token of it, commands the people to ſubſiſt themſelves that year, upon ſuch productions of the earth as were ſpontaneous; and, on the next, upon ſuch as ſprung from the ſame, and on the third year to ſow and plant, 2 Kings xix. 29. Here, indeed, the Jews pretend, that the middle year was a ſabbatic one, but whether it was ſo, or otherwiſe, it is plain that there were to be, at leaſt, three years without any harveſt; for, on the firſt year, it is ſaid, they ſhould eat, not the fruit of the foregoing harveſt, but that which grew of it ſelf, and that which was ſown on the third, could not be gathered till the fourth. And yet we don't find there was any dearth upon that account. Upon the whole, therefore, we are more inclined to the latter opinion of the Jubilee being kept every fiftieth year.

This year was to be celebrated with the greateſt demonſtrations of joy, becauſe it was intended to remind them of their Egyptian ſervitude, and to prevent their impoſing the like on their brethren. But whatever joy the maſters and landholders might outwardly expreſs, we need not doubt but that of the ſlaves and poor was ſincere, at the ſight of their approaching reſtoration. 'Tis true, this was not to take place till the tenth day of the month, otherwiſe called the day of expiation, which was therefore kept as a ſolemn faſt: But, during the nine preceding days, the ſlaves were wholly exempted from performing any work for their maſters, and paſſed that time in eating, drinking, and other diverſions. They likewiſe wore garlands about their heads, not unlike the Roman Saturnalia; and as ſoon as the tenth day was come, the Sanhedrim cauſed the trumpet to ſound all over the land, upon which they were reſtored to their liberty, at that very inſtant, and the reſt to their poſſeſſions.

The manifeſt deſign of this ordinance was, to prevent the immoderate oppreſſion of the poor, as well as their being rendered liable to perpetual ſlavery. By theſe means, alſo, alſo, their great law-giver prevented the rich from accumulating lands upon lands, and preſerved, as much as poſſible, the freedom and order of Iſraelitiſh families, and a kind of equality in their poſſeſſions, than which, nothing could more effectually inſpire them with a particular fondneſs for their country and patrimony, whilſt they knew that this laſt could never be alienated from their poſterity, above the ſpace of half a century, at the moſt. And that it wrought ſuch an effect upon them, is plain, among many others, from the inſtance of Naboth, who choſe to incur the king of Iſrael's diſpleaſure, rather than part with a ſmall portion of his inheritance to him; for which tenaciouſneſs, he fell a ſacrifice to Jezebel's reſentment, and loſt both that and his life.

CHAP. XXVI.

1 Of idolatry. 2 Religiouſneſs. 3 A bleſſing to them that keep the commandments. 14 A curſe to thoſe that break them. 40 God promiſeth to remember them that repent.

YE ſhall make you no idols, nor graven image, neither rear you up a ſtanding image, neither ſhall ye ſet up any image of ſtone in your land, to bow down unto it: for I am the LORD your God.

2 Ye ſhall keep my ſabbaths, and reverence my ſanctuary: I am the LORD.

3 ¶ If ye walk in my ſtatutes, and keep my commandments, and do them;

4 Then I will give you rain in due ſeaſon, and the land ſhall yield her increaſe, and the trees of the field ſhall yield their fruit.

5 And your threſhing ſhall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage ſhall reach unto the ſowing-time: and ye ſhall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land ſafely.

6 And I will give peace in the land, and ye ſhall lie down, and none ſhall make you afraid: and I will rid evil beaſts out of the land, neither ſhall the ſword go through your land.

7 And ye ſhall chaſe your enemies, and they ſhall fall before you by the ſword.

8 And five of you ſhall chaſe an hundred, and an hundred of you ſhall put ten thouſand to flight: and your enemies ſhall fall before you by the ſword.

9 For I will have reſpect unto you, and make you fruitful, and multiply you, and eſtabliſh my covenant with you.

10 And ye ſhall eat old ſtore, and bring forth the old becauſe of the new.

11 And I will ſet my tabernacle amongſt you: and my ſoul ſhall not abhor you.

12 And I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye ſhall be my people.

13 I am the LORD your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, that ye ſhould not be their bondmen, and I have broken the bands of your yoke, and made you go upright.

14 ¶ But if ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do all theſe commandments;

15 And if ye ſhall deſpiſe my ſtatutes, or if your ſoul abhor my judgments, ſo that ye will not do all my commandments, but that ye break my covenant:

16 I alſo will do this unto you, I will even appoint over you terror, conſumption, and the burning ague; that ſhall conſume the eyes, and cauſe ſorrow of heart: and ye ſhall ſow your ſeed in vain, for your enemies ſhall eat it.

17 And I will ſet my face againſt you, and ye ſhall be ſlain before your enemies: they that hate you ſhall reign over you, and ye ſhall flee when none purſueth you.

18 And if ye will not yet for all this hearken unto me, then I will puniſh you ſeven times more for your ſins.

19 And I will break the pride of your power; and I will make your heaven as iron, and your earth as braſs:

20 And your ſtrength ſhall be ſpent in vain: for your land ſhall not yield her increaſe, neither ſhall the trees of the land yield their fruits.

21 ¶ And if ye walk contrary unto me, and will not hearken unto me; I will bring ſeven times more plagues upon you, according to your ſins.

22 I will alſo ſend wild beaſts among you, which ſhall rob you of your children, and deſtroy your cattel, and make you few in number, and your high-ways ſhall be deſolate.

23 And if ye will not be reformed by me by theſe things, but will walk contrary unto me:

24 Then will I alſo walk contrary unto you, and will puniſh you yet ſeven times for your ſins.

25 And I will bring a ſword upon you, that ſhall revenge the quarrel of my covenant: and when ye are gathered together within your cities, I will ſend the peſtilence among you; and ye ſhall be delivered into the hand of the enemy.

26 And when I have broken the ſtaff of your bread, ten women ſhall bake your bread in one oven, and they ſhall deliver you your bread again by weight: and ye ſhall eat, and not be ſatisfied.

27 And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me:

28 Then I will walk contrary unto you alſo in fury; and I, even I, will chaſtiſe you ſeven times for your ſins.

29 And ye ſhall eat the fleſh of your ſons, and the fleſh of your daughters ſhall ye eat.

30 And I will deſtroy your high places, and cut down your images, and caſt your carcaſes upon the carcaſes of your idols, and my ſoul ſhall abhor you.

31 And I will make your cities waſte, and bring your ſanctuaries unto deſolation, and I will not ſmell the ſavour of your ſweet odours.

32 And I will bring the land into deſolation: and your enemies which dwell therein, ſhall be aſtoniſhed at it.

33 And I will ſcatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a ſword after you: and your land ſhall be deſolate, and your cities waſte.

34 Then ſhall the land enjoy her ſabbaths, as long as it lieth deſolate, and ye be in your enemies land; even then ſhall the land reſt, and enjoy her ſabbaths.

35 As long as it lieth deſolate, it ſhall reſt: becauſe it did not reſt in your ſabbaths, when ye dwelt upon it.

36 And upon them that are left alive of you, I will ſend a faintneſs into their hearts in the lands of their enemies; and the ſound of a ſhaken leaf ſhall chaſe them: and they ſhall flee, as fleeing from a ſword: and they ſhall fall when none purſueth.

37 And they ſhall fall one upon another, as it were before a ſword, when none purſueth: and ye ſhall have no power to ſtand before your enemies.

38 And ye ſhall periſh among the heathen, and the land of your enemies ſhall eat you up.

39 And they that are left of you, ſhall pine away in their iniquity in your enemies lands; and alſo in the iniquities of their fathers ſhall they pine away with them.

40 If they ſhall confeſs their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, with their treſpaſs which they treſpaſſed againſt me, and that alſo they have walked contrary unto me;

41 And that I alſo have walked contrary unto them, and have brought them into the land of their enemies; if then their uncircumciſed hearts be humbled, and they then accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity:

42 Then will I remember my covenant with Jacob, and alſo my covenant with Iſaac, and alſo my covenant with Abraham will I remember: and I will remember the land.

43 The land alſo ſhall be left of them, and ſhall enjoy her ſabbaths, while ſhe lieth deſolate without them: and they ſhall accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity; becauſe, even becauſe they deſpiſed my judgments, and becauſe their ſoul abhorred my ſtatutes.

44 And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not caſt them away, neither will I abhor them, to deſtroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them: for I am the LORD their God.

45 But I will for their ſakes remember the covenant of their anceſtors, whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt, in the ſight of the heathen, that I might be their God: I am the LORD.

46 Theſe are the ſtatutes, and judgments, and laws, which the LORD made between him and the children of Iſrael, in mount Sinai, by the hand of Moſes.

Ver. 1. Ye ſhall make you no idols.] This command hath been often repeated; but God being now to enforce all his precepts by the moſt ſolemn promiſes and threatnings, recapitulates the principal injunction upon which all the reſt depended, which was, that they ſhould keep cloſe to the worſhip of him the only God, and abhor all idolatry, which he knew would corrupt their manners.

The Hebrew word elilim is uſed here and in chap. xix. 4. to expreſs contempt; ſignifying the idols (as we tranſlate it) which the Heathens worſhipped, to be mere empty vanities, things of nought, as we ſpeak; and therefore to be rejected with diſdain, rather than any way regarded.

———Nor graven image.] The Hebrew word peſel ſignifies the image of any thing hewn out of wood or ſtone: See Exod. xx. 4. Theſe images were not worſhipped by the Gentiles, till they were conſecrated with certain rites and ceremonies (which were various, according to the difference of the deities, and the ſuperſtitions of ſeveral countries) by which conſecration they imagined their gods were invited to be preſent in theſe images and ſtatues; otherwiſe, they were not ſo ſtupid, as to worſhip wood and ſtone.

———Neither rear up a ſtanding image.] The Hebrew word matſebah is tranſlated, by the LXX. a pillar, as we alſo render it in the margin. And if we tranſlate it ſtatue, or ſtanding image, we are not to underſtand by it the figure of a man, or of any other creature; but, as the Hebrews ſeem rightly to take it, for any work; an altar, for inſtance, which is erected and ſet up for ſacred aſſemblies to be held thereat, tho' they be to the true God. So Maimonides, (as Mr. Selden obſerves, lib. 2. De jure, nat. & gent. cap. 6.) who declares it was the cuſtom among idolaters, to erect ſuch ſtatues to their gods. And to Pauſanias ſaith (in his Achaica) that, in ancient time, among the Greeks univerſally, ἀντὶ ἀγαλμάτων εἶχον ἄρχαι λίθοι τιμὰς θεῶν, rude ſtones, inſtead of images, had divine honours paid to them. See Maimonides, De cultu ſtell. & plan. cap. 6. ſec. 8. Theſe were the moſt ancient monuments, and, being plain and ſimple, might be thought to be leſs inviting, than thoſe images which had the figure of of men, or other creatures; yet even theſe God forbids to his people, becauſe he would have no repreſentation of him whatſoever, tho' it might ſeem to have no danger in it.

Theſe were they which the Greeks called βαιτύλια. See Selden, De Diis Syris, Syntag. 2. cap. 1.

——— Neither ſet up any image of ſtone in your land.] There was greater reaſon they ſhould not ſet up Eben maſchkith, which ſignifies carved, or figured ſtone, that had pictures cut in it, as the Hebrews underſtand it. Mr. Selden obſerves, alſo, it was unlawful to ſet up theſe in their land (as Moſes here ſpeaks), tho' it were without the temple; and it was no more permitted to a proſelyte, than to an Iſraelite.

Poſſibly this may ſignify ſuch images as were common among the Egyptians in after-times, which were not repreſentations of their gods, but were full of ſymbols and hieroglyphicks, expreſſing ſome of the perfections of their deities. Theſe God would as little allow among his people, as any of the former; ſo cautious was he to prevent this ſort of idolatry, by image-worſhip.

——— To bow down unto it.] Tho' they did not worſhip it; but only worſhip God before it.

——— I am the Lord your God.] Who admit of no ſuch ſuperſtitions where I am worſhipped, Exod. xx. 4.

Ver. 4. Then will I give you rain in due ſeaſon.] Here follow the promiſes of all bleſſings of which men are naturally moſt deſirous, for their happy living in this world. And, firſt, God aſſures them, they ſhould have fruitful ſeaſons, which depended upon rain in due time, Jerem. v. 24. for Canaan was not a country like Egypt, which was watered, and rendered fertile, by the overflowing of their river; whereas the other, without rain, was quite barren.

Ver. 5. And your threſhing ſhall reach unto the vintage, &c.] This is a promiſe of ſuch plenty of corn, that before they could have reaped it all, and threſhed it out, the vintage would be ready, and require their labours; and before they could have preſſed out their wine, it would be time to ſow again. In a word, 'tis as much as if the Deity had ſaid, they ſhould have ſuch abundance, that there would hardly be ſufficient time to receive and lay up one bleſſing, before another came upon them.

Ver. 8. And five of you ſhall chaſe an hundred, and an hundred of you ſhall put ten thouſand to flight,] That is, a few ſhall be too hard for a great multitude; as it proved in the conqueſt of Canaan: Inſomuch, that Joſhua ſaith, chap. xxiii. 10. One man of you ſhall chaſe a thouſand; which was fulfilled in the days of Gideon, who, with three hundred men, put to flight a vaſt army, Judges vii. 22.

Ver. 10. And ye ſhall eat old ſtore.] Have a great deal of old corn left, when the new is come in.

——— And bring forth the old, becauſe of the new.] Have ſo much of it left, as to want room for it, when the new is to be laid up.

Ver. 11. And I will ſet my tabernacle amongſt you.] This is the great promiſe of all, that the tabernacle, wherein the Divine Majeſty reſided among them, ſhould continue with them: For it was already erected among them, but now God promiſes it ſhould be fixed; that is, his ſacred preſence ſhould remain with them.

——— And my ſoul ſhall not abhor you.] I will not caſt you off, becauſe of your offences, for which I have appointed an expiation.

Ver. 12. And I will walk among you.] Conduct you from place to place, all the time you are in this wilderneſs. For as God dwelt in the tabernacle, in the cloud of glory, which covered it; when that cloud was taken up, the ark preſently moved before them, and conducted them to the next ſtation, where they ſhould pitch their tents, Numb. x. 11, 12. See Exod. xxv. 8. This is given as the reaſon why they ſhould keep their camp from all impurities. See Deut. xxiii. 12, 13, 14.

Ver. 14. But if ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do all theſe commandments.] After the promiſe of theſe extraordinary bleſſings, as the reward of their obedience, God threatens them with as extraordinary plagues and calamities, if they were diſobedient. And as nothing moves us more powerfully than the hope of ſome good, or the apprehenſion of ſome evil; ſo there are no greater bleſſings in this world, than thoſe which the Divine promiſes gave them hopes to enjoy, nor greater evils than thoſe of which his threatnings rendered them apprehenſive. But ſuch is the goodneſs of the great Creator, that he always offers mercy before he proceeds to judgment, and mingles judgment with mercy, before he proceeds to the rigours of juſtice.

Ver. 16. ——— I will even appoint over you.] Or, as it is in the Hebrew, upon you: Cauſing the following diſeaſes to ſeize upon them (as the phraſe ſignifies), and arreſt them; that they might feel the heavy diſpleaſure of him, whoſe laws they contemned.

——— Terror, conſumption, and the burning ague.] It is not certain what diſeaſes are comprehended under theſe words, eſpecially the firſt, behalah, which we tranſlate terror. But coming from a word importing haſte and precipitancy. We take it to ſignify the falling ſickneſs; whereby people are ſo ſuddenly ſurprized, that they ſometimes fall into the fire by which they ſit.

The other two words are perhaps rightly tranſlated. For the next ſachepheth is, by Kimchi, and many others, underſtood to ſignify a conſumption, or an hectic fever; tho' R. Solomon and ſome others ſeem to take it for a dropſy; deſcribing it as a diſeaſe that puffs up the fleſh, or (as David de Pomis ſays) makes it break out in blotches. See Bochart, in his Hierozoic. p. 11. lib. 2. cap. 18. as for the laſt word, chaddachat, it coming from a word denoting great heat, may well be tranſlated a burning fever.

——— And ye ſhall ſow your ſeed, but your enemies ſhall eat it.] Next to bodily ſickneſs, God threatens them with the incurſions of their enemies; which was a ſeverer puniſhment than the former: For, according to David, it is better to fall into the hands of the Lord, than into the hands of men.

Here, alſo, it is obſervable, that God doth not threaten the worſt that their enemies might do to them; but firſt, that they ſhould carry away their harveſt, and make a ſcarcity among them: And in the next verſe, ſpeaks of delivering them to be ſlain by them.

Ver. 19. And I will break the pride of your power.] That power wherein you glory; which ſome underſtand of the ſanctuary, which, in the days of Eli, was forſaken of the ark of God's ſtrength, as the Pſalmiſt calls it, 1 Sam. iv. 10, 11. but it ſeems rather to relate to their numerous forces, which, at the firſt, were every where victorious; but, after ſeveral defeats in foregoing times, were, in the day of Saul, reduced to ſuch ſtraits, that they hid themſelves in caves, and pits, and thickets, &c. and there was not a ſword or a ſpear to be found in any of their hands (ſave Saul's and Jonathan's) when they ſhould have fought with their enemies, 1 Sam. xiii. 6, 7, 22.

——— And I will make your heaven as iron, and your earth as braſs.] The one ſhould afford no rain, and the other, for want of moiſture, bring forth no fruit; which muſt needs create a dreadful famine amongſt them.

Ver. 20. And your ſtrength ſhall be ſpent in vain, &c.] This is a further deſcription of that calamity, when, after all their labour in ploughing and ſowing the land, or cultivating their trees, they brought forth nothing for their ſuſtenance. We read in Scripture of ſuch famines, wherein man and beaſt were ready to periſh, particularly 1 Kings xvii. 1, 12. xviii. 15. and 2 Kings viii. 1.

Ver. 22. I will alſo ſend wild beaſts among you, which ſhall rob you of your children, &c.] If the terrible famine would not work upon their ſtubborn hearts no more than the forenamed ſickneſſes and wars, ver. 16, 17, 19, 20.) then God declares that they and their cattle ſhould be devoured by wild beaſts; the principal of which were lions, unto which the depopulation of countries are aſcribed in Scripture; particularly in the prophet Jeremiah, chap. xi. 15. iv. 7. where the Aſſyrians, and Nebuchadnezzar, are therefore compared to lions, becauſe, by thoſe fierce animals, countries were ſometimes laid deſolate; man and beaſt being deſtroyed by them. We read of no other that killed the people planted in Samaria by the king of Aſſyria, inſtead of the Iſraelites, whom they carried away captive, 2 Kings xvii. 25. And God threatened to deſtroy the remnant of Moab by the ſame means, Iſa. xv. 9. but there were other wild beaſts, alſo, to accompliſh this execution, Jer. v. 6. as bears, who killed forty-two at one time, 2 Kings xi. 24. ſerpents and cockatrices, Jer. xv. 3. Nor are examples wanting, in other hiſtories, of ſuch calamities, one monument of which, continues ſtill in the church: For the ſolemn prayers, in Rogation week, were firſt inſtituted (as Sidonius relates) by Mamertus, biſhop of Vienne in France, for this reaſon among others, that wolves and other wild beaſts did very great miſchief in thoſe parts. See Sirmondus, in lib. 7. epiſt. 1. nay, ſome countries have been ſo infeſted with ſmaller creatures, particularly Spain by conies, that they left nothing untouch'd, being noxious not only to roots and ſeeds, but ſubverting whole towns, which were undermined by them. And in the neighbouring iſlands, called Baleares, they were ſo tormented with them, that they were obliged to petition Auguſtus to ſend ſoldiers to defend them from thoſe little animals. See Bochart in his Phaleg lib. 3. cap. 7.

——— And your high-ways ſhall be deſolate.] For travellers would not venture into the high-ways, for fear of the wild beaſts, and becauſe of the ſcarcity of people to give them entertainment. It is obſervable, that this plague is directly oppoſite to the bleſſing promiſed unto their obedience, ver. 6. where it is ſaid, I will rid evil beaſts out of the land; which was never infeſted with them, till it was overſpread with wickedneſs.

Ver. 24. And will puniſh you yet ſeven times for your ſins.] If we ſhould follow the literal expoſition, ver. 21. then thoſe plagues there threatned, being ſeven times multiplied, would make the plagues threatned in this verſe, for their multiplied tranſgreſſions, three hundred and forty times greater than the firſt, ver. 18. But the meaning is only, that they ſhould ſtill grow more numerous, and more deſtructive.

Ver. 25. And I will bring a ſword upon you.] This ſeems to be no new plague, having been before threatned, ver. 17. therefore the meaning is, that God would ſend three fatal judgments upon them, all at the ſame time, namely, war, peſtilence, and famine, which are contained in this and the next verſe. Of war and famine at once, ſee Jer. xv. 18. and xvi. 4. Of peſtilence added to them, together with captivity, chap. xv. 2, 3, 4. xliv. 12, 13. and ſee Ezek. vi. 11, 12. and xiv. 21.

——— That ſhall avenge the quarrel of my covenant.] My quarrel with you for the breach of that covenant which you ſolemnly made with me, Exod. xxiv. 3, 1, &c.

——— And when ye are gathered together within your cities.] Thinking there to defend yourſelves againſt your enemies, by impregnable fortifications.

——— I will ſend the peſtilence amongſt you.] To deſtroy the ſoldiers in your garriſon.

——— And ye ſhall be delivered into the hand of the enemy.] Ye ſhall be forced to ſurrender, becauſe no men ſhall be left to defend the place.

Ver. 26. And when I have broken the ſtaff of bread.] Taken away its power to nouriſh you, or rather, taken bread itſelf from you, which is the ſupport of life.

——— Ten women ſhall bake your bread in one oven.] That is, there ſhall be ſuch ſcarcity, that a ſmall oven ſhall be ſufficient to bake bread for ten families, i.e. for a great many, as the number ten in ſcripture ſignifies, 1 Sam. i. 8. Job. xix. 3.

——— And they ſhall deliver you again your bread by weight.] Diſtribute to every one in the family a certain quantity; not enough to ſatisfy them.

——— And ye ſhall eat, and not be ſatisfied.] Never have enough to ſatisfy their hunger; but be render'd more craving by their ſcanty food: So Pellicanus gloſſes, and thus conclude his notes on theſe verſes, Hæc ſunt arma Dei contra inſenſatos, &c. Theſe are the weapons of God againſt ſtupid wretches; which no wicked men can evade, when God, in anger, begins to fall upon them. Let no man, tho' ever ſo great and rich, hope to be ſafe from the hand of the Lord, who can kill kings by worms and lice when he pleaſeth.

Ver. 28. Then will I alſo walk contrary to you in fury.] God's indignation riſes proportionable to their offences; for now he not only declares he will ſet his face againſt them, but likewiſe proceed againſt them in fury, by ſuch puniſhments as ſhall entirely ruin them.

And I, even I will chaſtiſe.] The very manner of ſpeech expreſſes anger and indignation; being as if he had ſaid, I will make you know who it is that you have deſpiſed, ver. 15. The word jiſſarti alſo, which we render chaſtiſe, imports ſmarter puniſhments than thoſe expreſſed by hicketi, I will ſmite, or puniſh you, ver. 24.

——— Seven times for your ſins.] If we ſhould, by a literal account, multiply the number of plagues, mentioned ver. 24. ſeven times, the threatning here would amount to this; that their rebellion, not amended by ſo many plagues, but continued ſtill from age to age (notwithſtanding all the corrections inflicted on them for their reformation, ver. 23.) ſhould in the concluſion be puniſhed one thouſand one hundred ninety ſeven times, more ſeverely than at firſt, ver. 18. but the ſimple ſenſe is, that their obſtinate contempt of the divine laws ſhould be puniſhed with new and more afflictive plagues. This threatning was fulfilled in their captivity, in the days of Manaſſeh, Jehoiachim, and Zedekiah: and again in the time of Ptolemy the firſt, under Antiochus Epiphanes. For theſe later calamities were at leaſt ſeven times greater, both for extent and duration, than the former perſecutions which they ſuffered from the Philiſtines, Moabites, Ammonites, and Syrians. By all which, and by what follows, it plainly appears, that theſe threatnings were a kind of prediction; for Moſes evidently foreſaw they would not prove ſo obedient as he deſired, Deut. xxxi. 27, 29. and conſequently that theſe threatnings, in caſe of diſobedience, would turn into prophecies, unto every one of which their hiſtory exactly correſponds; as the book of Deuteronomy will give us occaſion to ſhew more fully.

Ver. 29. And ye ſhall eat the fleſh of your ſons, and the fleſh of your daughters ſhall ye eat.] This is the very utmoſt calamity that could come upon a people; and yet it is mentioned before the throwing down of their high places and images, &c. as if the devouring of their children (ſuch was their incredible luſt after idols) would ſeem a leſs evil to them, than the loſs of their images.

This was fulfilled among the Iſraelites, in the ſiege of Samaria, 2 Kings vi. 29. and among the Jews in the ſiege of Jeruſalem, before the Babylonian captivity, Lament. iv. 10. and in the laſt ſiege by Titus, as Joſephus relates, lib. 7. de Bello Judaico, cap. 8.

Ver. 30. And I will deſtroy your high places.] Where it was cuſtomary for them to worſhip their idols, according to the manner of the Heathens; who built temples, and altars, and offered ſacrifices to their gods, upon mountains and high hills, eſpecially ſuch as were ſhaded with trees. Inſomuch that the Indians, in Philoſtratus, call the high mountain Caucaſus, "the houſe of the gods." And the ancient Perſians (as Herodotus declares in his Clio, c. 131.) going up to the tops of the higheſt mountains, there offer'd ſacrifices unto Jupiter; calling the whole circle of the heavens by that name. And in the iſland Naxus, the higheſt mountain was alſo conſecrated to him; as from his worſhip on mount Athos he is called Ἄθως, in Heſychius. And the reaſon of their chuſing theſe places for worſhip was, becauſe they thought their ſacrifices would be more acceptable there, than in valleys. For, as Lucian himſelf declares, they thought themſelves in ſuch high places nearer to their gods, and ſo ſhould more eaſily obtain audience; and Tacitus ſays the ſame in the laſt book of his Annals.

How much the Iſraelites were inclined to follow the notions of the heathen world in this particular, appears too plain by their hiſtory; which ſhews, that high places were frequented in the reigns of their good kings, as well as of their bad. And they were ſo fond of them, that when they could not go to them, they offered upon the tops of their houſes, Jer. xix. 13. xxxii. 29. Zeph. i. 5.

——— And cut down your images.] The Hebrew word chammanecem, which we tranſlate your images, properly ſignifies, temples erected for the worſhip of the ſun. For it is certain, that the Hebrews call the ſun chammæ; from whence comes the word chamman, the temple of the ſun; whom the ancient Phœnicians took to be the lord of heaven. So Sanchoniathon, ſpeaking of the ſun. Tho' it is very probable, that as ſuperſtition increaſed, the name of chammanim was given to other temples, as well as thoſe of the ſun. Others take this word to ſignify what the Greeks call Πυραθεῖα, and Πυρεῖα, temples of fire; which being worſhipped by the Eaſtern people, temples were erected in honour of it. But this is not much different from the former. The Perſians worſhipped the ſun in the fire, which was the ſymbol and repreſentative of the ſun.

——— And caſt your carcaſes upon the carcaſes of your idols.] Which were both burnt together, as ſome imagine. However, this expreſſes the utmoſt contempt both of them and their idols; who were alike deteſtable. Their fondneſs for them alſo when they were alive, ſeems to be repreſented by throwing them upon them when they were dead. And the Hebrew word gillulim, which we barely tranſlate tranſlate idols, importing ſomething belonging to the dunghil, is taken by ſome to ſignify the images of Baal-peor; who was worſhipped, as the Jews ſay, after a moſt beaſtly manner. Theſe idols, whatſoever they were, tho' adorned with great magnificence, yet were no better than dead carcaſes. And we might think, if that ſuperſtition were ſo old, that Moſes alludes to the little images of Iſis, which were made of plaiſter and clay, and are frequently in the ſepulchres of the Egyptians at this day. Unto which Chriſt ph. Arnoldus, in his epiſtle to Wagenſeil, thinks the Talmudiſts allude, when they ſay that Pharoah's daughter, becoming a proſelite to the Jewiſh religion, waſhed herſelf in the river Megullile, from theſe dunghil idols, as ſome render it, of her father's houſe. The Dutch interpeters tranſlate it Dreck-goden,, not meerly for the matter, as Arnoldus thinks, but alſo for the form of a beetle, which lives in dung; for ſo they repreſented Iſis, as Plutarch tells us in his book de Iſid. & Oſir.

Ver. 31 And I will make your cities waſte.] Their walls being thrown down, and their houſes burnt.

——— And bring your ſanctuaries into deſolation.] They had but one ſanctuary, and therefore ſome think their ſynagogues are comprehended under this name; for they are ſometimes called ſanctuaries. But the ſanctuary, properly ſo called, having ſeveral parts, which were all holy, Moſes may be thought to ſpeak of it here in the plural number. As Jeremiah repreſents the Jews, ſaying, The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord are theſe, chap. vii. ver. 4. that is, both theſe courts wherein we ſtand, as well as that of the prieſts and the moſt holy place, are all the Lord's temple: Or, the word your, is to be applied to ſuch places of worſhip as they themſelves had conſecrated, in oppoſition to God's ſanctuary.

——— And I will not ſmell the ſavour of your ſweet odours.] This ſeems to determine the meaning of ſanctuaries, to God's own houſe, where ſweet odours of incenſe, made of ſeveral ſweet ſpices, were daily offered unto him: Which being a repreſentation of their prayers ſent up to him, he here declares that he will not be appeaſed by them, nor by any ſacrifices they could offer to him, but utterly reject them.

Ver. 34. Then ſhall the land enjoy her ſabbaths, as long as it lieth deſolate, and ye be in your enemies land, &c.] This is a moſt bitter reproach to them for their ingratitude to God, and inhumanity to their brethren, in not keeping the ſabbatical year, mentioned in the foregoing chapter.

Ver. 35. As long as it lieth deſolate, it ſhall reſt.] Lie untilled, as it ought to have done every ſeventh year. And it lay thus every ſeventh year; becauſe, as ſome think, they had neglected to keep ſo many ſabbatical years; which we cannot think to be true, without ſuppoſing that they kept none for half the time, from their entrance into Canaan, till they were expelled out of it, by the captivity of Babylon.

——— Becauſe it did not reſt in your ſabbaths, where ye dwell upon it.] For in thoſe four hundred and ninety years, ſays Procopius Gazæus, when they were under the government of kings, there were ſeventy years to be kept as ſabbaths; which, that the land might enjoy its ſabbaths, were ſpent in the captivity of Babylon. We do not expreſly read indeed of this profane neglect, while they dwelt in their land; but Jeremiah complains, that they did not, in his time, give their ſervants liberty in the ſeventh year, chap. xxxiv. 17. and he gives this as one reaſon why God delivered them up to ſlavery, for ſo we underſtand theſe words, Lam. i. 3, Judah is gone into captivity, becauſe of affliction, and becauſe of great ſervitude. And from thence we may conclude, that the ſame covetous humour, and diſtruſt of God's providence, made them not ſuffer their land to reſt in that year; eſpecially ſince the author of the ſecond book of Chronicles expreſly mentions this as a reaſon of their captivity, to fulfil the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah the prophet, until the land had enjoyed her ſabbaths, to fulfil threeſcore and ten years, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21. Now their puniſhment in this was made the more remarkable, if it be true that both the kingdom of Samaria and the kingdom of Judah were deſtroyed in a ſabbatical year; and that immediately after a Jubilee, the city and temple were deſtroyed by Titus, according to Scaligers computation. Maimonides declares that the year when they were carried captive to Babylon, and the firſt temple was deſtroyed, was in the expiration of a ſabbatical year, Schemitta ve Johel, cap. 10. ſect. 3.

Ver. 38. And ye ſhall periſh among the heathen, and the land of your enemies ſhall eat you up.] Inſomuch that the ten tribes never returned to their own land: But either periſhed by hunger and bad accommodations; or were ſwallowed up into the body of another nation.

Ver. 39. And they that are left of you, ſhall pine away in their iniquities, in their enemies land.] With grief and ſorrow, and ſad reflections upon the miſeries, into which their ſins, and the ſins of their fathers, had thrown them: Inſomuch that death was more acceptable to them than life, Jerem. viii. 3.

——— And alſo in the iniquities of their fathers ſhall they pine away with them.] Eſpecially thoſe of Manaſſeh king of Judah, whoſe wickedneſs was ſo great, that the zealous reformation which his grandchild made, could not avert the fierceneſs of God's great wrath againſt them. 2 Kings xxiii. ver. 26, 27.

Ver. 40. If they ſhall confeſs their iniquity, &c.] Tho' Moſes had been above three times as long in recounting the plagues, which he either foreſaw, or feared would come upon them for their ſins, than in the bleſſings which he promiſed ſhould follow their obedience: Yet he plainly ſhews, that the bleſſings would have far excelled the curſes, had it not been for their diſobedience. For after all theſe dreadful calamities were come upon them, he concludes with a moſt gracious promiſe, that God would reſtore them to their own land, from whence they were expelled, if they truly repented of thoſe ſins which were the cauſe of their captivity.

He means, by confeſſing their iniquities, and the iniquities of their fathers, &c. acknowledging them with ſuch unfeigned ſorrow, as wrought repentance; without which he gave them no hope of deliverance, and it is well obſerved by a great divine of our own, that if without confeſſion of their fathers iniquities, they could not be abſolved from their own; their fathers iniquity not repented of, was their own; and ſo was the puniſhment due unto it.

Ver. 41. ——— If then their uncircumciſed heart be humbled.] By an uncircumciſed heart ſeems to be meant an heatheniſh temper of mind, inſenſible of God: Which made them ſtubborn and refractory; and therefore this phraſe is the ſame with an hard heart: For which there was no cure, but ſuch remarkable judgments, as evidently carried in them the marks of a divine hand; which when they ſaw, and ſubmitted to it, he gives them hope of deliverance.

——— And they accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity.] Patiently bear it, as their juſt deſert; and acknowledge they do not deſerve to be delivered from it.

Ver. 42. Then will I remember my covenant with Jacob, and alſo my covenant with Iſaac, and alſo my covenant with Abraham.] See Exod. iii. 6. God promiſes to reſtore them to their own land; according to the covenant made with their forefathers, that he would give it them for an everlaſting poſſeſſion. For to remember a covenant, or promiſe, in ſcripture language, is to perform it. Accordingly we find the forenamed confeſſion made by Daniel, chap. ix. and he makes it in the name of all the people; among whom, no doubt, there were many who heartily joyned with him; and then followed their wonderful reſtoration in the reign of Cyrus, of which we read, Ezra, i. &c.

——— And I will remember the land.] Re-people it with its former inhabitants, &c. See 2 Chron. chap. xxxvi. ver. 22, 23. where this immediately follows the relation he had made of the land being laid deſolate.

Ver. 43. The land alſo ſhall be left of them, and ſhall enjoy her ſabbaths, &c.] This verſe is very obſcure; unleſs we take it to ſpeak of a new expulſion out of their land, after their reduction to it. And then the next words, ——— And they ſhall accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity.] Muſt be interpreted, after they had accepted, or, tho' they had accepted, &c. This made their ſin the more provoking; that they offended God again, when he had ſo graciouſly forgiven them, and delivered them from diſmal captivity.

——— Becauſe, even becauſe they deſpiſed my Judgments, and becauſe their ſoul abhorred my ſtatutes.] Returned turned to the very ſame wicked diſpoſition, for which they had been formerly expelled, ver. 15. This was fulfilled by degrees, by the ſucceſſors of Alexander, and at laſt by the Romans.

Ver. 44. And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies.] God would not have them utterly deſpair of mercy, even after a new baniſhment, which hath now continued many ages, for this promiſe is not fulfilled.

——— I will not caſt them away, neither will I abhor them, to deſtroy them utterly.] As we ſee at this very day, they are not deſtroyed utterly, but remain a great body in ſeveral countries; after above ſixteen hundred years expulſion from their own land.

Ver. 45. And I will for their ſakes remember the covenant of their anceſtors.] The meaning cannot be, that God would be ſo gracious for their ſakes who were ſo very wicked; but as the words in the Hebrew are, he would for them (i. e. for their good advantage) "remember the covenant of their anceſtors, whom he had "brought forth out of the land of Egypt;" that is, once more deliver from their miſerable condition, and reſtore them to his favour, that he may be their God. And a great man obſerves, "that the continuation of their plagues "themſelves ſeems ſo much mitigated, in the laſt age, "(ſince the Goſpel hath been again revealed) as if their "miſery were almoſt expired, and the day of their re-"demption drawing nigh. But then they muſt firſt "confeſs their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers. "(as Moſes ſpeaks before, ver. 40.) with their treſpaſs which "they treſpaſſed in crucifying Chriſt the Lord; and "accept the puniſhment of their iniquity," acknowledging that ſo horrid a crime deſerved ſo long and ſo heavy a puniſhment. For every child (as he obſerves in another place) is born as it were an heir to his fathers ſins, and to their plagues, unleſs he renounce them, by taking their guilt upon him, and ſuch hearty confeſſion as the law preſcribes, and patient ſubmiſſion of himſelf to God's correction.

CHAP. XXVII.

1 He that maketh a ſingular vow muſt be the Lords. 2 The eſtimation of the perſon. 9 Of a beaſt given by vow. 14 Of a houſe. 16 Of a field, and the redemption thereof. 28 No devoted thing may be redeemed. 32 The tithe may not be changed.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.

2 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, When a man ſhall make a ſingular vow, the perſon ſhall be for the LORD, by thy eſtimation.

3 And thy eſtimation ſhall be, of the male from twenty years old even unto ſixty years old; even thy eſtimation ſhall be fifty ſhekels of ſilver, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary.

4 And if it be a female, then thy eſtimation ſhall be thirty ſhekels.

5 And if it be from five years old, even unto twenty years old; then thy eſtimation ſhall be of the male twenty ſhekels, and for the female ten ſhekels,

6 And if it be from a month old, even unto five years old; then thy eſtimation ſhall be of the male five ſhekels of ſilver, and for the female, thy eſtimation ſhall be three ſhekels of ſilver.

7 And if it be from ſixty years old, and above; if it be a male, then thy eſtimation ſhall be fifteen ſhekels; and for the female ten ſhekels.

8 But if he be poorer than thy eſtimation; then he ſhall preſent himſelf before the prieſt, and the prieſt ſhall value him: according to his ability that vowed, ſhall the prieſt value him.

9 And if it be a beaſt whereof men bring an offering unto the LORD; all that any man giveth of ſuch unto the LORD, ſhall be holy.

10 He ſhall not alter it, nor change it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good: and if he ſhall at all change beaſt for beaſt; then it, and the exchange thereof, ſhall be holy.

11 And if it be any unclean beaſt, of which they do not offer a ſacrifice unto the LORD; then he ſhall preſent the beaſt before the prieſt:

12 And the prieſt ſhall value it, whether it be good or bad: as thou valueſt it who art the prieſt, ſo ſhall it be.

13 But if he will at all redeem it, then he ſhall add a fifth part thereof unto thy eſtimation.

14 ¶ And when a man ſhall ſanctify his houſe to be holy unto the LORD; then the prieſt ſhall eſtimate it, whether it be good or bad: as the prieſt ſhall eſtimate it, ſo ſhall it ſtand.

15 And if he that ſanctified it, will redeem his houſe, then he ſhall add the fifth part of the money of thy eſtimation unto it, and it ſhall be his.

16 And if a man ſhall ſanctify unto the LORD ſome part of a field of his poſſeſſion; then thy eſtimation ſhall be according to the ſeed thereof: an homer of barley-ſeed ſhall be valued at fifty ſhekels of ſilver.

17 If he ſanctify his field from the year of jubilee, according to thy eſtimation it ſhall ſtand.

18 But if he ſanctify his field after the jubilee; then the prieſt ſhall reckon unto him the money according to the years that remain, even unto the year of the jubilee, and it ſhall be abated from thy eſtimation.

19 And if he that ſanctified the field will in any wiſe redeem it; then he ſhall add the fifth part of the money of thy eſtimation unto it, and it ſhall be aſſured to him.

20 And if he will not redeem the field, or if he have ſold the field to another man; it ſhall not be redeemed any more.

21 But the field, when it goeth out in the jubilee, ſhall be holy unto the LORD, as

as a field devoted: the poſſeſſion thereof ſhall be the prieſts.

22 And if a man ſanctify unto the LORD a field which he hath bought, which is not of the fields of his poſſeſſion;

23 Then the prieſt ſhall reckon unto him the worth of thy eſtimation, even unto the year of the jubilee: and he ſhall give thine eſtimation in that day, as a holy thing unto the LORD.

24 In the year of the jubilee, the field ſhall return unto him of whom it was bought, even to him to whom the poſſeſſion of the land did belong.

25 And all thy eſtimations ſhall be according to the ſhekel of the ſanctuary: twenty gerahs ſhall be the ſhekel.

26 ¶ Only the firſtling of the beaſts, which ſhould be the LORD's firſtling, no man ſhall ſanctify it; whether it be ox, or ſheep: it is the LORD's.

27 And if it be of an unclean beaſt, then he ſhall redeem it according to thine eſtimation, and ſhall add a fifth part of it thereto: or if it be not redeemed, then it ſhall be ſold according to thy eſtimation.

28 Notwithſtanding, no devoted thing that a man ſhall devote unto the LORD, of all that he hath, both of man and beaſt, and of the field of his poſſeſſion, ſhall be ſold or redeemed: every devoted thing is moſt holy unto the LORD.

29 None devoted, which ſhall be devoted of men, ſhall be redeemed: but ſhall ſurely be put to death.

30 And all the tithe of the land, whether of the ſeed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the LORD's: it is holy unto the LORD.

31 And if a man will at all redeem ought of his tithes, he ſhall add thereto the fifth part thereof.

32 And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock even of whatſoever paſſeth under the rod; the tenth ſhall be holy unto the LORD.

33 He ſhall not ſearch whether it be good or bad, neither ſhall he change it: and if he change it at all, then both it and the change thereof ſhall be holy; it ſhall not be redeemed.

34 Theſe are the commandments which the LORD commanded Moſes for the children of Iſrael in mount Sinai.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,] Some religious people, it is poſſible, were touched with ſuch a ſenſe of what Moſes had now delivered, in the foregoing promiſes and threats, that they thought of giving themſelves wholly unto God, or of vowing ſome of their goods to him; and therefore he gives Moſes further directions for the regulation of ſuch vows.

Ver. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, when a man ſhall make a ſingular vow.] And, firſt, If any man vowed himſelf, or his children, wholly to the ſervice of God in the tabernacle, he directs what was to be done in that caſe, which he calls a ſingular or extraordinary vow; and by Philo is called the great vow, it being a wonderful piece of devotion (as the word japhli in Hebrew imports,) becauſe men were deſirous to help God's prieſts in the meaneſt miniſtry; ſuch as bringing in wood, carrying out aſhes, ſweeping away the duſt, and ſuch like.

——The perſon ſhall be for the Lord, by thy eſtimation.] The meaning would have been more plain, if the words had been tranſlated juſt as they lie in the Hebrew, "According to thy eſtimation the perſon ſhall be for the "Lord." For this immediately ſuggeſts to one's thoughts, that the ſervice of the perſons themſelves, thus devoted, was not to be employed in the tabernacle, but a value ſet upon them by the prieſt, and that to be employed for the Lord, i. e. for holy uſes; for repairing the ſanctuary, or any thing belonging to it. The reaſon why God would not accept the perſons themſelves, as they deſired, but the value of them, for his ſervice, ſeems to be, becauſe there was a ſufficient number of perſons peculiarly deſigned for all the work of the tabernacle, and which he would not have incumbered by more attendants than were needful.

Ver. 3. And thy eſtimation ſhall be.] That the prieſt might not either over-value, or under-value any perſon, the rates are here ſet down, which he ſhould demand for their redemption.

——Of the male from twenty years old even unto ſixty years old.] For at twenty years of age, ſaith Procopius Gazæus, men begin to be fit for buſineſs, and continue ſo till ſixty; when it is time to leave it off.

——Thy eſtimation ſhall be fifty ſhekels of ſilver.] That this one rule ſhould ſerve for all men, tho' of different qualities, Philo thinks was fit for ſeveral reaſons, which he gives in his book of ſpecial laws: The principal is, becauſe God regarded only the vow, the value of which was equal, whoſoever made it, whether a great man, or a poor one.

Ver. 4. And if it be a female, then thy eſtimation ſhall be thirty ſhekels.] Women could not be ſo ſerviceable as men, and therefore were valued at a leſs rate; for all that they could do, was to ſpin, or weave, or make garments, or waſh for the prieſts and Levites.

Ver. 5. And if it be from five years old, even unto twenty years old.] It appears by this, that tho' a child of five years old could not make a vow, yet his parents might ſolemnly devote one of that age to God; and it did not oblige them to pay what is here required, for the uſe of the ſanctuary.

——Thy eſtimation ſhall be for the male twenty ſhekels, and for the female ten ſhekels.] Leſs is required than for thoſe above twenty, becauſe their life was more uncertain; and they were leſs capable to do any ſervice, before they came to their full growth.

Ver. 6. And if it be from a month old, even unto five years old, &c.] Before a child was a month old, it ſeems, it was not capable to be devoted to God; but then it might. And ſtill leſs was demanded, as the value of them, becauſe children ſo ſmall were very weak and imperfect, and the price, therefore, ſet accordingly. But the words may be underſtood not of children that were a month old, but that were in the firſt month of their life: And Samuel, we find, was devoted to God before he was born.

Ver. 7. And from ſixty years old and above, if it be a male, then thy eſtimation ſhall be fifteen ſhekels, &c.] They are valued much leſs, after ſixty, than before, ver. 3 becauſe their ſervice then was of little worth, and their life likely to be ſhort.

——And for a female ten ſhekels.] The Hebrews think it obſervable, that in their youth, males were valued almoſt double to females; but now, in old age, they are made almoſt of equal value; for old women continue very ſerviceable in many things, when old men are not. Whence they have a ſaying, An old woman in an houſe, is a treaſure there.

Ver. 8. And if he be poorer than thy eſtimation, &c.] If he be not able to pay, according to the fore-named rates.

——Then he ſhall preſent himſelf before the prieſt.] Who was then in attendance at the tabernacle; for he doth not ſpeak of the high-prieſt, but of the lower.

——And the prieſt ſhall value him.] According to the beſt information he could get of his ability, as here it follows.

——According to his ability that vowed, ſhall the prieſt value him.] He was to examine his condition; and, accordingly, ſet ſuch a rate upon him, as he might be able to pay, without undoing his family.

Ver. 9. And if it be a beaſt.] Now he proceeds to the ſecond caſe, which was when any man vowed to give God a beaſt of ſome ſort or other.

——Whereof men bring an offering unto the Lord.] And firſt, he mentions clean beaſts, ſuch as God accepted at the altar; as theſe are explained by the oppoſite unclean beaſt, ver. 11.

——All that any man gives of ſuch unto the Lord.] Whether to be ſacrificed, or not.

——Shall be holy.] Set apart for God's ſervice, according to the nature of his vow; to be offered at the altar, if he ſo expreſſed it; or to be given to the prieſts and Levites, if that was his deſire; or to be ſold for the ſervice of the tabernacle, if it was left at large.

Ver. 10. He ſhall not alter it, nor change it.] Some think theſe words, alter, and change, are two expreſſions of the ſame import. But the firſt word may ſignify, that he ſhould not alter it for any other beaſt, or thing; and the ſecond, that he ſhould not change it for any beaſt of the ſame kind: But that very beaſt, which was vowed, was to be given to the uſes intended; and no other accepted in his ſtead, tho' it were really better.

Ver. 14. And when a man ſhall ſanctify his houſe to be holy unto the Lord.] By vowing it to God's ſervice, for of ſuch ſanctifying he ſpeaks in this chapter: And this is the third caſe about vows, which commonly conſiſted in promiſing to God ſome part of their eſtates; either to ſerve for ſacrifices, or to be kept for ſome ſacred uſes: Whence came thoſe vaſt treaſures which were in the houſe of God, mentioned 1 Chron. xxvi. 26, 27 28. for they were chiefly oblations of part of the ſpoils taken from their enemies, which David, and Saul, and Abner, and Joab, had dedicated; together with the oblations of ſuch perſons as Samuel the ſeer, who is there ſaid to have dedicated a great deal to maintain the houſe of the Lord.

——Then the prieſt ſhall eſtimate it, whether it be good or bad, &c.] He makes the ſame law in this caſe, which he had done about unclean beaſts; that the prieſt ſhould conſider the worth of it, and, accordingly, ſet the price; having reſpect to the condition of the houſe, whether it was great or little, old or new, &c.

——As the prieſt ſhall eſtimate it, ſo ſhall it ſtand.] That was to be the fix'd price, which no man was to attempt to alter.

Ver. 15. And if he that ſanctified it will redeem his houſe.] If he who vowed it to God, choſe rather to pay the price himſelf, than part with the houſe, he was to ſubmit to the law made in the foregoing caſe; which was, to add a fifth part to the rate ſet upon it. For there was another reaſon why many might make this choice, beſide that mentioned in ver. 13. becauſe, if they did not redeem it, the houſe could never return to them again; no, not at the jubilee. For it is probable, that the law concerning lands, which immediately follows, was the rule for houſes alſo, which were valued according to their diſtance from the year of jubilee, at a higher or lower price, as lands were, ver. 18, 22, 23.

——Then ſhall he add the fifth part of the money of thy eſtimation, and it ſhall be his.] "He that gave "us the law, (ſaith Maimonides, in his treatiſe on this "ſubject) knows the moſt intimate ſenſe of all men's "ſouls, and penetrates into the moſt ſecret receſſes, and "lurking places, of humane deſires: And he ſeeing that "their love of riches would render them very ſaving, ſo "that if out of a religious motion they had conſecrated "any thing to him, they would be prone to repent of it; "and therefore ordained, that if any man had an incli"nation to redeem what he had conſecrated, he ſhould "add a fifth part to its juſt value;" that is, pay well for it.

Ver. 16. And if a man ſhall ſanctify unto the Lord ſome part of a field.] This ſeems to ſignify, that it was not lawful for a man to vow his whole field, that is, all his eſtate; becauſe God would have no man's family reduced to poverty, to enrich his ſanctuary.

——Of his poſſeſſion.] Not purchaſed by him, but deſcended to him as an inheritance from his anceſtors.

——Then thy eſtimation ſhall be according to the ſeed thereof.] It ſhall be valued according to the quantity of ſeed which is required to ſow it.

——An omer of barley-ſeed ſhall be valued at fifty ſhekels of ſilver.] So much land as an omer of barley would ſow, was to be rated at fifty ſhekels, and ſo proportionably; ſo much as would take up two omers, at an hundred; or half an omer at twenty-five. Menochius thinks it was to be rated ſo much yearly, but there is not the leaſt intimation of this in the text; and his only reaſon for it is, this of Abulenſis, that it would have been too little to give for a piece of land to be held forty-nine years. See lib. ii. De Republ. Hebræor. cap. 19. queſt. 7. which is of no force at all; for it is plain, God deſigned a moderate rate ſhould be ſet upon all things which men vowed to him, whereby they were not diſcouraged from thoſe votive acts of religion. And this yearly rent had been immoderate and oppreſſive: For a piece of land which an omer of barley (i. e. about a pottle of our meaſure) would ſow, could yield no great crop, and conſequently could not be of any great value; barley, alſo, being much cheaper than wheat.

Ver. 17. If he ſanctify his field from the year of jubilee.] That is, if he make this vow immediately after the jubilee, or in that year.

——According to thy eſtimation.] Before mentioned of fifty ſhekels for an omer of barley.

——It ſhall ſtand.] It ſhall be ſo eſtimated, and nothing deducted.

Ver. 18. But if he ſanctify his field after the jubilee.] Some years after.

——Then the prieſt ſhall reckon unto him the money according to the years that remain, even unto the year of jubilee, &c.] The prieſt was to compute how many years were elapſed, and how many remained till the next jubilee; and, accordingly, to deduct from the rate of fifty ſhekels before-mentioned, either more or leſs, as the years yet to come were more or fewer.

Ver. 20. And if he will not redeem the field.] When the prieſt hath ſet his value upon it, and tells him he may have it again at ſuch a rate, if he pleaſes: And he refuſes the offer.

——Or if he hath ſold the field to another man.] That is, if the prieſt, upon his refuſal, have ſold it to another man, and afterward he that vowed it hath an inclination to re-purchaſe it himſelf, and would pay the price at which he might have had it.

——It ſhall not be redeemed any more.] He was then excluded from all benefit of redemption.

Ver. 21. But the field when it goeth out in the jubilee.] Out of the poſſeſſion of him to whom the prieſt ſold it.

——Shall be holy unto the Lord.] Shall not return to him that vowed it, but continue God's portion.

——As a field devoted.] Being ſolemnly conſecrated to the Divine ſervice.

——The poſſeſſion thereof ſhall be the prieſts.] Who were to have the inheritance of it for their better ſupport. But they might ſell it; nay, Menochius thinks, were bound to ſell it to ſome of the kindred of him who devoted it, or to ſome of his tribe; for otherwiſe lands would go out of the tribe to which they belonged: And, beſide, the prieſts were to have no inheritance in the land, Numb. xviii. 20. But theſe ſeem not to be ſolid reaſons why the prieſts ſhould not enjoy this land themſelves; for tho' they were not to have any inheritance in the diviſion of the land of Canaan, yet if any fell to them by the means now mentioned (which was but very ſeldom, ſince men were very careful to preſerve their inheritance), God here beſtows ſuch land upon his prieſts; who might poſſeſs it, if they pleaſed, becauſe they had it in God's right; or elſe ſell it, ver. 20. and appropriate the money to their own uſe.

Ver. 26. Only the firſtling of the beaſts, which ſhall be the Lord's firſtling, no man ſhall ſanctify it.] By vowing it to be a whole burnt-offering, or a peace-offering unto the the Lord, as Maimonides expounds it. The reaſon was, becauſe no man could lawfully vow that, which was not his own, as the firſtlings were not, they being the Lord's already: as it follows in the end of this verſe.

The ſame reaſon held (as Maimonides likewiſe obſerves) in all things belonging to God; as tenths. Yet they deviſed, ingeniouſly enough, as he ſpeaks, a way to give theſe firſtlings to God, by a new obligation, and yet not offend, as they imagined, againſt this law; for they interpret theſe words of firſtlings already brought forth: No man might ſanctify ſuch; but while they were in the womb, they might, ſaying, "I vow that lamb (ſuppoſe) which "my ewe goes with, to be a whole burnt-offering to God, "if it be a male:" But they could not vow it for a peace-offering, becauſe no man could alter any thing for his own profit.

———Whether it be ox or ſheep.] Under theſe two are comprehended all other kind of creatures, whoſe firſtlings belonged to God.

———It is the Lord's.] Numb. iii. 13. and viii 17. For this reaſon, no man was to preſume to vow ſuch things; it being a kind of mockery to make a preſent of that to another, which was his own before.

Ver. 27. And if it be of an unclean beaſt.] Moſt underſtand this of the firſtling of an unclean beaſt. Againſt which there is this objection, that ſuch things were before ordered to be redeemed, not with money, but with a lamb, Exod. xiii. 13. Therefore, it ſeems more reaſonable to underſtand this of the firſtling of ſuch an unclean beaſt, which a man hath redeemed, ver. 13. but afterward devoted to God; which he might do; for, after the redemption, it was to become his own again.

Ver. 28. Notwithſtanding, no devoted thing that a man ſhall devote unto the Lord.] Nothing which was devoted by that ſort of vow, which was called cherem, as the term is here in the Hebrew, with a curſe, as the word implies, upon themſelves and others, if the thing were not employ'd according to their vow.

Ver. 29. None devoted, which ſhall be devoted of men, ſhall be redeemed, but ſhall ſurely be put to death.] Some learned Men have, from theſe words, aſſerted, that parents and maſters among the Jews, had ſuch a power over their children and ſervants, that they might devote them to death, and ſo kill them; only the ſentence of the prieſt was to concur, to whom every devoted thing fell, as his portion, This is maintained by Ludov. Capellus, and confuted by Mr. Selden, lib. 4. de jure Nat. & Gent. juxta Diſciplin Hebr. cap. 6. where he judiciouſly obſerves, That this power would have too much intrenched upon the Sixth Commandment, if private men might have, at their pleaſure, thus diſpoſed of their children and ſlaves. And, in the next chapter, he explains the ſenſe of this verſe; and proves, indeed, that there may be a Cherem (minhaadam) of men, or from among men, as well as of beaſts; but this word hath four ſeveral ſenſes among the Hebrews. Firſt, It ſignifies the ſacred gift it ſelf, which was devoted to God, or to holy uſes; and ſo it ſignifies in the foregoing verſe 28. Secondly, It ſignifies that which was devoted to perdition and utter deſtruction, either by the right of war, or upon account of capital Enmities; an example of which we have in Jericho, Joſh. vi. 17. where the whole city was a Cherem, devoted to deſtruction, as a puniſhment to their enemies; yet ſo that the metals were made a Cherem of the firſt ſort; that is, ſacred to the Lord and his holy uſes. And thus the great Sankedrim (called in ſcripture, the whole congregation) might devote thoſe to be a Cherem, who, going to wars, did not obey orders, and perform the charge laid upon them. An example of which we have, Judges xxi. 5. 1 Sam. xiv. 24. We omit the other two for brevity ſake, of which there are examples, Joſh. vi. ver. vi. Ezra x. 8. Acts xxiii. ver. 12, 14, 21. becauſe the Cherem, here mentioned by Moſes, is of this ſecond ſort, for it is evident, that the Cherem of the firſt ſort, mentioned verſe 28, was of ſuch things over which they had an entire power, to diſpoſe of them as they pleaſed. And therefore thoſe words, Both of man and beaſt, the Hebrews underſtand of their ſlaves, whether men or women, who where Canaanites, or Gentiles, not others, who were in their power as much as their beaſts, to give away, or to ſell. But to take away their life, or to give them to be ſlain, was not in their power; but all the effect of this Cherem was, that the whole right which they had to the ſervice of ſuch ſlaves, was transferred by him who devoted them to the ſervice of the prieſts, and ſacred uſes. But though they might not devote their ſervants to death, yet they might their enemies, before they went out to war with them; and ſuch of their own people alſo as did not obſerve the military laws. An example of which we have Numb. xxi. 2. Upon which account alſo, the inhabitants of Jabeſh Gilead were ſlain, Judges xxi. 9, 10. for violating the ſolemn publick Cherem, pronounced againſt thoſe who came not up to Mizpeh, ver. 5. And this is the Cherem ſpoken of in this verſe. For the Cherem, whereby a man was excommunicated, only loaded him with many curſes, and made him execrable; ſo that no man might come near him; but did not affect his life.

Ver. 30. All the tithe of the land, &c. is the Lord's.] By an antient right, before the promulgation of the Moſaic law: For this is the firſt time we find any mention of a law about tithes: For which the Divine Legiſlator not aſſigning any reaſon, it is an indication that this was a pious cuſtom univerſally eſtabliſh'd; and therefore being no novelty, but rather the practice of all nations, the Jews could not think it burthenſome to them; unleſs they would be altogether irreligious, and not acknowledge God to be the author and fountain of all the plenty and happineſs they enjoyed; which was the intention of paying tithes; as the Gentiles antiently did, and the Jews themſelves, after they had been victorious over their enemies. For which there being no precept that appears, what can we think, but that natural reaſon, and the common cuſtom of mankind, (founded perhaps upon ſome direction given to our firſt parents from above) taught them to make this acknowledgment to God, as the author of their ſucceſſes and ſafety, as well as of all plenty and proſperity? See Gen. xiv, xix. and xxviii. ver. 22.

——— Whether of the ſeed of the land, or of the fruit of the trees.] By the ſeed of the land is meant corn, (as Raſi expounds it) and by the fruit of the trees, wine and oil; for thus they are reckon'd up in other places, Numb. xviii. 12. where he gives the prieſts the firſt fruits of the wine, and oil, and wheat. And the like we read in Deut. xviii. ver. 3 and 4. and in Deut. xv. ver. 23. they are commanded to eat before God, the tithe of their corn, of their wine, and their oil. Under which laſt is comprehended the fruit of all other trees; as under the word ſeed, in this place, ſeems to be comprehended all manner of herbs, as well as corn: for ſo the Phariſees underſtood it; and it was not diſallowed by our bleſſed Saviour.

——— It is holy unto the Lord.] God having declared his right to the tithe, in the beginning of the verſe; here commands it to be reſerved for him as his ſacred portion. Which he afterward conferred and ſettled upon the Levites by a ſpecial donation, Numb. xviii. 21.

Ver. 31. And if a man will at all redeem ought of his tithes, he ſhall add thereto the fifth part thereof.] Mr. Selden, in his Hiſtory of Tithes, chap. 11. ſpeaking of the ſecond tithe, mentioned Deut. xiv. 23. which was to be ſpent at Jeruſalem, (either in kind, or elſe if it were too far thither, by turning it into money, and therewith to purchaſe proviſions for feaſts) ſaith, "that to this tithe, the Jews "apply that of Lev. ch. xxvii. ver. 30, 31." But for this he quotes only R. S. Jaachi; who, though he were a great Talmudiſt, yet muſt not be thought to underſtand the ſenſe of all their Doctors. Aben Ezra, it is plain, (to name no more) takes it otherwiſe; making Moſes to ſpeak of ſuch tithe as Abraham gave Melchiſedeck, and Jacob vowed to God. Lyra, a converted Jew, agrees with him; And there is great reaſon for it; no ſuch thing as a ſecond tithe being as yet ordained; and when they were commanded, and the changing of them into money allowed, there is not a word ſaid of adding a fifth part, ſee Deut. xiv. ver. 24, 25, which is ſufficient to ſhew that Moſes, in theſe two verſes, ſpeaks of the firſt tithe, which was paid to the Levites, by a law made ſometime after this; which transferred the right that God had in the tithe of the land unto them; which, if any man had a deſire to redeem, and not to pay in kind, God allows him ſo to do; becauſe the tithe was not more holy than things vowed to God; but then he was to do, as in the caſe of ſuch things, (ver. 13.) add a fifth part, over and above, to what ſuch a portion of tithe was eſteemed to be worth. The reaſon of which was, as Mr. Calvin well obſerves, not that the prieſt ſhould obtain more than his due, by the man who deſired to redeem his his tithe; but that the man might not make a gain of the prieſt: For it is ſeldom ſeen that a husbandman deſires to pay money, rather than his tithe; unleſs he propound ſome conſiderable advantage to himſelf.

Ver. 32. And concerning the tithe of the herd, and of the flock.] Every one knows, that by the tithe of the herd, is meant calves, and by the flock, is to be underſtood lambs and kids (Lev. i. 2.) for this was the tithe of thoſe young ones that were brought forth that year; the ſame cattle not being again tithed every year. And he ſpeaks of clean beaſts which were allowed in ſacrifice; for tithe was not paid of other beaſts; but their firſt-born only was the Lord's. This tithe was paid to God every year, as an euchariſtical ſacrifice, for all the benefits they received from God by their cattle.

—— Even of whatſoever paſſeth under his rod.] This expreſſes the manner of this tithing; which, if we will believe the Jews, was thus: they were all brought into a ſheep-cote, in which there was but one gate or door, and that ſo narrow, as to ſuffer no more than one to come out at once. Their dams being placed without, and the gate opened, the young ones were invited by their bleatings, to preſs to get out to them; and as they paſſed by, one by one, a man, who ſtood at the gate with a rod, coloured with oker, told them in order; and when the tenth came out, whether it was male or female, ſound or not, he marked it with his rod, and ſaid, Let this be holy in the name of the tenth; and this account R. Solomon and others give of this matter; of which notion they are ſo fond, that R. Bechai, on Numb. xvii. makes Jacob, who vowed tithe of all that God ſhould give him, to have decimated his children in this manner, beginning at Benjamin, and ſtopping at Levi, who was the tenth, according to that computation. But Bochart thinks, Moſes doth not ſpeak here of the rod of the tithes, but of the ſhepherd's crook; and ſo doth Aben Ezra, the Syriac, and the Vulgar; for the flock paſſed under his rod, as often as he numbred them; which was every morning and evening, if he was a good ſhepherd, eſpecially in the evening. See Hierozoicon, P. i. lib. 2. cap. 44. p. 499. Of this, Jeremiah ſpeaks, chap. xxxiii. 13. and Ezekiel alludes to it, when he ſaith, chap. xx. 37. "I will cauſe you to paſs under the rod" Where Kimchi notes it is the ſame phraſe with this in Leviticus, and as much as to ſay, "As he who "telleth his ſheep, holdeth a rod in his hand, and telleth "them one by one, and brings out the tenth for the tithe, "ſo will I number you, and the ſinners ſhall periſh," &c.

—— The tenth ſhall be holy unto the Lord.] That is, according to Maimonides, the fat and the blood of them was offered at the altar; and then the owners ate the fleſh any where in Jeruſalem, as they did the leſſer holy things. For the prieſts had no portion of them, but all belonged to the owner; as did the paſchal lamb. If there was any blemiſh in them, whether before or after the tithing, then they might be eaten in any place. And ſo Bartenora, as Dr. Owtram obſerves, lib. i. de ſacrif. cap. 11. "We do "not find in the whole law, that any part of theſe tenths "was given to the prieſts." So many more of their doctors, who obſerve that Moſes did not reckon theſe among the twenty-four gifts (for ſo many they make the whole number of them) which were beſtowed upon the prieſthood. But as there is nothing elſe in ſcripture to warrant this, which no where preſcribes how theſe tenths ſhould be employed, but only declares they are holy to the Lord; ſo this very phraſe ſufficiently ſignifies, that they belonged to God's miniſters; and if not entirely to the prieſts, much leſs entirely to the owners of them, before they were the Lord's; but if they were to eat them at Jeruſalem, as the Jews imagine, the Levites ſure were to have their ſhare, with the ſtranger and other poor people; as they were to have in their ſecond tithe of corn, wherewith they made feaſts there, Deut. xiv. 27, 28, 29.

Ver. 33. He ſhall not ſearch whether it be good or bad; neither ſhall he change it.] It is not eaſy to give an account, why God required ſo punctually the tenth calf, goat, or lamb, that tho' it were never ſo lean, or blemiſhed, he would not ſuffer it to be exchanged for a better, unleſs it were to avoid all diſputes, ſtrife and contention. There are thoſe indeed, who think the reaſon was, becauſe in thoſe ages, this was look'd upon as ſo ſacred a number, that it myſtically denoted God; whoſe divine perfections, providence, and bounty, they were thought to acknowledge who gave the tenth to him; which was not to be altered and changed, any more than he himſelf can be.

—— If he change it at all, then both ſhall be holy.] As it was in beaſts vowed to God, ver. 9, 10.

—— It ſhall not be redeemed.] Nor might they ſell it; no more than ſuffer it to be redeemed. If they did, he that ſold it, or bought it, got nothing, as Maimonides ſpeaks; and beſides, the ſeller was to be ſcourged, as he that ſold the cherems given to the prieſt, ver. 28.

Ver. 34. Theſe are the commandments which the Lord commanded Moſes, for the children of Iſrael, in mount Sinai.] That is, theſe were likewiſe added to the preceding commandments, before the Iſraelites removed from the wilderneſs of mount Sinai; ſee chap. xxv. 1. for having ſaid before, in the concluſion of the foregoing chapter, "theſe "are the ſtatutes and judgments, and laws which the "Lord made," &c. which reſpect all that preceded in this book: The commandments here ſpoken of can relate to nothing more, but the laws delivered in this chapter with reſpect to vows, devoted things, and tithes.

Theſe laws ought not to be paſſed over, without ſome ſerious conſideration, how far we may be concerned in them. And therefore we deſire the reader to obſerve, that the very ſame pious inclinations have ever been in all good Chriſtians, which Moſes here ſuppoſes, in the former part of this chapter, would be in the Jews, to devote ſome part of their goods, their houſes, or lands, to the ſervice of God; which became ſacred things, and were to be employed to no other uſe but that. The very firſt Chriſtians had ſo much of this ſpirit in them, that they ſold all their poſſeſſions, and good, and let every one that needed have a ſhare of them, Acts ii. 45. chap. iv. 35. becauſe the whole number of believers attended to nothing elſe, but the ſervice of their divine Saviour; and the Apoſtles alſo were to be furniſhed with ſufficient means, to go and propagate the Goſpel in all the world. Where, aſſoon as the Chriſtian religion prevailed in any place, immediately the ſame voluntary oblations were made, in ſuch a proportion, as ſerved not only for the ſupport of the ſervice of God in that church, but contributed to the ſubſiſtence of the Chriſtians at Jeruſalem, who had been brought low by parting with their eſtates, to promote the firſt preaching of the Goſpel. This we find in a great number of places; but it may ſuffice to ſay, that the feaſts of charity were maintained out of theſe oblations.

By which it is apparent, that they conſidered themſelves as having the very ſame obligations upon them in this matter, which the Jews formerly had; and therefore it is no wonder, that the tithes came in time to be devoted for the maintenance of God's miniſters. For it is ſenſeleſs to imagine, that the Goſpel, which conſtrained them to give up themſelves to God, ſhould not direct them, with the ſame free diſpoſition, to give ſome of their goods, as Moſes here ſuppoſes the Jews would do, for the maintenance of his ſervice. And it is unreaſonable to think, it did not incline them to allow the miniſters of God as honourable a ſupport, as had been granted under the Moſaic law; which required, beſide the tenths here mentioned, another tithe of the remainder, to be employed in ſacrifices at Jeruſalem, of which the Levites had their ſhare. To which, if we add the firſt-born, with all ſin-offerings, and the prieſts ſhare of peace-offerings, and the skins of the ſacrifices, which alone produced a good revenue, as Philo obſerves, and likewiſe all ſuch conſecrations as are mentioned in this chapter, the Levites cities and ſuburbs; it will eaſily appear, that it could not be ſo little as a fifth part of the fruit of the land, which came to their ſhare.

Now the reaſon we find no ſuch certain rate determined by the Goſpel, as was by this law, is, becauſe there was no need of it; and, for the ſame reaſon, there was none for a good while, ſettled by the church; all the revenues belonging to it, which ſerved for all ſorts of pious uſes, ariſing from the devotion and oblations of the people, which were more than ſufficient for God's ſervice. This was viſible in the beginning of our religion, when the liberality of the primitive Chriſtians far exceeded any donations of that nature, under the law. And they could not imagine that they who ſucceeded them would fall ſo ſhort, as not to offer a competent proviſion for the ſervice of the Divine Majeſty; tho not ſo much as they themſelves had beſtowed; becauſe there could not be the ſame neceſſity.

neceſſity. And ſo Mr. Selden himſelf obſerves, that this reaſon is given by Agobardus, why nothing was decreed in councils, or publickly promulgated by the fathers, in the firſt ages, concerning the contribution of their goods, and the decent decoration of churches; becauſe there was no neceſſity for it: the religious devotion, and promptitude of Chriſtians to ſuch benefactions, ultro æſtuante, being very fervent in a voluntary manner.

And when this ſpirit of liberality began to languiſh, ſo that it became neceſſary to make laws on that occaſion; they could not think fit to order leſs for the ſettled maintenance of God's ſervice, than the tenth (beſide all voluntary oblations) which had been the part moſt eminently limitted under the law of nature, long before the law of Moſes. See Irenæus, lib. iv. cap 34. where he declares, that Chriſtians, having greater hopes, could not give leſs than they did in former times, when their hopes were fainter, and more imperfect.

We ſhall add but one obſervation more, from an excellent perſon of our own church (Mr. Thorndike, in his Rites of the Church, &c. p. 219.) That as all ſuch conſecrations, as here are mentioned by Moſes, tended to communion with God, by the participation of ſacrifices offered to him, and which were maintained by ſuch contributions; ſo whatſoever is devoted by Chriſtians to ſuch holy uſes, as to build and repair churches, to maintain holy aſſemblies, and to ſupport thoſe who adminiſter God's ordinances, or enable the poor to attend upon them, hath the like intention, to obtain an intereſt in the ſacrifice of Chriſt, repreſented in the Euchariſt; which is the chief part of the ſervice rendered to God in the church. This is remarkably exemplified, in the account which Tertullian gives of Marcion the Heretic, lib. De Præſcriptionibus, cap. 30. who, when he firſt embraced the faith of Chriſt, and was received unto the church, pecuniam catholicæ eccleſiæ contulit, contributed a ſum of money to the church; which money, when he fell off from the Chriſtian truth to his own hereſy, was immediately thrown out, together with himſelf. This both demonſtrates that they continued, in thoſe days, to bring offerings into the treaſury of the church, and that the intention of them was, that they might have communion with the church in all its ſervices: For when men apoſtatiſed from Chriſtianity, the church caſt out their offerings, as an evidence that they no longer maintained any communication with them.

We ſhall cloſe all, with the words of Conradus Pellicanus, upon the 13th verſe of this chapter; which will ſhew the ſenſe of the firſt reformers in this matter. "All the "tithe is the Lord's, and remains ſo for ever, &c. And "therefore tithes are to be paid by divine and natural "right, and religiouſly expended, according to his appoint-"ment, &c. And if tithes ſhould not be ſufficient for "the maintenance of thoſe who ought to be ſuſtained in "the church, at the publick charge, the ninths, or the "eighths, ought of neceſſity to be raiſed, by the judg-"ment and conſent of the church; for the law of cha-"rity dictates this, and the excellent, irreprehenſible or-"dinance of God; which charity binds more ſtrongly in "the Evangelical law, than in the Moſaic: Inſomuch, as "the church ought to be more perfect than the ſynagogue, "and charity, than fear.

The End of the Third Book of MOSES, called LEVITICUS.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS

ON THE

FOURTH BOOK of MOSES,

CALLED

The ARGUMENT.

The fourth Book of Moſes is called Numbers in our language, becauſe the ſacred Hiſtorian numbers the Iſraelites, and that too in the beginning of the book, which ſhews from whence it derived its name. Its Hebrew title is Vaiedaber, which ſignifies and he ſpake. Some Jews call it Bemiddebar, in the deſert, becauſe it includes the hiſtory of what paſt during the wandering of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, for the ſpace of about thirty-nine years.

In this Book is ſet down the charge and duty of the Prieſts and Levites; their maintenance, and miraculous confirmation in the prieſthood. Here are laws ceremonial, moral, civil, and mixt. Herein is repreſented to us the wonderful and ſingular conduct God was pleaſed to uſe towards them, in leading them through the wilderneſs, to the land of Promiſe. Here are alſo related ſeveral events, which happened in their journey, the occaſions, circumſtances, and ſucceſs whereof, afford us many excellent inſtructions, as well in eccleſiaſtical as civil affairs.

We ſee here, that after the erection and conſecration of the tabernacle, the heads or princes of the twelve tribes ſeverally brought their gifts and offerings; and how that ungrateful people were frequently engaged in murmurings and rebellions againſt the LORD their benefactor, and againſt Moſes, his miniſter for their welfare and preſervation; together with the examples of dreadful judgments that ſucceeded their crimes.

We read here alſo, how Moſes was eaſed of the burden of his ſolitary adminiſtration, by the aſſiſtance of ſeventy elders; notwithſtanding which, he meets with much trouble, both from Aaron his brother, and Miriam his ſiſter; as alſo, how he, having ſent ſome perſons to diſcover the land of Canaan, the ill report of the ſpies, and the murmurings thence occaſioned amongſt the people, cauſed ſeveral judgments to be inflicted on them, whereby ſome immediately periſhed, and the reſt were ſentenced to wander up and down the wilderneſs forty years, from their coming out of Egypt, and to die in it at laſt.

In this Book likewiſe are recorded ſeveral ſins, both particular and common, with their juſt puniſhments, as well as the virtues and heroic actions of good men, with their particular rewards. Moreover, the infinite mercy of God is excellently ſet forth here, in his favourable acceptance of the prayers of Moſes, his faithful ſervant; in his gracious forgiveneſs of ſo many crimes, and of ſuch rebellious and ſeditious perſons, and in the beneficent diſpenſation of his multiplied bleſſings upon that people; whereof ſome were ſpiritual, in preſerving the truth of his doctrine, and the purity of his ſervice vice amongſt them; and others perſonal, in delivering them from the hands of their enemies, in giving them glorious victories over them, and in vouchſafing to them an unmerited variety of other temporal advantages.

Laſtly, we have here an account, how the children of Iſrael prepared themſelves to take poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, whoſe borders and bounds are deſcribed; whereupon the tribe of Reuben, that of Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, having taken poſſeſſion of the country on that ſide Jordan, it is, by the command of God, aſſigned to them for an inheritance. Here are alſo rules and orders delivered, with reference to the partition of Canaan, with the exception of ſeveral places and cities, ſome of which were to be appropriated to the Levites, and others were to ſerve for cities of refuge.

This Book contains the hiſtory of the events and tranſactions of about thirty-nine years, or thirty-eight years and nine months, according to ſome, viz. from the ſecond month of the ſecond year, after the departure of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, to the beginning of the eleventh month of the fortieth year.

CHAP. I.

1 God commandeth Moſes to number the people. 5 The princes of the tribes. 17 The number of every tribe. 47 The Levites are exempted for the ſervice of the Lord.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes in the wilderneſs of Sinai, in the tabernacle of the congregation, on the firſt day of the ſecond month, in the ſecond year, after they were come out of the land of Egypt, ſaying,

2 Take ye the ſum of all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, with the number of their names, every male by their poll:

3 From twenty years old and upward, all that are able to go forth to war in Iſrael; thou and Aaron ſhall number them by their armies.

4 And with you there ſhall be a man of every tribe; every one head of the houſe of his fathers.

5 ¶ And theſe are the names of the men that ſhall ſtand with you: of the tribe of Reuben; Elizur the ſon of Shedeur.

6 Of Simeon; Shelumiel the ſon of Zuriſhaddai.

7 Of Judah; Nahſhon the ſon of Amminadab.

8 Of Iſſachar; Nethaneel the ſon of Zuar.

9 Of Zebulun; Eliab the ſon of Helon.

10 Of the children of Joſeph: of Ephraim, Eliſhama the ſon of Ammihud; of Manaſſeh, Gamaliel the ſon of Pedahzur.

11 Of Benjamin; Abidan the ſon of Gideoni.

12 Of Dan; Ahiezer the ſon of Ammiſhaddai.

13 Of Aſher; Pagiel the ſon of Ocran.

14 Of Gad; Eliaſaph the ſon of Deuel.

15 Of Naphtali; Ahira the ſon of Enan.

16 Theſe were the renowned of the congregation, princes of the tribes of their fathers, heads of thouſands in Iſrael.

17 ¶ And Moſes and Aaron took theſe men, which are expreſſed by their names.

18 And they aſſembled all the congregation together on the firſt day of the ſecond month, and they declared their pedegrees after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, by their poll.

19 As the LORD commanded Moſes, ſo he numbred them in the wilderneſs of Sinai.

20 And the children of Reuben, Iſraels eldeſt ſon, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, by their poll, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

21 Thoſe that were numbred of them, even of the tribe of Reuben, were forty and ſix thouſand and five hundred.

22 ¶ Of the children of Simeon, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, thoſe that were numbred of them, according to the number of the names, by their polls, every male from twenty years old old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

23 Thoſe that were numbred of them, even of the tribe of Simeon, were fifty and nine thouſand and three hundred.

24 ¶ Of the children of Gad, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

25 Thoſe that were numbred of them, even of the tribe of Gad, were forty and five thouſand ſix hundred and fifty.

26 ¶ Of the children of Judah, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

27 Thoſe that were numbred of them, even of the tribe of Judah, were threeſcore and fourteen thouſand and ſix hundred.

28 ¶ Of the children of Iſſachar, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

29 Thoſe that were numbred of them, even of the tribe of Iſſachar, were fifty and four thouſand and four hundred.

30 ¶ Of the children of Zebulun, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

31 Thoſe that were numbred of them, even of the tribe of Zebulun, were fifty and ſeven thouſand and four hundred.

32 ¶ Of the children of Joſeph, namely of the children of Ephraim, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

33 Thoſe that were numbred of them, even of the tribe of Ephraim, were forty thouſand and five hundred.

34 ¶ Of the children of Manaſſeh, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

35 Thoſe that were numbred of them, even of the tribe of Manaſſeh, were thirty and two thouſand and two hundred.

36 ¶ Of the children of Benjamin, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war:

37 Thoſe that were numbred of them, even of the tribe of Benjamin, were thirty and five thouſand and four hundred.

38 ¶ Of the children of Dan, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

39 Thoſe that were numbred of them, even of the tribe of Dan, were threeſcore and two thouſand and ſeven hundred.

40 ¶ Of the children of Aſher, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

41 Thoſe that were numbred of them, even of the tribe of Aſher, were forty and one thouſand and five hundred.

42 ¶ Of the children of Naphtali, throughout their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

43 Thoſe that were numbred of them, even of the tribe of Naphtali, were fifty and three thouſand and four hundred.

44 Theſe are thoſe that were numbred, which Moſes and Aaron numbred, and the princes of Iſrael, being twelve men: each one was for the houſe of his fathers.

45 So were all thoſe that were numbred of the children of Iſrael, by the houſe of their fathers, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war in Iſrael;

46 Even all they that were numbred, were ſix hundred thouſand and three thouſand and five hundred and fifty.

47 ¶ But the Levites, after the tribe of their fathers, were not numbred among them.

48 For the LORD had ſpoken unto Moſes, ſaying,

49 Only thou ſhalt not number the tribe of Levi, neither take the ſum of them among the children of Iſrael:

50 But thou ſhalt appoint the Levites over the tabernacle of teſtimony, and over all the veſſels thereof, and over all things that belong to it: they ſhall bear the tabernacle, and all the veſſels thereof, and they ſhall miniſter unto it, and ſhall encamp round about the tabernacle.

51 And when the tabernacle ſetteth forward, the Levites ſhall take it down: and when the tabernacle is to be pitched, the Levites ſhall ſet it up: and the ſtranger that cometh nigh, ſhall be put to death.

52 And the children of Iſrael ſhall pitch their tents every man by his own camp, and every man by his own ſtandard, throughout their hoſts.

53 But the Levites ſhall pitch round about the tabernacle of teſtimony; that there be no wrath upon the congregation of the children of Iſrael: and the Levites ſhall keep the charge of the tabernacle of teſtimony.

54 And the children of Iſrael did according to all that the LORD commanded Moſes, ſo did they.

Verſe 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes in the wilderneſs of Sinai, in the tabernacle of the congregation, on the firſt day of the ſecond month, &c.] All that is related in the foregoing book, ſeems to have paſſed in the firſt month of the ſecond year after their coming out of Egypt, in the beginning of which the tabernacle was ſet up, Exod. xl. 2, 17, and in the middle of it the paſſover was kept; as appears by this book, chap. ix. 1, 2, &c.

Verſe 2. Take ye the ſum.] There had been a muſter, as we may call it, of the people, before the tabernacle was erected, Exod xxx. 12. and conſequently ſome months before this; for it was in order to a contribution, which every one was to make towards the holy work, Exod. xxxvii. 26. whereas this was for the better diſpoſing of their camps about the tabernacle now it was ſet up; and for their more regular march when they removed from mount Sinai; which they were to do ſhortly.

——— Of all the congregation of the children of Iſrael,] who alone were numbered; all except the Levites; but none of the mixed multitude, that came with them out of Egypt, Exod. xii. 38.

——— After their families.] It appears by Joſh. ch. vii. ver. 16, 17, &c. that the ſeveral Tribes of Iſrael were divided into families, and thoſe families into houſholds, and each of thoſe houſholds had an head or chief, who is called the father of it. There were ſeventy of theſe families in all; but ſome tribes had more, others fewer, according to the number of ſouls (as they are called) that is, perſons that were in each, when they went down into Egypt, Gen. xlvi. 27.

——— By the houſe of their fathers.] Every family being diſtributed into houſes (which we now call families) theſe houſes were denominated from their chief, whom they called their father; for no houſes were denominated from the mother, as the Jews ſay.

——— With the number of their names.] The names of every perſon, in the ſeveral houſes, were ſet down and regiſtered, that they might be the better known.

——— Every male by their poll.] But no women, for the reaſon which follows:

Verſe 3. From twenty years old and upward.] Which was ever after this, the age when men were thought fit for war.

——— All that are able to go forth to war in Iſrael.] One would think by this, they were not to number very aged and decrepid people, becauſe they were no more able to go to war, than women and children, and thoſe under twenty years of age. And if we may believe Joſephus, l. 2. Antiq. cap. 9. after fifty years old, men were not bound to pay the half ſhekel which was due in ſuch muſters; and therefore we may reaſonably think were excuſed from going to war, unleſs they had an inclination to it.

——— Thou and Aaron,] who had the higheſt authority in the nation.

——— Shall number them by their armies.] This ſeems to import, that in taking the account of them, they diſtributed them into certain troops or companies, out of which were formed regiments, as we now ſpeak, and greater regular bodies, which compoſed ſeveral armies. We do not find this was required in the former numbering, Exod. xxx. that being for another end, not for their more orderly march, in their remove from mount Sinai. And here we cannot but take notice, what a vaſt difference there was between this method and that rude way which Cecrops, the firſt king of Attica, after the Ogygian flood, which happened about the time of Moſes, took to know the numbers of his people, which the Greek writers ſay, was by requiring every one to bring a ſtone, κ᾽ βάλλειν εἰς τὸ μέσον, and throw it down before them; which he counting, found them twenty thouſand. So the Scholiaſt upon Pindar, Ode ix. and others in Meurſius de Regibus Athenienſ. l. 1. cap. 7.

Verſe 4. And there ſhall be with you a man of every tribe.] Whom they were to take for their aſſiſtants.

——— Every one of the houſe of his fathers.] The LXX. and the Vulgar underſtand this to ſignify the principal perſons in each tribe, who were beſt acquainted with every family and houſhold in that tribe. And ſo it is expounded, ver. 6. and many think theſe were the firſt-born in their tribe; but there is this objection againſt it, that Nahſhan, who is named for the tribe of Judah, ver. 7. was not deſcended from the firſt-born of that tribe; for Pharez was not Judah's eldeſt ſon, Selah being before him, who had children, as we find chapter xxvi. ver. 20. Beſide, when the princes of the tribes are reckoned again, chapter xxxiv. in the laſt year of their abode in the wilderneſs, none of them are derived from theſe men mentioned here, but from others; and therefore theſe were the moſt eminent men in the ſeveral tribes, upon a different account, either for wiſdom, or valour, or ſome other excellent quality.

Ver. 3. And theſe are the names of the men that ſhall ſtand with you of the tribe of Reuben, &c.] The e is little to be obſerved concerning theſe tribes, but that they are here placed, not in order of their birth, but of their mothers who bare them. Firſt the children of Leah, who are all reckoned in the ſame order wherein they were born of her, ver. 6, 7, 8, 9. Then the children of Rachel, ver. 10, 11. and after them, the children of the two hand-maids, in the four following verſes; where, ver. 12. Dan is mentioned firſt, he being the firſt-born of Bilhah, whom Rachel gave Jacob for his wife, Gen. xxx. 5. but then the next that follow are not reckoned according to the order of their birth; for Naphtali, who was born next, is placed laſt; and the youngeſt ſon of Zilpah placed before the eldeſt; for which we cannot now ſee the reaſon, though it is likely it was upon the account of ſome pre-eminence or other which they had gained; as, Ephraim, the youngeſt ſon of Joſeph, is mentioned before Manaſſeh the eldeſt, ver. 10. becauſe Jacob had given him the precedence, when he bleſſed them before his death, Gen. xlviii. 19.

Verſe 6. Of Simeon, Shelumiel the ſon of Zuriſhaddai.] There is leſs to be obſerved concerning the names of theſe great men of each tribe; for whatſoever the import of them may be in the Hebrew Language (which Chytræus and others have endeavoured to make out) it ſignifies nothing to us; only moſt of them ſhew, how much God was in the thoughts of thoſe, who impoſed theſe names on their children; for Elizur ſignifies, My God the rock; and Shelumiel is as much as, God my peace, or, God my rewarder; and Zuriſhaddai, My rock omnipotent, or, All-ſufficient, &c.

Ver. 14. The ſon of Deuel.] So he is called alſo, ch. vii. ver. 42. and yet in the ſecond chapter, ver. 14. he is called the ſon of Reuel; for theſe two letters, Daleth and Reſch, are very often changed, the one for the other; as Ripah, Gen. x. 3. is called Dipah, 1 Chron. i. 6. as, on the other hand, dodamin, Gen. x. 4. is called rodamin, 1 Chron. i. 7.

Verſe 16. Theſe were the renowned of the congregation.] The Hebrew word Keruim ſignifies properly, men called or named; that is, who had the honour to be named by God to this employment; which made them more noble than they were before. But, without this reſpect to their nomination by God, this word ſignifies in general, Famous Men, as we tranſlate it chap. xvi. 2. xxvi. 9. or Renowned, Ezek. xxiii. 23. Accordingly the Vulgate tranſlates it, Moſt noble.

——— Princes of the tribes of their Fathers,] as appears more plainly from the noble offerings which each of them made, for the dedication of the altar, chap. vii.

——— Heads of thouſands in Iſrael.] Men not only of great authority; ſuch as Jethro adviſed Moſes to take to his aid in governing the people, Exod. xviii. 21. but the higheſt of that rank; being chief commanders over all the thouſands that were in their ſeveral tribes; under whom, no doubt, were many inferior officers of great account; for ſo all people have found it neceſſary to ſubmit themſelves to the government of ſome ſupreme power, with ſeveral ſubordinate rulers under it. In which Iſrael exceeded all other nations, being under the government of God himſelf, who appointed Moſes immediately under him, with ſeveral others, as we here find, to aſſiſt him; for it is truly obſerved by Xenophon, that nothing is either ſo profitable for men, or ſo becoming, as good order; and, on the contrary, nothing ſo miſchievous or unſeemly, as confuſion. Now order is nothing elſe, but the apt diſpoſition of every thing, in its proper place, for certain ends and uſes. Accordingly among men, nothing is more neceſſary, than that every one ſhould know and keep his place, in that degree and rank that belongs to him; as was here ordered by God, for the preſervation and good government of his people.

Ver. 20. And the children of Reuben Iſraels eldeſt ſon, by their generations, &c. The word generations ſeems to be larger than families, as that is than houſes, comprehending every family in that tribe; as families comprehend every houſhold; and houſhold comprehends every perſon therein. So the meaning is, all that were deſcended from Reuben, according to their ſeveral families, and houſes in thoſe families, and perſons in thoſe houſes.

Ver. 21. Thoſe that were numbered of them, &c. were forty and ſix thouſand and five hundred.] Some have obſerved, that this tribe was one of thoſe who had the ſmalleſt number of men in it; in which they think was fulfilled the prophecy of Jacob, who foretold that Reuben ſhould not excel, Gen xlix. 4. But we do not look upon this as ſolid; for there were ſeveral tribes who all this time had fewer perſons in it than this, particularly the children of Joſeph, whom Jacob compared to a fruitful bough, Gen. xlix, 22. were much fewer. See ver. 33. and 35. Gad alſo, Benjamin and Aſher, were fewer in number than Reuben; who, in this regard, excelled five tribes.

Ver. 23. Of the tribe of Simeon were fifty and nine thouſand, and three hundred.] He had ſix children when they went down into Egypt, and Reuben but four; which is a plain reaſon of the greater increaſe of this tribe than the former.

Ver. 24. Of the children of Gad, &c.] It is probable, that this tribe is therefore mentioned next, tho' deſcended from an handmaid, becauſe they were to encamp and march together with Simeon, under the ſtandard of Reuben, as is ordered in the next chapter, ver. 14.

Ver. 25. Of the tribe of Gad were forty and five thouſand, ſix hundred and fifty.] He had more ſons than Simeon, Gen. xlvi. ver. 10, and 16. when they came out of Egypt, and yet fewer deſcended from him, by many thouſands, than there did from Simeon; of which the reaſon doth not appear.

Ver. 27. Of the tribe of Judah were threeſcore and fourteen thouſand, and ſix hundred.] It may be juſtly thought, that Jacobs prophecy concerning the power and ſtrength of this tribe, Gen. xlix. 8, &c. began already to be fulfilled, they being far more numerous than any other.

Ver. 28. Of the tribe of Iſſachar, &c.] There is a plain account why this tribe and Zebulun are mentioned next to Judah, becauſe they two marched under his ſtandard, chap. xi. 4, 5, 7. It may be obſerved alſo, that theſe two tribes were more numerous than many other, who had more children when they came out of Egypt.

Ver. 32. Of the children of Ephraim.] He had the pre-eminence given him to Manaſſeh long ago, Gen. xlviii. 19. and therefore is here placed before him.

Ver. 33. Of the tribe of Ephraim were forty thouſand and five hundred.] Though they were hitherto but few in compariſon with ſome other tribes; yet, in this the prophecy of Jacob was fulfilled, Gen. xlviii. 19, 20. that they were more fruitful than Manaſſeh, there being above eight thouſand perſons more in this tribe than in the other. ver. 35.

Ver. 35. Of Manaſſeh were thirty and two thouſand and two hundred.] This was now the ſmalleſt tribe; but before they came to Canaan they grew very numerous, being increaſed above twenty thouſand, chap. xxvi. 34.

Ver. 37. Of the tribe of Benjamin were thirty five thouſand and four hundred.] Though Benjamin had more children than any of the reſt of his brethren, when they went down into Egypt, Gen. xlvi. 21. where it appears, he had ten ſons, yet his tribe had the feweſt men in it of all other, except Manaſſeh.

Ver. 39. Of Dan were threeſcore and two thouſand and ſeven hundred.] On the contrary, Dan, who had but one ſon, when they went down into Egypt, Gen. xlvi. 23. grew to a greater number then any other tribe, except Judah So variouſly did the Divine Providence work, in fulfilling the promiſe to Abraham of multiplying his ſeed.

Ver. 41. Of Aſher were forty and one thouſand and five hundred.] The growth of this tribe was not proportionable to that of ſome other, conſidering how many children Aſher had, at their going down into Egypt. But they increaſed near twelve thouſand more, before they got out of the wilderneſs, chap. xxvi. 47.

Ver. 43. Of Naphtali were fifty and three thouſand and four hundred.] The great increaſe of this tribe is alledged by Bochart, to juſtify his interpretation of, Gen. xlix 21. by altering the punctuation of the words. But it muſt be obſerved, that five other tribes were more numerous than Naphtali, when this account was taken of them.

Ver. 45. &c. So were all thoſe that were numbered, &c. ſix hundred thouſand, and three thouſand and five hundred and fifty.] By which it appears there was not one man dead ſince their laſt numeration, ſeven months before, when they were taxed for the tabernacle; for they were at that time juſt ſo many as are here mentioned, Exod. xxxviii. 26. As for Nadab and Abihu, they were of the tribe of Levi, who are not here reckon'd; and the man who was ſtoned for blaſphemy, Lev. xxiv. was not of Iſrael, by the ſide of his father.

Ver. 47. But the Levites, after the tribe of their fathers, were numbred among them. There was no account taken of them, among the other tribes; as it is likely they were not comprehended in the former number, Exod. xxxviii. 26. being the perſons who took the account, ver. 21. and had before this conſecrated themſelves to the Lord, chap. xxxii. 29.

——— After the tribe of their fathers.] This is an Hebraiſm, for the fathers of their tribe expreſſing, in ſhort, what is at large ſaid of all the reſt, by their Generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, ver. 20. 22, 24, &c.

Ver. 49. Only thou ſhalt number the tribe of Levi, &c.] Becauſe they were intended for another ſervice, and therefore were to be numbered by themſelves. This tribe produced as brave men as any other, which appeared ſufficiently, when God's honour was to be vindicated, Exod. xxxii. but God did not deſign them for the wars of Canaan, they having employment enough in carrying and guarding the tabernacle.

And from this example, the Heathens learned to exempt all thoſe who miniſtred to their gods, from all other ſervices; particularly from the war. Strabo notes, (lib. 9. Geograph.) this cuſtom to be as old as Homer's time; for in all his catalogue there is no mention of any ſhip that went againſt Troy from Alalcomenon, becauſe that city was ſacred to Minerva, who is thence called by Homer Ἀλαλκομενηΐς Ἀθήνα. The ſame is obſerved by Cæſar, lib. 6. of the ancient Druids, that they were freed from the wars, and from tribute alſo: Which privilege Baſil challenges as belonging to the clergy κατὰ τὸν παλαιὸν νόμον, according to the ancient law, Epiſt. cclxix, and St. Greg.

Greg. Nazianzen doth the ſame in many places, particularly in his Letter to Julianus, Epiſt. clxvi.

Ver. 50. But thou ſhalt appoint the Levites over the tabernacle.] This was their work to attend continually upon the houſe of God.

——Of teſtimony.] So it is called, becauſe the ark of the teſtimony was there; for which it was principally made. See Exod. xxxviii. ver. 21.

——They ſhall bear the tabernacle, and all the veſſels thereof.] As is particularly directed in the fourth chapter.

——And ſhall encamp round about the tabernacle.] As a guard unto it; they being like to the legions about the palace of a great king, to ſecure and defend it from violence or rudeneſs, which was the reaſon that they did not march under any of the ſtandards of the other tribes; becauſe they were to form a camp by themſelves; the order of which is directed in the third chapter. And, for the ſame reaſon, they were not to go to the wars, becauſe their camp was to attend upon the tabernacle, the houſe of God.

Ver. 51. And when the tabernacle ſetteth forward, the Levites ſhall take it down; and when it is to be pitched, the Levites ſhall ſet it up.] When the Iſraelites removed to a new ſtation, the tabernacle was taken in pieces, that it might be the more eaſily carried from place to place; in which the Levites were to be employed; and likewiſe in putting it together again, when it was to be ſet up, where they reſted in their journies, as is more fully ordered in the fourth chapter.

——And the ſtranger that comes nigh ſhall be put to death.] As a preſumptuous perſon, in meddling with that which doth not belong to him. The author of Schebet Jehudah extends this to all ſtrangers, who worſhipped ſtrange gods; and declares there was a golden ſword hung up in the gate of the temple, with this inſcription; The ſtranger that cometh nigh ſhall be put to death.

Ver. 53. But the Levites ſhall pitch round about the tabernacle of teſtimony, that there be no wrath upon the congregation of the children of Iſrael.] To prevent the other camp of the Iſraelites from coming too nigh the tabernacle; whereby they might have incurred God's diſpleaſure.

——And the Levites ſhall keep the charge of the tabernacle of teſtimony.] That is, they were to be a conſtant guard about it; that no man might approach nearer than God allowed, and ſo bring heavy puniſhments upon himſelf and upon the congregation.

CHAP. II.

1 The order of the tribes in their tents.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, ſaying,

2 Every man of the children of Iſrael ſhall pitch by his own ſtandard, with the enſign of their fathers houſe: far off about the tabernacle of the congregation ſhall they pitch.

3 ¶ And on the eaſt-ſide toward the riſing of the ſun, ſhall they of the ſtandard of the camp of Judah pitch, throughout their armies: and Nahſhon the ſon of Amminadab ſhall be captain of the children of Judah.

4 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbred of them, were threeſcore and fourteen thouſand and ſix hundred.

5 And thoſe that do pitch next unto him, ſhall be the tribe of Iſſachar: and Nethaneel the ſon of Zuar ſhall be captain of the children of Iſſachar.

6 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbred thereof, were fifty and four thouſand and four hundred.

7 Then the tribe of Zebulun: and Eliab the ſon of Helon ſhall be captain of the children of Zebulun.

8 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbred thereof, were fifty and ſeven thouſand and four hundred.

9 All that were numbred in the camp of Judah, were an hundred thouſand and fourſcore thouſand and ſix thouſand and four hundred, throughout their armies: theſe ſhall firſt ſet forth.

10 ¶ On the ſouth-ſide ſhall be the ſtandard of the camp of Reuben, according to their armies: and the captain of the children of Reuben, ſhall be Elizur the ſon of Shedeur.

11 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbred thereof, were forty and ſix thouſand and five hundred.

12 And thoſe which pitch by him, ſhall be the tribe of Simeon: and the captain of the children of Simeon, ſhall be Shelumiel the ſon of Zuriſhaddai.

13 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbred of them, were fifty and nine thouſand and three hundred.

14 Then the tribe of Gad: and the captain of the ſons of Gad ſhall be Eliaſaph the ſon of Reuel.

15 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbred of them, were forty and five thouſand and ſix hundred and fifty.

16 All that were numbred in the camp of Reuben, were an hundred thouſand and fifty and one thouſand and four hundred and fifty, throughout their armies: and they ſhall ſet forth in the ſecond rank.

17 ¶ Then the tabernacle of the congregation ſhall ſet forward with the camp of the Levites, in the midſt of the camp: as they encamp, ſo ſhall they ſet forward, every man in his place by their ſtandards.

18 ¶ On the weſt-ſide ſhall be the ſtandard of the camp of Ephraim, according to their armies: and the captain of the ſons of Ephraim, ſhall be Eliſhama the ſon of Ammihud.

19 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbred of them, were forty thouſand and five hundred.

20 And by him ſhall be the tribe of Manaſſeh: and the captain of the children of Manaſſeh, Manaſſeh, ſhall be Gamaliel the ſon of Pedahzur.

21 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbred of them, were thirty and two thouſand and two hundred.

22 Then the tribe of Benjamin: and the captain of the ſons of Benjamin, ſhall be Abidan the ſon of Gideoni.

23 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbred of them, were thirty and five thouſand and four hundred.

24 All that were numbred of the camp of Ephraim, were an hundred thouſand and eight thouſand and an hundred, throughout their armies: and they ſhall go forward in the third rank.

25 ¶ The ſtandard of the camp of Dan ſhall be on the north-ſide by their armies: and the captain of the children of Dan, ſhall be Ahiezer the ſon of Ammiſhaddai.

26 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbred of them, were threeſcore and two thouſand and ſeven hundred.

27 And thoſe that encamp by him, ſhall be the tribe of Aſher: and the captain of the children of Aſher, ſhall be Pagiel the ſon of Ocran.

28 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbred of them, were forty and one thouſand and five hundred.

29 Then the tribe of Naphtali: and the captain of the children of Naphtali, ſhall be Ahira the ſon of Enan.

30 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were fifty and three thouſand and four hundred.

31 All they that were numbred in the camp of Dan, were an hundred thouſand and fifty and ſeven thouſand and ſix hundred: they ſhall go hindmoſt with their ſtandards.

32 ¶ Theſe are thoſe which were numbred of the children of Iſrael by the houſe of their fathers; all thoſe that were numbred of the camps throughout their hoſts, were ſix hundred thouſand and three thouſand and five hundred and fifty.

33 But the Levites were not numbred among the children of Iſrael; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

34 And the children of Iſrael did according to all that the LORD commanded Moſes: ſo they pitched by their ſtandards, and ſo they ſet forward, every one after their families, according to the houſe of their fathers.

Ver. 2. Every man of the children of Iſrael ſhall pitch by his own ſtandard, with the enſign of his fathers houſe, &c.] We ſhall now endeavour to give our readers the cleareſt account we are able to offer, of the order and manner of encamping and marching uſed by the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, becauſe it is not only curious, but uſeful, in order to underſtand ſeveral paſſages in the ſacred writings that allude to it, both in the Old and New Teſtament, eſpecially in the prophetical books. It is plain, from the ſhort account Moſes has left us of it, that it was preſcribed by God himſelf. And indeed if we conſider their vaſt multitude, their untractable genius, the great mixture of other nations that joined them, and the quantity of baggage which they were obliged to carry with them, we can hardly ſuppoſe that any man, how wiſe and experienced ſoever, could be equal to ſuch a task without a ſupernatural aſſiſtance. 'Tis true indeed, that the word wilderneſs, by which the ſcene of their forty years wandering is called, ought not to be taken too literally, ſeeing they did generally encamp near inhabited towns and villages, whoſe territories could furniſh them with proviſions for themſelves, and paſture for their cattle, and when that failed, they were often miraculouſly ſupplied; but nevertheleſs, to provide for all other exigencies, which muſt needs be ſuppoſed to happen in ſuch a very numerous hoſt, to ſettle ſuch excellent order and diſcipline in it, as to prevent confuſion, diſturbances, and defection; to train up ſuch a number of excellent ſoldiers, and to teach them to incamp and decamp, to march and fight in ſo regular a manner as they did, whatever Moſes might have learned from the Egyptians, who underſtood doubtleſs as much of the art of war as any other nation then did, ſeems ſtill to have been above the power of meer man. And this conſideration ſhould, one would think, ſtop the mouths of thoſe who can find nothing of the military art worth admiring, except in the antient Greeks and Romans.

However, as the ſubject has been copiouſly handled by other pens, who have been forced to ſupply the ſuccinct account of Moſes, out of the writings of the Talmudiſts, and other ancient Jews, not to ſay, ſometimes out of their own imaginations; we hope our readers will eaſily excuſe us from launching farther into theſe particularities, than we have good grounds for, from the ſacred records. Tho' where we find any thing in the Talmud, Joſephus, or any other Rabbi, that carries a face of probability, or gives any light to the account we have in the text, we ſhall venture to tranſcribe it.

The ſacred hiſtorian informs us that, "they were to "pitch their tents every man by his own camp, tribe and "ſtandard, throughout the whole hoſt: that the tribe of "Levi was to encamp round the tabernacle, and have the "charge and cuſtody of it; and that the reſt of the tribes "ſhould pitch their ſtandards with the enſigns of their "fathers houſe round about it, at an equal and conve-"nient diſtance from it," chap. i. 5, 2, &c. ii. 1, 2, &c. The rabbies affirm this diſtance of the tents of the tribes, except that of Levi, to have been two thouſand cubits, which they therefore call a ſabbath day's journey, becauſe they were not allowed to go further on that day. This was the diſtance between Jeruſalem and the mount of olives.

This ſpace of two thouſand cubits ſeems well grounded, it being the diſtance which God commanded the people to keep from the ark, when they were on their march. They affirm moreover, that there was likewiſe a diſtance of three miles between every tribe, which, if true, muſt form a ſquare of near thirty-ſix miles about. Joſephus indeed doth not tell us what that diſtance was, but he repreſents it as very conſiderable, and adds, that there were as ſpacious ſtreets, lanes, markets, ſhops, &c. in the camp, and in as regular a diſpoſition, as could be ſeen in the moſt polite cities. However the moſt rational Jews extend not this diſtance between tribe and tribe, two thouſand paces, nor that which each tribe took up beyond four thouſand. To which they add, that in the center of the camp was an interval of eight thouſand paces ſquare, of which the inmoſt four thouſand was for the tabernacle, and the tribe of Levi; and the reſidue, which was between theſe and the other tribes, was for paſture ground for their cattle.

Whatever

Whatever this diſtance might have been, it would not compoſe a perfect ſquare, becauſe the tabernacle and its court were oblong, much leſs a circle, as ſome have fancied it, from the words round about, taken too literally; but it was an oblong ſquare, in the center of which was the tabernacle with its court, in length one hundred, and in breadth fifty cubits. Parallel to each of the four ſides of it, and at a proper diſtance between it and the other tribes, was that of Levi; along the eaſt end was Eleazer the high prieſt, with the reſt of the family of Aaron, at the head of the four claſſes of Levites. As for the pavilion of Moſes, all that he has recorded of it, is only, that it ſtood on the ſame ſide with thoſe of Aaron's children; though we may reaſonably ſuppoſe that it was in the moſt honourable tract in the whole camp, as he was their chief and law-giver; and neareſt the tabernacle, to which he was obliged to repair upon all emergencies: But whether we may conclude from his ſituation, that the tabernacle ſtood eaſt and weſt, that is, with the holy of holies toward the eaſt, and the entrance into it fronting the weſt, as Cunæus and others have obſerved, is not very material. On the weſt ſide were the Gerſhonites, under Eliazaph, the ſon of Levi, in number ſeven thouſand five hundred; the Kohathites under Elizaphan, the ſon of Uziel, in number 8600; and laſtly, the Merarites, under Zuriel, the ſon of Abihail, in number ſix thouſand two hundred; and theſe two laſt encamped along the ſouth and north ſides. All theſe together compoſed an army of twenty two thouſand three hundred perſons.

The tribe of Levi was not numbered at the firſt recenſion of the people, but ſome time after. However, if the reader compares the account of it, chap. iii. 39. with that of the three claſſes of which it conſiſted, he will find it come ſhort of the odd three hundred, which are therefore ſuppoſed to have been the firſt-born of that tribe, and conſequently out of the caſe; and as the Levites were choſen out inſtead of the firſt-born of all the tribes, when the number of the former came to be taken, and was found to fall ſhort of the firſt-born of the latter, by two hundred eighty three, this overplus was redeemed at the rate of five ſhekels of the ſanctuary, and the money given to the ſons of Aaron.

Each of the Levites had their particular functions and charges allotted to them, both as to the worſhip of God, and the cuſtody of the tabernacle, with all its apparatus, as may be ſeen, chap. vi. This is all that can be affirmed, with any certainty, concerning the camp of the Levites, which the rabbies affect to call the little hoſt, or camp of the Lord, probably becauſe we find that name given to them where mention is made of Hezekiah's reſtoring them, —— To ſing the praiſe of God within the gates of the Lord's camp, 2 Chron xxxi. 2. whereas the other tribes are called, The grand army, or, The great hoſt.

As the tribe of Levi made four ſmall bodies on each ſide the tabernacle, ſo the other twelve compoſed four large camps parallel to them, each body conſiſting of three tribes. That of Judah, whether becauſe it was the moſt conſiderable, it muſtering ſeventy-four thouſand ſix hundred fighting men, or in conſideration of the ſcepter, or the Meſſiah, being promiſed to it, had the poſt of honour, and encamped on the eaſt ſide, behind the prieſts, at the head of two other tribes; namely, that of Iſſachar, conſiſting of fifty-four thouſand four hundred, and that of Zebulun, of fifty-ſeven thouſand men; ſo that this body amounted to one hundred eighty-ſix thouſand four hundred fighting men; but whether he encamped on the right hand of the other two tribes, as the Jews think, or, which is more probable, ſeeing he was as it were the head and general, in the center betwixt them, is neither certain nor material: The ſame may be ſaid alſo of the heads of the other three bodies.

Reuben was at the head of the next body, and his camp on the ſouth ſide: his tribe conſiſted of forty-ſix thouſand five hundred men; and Simeon, with fifty-nine thouſand three hundred men; and Gad, with forty-five thouſand ſix hundred and fifty, marched under his banner: This body conſiſted of one hundred fifty one thouſand four hundred and fifty.

The next was Ephraim at the head of forty thouſand five hundred of his own tribe, under whom Manaſſeh led thirty-two thouſand two hundred, and Benjamin thirty five thouſand four hundred, in all, one hundred and eight thouſand one hundred: Theſe encamped on the weſt ſide.

The laſt was the tribe of Dan, with ſixty-two thouſand ſeven hundred; and that of Aſher, conſiſting of forty-one thouſand five hundred; and Naphtali, fifty-three thouſand four hundred, in all one hundred fifty-ſeven thouſand five hundred and fifty: And theſe were on the north ſide of the tabernacle. Thus the Hoſt of Iſrael amounted to ſix hundred and three thouſand five hundred and fifty fighting men, excluſive of the Levites. To which if we add the old men, above ſixty, and the young men, under twenty, together with their wives, daughters, ſervants, ſlaves, and ſtrangers, they muſt amount, in the whole, to little leſs than three millions; to which if we add, their vaſt number of cattle, waggons, and baggage, the leaſt ſpace that can be allowed for ſuch a prodigious camp, muſt be above twenty miles, tho' we ſuppoſed the ſpaces between each tribe to have been much leſs than the Jewiſh doctors affirm.

This ſtupendous camp is, by the ancient Jews, called three-fold, whereof the tabernacle with its precinct is ſtyled, the camp of the Divine Majeſty; the next, the camp of Levi; and the largeſt, the camp of Iſrael; and may well enough be compared to a cathedral in the heart of a city, round which are the biſhop, dean, canons, and inferior clergy, and round about them the laity. The Gemarrah affirms, it extended twelve miles in length and breadth. This they infer from Numbers xxxiii. 49. where it is ſaid, that they pitched by Jordan, from Beth-jeſimoth, even unto Abel-ſhittim, in the plain of Moab; which, they ſay, is the diſtance between thoſe two places. But here we think there is no need of making the Jewiſh miles ſhorter than our own; as a certain author has done, without any foundation, only to juſtify the Gemarriſts; conſidering what a vaſt quantity of empty ground they allow between every tribe, for paſture land, and the like.

Theſe four large bodies had each their general ſtandard, to which their own and the other tribes were to repair. Under theſe were twelve more, one to every tribe; and under theſe, again, were thoſe of all the heads of families, amounting to fifty-ſeven, according to the Moſaic account in this chapter; and, indeed, leſs than that number cannot be ſuppoſed. What the colours, emblems, and devices of thoſe enſigns were, neither Moſes, nor any inſpired writer, has told us. The Rabbi's, indeed, have plentifully ſupplied all thoſe defects; but tho' they are not always to be depended upon, yet they have given us ſome particulars relating to the four main bodies, and theſe of the twelve tribes, which ſeem not to be ill grounded. Of the firſt, they tell us, that Judah had the emblem of a lion, with this device, "Let God ariſe, and let his enemies be ſcat-"-tered," Pſal. lxviii. 1. but the latter ſeems more proper for the enſign of Levi, if any belonged to that tribe, which is not improbable; becauſe thoſe were the words uſed by the Levites when the ark was removing. As for the lion, it is the emblem by which Jacob repreſented the tribe of Judah in his laſt will, Gen. xlix. 9. But they add, that it was painted of three colours on the ſtandard. Reuben's enſign, they ſay, had the figure of a man, to which ſome add that of a mandrake, alluding to thoſe he found in the fields when a boy, Gen. xxx. 14. That of Ephraim was an ox, or calf, and ſeems to be taken from the words of the Moſaic bleſſing to that tribe; "His glory is like the "firſtling of his bullock," Deut. xxxiii. 17. To the tribe of Dan they give an eagle, which agrees neither with the benediction of Moſes, which compares him to a lion's whelp; nor to that of Jacob, which reſembles him to a ſerpent in the way. However, in order to make it agree with the latter, they pretend, that the eagle was painted with a ſerpent in his talons; but we have ſtill a better authority for theſe four emblems, namely, 1. The viſion of Ezekiel, chap. i. ver. 10. which is univerſally allowed to allude to it. 2. The Pſalmiſt, who repreſents the congregation of Iſrael under theſe emblems, Pſal. lxviii. 10. And laſtly, St. John, in his Apocalypſe; where he adumbrates the faithful by the four beaſts about the throne of God, crying night and day, "holy, holy," &c. Rev. iv. 6, 7. from which it is moſt probable, that the four Evangeliſts came afterwards to have the ſame emblems more particularly appropriated to them. The Pſalmiſt deſcribes the commonwealth of Iſrael, particularly whilſt in the wilderneſs, their marches, encampments, order, and many other circumſtances, in a moſt elegant and poetic manner, and, among other alluſions uſed there, he repreſents it under that of hajah, Pſal. lxviii. 10. which our verſion rightly renders congregation; but in the original it ſtrictly ſignifies life, beaſt, or living creature; and being compared to that which is mentioned in Ezekiel, which had all theſe four figures, of a man, lion, ox, and eagle, is juſtly concluded to allude to theſe four general ſtandards, repreſenting the congregation of Iſrael, as it doth that of the faithful under Chriſt in the Revelations.

That every tribe had likewiſe their particular ſtandard, of a different colour, and with a different emblem, and motto, if they uſed any ſo early, can hardly be queſtioned, and that theſe two laſt might be taken from thoſe alluſions uſed by Jacob in his laſt bleſſing, is far from improbable: And thus, for inſtance, Naphtali might have a large tree, or a hind, in his enſign; Iſſachar an aſs, couching under his burden; Benjamin a wolf, and ſo on; beyond which, we dare not affirm any thing. The Rabbi's add, from what authority is more than we can gueſs, many other particulars relating to thoſe twelve ſtandards; as, firſt, that their colour anſwered to that of the twelve ſtones in the breaſt-plate of the high-prieſt, on which the name of each tribe was engraven: But the misfortune is, they are far from being unanimous in aſſigning the names and colour of thoſe ſtones; and there is likewiſe another great difficulty, which they have not thought fit to anſwer, namely, that Levi had its own name and ſtone, which they affirm to have been, ſome a beril, others a ſaphire, &c. on the breaſt-plate, tho' it be not here numbered with the other twelve, but, inſtead of it, that of Joſeph is divided into Ephraim and Manaſſeh. Concerning the four grand ſtandards, they add, that each of them had three letters taken from the names of their three firſt patriarchs, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; Judah had A. I. I. Reuben B. TZ. H. Ephraim R. CH. K. and Dan M. K. B. But theſe, with the learned interpretations of them, as well as ſome other ſurpriſing particulars which they relate of this camp, ſuch as that wherever they pitched it, there ſprang up a fountain before the tabernacle, which divided it ſelf into ſtreams, that ſupplied every tribe with water; that the miraculous pillar, which went before them, did lower the mountains, raiſe the vallies, &c. to facilitate their march, with many more of the like nature; we willingly leave to thoſe who have either a Jewiſh faith to believe them, or a Jewiſh conſcience to retail them. Much leſs ſhall we cite the dreams of other authors concerning the enſigns of the principal families. It is certain, however, that they had a ſeparate camp for lepers, and thoſe who were afflicted with any impure diſtempers, or had defiled themſelves by touching a dead body, and the like; all which were excluded from this grand camp. Some other orders Moſes gave, to preſerve cleanlineſs and decency, which need not be dwelt upon.

With reſpect to the order of their decamping and marching, together with their manner of engaging their enemies in battle, and ſuch like particulars, as they are more largely preſcribed by Moſes, we ſhall content our ſelves with mentioning the principal heads relating to each of them, and removing ſome few difficulties which occur on that ſubject.

In their decamping, whilſt in the wilderneſs, the firſt thing they were to obſerve, was the ſignal from the miraculous pillar, which Moſes immediately took care to have communicated throughout the camp, by two ſilver trumpets, made by God's command, Numb. x. 1, &c. and becauſe theſe were uſed for other ſignals, ſuch as the calling the elders to the tabernacle, proclaiming of anniverſary feſtivals, and the like; they were differently blown, according to the ſignal they were to give; that is, for inſtance, ſingly, when to call the elders; jointly, when to call the whole congregation; with a conſtant and even ſound when they proclaimed a march; and with a tremulous, interrupted tone, when they ſounded to battle. To theſe the Apoſtle ſeems to allude, when he ſays, "If "the trumpet gives an uncertain ſound, who will prepare "to battle, 1 Cor. xiv. 8. As ſoon, therefore, as the firſt ſignal was given for marching, every tribe immediately prepared for it, and this took up ſome conſiderable time, eſpecially with reſpect to the prieſts and Levites, who had the tabernacle, with all its utenſils, to take down, cover, and pack up, and ſet apart, upon waggons for that purpoſe, and part to be carried upon men's ſhoulders.

There ariſes a difficulty between the command here given, with relation to taking down the tabernacle, with the veil and covering, &c. and the prohibition for any, but the high-prieſt, to go into the ſanctuary; ſince even he was not allowed to enter it above once a year, Exod. xxx. This ſeeming contradiction is generally ſolved by the common anſwer, That God can diſpenſe with his own laws. Others confine the entrance permitted here to the ſons of Aaron, only to the holy place, whilſt the high-prieſt alone went into the moſt holy one, to take down the veil, cover the ark, &c. And this ſeems probable enough, by comparing what is commanded in the fourth and tenth chapters of Numbers, if we can ſuppoſe one ſingle perſon, and he not very young, to have been ſufficient for all this. But the learned Baſnage has given us a better, and more ſatisfactory ſolution; which is, that this entrance was only forbidden whilſt the tabernacle was ſet up, and the cloud, which was the known ſymbol of the Divine preſence, continued to cover the holy place: but when that was removed, and the ark, or mercy-ſeat, had been covered, or, perhaps, ſhut up in ſome proper repoſitory, then it might be lawful for the prieſts to come in, and aſſiſt the high-prieſt and his ſons in the removal of the reſt.

Another ſeeming contradiction is, where it is ſaid, that aſſoon as the ark was covered, which was to be with a treble covering, they ſhould put in the ſtaves of it, chap. iv. 6. whereas it is ſaid, Exod. xxv. 15. that the ſtaves ſhould never be taken out; beſides, how was it poſſible to inſert them, after the ark had been packed up in ſo many coverings? Some, therefore, inſtead of they ſhall put in, read, they ſhall lay or put on the ſtaves, namely, upon mens ſhoulders; but ſince the original may as properly be rendered, and they ſhall let the ſtaves abide therein, that is, they ſhall cover it over without taking them out, probably, leſt the ark might be ſeen through the holes of the covering, through which the ſtaves muſt afterwards have been inſerted, there is no occaſion to ſeek for a better ſolution than this. All the other utenſils of the tabernacle had likewiſe their particular coverings, under which they were carried, as the moſt proper method to inſpire the people with awful impreſſions. And therefore the opinion of thoſe, who think that the ark was uncover'd, when carried in proceſſion round the walls of Jericho, and into the camp of Iſrael, by the two ſons of Eli, ſeems ſomewhat abſurd, eſpecially conſidering what terrible puniſhments were denounced, and actually inflicted on thoſe who ventured to look upon it. It is therefore more probable, that it had, in ſuch caſes at leaſt, a sky-blue covering thrown over it.

By that time the Levites had prepared every thing for the march, the ſecond ſignal was given; for it is not to be doubted, that the other tribes could be ſooner in a readineſs than they; and then all who bore arms repaired to their ſtandards, whilſt the invalids, together with the women, children, and carriages, marched towards the rear. Upon the next ſignal, the tribe of Judah, at the head of the other two that belonged to his camp, began to march; and theſe were followed, according to the moſt general opinion, by the Gerſhonites and Merarites, who guarded the waggons loaded with the boards, skins, and pillars, belonging to the tabernacle. Upon the next ſignal, Reuben and his two tribes began to move; after whom came the Kohathites, bearing the ark, altar, table, and other utenſils upon their ſhoulders; ſo that by the time they had compleated their journey, the Gerſhonites and Merarites had ſet up the tabernacle, and made all the neceſſary preparations for their reception. It is not eaſy to gueſs, how far ſuch a camp may be ſuppoſed to march in a day, in that regular manner: Baſnage has intended to prove, that they did not exceed two miles a day, from what is ſaid of one of their marches, chap. x. 33. that they took up three days in going from Sinai to Kibbroth-hattavah, which he ſaith is not reckoned above ſix miles, according to the calculation of ſeveral authors. But who knows, how far this ſmall progreſs might be owing to the ruggedneſs of the ways, the interpoſition of mountains, or to ſome other cauſe, not taken notice of by the ſacred hiſtorian? This therefore can by no means be an argument, that they never marched further in one day, ſince, in an open country, ſuch an army might eaſily march ſix times that ground, if not more.

The

The ark and its bearers were guarded by the tribes of Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manaſſeh, aſſoon as the third ſignal was ſounded. To this alludes that of the Pſalmiſt, (lxxx. 1, 2.) Thou that ſitteſt between the Cherubims, ſhine forth before Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manaſſeh. Laſt of all came the tribes of Dan, Aſher, and Naphtali, eſcorting the invalids, that none might be left behind; for which reaſon this body is called the rearward, or, as our margins more properly word it, the gathering hoſt, Joſh. vi. 9. However, it is plain, that this order was not always obſerved; for firſt, with reſpect to the ark, there are ſome places where it is ſaid it went before them, chap. x. 33. Joſh. iii. 6. upon ſome emergencies; and with reſpect to the whole body, tho' they kept this excellent order of marching in columns, as often as the lands through which they paſſed would permit it; yet when they were obliged to paſs whole ridges of mountains, they were then forced to make the beſt of their way, ſome over heights, others through the valleys, in the beſt order they could, for their own preſervation.

If it be objected here, that it was unſafe and impolitic to leave the women, children, invalids, and all their rear, where they had been once attacked by the Amalekites; all that can be anſwered to this, is, that when they had once croſſed the red ſea, and beheld an end of their enemies, they thought themſelves ſafe on that ſide, and conſequently appointed that order of marching, which was certainly the moſt convenient, where it could be practiſed with ſafety. But we need not doubt, that whenever they had any reaſon to apprehend being attacked in the rear, they placed them nearer to the vanguard. Neither do we meet with any other inſtance of ſuch an attack, for thoſe other nations with whom they had encounters, always came in front, and endeavoured to obſtruct their paſſage. However, though we have now expreſſed the ſentiments of all thoſe who have written upon the ſubject, yet we are far from thinking it improbable, that the wives, children, and moſt valuable baggage, might march, either with each body to which it belonged, or in the intermediate ſpaces, whenever the ground permitted it.

All that can be added upon this ſubject, is, that when the ark was taking up for the march, it was cuſtomary for Moſes to ſay, Ariſe, O Lord, and let thy enemies be ſcattered, and let them that hate thee flee before thee; and when the prieſt ſet it down, he ſaid, Return, O Lord, unto the many thouſands of Iſrael, chap. x. Theſe words are ſtill uſed to this day by the Jews, when they fetch the roll of the law out of its repoſitory, and when they carry it thither again.

Concerning their method of engaging their enemies, all we can ſay farther on this head with any certainty, is, that as ſoon as the trumpets had given the ſignal for the engagement, the combatants gave a great ſhout, and fell immediately upon their enemies; an inſtance of which we find ſometime after, when they went to engage the Philiſtines. This was no leſs practiſed by the Greeks, Romans, and other warlike nations, who often increaſed the horrid noiſe, with claſhing their weapons againſt their ſhields. With relation to their beſieging of towns, we are ſtill more in the dark: All therefore that can be added here, is what the Jews tell us from a paſſage in Joſhua, chap. xi. 19. that when he ſent to offer peace to the cities of Canaan before he entered it, he diſpatched three expreſſes to them; the firſt was to permit thoſe, who had an inclination to leave the country, to depart; the ſecond was to offer peace to thoſe who would make it with him, and the laſt to declare war againſt ſuch as refuſed the two laſt offers.

CHAP. III.

1 The ſons of Aaron. 5 The Levites are given to the prieſts for the ſervice of the tabernacle, 11 Inſtead of the firſt-born. 14 The Levites are numbered by their families. 21 The families, number, and charge of the Gerſhonites. 27 Of the Kohathites, 33 Of the Merarites. 38 The place and charge of Moſes and Aaron. 40 The firſt-born are freed by the Levites. 44 The overplus are redeemed.

THESE alſo are the generations of Aaron and Moſes, in the day that the LORD ſpake with Moſes in mount Sinai.

2 And theſe are the names of the ſons of Aaron; Nadab the firſt-born, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.

3 Theſe are the names of the ſons of Aaron, the prieſts which were anointed, whom he conſecrated to miniſter in the prieſts office.

4 And Nadab and Abihu died before the LORD, when they offered ſtrange fire before the LORD, in the wilderneſs of Sinai, and they had no children: and Eleazar and Ithamar miniſtred in the prieſts office, in the ſight of Aaron their father.

5 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

6 Bring the tribe of Levi near, and preſent them before Aaron the prieſt, that they may miniſter unto him.

7 And they ſhall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole congregation, before the tabernacle of the congregation, to do the ſervice of the tabernacle.

8 And they ſhall keep all the inſtruments of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the charge of the children of Iſrael, to do the ſervice of the tabernacle.

9 And thou ſhalt give the Levites unto Aaron and to his ſons: they are wholly given unto him out of the children of Iſrael.

10 And thou ſhalt appoint Aaron and his ſons, and they ſhall wait on their prieſts office: and the ſtranger that cometh nigh, ſhall be put to death.

11 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

12 And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Iſrael, inſtead of all the firſt-born that openeth the matrice among the children of Iſrael: therefore the Levites ſhall be mine,

13 Becauſe all the firſt-born are mine; for on the day that I ſmote all the firſt-born in the land of Egypt, I hallowed unto me all the firſt-born in Iſrael, both man and beaſt, mine they ſhall be: I am the LORD.

14 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes in the wilderneſs of Sinai, ſaying, 15 Number the children of Levi, after the houſe of their fathers, by their families: every male from a month old and upward, ſhalt thou number them.

16 And Moſes numbred them according to the word of the LORD, as he was commanded.

17 And theſe were the ſons of Levi, by their names; Gerſhon, and Kohath, and Merari.

18 And

18 And these are the names of the sons of Gershon by their families; Libni and Shimei.

19 And the sons of Kohath by their families; Amram, and Izehar, Hebron, and Uzziel.

20 And the sons of Merari by their families; Mahli, and Mushi: these are the families of the Levites, according to the house of their fathers.

21 Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites, and the family of the Shimites: these are the families of the Gershonites.

22 Those that were numbred of them, according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, even those that were numbred of them, were seven thousand and five hundred.

23 The families of the Gershonites shall pitch behind the tabernacle westward.

24 And the chief of the house of the father of the Gershonites, shall be Eliasaph the son of Lael.

25 And the charge of the sons of Gershon, in the tabernacle of the congregation, shall be the tabernacle, and the tent, the covering thereof, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation:

26 And the hangings of the court, and the curtain for the door of the court, which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar round about, and the cords of it, for all the service thereof.

27 ¶ And of Kohath was the family of the Amramites, and the family of the Izeharites, and the family of the Hebronites, and the family of the Uzzielites: these are the families of the Kohathites.

28 In the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, were eight thousand and six hundred, keeping the charge of the sanctuary.

29 The families of the sons of Kohath shall pitch on the side of the tabernacle south-ward.

30 And the chief of the house of the father of the families of the Kohathites, shall be Elizaphan, the son of Uzziel.

31 And their charge shall be the ark, and the table, and the candlestick, and the altars, and the vessels of the sanctuary wherewith they minister, and the hanging, and all the service thereof.

32 And Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest, shall be chief over the chief of the Levites, and have the oversight of them that keep the charge of the sanctuary.

33 ¶ Of Merari was the family of the Mahlites, and the family of the Mushites: these are the families of Merari.

34 And those that were numbred of them, according to the number of the males from a month old and upward, were six thousand and two hundred.

35 And the chief of the house of the father of the families of Merari, was Zuriel the son of Abihail: these shall pitch on the side of the tabernacle north-ward.

36 And under the custody and charge of the sons of Merari shall be the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and the sockets thereof, and all the vessels thereof, and all that serveth thereto.

37 And the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords.

38 ¶ But those that encamp before the tabernacle toward the east, even before the tabernacle of the congregation eastward, shall be Moses and Aaron, and his sons, keeping the charge of the sanctuary, for the charge of the children of Israel; and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

39 All that were numbred of the Levites, which Moses and Aaron numbred at the commandment of the LORD, throughout their families, all the males from a month old and upward, were twenty and two thousand.

40 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Number all the first-born of the males of the children of Israel, from a month old and upward, and take the number of their names.

41 And thou shalt take the Levites for me (I am the LORD) instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel; and the cattle of the Levites, instead of all the firstlings among the cattle of the children of Israel.

42 And Moses numbred as the LORD commanded him, all the first-born among the children of Israel.

43 And all the first-born males, by the number of names from a month old and upward, of those that were numbred of them, were twenty and two thousand two hundred and threescore and thirteen.

44 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

45 Take the Levites instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle, cattle, and the Levites ſhall be mine: I am the LORD.

46 And for thoſe that are to be redeemed of the two hundred and threeſcore and thirteen, of the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael, which are more than the Levites;

47 Thou ſhalt even take five ſhekels apiece by the poll, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary ſhalt thou take them: the ſhekel is twenty gerahs.

48 And thou ſhalt give the money wherewith the odd number of them is to be redeemed, unto Aaron and to his ſons.

49 And Moſes took the redemption-money of them that were over and above them that were redeemed by the Levites.

50 Of the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael took he the money; a thouſand three hundred and threeſcore and five ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary.

51 And Moſes gave the money of them that were redeemed, unto Aaron, and to his ſons, according to the word of the LORD, as the LORD commanded Moſes.

Verſe 1. Theſe are the generations of Aaron and Moſes.] Being now to give an account of the Levites, who had not been numbered with the reſt of the children of Iſrael, he ſets down the deſcendants of the principal perſons among them, viz. Aaron (whom he ranks in the firſt place, becauſe he was the eldeſt brother, and his poſterity were advanced to the dignity of prieſts) and Moſes, whoſe poſterity, were only miniſters to the prieſts, as all the common Levites were. It may ſeem, indeed, at firſt ſight, as if he gave an account only of Aaron's poſterity, ver. 2. but if we look further to ver. 27, 28, we ſhall find the poſterity of both enumerated in the family of the Amramites; from which both Aaron and Moſes were deſcended: Amram being their father; from whom the genealogy of Moſes is derived, 1 Chron. xxiii. ver. 13, 14, &c. through their generations; as here thoſe of Aaron.

——— In the day that the Lord ſpake unto Moſes in mount Sinai.] This circumſtance ſeems to be particularly ſpecified, becauſe, at that time, Nadab and Abihu (who are mentioned in the next verſe) were both alive, and very eminent perſons, Exod. xxiv. 1, 9, 10, though they were now dead, at this numbering of the Levites.

Verſe 2. Theſe are the names of the ſons of Aaron, Nadab, the firſt-born, &c.] There ſeems no neceſſity of ſetting down the names of Aaron's ſons, they not being here to be numbered, but it was of great importance to have the diſtinction preſerved between the prieſts and the Levites, their offices being very different; and therefore Moſes here ſets down who belonged to the one, and who to the other.

Verſe 4. —— And Eleazer and Ithamar miniſtred in the prieſts office in the ſight of their father.] The LXX rightly tranſlate it, together with their father; who was the high prieſt, and they lower prieſts under him: and ſo were all their ſons; which it is likely they had in good number: for they are appointed, ver. 38, for the guard of the tabernacle, towards the eaſt. And thus the gemara Hieroſol. in the title concerning faſting, ſaith, that Moſes appointed eight claſſes of prieſts; four of the family of Eleazer, and as many of Ithamar, which continued till the time of Samuel the prophet, and David, who admitted many more: See Selden de Succeſſ. in Pontif. cap. 1.

Verſe 5. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] The Deity now gives directions about the reſt of the tribe of Levi, who had been omitted in the late muſter.

No. XIX.

Verſe 6. Bring the tribe of Levi near, and preſent them.] They had conſecrated themſelves to God, by a noble act mentioned Exod. xxxii. 29, which procured them this bleſſing, to be preſented to God, and conſecrated to him in a ſolemn manner, for ſuch ſervices as he ſhould aſſign them. So this word, bring near, ſignifies to offer them unto God, as they were chap. viii. ver. 10, 11.

Verſe 10. And thou ſhalt appoint Aaron and his ſons, and they ſhall wait on their prieſts office.] Or thou ſhalt appoint them to wait on their prieſthood: which he had ſhewn before was very different from the Levitical office; but, to make them more mindful of their dignity, he repeats it again; that Aaron and his ſons alone ſhould officiate as prieſts, viz. in offering ſacrifice; in ſetting the bread upon the holy table; looking after the lights, and burning incenſe; which they were to perform in their own perſons, and not appoint any others, as their deputies, to do them: For none of theſe things could be performed by the Levites, whoſe buſineſs it was to look after the fine flour of which the bread was made; to prepare it, and the frankincenſe which was to be burnt, and abundance of ſuch miniſtrations, which are particularly mentioned 1 Chron. ix. 27, 28, &c. but they could not make the anointing oil, or the ſweet perfume, mentioned Exod. xxx. 23, 24, for they were moſt holy; and therefore the prieſts only could compound them.

——— And the ſtranger that cometh nigh.] By ſtranger is meant any one, though a Levite, who was not of the ſons of Aaron; who alone had the privilege to approach unto God.

——— Shall be put to death.] God himſelf ſent out a fire to conſume Korah and his company, who preſumed to offer incenſe, being but bare Levites, and not prieſts, chap. xvi.

Verſe 11. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] To make the matter more clear, he further tells Moſes the reaſon why he took the Levites, from among the children of Iſrael, to be his, after a peculiar manner.

Verſe 12. And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Iſrael.] Obſerve the reaſon why I have taken the Levites from among the reſt of the Iſraelites, ver. 9. for it is by order and appointment.

——— Inſtead of all the firſt-born that openeth the matrix, &c.] To make an exchange with them for all their firſt-born, which I have heretofore challenged as my own; and now accept of the Levites in their ſtead.

——— Therefore the Levites ſhall be mine.] As all the firſt-born were; which now ſhall be theirs, and the Levites be mine.

Verſe 13. Becauſe all the firſt-born are mine,] by a ſpecial right, which is mentioned in the next words.

——— For on the day that I ſmote all the firſt-born in the land of Egypt.] The title whereby God claimed the firſt born to himſelf, was that great miracle (as R. Levi calls it) which he wrought, when he deſtroyed all the firſt-born of their neighbours in Egypt, and touched not one of theirs; by which ſparing mercy he acquired a juſt right to them; and by that ſolemn dedication which he then commanded to be made of them, unto his uſes, Exod. xiii. ver. 2, 12, 13.

—— I hallowed unto me all the firſt-born in Iſrael, &c.] He ſeparated them unto himſelf, by preſerving them when he deſtroyed all the firſt-born but theirs.

——— Mine they ſhall be.] Both by that act of his own, and by the act of the children of Iſrael, whom he commanded to ſanctify them to him, Exod. xiii. ver. 22, 29. they became conſecrated to God. By which it appears, that he did not claim a peculiar right to the firſt-born, more than to any other of their children, till their departure from Egypt. And therefore the taking the Levites to be his, inſtead of the eldeſt offspring, is no argument that theſe latter had hitherto been the prieſts who miniſtred unto God, till this exchange of them for the Levites. So our learned Dr. Lightfoot ſeems to infer, in his notes upon this paſſage: The firſt-born, ſaith he, had been prieſts till the conſecration of the Levites; but now that function muſt be confined to that tribe. In which words (with due reſpect to that excellent man's labours) there are ſeveral miſtakes. For as the ſacred office was not now confined to this tribe, but to one family in it, (that of Aaron) ſo it was not appropriated to it, upon 31 And their charge ſhall be the ark, and the table, and the candleſtick, and the altars, and the veſſels of the ſanctuary wherewith they miniſter, and the hanging, and all the ſervice thereof.

32 And Eleazar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt, ſhall be chief over the chief of the Levites, and have the overſight of them that keep the charge of the ſanctuary.

33 ¶ Of Merari was the family of the Mahilites, and the family of the Muſhites: theſe are the families of Merari.

34 And thoſe that were numbred of them, according to the number of the males from a month old and upward, were ſix thouſand and two hundred.

35 And the chief of the houſe of the father of the families of Merari, was Zuriel the ſon of Abihail: theſe ſhall pitch on the ſide of the tabernacle north-ward.

36 And under the cuſtody and charge of the ſons of Merari ſhall be the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and the ſockets thereof, and all the veſſels thereof, and all that ſerveth thereto.

37 And the pillars of the court round about, and their ſockets, and their pins, and their cords.

38 ¶ But thoſe that encamp before the tabernacle toward the eaſt, even before the tabernacle of the congregation eaſtward, ſhall be Moſes and Aaron, and his ſons, keeping the charge of the ſanctuary, for the charge of the children of Iſrael; and the ſtranger that cometh nigh ſhall be put to death.

39 All that were numbred of the Levites, which Moſes and Aaron numbred at the commandment of the LORD, throughout their families, all the males from a month old and upward, were twenty and two thouſand.

40 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Number all the firſt-born of the males of the children of Iſrael, from a month old and upward, and take the number of their names.

41 And thou ſhalt take the Levites for me (I am the LORD) inſtead of all the firſt-born among the children of Iſrael; and the cattle of the Levites, inſtead of all the firſtlings among the cattle of the children of Iſrael.

42 And Moſes numbred as the LORD commanded him, all the firſt-born among the children of Iſrael.

43 And all the firſt-born males, by the number of names from a month old and upward, of thoſe that were numbred of them, were twenty and two thouſand two hundred and threeſcore and thirteen.

44 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

45 Take the Levites inſtead of all the firſt-born among the children of Iſrael, and the cattle of the Levites inſtead of their cattle, cattle, and the Levites ſhall be mine: I am the LORD.

46 And for thoſe that are to be redeemed of the two hundred and threeſcore and thirteen, of the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael, which are more than the Levites;

47 Thou ſhalt even take five ſhekels apiece by the poll, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary ſhalt thou take them: the ſhekel is twenty gerahs.

48 And thou ſhalt give the money wherewith the odd number of them is to be redeemed, unto Aaron and to his ſons.

49 And Moſes took the redemption-money of them that were over and above them that were redeemed by the Levites.

50 Of the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael took he the money; a thouſand three hundred and threeſcore and five ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary.

51 And Moſes gave the money of them that were redeemed, unto Aaron, and to his ſons, according to the word of the LORD, as the LORD commanded Moſes.

Verſe 1. Theſe are the generations of Aaron and Moſes.] Being now to give an account of the Levites, who had not been numbered with the reſt of the children of Iſrael, he ſets down the deſcendants of the principal perſons among them, viz. Aaron (whom he ranks in the firſt place, becauſe he was the eldeſt brother, and his poſterity were advanced to the dignity of prieſts) and Moſes, whoſe poſterity, were only miniſters to the prieſts, as all the common Levites were. It may ſeem, indeed, at firſt ſight, as if he gave an account only of Aaron's poſterity, ver. 2. but if we look further to ver. 27, 28, we ſhall find the poſterity of both enumerated in the family of the Amramites; from which both Aaron and Moſes were deſcended: Amram being their father; from whom the genealogy of Moſes is derived, 1 Chron. xxiii. ver. 13, 14, &c. through their generations; as here thoſe of Aaron.

——— In the day that the Lord ſpake unto Moſes in mount Sinai.] This circumſtance ſeems to be particularly ſpecified, becauſe, at that time, Nadab and Abihu (who are mentioned in the next verſe) were both alive, and very eminent perſons, Exod. xxiv. 1, 9, 10, though they were now dead, at this numbering of the Levites.

Verſe 2. Theſe are the names of the ſons of Aaron, Nadab, the firſt-born, &c.] There ſeems no neceſſity of ſetting down the names of Aaron's ſons, they not being here to be numbered, but it was of great importance to have the diſtinction preſerved between the prieſts and the Levites, their offices being very different; and therefore Moſes here ſets down who belonged to the one, and who to the other.

Verſe 4. —— And Eleazer and Ithamar miniſtred in the prieſt's office in the ſight of their father.] The LXX rightly tranſlate it, together with their father; who was the high prieſt, and they lower prieſts under him: and ſo were all their ſons; which it is likely they had in good number: for they are appointed, ver. 38, for the guard of the tabernacle, towards the eaſt. And thus the gemara Hieroſol. in the title concerning faſting, ſaith, that Moſes appointed eight claſſes of prieſts; four of the family of Eleazer, and as many of Ithamar, which continued till the time of Samuel the prophet, and David, who admitted many more: See Selden de Succeſſ. in Pontif. cap. 1.

Verſe 5. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] The Deity now gives directions about the reſt of the tribe of Levi, who had been omitted in the late muſter.

No. XIX.

Verſe 6. Bring the tribe of Levi near, and preſent them.] They had conſecrated themſelves to God, by a noble act mentioned Exod. xxxii. 29, which procured them this bleſſing, to be preſented to God, and conſecrated to him in a ſolemn manner, for ſuch ſervices as he ſhould aſſign them. So this word, bring near, ſignifies to offer them unto God, as they were chap. viii. ver. 10, 11.

Verſe 10. And thou ſhalt appoint Aaron and his ſons, and they ſhall wait on their prieſts office.] Or thou ſhalt appoint them to wait on their prieſthood: which he had ſhewn before was very different from the Levitical office; but, to make them more mindful of their dignity, he repeats it again; that Aaron and his ſons alone ſhould officiate as prieſts, viz. in offering ſacrifice; in ſetting the bread upon the holy table; looking after the lights, and burning incenſe; which they were to perform in their own perſons, and not appoint any others, as their deputies, to do them: For none of theſe things could be performed by the Levites, whoſe buſineſs it was to look after the fine flour of which the bread was made; to prepare it, and the frankincenſe which was to be burnt, and abundance of ſuch miniſtrations, which are particularly mentioned 1 Chron. ix. 27, 28, &c. but they could not make the anointing oil, or the ſweet perfume, mentioned Exod. xxx. 23, 24, for they were moſt holy; and therefore the prieſts only could compound them.

——— And the ſtranger that cometh nigh.] By ſtranger is meant any one, though a Levite, who was not of the ſons of Aaron; who alone had the privilege to approach unto God.

——— Shall be put to death.] God himſelf ſent out a fire to conſume Korah and his company, who preſumed to offer incenſe, being but bare Levites, and not prieſts, chap. xvi.

Verſe 11. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] To make the matter more clear, he further tells Moſes the reaſon why he took the Levites, from among the children of Iſrael, to be his, after a peculiar manner.

Verſe 12. And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Iſrael.] Obſerve the reaſon why I have taken the Levites from among the reſt of the Iſraelites, ver. 9. for it is by order and appointment.

——— Inſtead of all the firſt-born that openeth the matrix, &c.] To make an exchange with them for all their firſt-born, which I have heretofore challenged as my own; and now accept of the Levites in their ſtead.

——— Therefore the Levites ſhall be mine.] As all the firſt-born were; which now ſhall be theirs, and the Levites be mine.

Verſe 13. Becauſe all the firſt-born are mine,] by a ſpecial right, which is mentioned in the next words.

——— For on the day that I ſmote all the firſt-born in the land of Egypt.] The title whereby God claimed the firſt born to himſelf, was that great miracle (as R. Levi calls it) which he wrought, when he deſtroyed all the firſt-born of their neighbours in Egypt, and touched not one of theirs; by which ſparing mercy he acquired a juſt right to them; and by that ſolemn dedication which he then commanded to be made of them, unto his uſes, Exod. xiii. ver. 2, 12, 13.

—— I hallowed unto me all the firſt-born in Iſrael, &c.] He ſeparated them unto himſelf, by preſerving them when he deſtroyed all the firſt-born but theirs.

——— Mine they ſhall be.] Both by that act of his own, and by the act of the children of Iſrael, whom he commanded to ſanctify them to him, Exod. xiii. ver. 22, 29. they became conſecrated to God. By which it appears, that he did not claim a peculiar right to the firſt-born, more than to any other of their children, till their departure from Egypt. And therefore the taking the Levites to be his, inſtead of the eldeſt offspring, is no argument that theſe latter had hitherto been the prieſts who miniſtred unto God, till this exchange of them for the Levites. So our learned Dr. Lightfoot ſeems to infer, in his notes upon this paſſage: The firſt-born, ſaith he, had been prieſts till the conſecration of the Levites; but now that function muſt be confined to that tribe. In which words (with due reſpect to that excellent man's labours) there are ſeveral miſtakes. For as the ſacred office was not now confined to this tribe, but to one family in it, (that of Aaron) ſo it was not appropriated to it, upon this occaſion; but he and his ſons were conſecrated before this exchange of the firſt-born for the Levites, who were now appointed to miniſter unto them, but had nothing to do with the prieſthood, no more than the firſt-born had, for whom they were exchanged; that peculiar right which God had in the firſt-born, being ſince their coming out of Egypt. Upon all which conſiderations, we may look upon this exchange, as an argument rather that the firſt-born were not prieſts in former times, than that they exerciſed this function as the Jews imagine, and as many have ſuggeſted from this ſelection of the Levites to be God's portion in their ſtead. For ſo Menochius himſelf (lib. ii. de repub. Jud. cap. 1.) aſſerts from this very place, Jus ſacerdotum in Levitas tranſlatum, & eos loco primogenitorum acceptos, quibus jus hoc debebatur; that the right of prieſts was transferred to the Levites, and they were accepted inſtead of the firſt-born, to whom that right belonged, in which there is not a word of truth, but only that the Levites were accepted inſtead of the firſt-born; who had the ſame right to the prieſthood, that the Levites had; that is none at all.

—— I am the Lord.] Who may take whom I pleaſe to be employed in my ſervice; and think it reaſonable that thoſe whom I ſpared, when I ſlew the Egyptian firſt-born, ſhould be mine.

Verſe 14. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes.] There was ſome reaſon, no doubt, why Moſes alone is commanded to take the number of the Levites upon this occaſion, (as he alone did, ver. 16.) when Aaron is joined with him in numbering the Iſraelites, chap. i. 3. and in numbering the Levites themſelves who were fit for ſervice, chap. iv. ver. 2. 41, 45. nay, the chief of the Iſraelites aſſiſted therein, ver. 46. and it is moſt probable he alone was employed to take this account, becauſe Aaron was a party in it; the money that was to be paid for ſo many of the firſt-born, as exceeded the number of the Levites, being given to him, and to his ſons, ver. 48.

Verſe 15. Number the children of Levi after the houſe of their fathers, by their families, every male from a month old and upwards, &c.] The reaſon of this difference was, that this was the age at which they were to redeem their firſt-born, chap. xviii. 16. in whoſe ſtead the Levites were to be given unto God, ver. 40.

Verſe 32. And Eleazer the ſon of Aaron ſhall be chief over the chief of the Levites.] There was one officer in chief ſet over each of theſe great families of the Gerſhonites, ver. 24. of the Kohathites, ver. 30. and the Merarites, ver. 35. And over all theſe chiefs, there is now appointed a ſupreme head, who was to govern them, as they governed thoſe under them, and that was Eleazer, who was more than a Levite; being the eldeſt ſon of Aaron the high prieſt.

—— And have the overſight of them that keep the charge of the ſanctuary.] But more particularly, Eleazer was to ſuperviſe thoſe who had the ſanctuary under their care: That is, all the Kohathites, and Elizaphan their chief, ver. 20.

Verſe 38. But thoſe that encamp before the tabernacle towards the eaſt, even before the tabernacle of the congregation eaſtward, ſhall be Moſes and Aaron and his ſons.] There were but three bodies of the Levites deſcended from the three ſons of Levi, ver. 1. and therefore none left to guard this ſide of the tabernable, but Moſes and Aaron, and their families; who lay between the ſtandard of Judah, and the tabernacle, ſee chap. ii. ver. iii. which was the moſt honourable poſt: where the prieſts were with great reaſon placed, together with the chief governor of all, Moſes; becauſe they were to guard the holy place, that none might go into it but themſelves.

Verſe 39. And all that were numbered of the Levites, which Moſes and Aaron numbered, at the commandment of the Lord.] This looks like a contradiction to the obſervation we made ver. 14. but Aaron's numbering here, in all probability, is only his agreeing that this was a true account which Moſes took of the tribe of Levi; for Moſes ſtill continues to be alone concerned, in numbering the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael, for whom they were to be exchanged, ver. 40, 42.

—— Were twenty and two thouſand.] If the particular ſums mentioned, ver. 22, 28, 34. be added together, they amount to three hundred more than twenty two thouſand; therefore it is a reaſonable conjecture that the three hundred are omitted in this account, becauſe they were the firſt-born of the Levites themſelves; and for that reaſon belonging to God already, by the law in Exod. chap. xiii. 2. and chap. xxxiv. 20. could not be exchanged for the firſt-born of other tribes, and ſubſtituted in their ſtead, as other Levites were. It is very obſervable here alſo, that the Levites were the feweſt in number of any tribe; being but twenty-two thouſand, three hundred, from a month old and upward, when ſome tribes were twice, nay, thrice as many, chap. i. 27. not reckoning children, but only men from twenty years old and upward; in which the Divine Providence was very conſpicuous, and ſo ordered it, that this whole tribe might be dedicated to him; whereas, if it had grown proportionable to the reſt, there would have been more Levites by far, than the firſt-born of all the tribes.

Ver. 40. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, number all the firſt-born of the males of the children of Iſrael, from a month old and upward.] The eldeſt males were to be a month old, before their parents were obliged to redeem them: And if they died before, they were not to pay any thing for them, which depends upon another law, Lev. xii. 4, 6. where if a woman brought forth a male; beſide the ſeven days of her ſeparation, ſhe was to ſtay thirty-three days more before ſhe went into the ſanctuary: At which time, the child being to be preſented to God, it appears he acknowledged them for his when they were a month old. Yet they diſtinguiſh between the time when the redemption money was due, and when it was offered. This latter was defered till the mother was abroad again: But it was due, and the father obliged to pay it, aſſoon as the child was a month old. So Conſt. l' Empereur obſerves out of Maimonides, upon Bava kama, cap. vii. ſect. 6.

Ver. 41. And the cattle of the Levites, inſtead of all the firſtlings among the cattle of the children of Iſrael.] Not that they ſhould be ſacrificed, or taken from the Levites; but that they ſhould be accounted God's cattle; they being the cattle of the Levites, who were his entirely, and therefore were preſented unto him, as the Levites were; but ſtill continued in their poſſeſſion by his allowance, for their encouragement in his ſervice, ver. 45.

Ver. 43. And all the firſt born males, by the number of names, &c, were twenty and two thouſand two hundred, and threeſcore and thirteen.] It may appear ſomething ſtrange, that from above ſix hundred thouſand men, reckoning from twenty years old and upward, chap. i. ver. 46. there ſhould not be more than this number of the firſt born ſons; till it be conſidered that theſe latter were born ſince the ſlaughter of the Egyptian firſt-born, which was not much above a year before, after which time all the firſt-born of Iſrael became God's; but not thoſe who were born before; for ſo the Law is, Exod. xiii. 32. whatſoever openeth the womb. i. e. hereafter both of man and beaſt ſhall be mine.

Ver. 46. And for thoſe that are to be redeemed of the two hundred threeſcore and thirteen, &c.] There being two hundred threeſcore and thirteen firſt-born more than there were Levites, they are directed in the next verſe, what to do with relation to them; for there could be no exchange of Levites for them; becauſe there was not a ſufficient number to be taken in their ſtead.

Ver. 47. Thou ſhalt even take five ſhekels a-piece by the poll.] This was the price of redemption ever after, as appears from chap. xviii. ver. 6. for it had been lately conſtituted the value of a man child, from a month to five years of Age, Lev. xxvii. 6.

——After the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, &c. See Exod. xxx. ver. 13, &c.] The only difficulty in this matter, was to determine which of the firſt-born ſhould be redeemed, by paying this money; and which ſhould be exchanged for the Levites; for every one of the Iſraelites, no doubt, was deſirous rather to have his firſt born redeemed by a Levite, than by paying five ſhekels; and yet ſome of them muſt be put to this expence, there not being a ſufficient number of Levites to anſwer for them all. The Jews think (particularly R. Solomon) that there was no way to ſatisfy this doubt like that, by drawing of lots, which was performed in this manner. Moſes, ſaith the forenamed doctor, took two and twenty thouſand ſcrolls of parchment, and wrote in them theſe words, a ſon of Levi; and two hundred and ſeventy-three more, wherein he wrote five ſhekels:

ſhekels: And then mixing them together in an urn, he commanded every one of the firſt-born to come, and put in his hand, and draw out a ſchedule: And to him that drew one of the former ſort, he ſaid, a Levite hath redeemed thee; but to him that drew out one of the latter, he ſaid, Pay thy price. And thus they alſo relate the fact in the Gemara Babylon, Tit. Sanhedrin, which is probable enough; unleſs we ſuppoſe the congregation to have redeemed the two hundred ſeventy-three firſt-born, out of a common ſtock; which was a ſhorter method, but not ſo divine as the other.

Ver. 48. And thou ſhalt give the money wherewith the odd number of them is to be redeemed, unto Aaron, and to his ſons.] Which was but reaſonable; becauſe the Levites being given them by God, ver. 6, 7. the money that was paid to make up what was wanting in their proportion to the firſt-born, belonged to them likewiſe.

CHAP. IV.

1 The age and time of the Levites ſervice. 4 The carriage of the Kohathites, when the prieſts have taken down the tabernacle. 16 The charge of Eleazar. 17 The office of the prieſts. 21 The carriage of the Gerſhonites. 29 The carriage of the Merarites. 34 The number of the Kohathites, 38 Of the Gerſhonites, 42 And of the Merarites.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, ſaying,

2 Take the ſum of the ſons of Kohath from among the ſons of Levi, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers;

3 From thirty years old and upward, even until fifty years old, all that enter into the hoſt, to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 This ſhall be the ſervice of the ſons of Kohath in the tabernacle of the congregation, about the moſt holy things.

5 ¶ And when the camp ſetteth forward, Aaron ſhall come and his ſons, and they ſhall take down the covering vail, and cover the ark of teſtimony with it:

6 And ſhall put thereon the covering of badgers ſkins, and ſhall ſpread over it a cloth wholly of blue, and ſhall put in the ſtaves thereof.

7 And upon the table of ſhew-bread they ſhall ſpread a cloth of blue, and put thereon the diſhes, and the ſpoons, and the bowls, and covers to cover withal: and the continual bread ſhall be thereon.

8 And they ſhall ſpread upon them a cloth of ſcarlet, and cover the ſame with a covering of badgers ſkins, and ſhall put in the ſtaves thereof.

9 And they ſhall take a cloth of blue, and cover the candleſtick of the light, and his lamps, and his tongs, and his ſnuff-diſhes, and all the oyl-veſſels thereof, wherewith they miniſter unto it.

10 And they ſhall put it, and all the veſſels thereof, within a covering of badgers ſkins, and ſhall put it upon a bar.

11 And upon the golden altar they ſhall ſpread a cloth of blue, and cover it with a covering of badgers ſkins, and ſhall put to the ſtaves thereof.

12 And they ſhall take all the inſtruments of miniſtry wherewith they miniſter in the ſanctuary, and put them in cloth of blue, and cover them with a covering of badgers ſkins, and ſhall put them on a bar.

13 And they ſhall take away the aſhes from the altar, and ſpread a purple cloth thereon:

14 And they ſhall put upon it all the veſſels thereof, wherewith they miniſter about it, even the cenſers, the fleſh-hooks, and the ſhovels, and the baſons, all the veſſels of the altar; and they ſhall ſpread upon it a covering of badgers ſkins, and put to the ſtaves of it.

15 And when Aaron and his ſons have made an end of covering the ſanctuary, and all the veſſels of the ſanctuary, as the camp is to ſet forward; after that, the ſons of Kohath ſhall come to bear it: but they ſhall not touch any holy thing, leſt they die. Theſe things are the burden of the ſons of Kohath, in the tabernacle of the congregation.

16 ¶ And to the office of Eleazar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt, pertaineth the oyl for the light, and the ſweet incenſe, and the daily meat-offering, and the anointing oyl, and the overſight of all the tabernacle, and of all that therein is, in the ſanctuary, and in the veſſels thereof.

17 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, ſaying,

18 Cut ye not off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites, from among the Levites.

19 But thus do unto them, that they may live, and not die, when they approach unto the moſt holy things; Aaron and his ſons ſhall go in, and appoint them every one to his ſervice, and to his burden.

20 But they ſhall not go in to ſee when the holy things are covered, leſt they die.

21 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

22 Take alſo the ſum of the ſons of Gerſhon, throughout the houſes of their fathers by their families;

23 From thirty years old and upward, until fifty years ſhalt thou number them; all that enter in to perform the ſervice, to do do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

24 This is the ſervice of the families of the Gerſhonites, to ſerve, and for burdens.

25 And they ſhall bear the curtains of the tabernacle, and the tabernacle of the congregation, his covering, and the covering of the badgers skins that is above upon it, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation,

26 And the hangings of the court, and the hanging for the door of the gate of the court, which is by the tabernacle and by the altar round about, and their cords, and all the inſtruments of their ſervice, and all that is made for them: ſo ſhall they ſerve.

27 At the appointment of Aaron and his ſons, ſhall be all the ſervice of the ſons of the Gerſhonites, in all their burdens, and in all their ſervice: and ye ſhall appoint unto them in charge all their burdens.

28 This is the ſervice of the families of the ſons of Gerſhon, in the tabernacle of the congregation: and their charge ſhall be under the hand of Ithamar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt.

29 ¶ As for the ſons of Merari, thou ſhalt number them after their families, by the houſe of their fathers;

30 From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old ſhalt thou number them, every one that entreth into the ſervice, to do the work of the tabernacle of the congregation.

31 And this is the charge of their burden, according to all their ſervice in the tabernacle of the congregation; the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and ſockets thereof,

32 And the pillars of the court round about, and their ſockets, and their pins, and their cords, with all their inſtruments, and with all their ſervice: and by name ye ſhall reckon the inſtruments of the charge of their burden.

33 This is the ſervice of the families of the ſons of Merari, according to all their ſervice in the tabernacle of the congregation, under the hand of Ithamar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt.

34 ¶ And Moſes and Aaron, and the chief of the congregation numbred the ſons of the Kohathites, after their families, and after the houſe of their fathers;

35 From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, every one that entreth into the ſervice, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation:

36 And thoſe that were numbred of them by their families, were two thouſand ſeven hundred and fifty.

37 Theſe were they that were numbred of the families of the Kohathites, all that might do ſervice in the tabernacle of the congregation; which Moſes and Aaron did number, according to the commandment of the LORD by the hand of Moſes.

38 And thoſe that were numbred of the ſons of Gerſhon, throughout their families, and by the houſe of their fathers;

39 From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, every one that entreth in to the ſervice, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation:

40 Even thoſe that were numbred of them, throughout their families, by the houſes of their fathers, were two thouſand and ſix hundred and thirty.

41 Theſe are they that were numbred of the families of the ſons of Gerſhon, of all that might do ſervice in the tabernacle of the congregation, whom Moſes and Aaron did number, according to the commandment of the LORD.

42 ¶ And thoſe that were numbred of the families of the ſons of Merari, throughout their families, by the houſe of their fathers;

43 From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, every one that entreth in to the ſervice, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation:

44 Even thoſe that were numbred of them after their families, were three thouſand and two hundred.

45 Theſe be thoſe that were numbred of the families of the ſons of Merari, whom Moſes and Aaron numbred according to the word of the LORD by the hand of Moſes.

46 All thoſe that were numbred of the Levites, whom Moſes and Aaron and the chief of Iſrael numbred, after their families, and after the houſe of their fathers;

47 From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, every one that came to do the ſervice of the miniſtry, and the ſervice of the burden in the tabernacle of the congregation;

48 Even thoſe that were numbred of them were eight thouſand and five hundred and fourſcore.

49 Ac-

49 According to the commandment of the LORD, they were numbred by the hand of Moſes, every one according to his ſervice, and according to his burden: thus were they numbred of him, as the LORD commanded Moſes.

Ver. 2. Take the ſum of the ſons of Kohath, &c.] They are firſt mentioned, becauſe they were employed in the moſt honourable work.

Ver. 3. From thirty years old and upward.] In this work, to which they are appointed, they were not employed till they came to thirty years of age; but they were admitted to attend at the tabernacle, and do other ſervice at the age of five and twenty, as we read, chap. viii. 25. which place the Jews (in the Gemara Babylonica, under the title Cholin) reconcile with this, after the following manner: They were admitted to learn their duty, at five and twenty, and to miniſter at thirty. And ſo Aben Ezra, upon Numb. viii. they were probationers, and might do ſome ſervice at five and twenty years of age, but not do all: For they might wait upon the tabernacle, but not bear the ark. And that is the exact truth; they were admitted to miniſter to the prieſts at five and twenty, but were not put upon this laborious work here mentioned, till they had ſufficient ſtrength for it; which was at thirty years of age, when they were able to carry burdens; for by that word their work is deſcribed, ver. 15, 19, 24, 31, 47. for tho' ſome things, with which they were charged, might be put into waggons, yet the ark, and the moſt holy things, were to be carried upon their ſhoulders, tho' they marched never ſo far, ver. 15. and chap. vii. 9. When the ark, indeed, was ſettled in the temple, which was a fixed place, and therefore, was no longer to be carried up and down, then as D. Kimchi obſerves, 1 Chron. xxiii. king David appointed them to enter upon their office at twenty years of age; there being alſo other great works to be performed in his time, for which they were fit at that age. And ſo it continued even after their return from the captivity of Babylon, Ezra iii. 8. See Selden de Succeſſ. in Pontificat. lib. ii. cap. iv. and Lightfoot in his Temple Service, chap. vi. ſect. 1.

——— Even until fifty years old.] Beyond which age they were not bound to do any ſervice, but only to miniſter with their brethren at the tabernacle, cap. viii. ver. 25, 26.

——— All that enter into the hoſt, or into the warfare.] For their watching continually as a guard, about the tabernacle, chap. iii. 7, &c. made them a ſort of militia, who were encamped, as appears by the foregoing chapter, about the tabernacle, for its ſecurity. Beſide which, there was other work, which might make their ſervice as laborious as a ſoldier's life is, and give it the name of entering into the hoſt, which manner of ſpeaking St. Paul uſes to Timothy, 1 Tim. i. 18. where he exhorts him to war a good warfare.

——— To do the work of the tabernacle of the congregation.] They did not perform any work in it, but about it (ſuch as here follows) unleſs we underſtand by the tabernacle, the outward court, into which they went to miniſter unto the prieſts.

Ver. 4. This ſhall be the ſervice of the ſons of Kohath, in the tabernacle of the congregation, about the moſt holy things.] The next verſes explain what this ſervice was: Or if the word about, in the latter end of this verſe, were quite left out, the ſenſe would be more clear; this ſhall be the ſervice of the ſons of Kohath, &c. the moſt holy things; that is, the ark, as Aben Ezra expounds it. And his interpretation may be juſtified from ver. 19, 20. in the latter of which it is called the holy, and in the former, the holy of holies; as it is here in the Hebrew: For it was the moſt holy of all other holy things in the tabernacle, and gave the name to the place where it ſtood, holy of holies, or the moſt holy place. And this made the ſervice of the Kohathites the moſt honourable of all others, and is the reaſon they are mentioned firſt.

Ver. 5. When the camp ſetteth forward, Aaron ſhall come, and his ſons.] While the cloud reſted upon the tabernacle, and the glory of the Lord filled the houſe, none but Aaron might come in to the moſt holy place, where the ark was, and that but on one day in the year; and then, after he had filled it with incenſe, which made a cloud before the mercy-ſeat, (which was the covering of the ark) over which the SCHECHINAH was. But that being removed in the cloud, when it was taken up from the tabernacle, not only Aaron but his ſons alſo might come into the moſt holy place without any irreverence; that which made it ſo holy, viz. the glory of the Lord, being gone out of it, for the preſent; ſo that there was no danger in approaching to the ark where it was wont to reſt.

——— And they ſhall take down the covering veil.] Whereby the holy place was parted from the moſt holy; which is always meant by the word parocheth, which is here uſed. And tho' the word maſach be added to it, which conſtantly ſignifies the outward veil at the entrance of the ſanctuary; yet it is plain, that the inward veil, which was at the entrance of the moſt holy place, is here intended; for the other was committed to the care of the Gerſhonites, ver. 25.

——— And cover the ark of the teſtimony with it.] By this it is evident, they went into the holy place, unto the very ark, over which they threw this covering.

Ver. 6. And ſhall put thereon the covering of badgers ſkins.] Not any of thoſe which were thrown over the tabernacle, but a covering made on purpoſe for this uſe, to defend the ark from all injurious weather, when they carried it on their ſhoulders.

——— And ſhall ſpread over it a cloth wholly of blue.] Or, of perfect blue. This was the third covering of the ark, which, till it was laid upon it, the Levites might not approach. And ſince the tabernacle was the image of things in the heavens, as not only the Apoſtle, but the Jews themſelves ſay, the ark, in particular, being a figure of the celeſtial throne of God; it is not an unreaſonable conceit of R. Bechai, that this blue-coloured cloth was ſpread over it, as an emblem of the skies, which are expanded, like a curtain, between us and the Majeſty on high.

——— And ſhall put the ſtaves thereof.] It is not ſaid, they ſhall put them in the rings, for they never were to be taken out of them, Exod. xxv. 15. Nor do the Hebrew words ſignify, that they ſhould put them in; but it ſhould be tranſlated, "put the ſtaves thereof upon "their ſhoulders." So Aben Ezra interprets it, which ſeems to us the moſt natural expoſition: Or, fit and diſpoſe them under the covering, that they might be laid on their ſhoulders: Or, order them ſo in the rings, (which is Chaskuin's explication) that they might fall into the two notches, which were in the ſtaves, to keep the ark from ſliding up and down.

The other ſervices that were to be performed by the ſeveral perſons appointed for that purpoſe, as the taking down, and carriage of the tabernacle, are deſcribed by the ſacred hiſtorian in ſo intelligible a manner, to the 33d verſe of this chapter, that we think it unneceſſary to offer any comment upon that ſubject, our deſign being to confine our explications to ſuch particulars alone as may ſeem to require them.

Ver. 44. Even thoſe that were numbered of them after their families, were three thouſand and two hundred.] It is very remarkable, that the deſcendants from the youngeſt ſon of Levi, ch. iii. 17. which had the feweſt males in it of a month old and upward, had the moſt robuſt men fit for ſervice: For here are above half (compare this with chap. iii 34.) of the whole number of males grown up to thirty years of age; which was a ſingular providence, the heavieſt burden lying upon them, who were to carry the boards, &c. of the tabernacle; not, indeed, upon their ſhoulders, but in waggons, which they were to load, after they had taken them down, and unload, when they were to ſet them up again: And, for that reaſon, had more waggons allowed them than their brethren the Gerſhonites, chap. vii. 8.

Ver. 47. Every one that came to do the ſervice of the miniſtry, and the ſervice of the burden in the tabernacle, &c.] The firſt of theſe (the ſervice of the miniſtry) one would think related to their ſerving the prieſt, when the tabernacle was ſtanding; and the latter (the ſervice of the burden) to their carrying the tabernacle, when it was taken down, and removed. But mention being here made only of thoſe who were numbered, from thirty years old, we think, therefore, that there is no regard in these expressions to the service they rendered to the priests in the tabernacle, into which they were admitted at the age of twenty-five years; see ver. 3. but only to the service mentioned here in this chapter, which relates altogether to the taking down and carrying the tabernacle. And therefore they must be looked upon as two phrases for the same thing; the former of which is not exactly translated: For there is nothing of ministry in the Hebrew: but the words are, Every one that cometh to serve the service of the service, and the service of the burden or carriage. For it is the same word, which, being joined with work, we translate servile, Lev. xxiii. 7. and other places.

Ver. 49. According to the commandment of the Lord, they were numbered by the hand of Moses, every one according to his service, and according to his burden.] We observed before, ver. 47. that service and burden are two expressions for the same thing; for tho' the sons of Kohath had the noblest part of the work, yet their employment is called both a service, and a burden, ver. 19. as that of the Gershonites is, ver. 24. for which service, all the tithes of the country of Canaan were given to them, and continued to be theirs, when this kind of service ceased; as it did when the temple was built: For then there were "no "burdens to be carried on their shoulders," as Josiah speaks, 2 Chron. xxxv. 3. but their duty was changed, even by David, before the building of the temple; who made them singers, and keepers of the treasury, as well as porters at the gate of God's house; and likewise judges and other officers in the country, as we read in 1 Chron. chap. xxvi. But the change of their service made no alteration in the wages allotted to them, for they still enjoyed all the tithes.

——Thus were they numbered of him, as the Lord commanded Moses.] This is so often repeated, that all posterity might reverence these ordinances, as divine institutions, and not merely of human appointment. And so we are to look upon these laws, as wise orders made by the sovereign of the world, for the better government of that people, whom he had taken for his own peculiar. And it argues a very profane spirit in those who can admire and praise Ovid de fastis, and have no regard at all (if they do not ridicule them) to these sacred writings, which are of such venerable antiquity.

CHAP. V.

1 The unclean are removed out of the camp. 5 Restitution is to be made in trespasses. 11 The trial of jealousy.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Command the children of Israel, that they put out of the camp every leper, and every one that hath an issue, and whosoever is defiled by the dead.

3 Both male and female shall ye put out, without the camp shall ye put them; that they defile not their camps in the midst whereof I dwell.

4 And the children of Israel did so, and put them out without the camp: as the LORD spake unto Moses, so did the children of Israel.

5 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

6 Speak unto the children of Israel, When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit, to do a trespass against the LORD, and that person be guilty;

7 Then they shall confess their sin which they have done: and he shall recompence his trespass with the principal thereof, and add unto it the fifth part thereof, and give it unto him against whom he hath trespassed.

8 But if the man have no kinsman to recompence the trespass unto, let the trespass be recompensed unto the LORD, even to the priest: beside the ram of the atonement, whereby an atonement shall be made for him.

9 And every offering of all the holy things of the children of Israel, which they bring unto the priest, shall be his.

10 And every mans hallowed things shall be his: whatsoever any man giveth the priest, it shall be his.

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

12 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any mans wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him,

13 And a man lie with her carnally, and it be hid from the eyes of her husband, and be kept close, and she be defiled, and there be no witness against her, neither she be taken with the manner;

14 And the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be defiled; or if the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be not defiled:

15 Then shall the man bring his wife unto the priest, and he shall bring her offering for her, the tenth part of an ephah of barley-meal; he shall pour no oyl upon it, nor put frankincense thereon, for it is an offering of jealousy, an offering of memorial, bringing iniquity to remembrance.

16 And the priest shall bring her near, and set her before the LORD.

17 And the priest shall take holy water in an earthen vessel, and of the dust that is in the floor of the tabernacle the priest shall take, and put it into the water.

18 And the priest shall set the woman before the LORD, and uncover the womans head, and put the offering of memorial in her hands, which is the jealousy-offering: and the priest shall have in his hand the bitter water that causeth the curse.

19 And the priest shall charge her by an oath, and say unto the woman, If no man have lien with thee, and if thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness with another instead of thy husband, be thou free from this bitter water that causeth the curse:

20 But if thou hast gone aside to another instead of thy husband, and if thou be defiled, filed, and ſome man hath lien with thee beſide thine husband:

21 Then the prieſt ſhall charge the woman with an oath of curſing, and the prieſt ſhall ſay unto the woman, The LORD make thee a curſe and an oath among thy people, when the LORD doth make thy thigh to rot, and thy belly to ſwell;

22 And this water that cauſeth the curſe ſhall go into thy bowels, to make thy belly to ſwell, and thy thigh to rot: And the woman ſhall ſay, Amen, amen.

23 And the prieſt ſhall write theſe curſes in a book, and he ſhall blot them out with the bitter water:

24 And he ſhall cauſe the woman to drink the bitter water that cauſeth the curſe: and the water that cauſeth the curſe ſhall enter into her, and become bitter.

25 Then the prieſt ſhall take the jealouſy-offering out of the womans hand, and ſhall wave the offering before the LORD, and offer it upon the altar.

26 And the prieſt ſhall take an handful of the offering, even the memorial thereof, and burn it upon the altar, and afterward ſhall cauſe the woman to drink the water.

27 And when he hath made her to drink the water, then it ſhall come to paſs, that if ſhe be defiled, and have done treſpaſs againſt her husband; that the water that cauſeth the curſe ſhall enter into her, and become bitter, and her belly ſhall ſwell, and her thigh ſhall rot: and the woman ſhall be a curſe among her people.

28 And if the woman be not defiled, but be clean; then ſhe ſhall be free, and ſhall conceive ſeed.

29 This is the law of jealouſies, when a wife goeth aſide to another inſtead of her husband, and is defiled;

30 Or when the ſpirit of jealouſy cometh upon him, and he be jealous over his wife, and ſhall ſet the woman before the LORD, and the prieſt ſhall execute upon her all this law.

31 Then ſhall the man be guiltleſs from iniquity, and this woman ſhall bear her iniquity.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] It is not ſaid when this, which here follows, was ſpoken; but it is likely, immediately after the foregoing commandments, upon which it hath ſome dependance.

Ver. 2. Command the children of Iſrael, that they put out of the camp every leper and every one that hath an iſſue, and whoſoever is defiled by the dead.] There were three camps, as Maimonides, and many others, mentioned by Mr. Selden, obſerve, lib. 2. De Synedr. cap. 1. n. 5. the camp of the Schechinah, or of the Lord, viz. the ſanctuary, with its courts, which are called the tents of the Lord, 1 Chron. xxxi. 2. and next the camp of the Levites, who, with Aaron and his ſons, made a camp about the tabernacle, chap. iii. and then the camp of Iſrael, chap. ii. which encompaſſed them all. Anſwerable to theſe, when the temple was built, they reckoned the temple it ſelf, from the eaſt gate, to be the camp of the Lord; and the camp of the Levites, to be from the entrance of the mount of the houſe of the Lord, to that eaſt gate of the temple. And the camp of Iſrael they thought extended from the entrance of Jeruſalem to the mount of the houſe of the Lord. Now lepers were ſo unclean, that they were not admitted into any of theſe three camps, but ſhut out of them all; ſee Lev. xiii. 46. but he who had an iſſue, Lev. xv. 2. was only excluded from the two firſt camps, the camp of the Lord, and the camp of the Levites; but he might be in the camp of Iſrael. And he who was defi'ed by the dead, Lev. xxi. 1. was only excluded from the firſt, the ſanctuary, but not from the other two. See Druſius upon chap. iv. 25.

Ver. 3. Both male and female ſhall ye put out, that they defile not their camps.] The camp of Iſrael conſiſted of four camps, (and therefore he ſpeaks in the plural number) that of Judah, that of Reuben, that of Ephraim, and that of Dan, chap. ii. 3, &c. which would have been ſo defiled, if they had ſuffered theſe unclean perſons to continue among them, that none would have been fit to go to the ſanctuary.

——— In the midſt of which I dwell.] By his ſpecial preſence in the ſanctuary, which was encompaſſed by theſe camps; out of reverence to which, ſuch unclean perſons were to be kept at a greater diſtance than other people.

Ver. 6. When a man or woman commit any ſin that men commit.] In the Hebrew the words are plainly theſe, ſhall commit any ſin of man; that is, againſt his neighbour: As in Joel iii. 19. violence of the children of Judah is truly tranſlated violence againſt the children of Judah: For it is apparent, from the next verſes 7, and 8. that Moſes here ſpeaks of offences againſt their neighbours.

——— To do a treſpaſs againſt the Lord.] Such offences againſt their neighbours, as were alſo great offences againſt God: For the Chaldee underſtand theſe words of frauds and cheats put upon men, by a falſe oath. And there is a good warrant for this interpretation, from Lev. vi. 2, 3. where Moſes gives the ſame command; which ſeems here to be repeated, only becauſe he had ſomething to add unto it, ver. 8.

Ver. 7. Then they ſhall confeſs the ſin which they have done.] Or rather, if they ſhall confeſs, &c. for ſo the particle vau ſometimes ſignifies: Particularly, chap. xii. 14. where we, as well as the LXX, tranſlate it, if her father had ſpit in her face.

Ver. 8. But if a man hath no kinſman to recompence the treſpaſs unto.] By this it is apparent, that if a man, to whom an injury had been offered, was dead, he that committed it was bound to make ſatisfaction to his heir, whoſoever he was, by reſtoring the principal, and adding a fifth part to it. Now the Iſraelites never wanting ſome of their kindred to ſucceed to their inheritances, the Hebrew doctors expound this of the proſelytes of righteouſneſs; who might poſſibly die without an heir; becauſe they had no kindred, but ſuch as were born after their regeneration. In which caſe, the goods that had been illegally taken from ſuch a proſelyte by a Jew, did not become his own, unleſs he paid the price of them, with ſuch an addition as is here required, &c.

——— Let the treſpaſs be recompenſed unto the Lord.] By bringing to him the principal and the fifth part.

——— Even unto the prieſt.] Whom God deputed to receive it, as his miniſter: And it was (as the Jews rightly expound it) equally diſtributed among all the prieſts who were then waiting in their courſe. Which is a new addition to the law in Levit. vi. and the reaſon, it is likely, why that law is here repeated.

Ver. 9. ——— And every offering of all the holy things of the children of Iſrael.] Upon the occaſion of the foregoing law, concerning a recompence to be made to the prieſt, where a man who had been wronged was dead; and no heir to him could be found; ſome other laws are explained, wherein the prieſts were concerned, who were to have all the heave-offerings, as the word trumoth, here uſed, ſignifies, chap. xviii. 8.

———Which they bring unto the prieſt ſhall be his.] Who offers it: For there being many prieſts who waited in their courſes at the tabernacle, all of whom could not officiate together, but ſome at one time, ſome at another, this law determines, that the particular prieſt, who performed the office of ſacrificing, ſhould have to himſelf that part of the holy things which fell to the prieſt's ſhare, and it ſhould not be divided between them all.

Ver. 10. And every man's hallowed thing ſhall be his.] As the former verſe ſpeaks of the holy things of the children of Iſrael in general, ſo this, of what any particular perſon offered: Which ſtill, with greater reaſon, was to belong to the prieſt who offered it; for the labourer is worthy of his hire: And therefore he that did the work of ſacrificing, had the reward of it. R. Solomon, applying this to tithes, hath a gloſs upon theſe words, which, tho' not pertinent, is very remarkable: "He that doth "not duly pay his tithe, in the end his land ſhall yield "him but a tithe of what it was wont to yield." And ſo R. Bechai, upon Deut. xiv. expounds theſe words, "When a "man divideth not as he ought, he ſhall have nothing but "the holy things," that is, the tithe of what he uſed to have, according to Iſa. v. 10.

Ver. 11. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] There is ſo little connection between this and the foregoing laws, that it is not eaſy to give a reaſon why it is here placed. All that we can ſay is, that Moſes having ſpoken concerning frauds, from the ſuſpicion of which men were to purge themſelves by an oath, ver. 6. he here takes occaſion to mention the greateſt caſe that could happen of this nature, which was, when a woman was ſuſpected of adultery. Whenever a man had entertained a ſuſpicion of his wife's incontinency, he was to bring an offering for her, peculiar to this caſe, namely, a cake made of barley meal, without oil, or incenſe; and to put it into the hand of the prieſt. At the ſame time, he brought his wife, alſo, and declared what grounds he had for ſuſpecting her. The prieſt then took the accuſed woman before the Lord, either to the tabernacle, or temple; uncovered her head, by which the Jews underſtand ſhaving her hair, or, at leaſt, cutting off the curls: They add, that they tore her clothes down to her breaſt; others ſay, that they were changed for a black ſuit, as an indication of mourning; and, in this manner, ſhe was expoſed to publick view. Theſe circumſtances, they tell us, had ſomething ſo dreadful to the Jewiſh women, eſpecially thoſe who had a regard to their chaſtity, that they ſtudied nothing more, than to keep themſelves free from any ſuſpicion, which might expoſe them to that, which they dreaded worſe than death. For this reaſon, they never ſuffered a woman to be brought to this trial upon any ſlight ſuſpicion; the husband was to produce ſome proofs that he had pre-admoniſhed her, more than once, not to be ſeen in the company of a man whom he ſuſpected: And if, after that, they were found together in private, or in ſome remote place, even as long as a man might boil an egg, and eat it, the woman was reputed guilty of the crime laid to her charge.

When the prieſt had uncovered her head, he gave the offering into her hand, and they took ſome holy water, made bitter with ſome ſuch herb as wormwood: Into this he threw ſome of the duſt of the floor or pavement; together with the words of the curſe written at full length, to this effect: That if ſhe had been guilty of defiling the marriage-bed, thoſe waters ſhould ſwell and burſt her belly, and rot her thigh; but if ſhe was innocent, they ſhould have no power to hurt her. Theſe words he firſt read to her aloud, and if ſhe perſiſted to go on with her trial, ſhe anſwered, Amen.

The Jews tell us, that great pains were taken to perſwade her to confeſs her crime, if ſhe was guilty, rather than expoſe her ſelf to the effects of the miraculous water; and that they would even force her to walk till ſhe was quite tired, in order to extort a confeſſion from her, either through wearineſs, or ſhame of thus being expoſed to publick view. If ſhe confeſſed the fact, ſhe was not obliged to drink the water, but was immediately divorced from her husband, loſt her dowry, and was ſentenced to live a ſingle live; but if ſhe ſtill perſiſted in aſſerting her Innocence, the prieſt was then to conduct her to the eaſtern porch of the temple, where he declared to her aloud, that if ſhe was really as irreproachable as ſhe repreſented her ſelf, ſhe had nothing to fear; but, if guilty, ſhe muſt expect the puniſhment, denounced by Moſes, would immediately be inflicted upon her.

When ſhe had anſwered, Amen, the prieſt was to blot out the words of the curſe in the bitter water, they being, according to the Jews, written with an ink made without vitriol, which would be eaſily waſhed away; after which, he gave her the water to drink, whilſt he took the offering or cake of jealouſy out of her hand, and waved it to the Lord, and burned part of it upon the altar. The conſequence was, that if ſhe was guilty, the water burſt her belly, and putrified her thigh, and ſhe died ſoon after drinking it; but if ſhe was innocent, ſhe not only remained uninjured; but, as a proof of her continence, became more healthy and fruitful, and the husband was to take her home, and conduct himſelf to her with the greater tenderneſs, for having given him ſuch an eminent proof of her chaſtity. This is all we find in the Moſaic law; but the Talmudiſts have added ſeveral other circumſtances relating to this ceremony, which we are unwilling to warrant, becauſe, by their own confeſſion, it had been diſuſed ſeveral centuries before their time, and neither the Canonical, Apocryphal Books, nor indeed any of their writings, afford us one ſingle inſtance of its ever having been uſed before that time. They likewiſe affirm, that if ſhe was guilty, ſhe began to look pale and ghaſtly, the moment ſhe had drank the water; that her eyes alſo ſtarted out of her head, and ſhe ſwelled in ſuch a manner, that they made all imaginable haſte to convey her away, leſt ſhe ſhould defile the place by her death. They add, what is ſtill more remarkable, that the man who had criminally converſed with her, died at that very inſtant, and with much the ſame ſymptoms, how diſtant ſoever from her, and ignorant of what was then tranſacting. The time when this miraculous ceremony was diſcontinued, is not aſcertained; ſome affirming, that it was diſuſed after the captivity, and others, that it continued till about an hundred years before the deſtruction of the ſecond temple. All own however, that the reaſon of its being ſet aſide was, that adulteries became not only more frequent, but likewiſe more publick; ſo that the trial of a clandeſtine unchaſtity became uſeleſs, when they were committed ſo publickly, that all the world was appriſed of them.

It is poſſible therefore, that this ceremony might be inſtituted only in terrorem, and yet prove very effectual, both to confine women within the bounds of conjugal fidelity, and the husband from too lightly charging them with a violation of it; eſpecially if another circumſtance, which the Jews tell us, be true, namely, that theſe waters could have no effect upon the wife, how guilty ſoever, if the husband had likewiſe been guilty of tranſgreſſing the laws of wedlock. Whether the Iſraelites had ſeen any ſuch cuſtom in Egypt, or in any other nation, which made it expedient to have ſomething among them in imitation of it, we will not affirm; but it is plain, that almoſt every country ſince, had a kind of trial or ordeal, not only for caſes of incontinency, but almoſt for every crime.

CHAP. VI.

1 The law of the Nazarites. 22 The form of bleſſing the people.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, When either man or woman ſhall ſeparate themſelves to vow a vow of a Nazarite, to ſeparate themſelves unto the LORD:

3 He ſhall ſeparate himſelf from wine, and ſtrong drink, and ſhall drink no vinegar of wine, or vinegar of ſtrong drink, neither ſhall he drink any liquor of grapes, nor eat moiſt grapes or dried.

4 All

4 All the days of his ſeparation ſhall he eat nothing that is made of the vine-tree, from the kernels even to the husk.

5 All the days of the vow of his ſeparation, there ſhall no raſor come upon his head: until the days be fulfilled in the which he ſeparateth himſelf unto the LORD, he ſhall be holy; and ſhall let the locks of the hair of his head grow.

6 All the days that he ſeparateth himſelf unto the LORD, he ſhall come at no dead body.

7 He ſhall not make himſelf unclean for his father, or for his mother, for his brother, or for his ſiſter, when they die: becauſe the conſecration of his God is upon his head.

8 All the days of his ſeparation he is holy unto the LORD.

9 And if any man die very ſuddenly by him, and he hath defiled the head of his conſecration; then he ſhall ſhave his head in the day of his cleanſing, on the ſeventh day ſhall he ſhave it.

10 And on the eighth day he ſhall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons to the prieſt, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

11 And the prieſt ſhall offer the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, and make an atonement for him, for that he ſinned by the dead, and ſhall hallow his head that ſame day.

12 And he ſhall conſecrate unto the LORD the days of his ſeparation, and ſhall bring a lamb of the firſt year for a treſpaſs-offering: but the days that were before ſhall be loſt, becauſe his ſeparation was defiled.

13 ¶ And this is the law of the Nazarite: When the days of his ſeparation are fulfilled, he ſhall be brought unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

14 And he ſhall offer his offering unto the LORD, one he-lamb of the firſt year without blemiſh, for a burnt-offering, and one ewe-lamb of the firſt year without blemiſh, for a ſin-offering, and one ram without blemiſh, for peace-offerings, 15 And a basket of unleavened bread, cakes of fine flour mingled with oyl, and wafers of unleavened bread anointed with oyl, and their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings.

16 And the prieſt ſhall bring them before the LORD, and ſhall offer his ſin-offering, and his burnt-offering.

17 And he ſhall offer the ram for a ſacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD, with the basket of unleavened bread: the prieſt ſhall offer alſo his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

18 And the Nazarite ſhall ſhave the head of his ſeparation, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; and ſhall take the hair of the head of his ſeparation, and put it in the fire which is under the ſacrifice of the peace-offerings.

19 And the prieſt ſhall take the ſodden ſhoulder of the ram, and one unleavened cake out of the basket, and one unleavened wafer; and ſhall put them upon the hands of the Nazarite, after the hair of his ſeparation is ſhaven.

20 And the prieſt ſhall wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD; this is holy for the prieſt, with the wave-breaſt, and heave-ſhoulder: and after that, the Nazarite may drink wine.

21 This is the law of the Nazarite, who hath vowed, and of his offering unto the LORD for his ſeparation, beſides that that his hand ſhall get: according to the vow which he vowed, ſo he muſt do after the law of his ſeparation.

22 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

23 Speak unto Aaron, and unto his ſons, ſaying, On this wiſe ye ſhall bleſs the children of Iſrael, ſaying unto them,

24 The LORD bleſs thee, and keep thee:

25 The LORD make his face ſhine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee:

26 The LORD lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace.

27 And they ſhall put my name upon the children of Iſrael, and I will bleſs them.

Verſe 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, when either man or woman ſhall ſeparate themſelves to vow a vow of a Nazarite, &c.] The Hebrew word Nazar, which ſignifies in general, to ſeparate, ſignifies, in the conjugation Niphal, to ſeparate from others, by a profeſſion of ſome ſpecial act of religion. Whence Nazar ſignifies one who, beyond the common preſcription of the law, dedicates not his goods, but himſelf, to God, in a peculiar kind of ſanctimony; ſo Philo, who calls this μεγάλη εὐχή, the great vow; becauſe he who makes it, devotes not his corn, or beaſts, &c. but his own ſelf unto God; κλημάτων γὰρ τὸ μέγιστον αὐτὸς τις ὢν αὑτῷ, for every man is to himſelf the greateſt poſſeſſion he hath.

The Nazarites were of two ſorts; namely, of ſuch who obliged themſelves to reſtrictions, mentioned in this chapter, only for ſome ſhort ſpace, as a week, or a month; and thoſe who were to obſerve it during their whole life. Theſe latter were moſt commonly dedicated by their parents: And of this claſs were Sampſon and Samuel: And all that we find peculiar in their way of life was, that they were to abſtain from wine, and all intoxicating liquors, that by this abſtinence they might the better attend to the ſtudy of the law, or other exerciſes of religion. The word Shecar, which is rendered, by our tranſlators, ſtrong drink, was a liquor made of dates, which by ſome ancient authors is called wine, as well as the juice of grapes. Pliny expreſsly declares, that præcipua vina, the choiceſt wines, were made of thoſe dates, called cariotæ, which grew about Jericho; though they were iniqua capiti, hurtful to the head; from whence they had their name, lib. 13. Nat. Hiſt. cap. 4. With great reaſon therefore ſuch intoxicating liquors were forbidden to thoſe who ſet themſelves apart to attend upon God, during the time of their ſeparation, which juſtifies in ſome meaſure what Maimonides declares, namely, that Nazarites were advanced to the dignity of prieſts, who might not drink any wine, or ſtrong drink, in the time of their miniſtration to God in the ſanctuary.

Moſes likewiſe declares, that no raſor ſhould come upon the head of a Nazarite; to which we may add, that his hair was not to be cut with ſciſſers, or any other inſtrument; but he was to let the locks of his hair grow: this gave ſuch perſons a majeſtick and venerable air, without any expence. For, as Ageſilaus ſpeaks, in Stobæus, τὸ κομᾶν τῷ κόσμῳ τὸ ἀδάπανώτατον, to let ones hair grow long, is the cheapeſt ornament. Beſide, neglect of the hair was proper to thoſe who renounced, for the preſent, all manner of pleaſure (as the Nazarites did) and devoted themſelves to a ſeverer ſort of life. Such perſons not only let their beards, and their hair grow, but wore an hairy garment, which the Hebrews called addareth. Such a one John Baptiſt wore, as Elijah did before him; whoſe mantle is called by this name, 1 Kings chap. xix. 19. and who is ſaid himſelf to have been an hairy man, 2 Kings i. 8. from whence Grotius concludes, that either he was a Nazarite, or the habit of a prophet and a Nazarite was the ſame.

But Moſes himſelf ſeems to give the plaineſt reaſon of this matter, in the following words.

——— Until the days be fulfilled, in the which he ſeparateth himſelf unto the Lord, he ſhall be holy.] Which was an indication he had kept himſelf pure from all defilements: For if he had not, he muſt have ſhaved his head, ver. 9. as they did who were cleanſed from their leproſy, Levit. xiv. 8, 9.

——— And ſhall let the locks of the hair of his head grow.] This law, in which conſiſts the ſecond part of their Nazariteſhip, ſome fancy to have been tranſlated from the Egyptians, unto the religion of the Hebrews: Which was the opinion of St. Cyril of Alexandria, (lib. xvi. de Adorat.) Where he ſaith, that Moſes knowing how hard it would be to bring the Iſraelites from the ill cuſtoms they had contracted in Egypt, moſt wiſely inſtituted the like rites to thoſe that were practiſed there; to the intent, they might not perform ſuch worſhip any longer to dæmons, but to the Lord of all. Procopius Gazæus, upon this place, has the ſame notion, Græcorum liberi, ſi in nymphas vel montanas vel aquatiles incidiſſent, comas nutriebant, lex itaque mala dæmonum conſuetudine dempta, ad Deum hoc ipſum transfert. The ſenſe of which is, that the Greeks ſuffered their hair to grow, in honour of the nymphs; and therefore the law, to aboliſh that wicked cuſtom, transfer'd that to God, which was render'd to dæmons. To which we ſhould readily ſubſcribe, if there were any proof that this rite of conſecrating their hair to dæmons, was ſo old among the Egyptians and Greeks, at the time of Moſes; but it is far more probable, that the original of this cuſtom among the Gentiles, was from this law of the Nazarites. So Hen Lindenbrogius very well obſerves upon thoſe words of Cenſorinus (de Dei natali, cap. 1.) crinem Deo ſacrum paſcebant, that they let their hair grow in honour of their gods; particularly Apollo, who thence was called Κερσοτόφος; and likewiſe of Bacchus, Minerva, and others: It is certain, that this ſuperſtition prevailed to ſuch a degree, that they conſecrated their hair to rivers; in which they thought there was ſome divinity. But hujus moris origo (ſaith that learned annotator) videtur fluxiſſe a Nazaræis Judæorum. The original of this cuſtom ſeems to have flowed from the Jewiſh Nazarites.

Thoſe who confined themſelves to the reſtrictions of the Nazaritical vow, only for a certain period of time, were to avoid all defilement, even that of entring into an houſe where a dead perſon was; for if they chanced to be polluted by it, before the term was expired, they were obliged to begin a-freſh. Women, as well as men, might bind themſelves to this vow, and after it was accompliſhed, they preſented themſelves to the prieſt, who brought them to the door of the tabernacle or temple, where they offered the ſacrifices preſcribed by Moſes in ſuch caſes, after which he cauſed their heads to be ſhaved, and the hair to be thrown into the fire under the ſacrifice, and then pronounced them free from their vow.

Thoſe who lived at ſuch a diſtance from the temple, that they could not arrive at it by that time their vow was expired, might ſhave their heads at what place ſoever they then were, at which time they ſet aſide the price of their ſacrifice, in order to bring or ſend it to the temple, by the next opportunity. This is what we find St. Paul did, who made ſuch a vow at Corinth, ſhaved his head at Cenchrea, and went ſoon after to Jeruſalem, to accompliſh it by the uſual offering.

There are thoſe who think no account can be given of ſuch ordinances as theſe, but only this; that it was ſo general a cuſtom, and ſo very ancient among mankind, to let their hair grow on purpoſe, and to plait it in locks, that they might, at a certain time, cut it off, and devote it to ſome of their gods; that, in all likelihood, the Iſraelites would have followed their ſuperſtition, if God, to prevent it, had not inſtituted ceremonials, practiſed by the reſt of the world without their idolatry. For the directions which God here gives about it, are evidently oppoſite to the manner of the Gentiles. For the Nazarites are here directed to cut their hair (when the time of their ſeparations was compleated) at the door of the tabernacle, where it was alſo to be burnt; whereas the Gentiles hung their hair, when they had cut it, upon trees; or conſecrated it to rivers, or laid it upon their temples, there to be preſerved. The Hebrew Nazarites alſo are required to offer various ſorts of ſacrifices, when they cut off their hair; of which we rarely read any thing among the Gentiles: And all the time of their ſeparation they were to drink no wine, nor eat grapes, &c. which was not known among the Heathens. From whence it is, one may think, that they are ſo often put in mind of the Lord, in this law of the Nazarites, who are ſaid to be ſeparated unto the Lord, ver. 1, 5, 6. And the conſecration of his God is ſaid to be upon his head, ver. 7. and all the days of his ſeparation, he was holy to the Lord, ver. 8. unto whom he conſecrated the days of his ſeparation, ver. 12. to put them in mind, that tho' they uſed this rite, which was common to other nations, yet it was in honour to the Lord only, whom they acknowledged to be the author of health and ſtrength, and growth: For the devil alſo had his Nazarites, as appears from Hoſea, chap. ix. 10. All this, and much more is aſſerted, with a ſpecious appearance of truth, by a moſt ingenious and learned man, in his excellent book, De Legibus Hebræorum Ritualibus, &c. lib. iii. diſſert. i. cap. 6.

But there are two particulars wanting to render this opinion probable. Firſt, None can tell how the world came by ſuch a cuſtom of letting their hair grow for ſacred uſes, unleſs they had it from Moſes; who tells us whence he derived it, viz. from God; who appointed this rite for ſuch reaſons, as then were plain, but now, perhaps, are not ſo evident to us: And, Secondly, There is not the leaſt proof, that this cuſtom was ſo ancient as the time of Moſes; which to us ſeems not likely, but rather that it was derived among the Gentiles, from an imperfect knowledge of what is here ordained by the legiſlator of the Jews; for the chief part of this Nazariteſhip, conſiſting in letting their hair grow, and conſecrating it unto God, the Gentiles took it to be an inſtance of great devotion, Μὴ ἀποκείραν τῶν παίδων τὰς κορυφὰς, &c. as Theodoret declares, Queſt. 28. in Levit. not to cut off their childrens hair, but ſuffer it to grow, and after a certain time, dedicate it to their dæmons. Many authors have written much of this cuſtom: For which there was a certain day appointed at Athens, namely, the third day of the feaſt called Ἀπατούρια, which day was called Κουρεῶτις, becauſe then the hair of their grown children was ſhaved off, and ſacrificed to Diana. See Peter Caſtellanus, in his Syntagma de Feſtis Græcorum; where he quotes a paſſage out of Heſychius, p. 28. who ſays, that before they cut off their hair, they brought a meaſure of wine, which they they offered to Hercules, and then all that were present drank of it: Which is some imitation of the drink-offering here mentioned by Moses, which was offered at the completion of their Nazariteship. And Grotius and Huetius have rendered it so plain, that the Attick laws were derived from Moses, that we think it natural to conclude, this custom flowed from the same fountain.

And, if we must give an account of the reason of this institution among the Hebrews, we think that of Maimonides is better than this, against which we have excepted; namely, that this law, relating to their hair, was made in opposition to the opinion of the ancient idolaters, called Zabii, who held all things separated from the body to be impure; as the hair, the nails, and the blood; from whence all barbers amongst them were accounted impure persons, because they cut men's hair, and let blood: And whosoever suffered a rasor to pass upon his flesh, was required to wash himself in pure fountain water; as he shews, More Nevoc'him, P. iii. cap. 47.

Ver. 21. This is the law of the Nazarite, who hath vowed, and of his offering to the Lord for his separation, besides that that his hand shall get, according to the vow which he hath vowed, &c.] It was necessary that he should be punctual to his vow, according to the law of Nazariteship; tho' he might offer voluntarily what he thought proper, over and above his oblation, now that he was executing his vow. His friends also might join with him, in the expence he was at for so many sacrifices as he was enjoined to offer; or in providing voluntary offerings, beyond his oblation. Thus we read in Acts xxi. 23, 24. that St. Paul, by the advice of St. James, and the elders at Jerusalem, was at charges with certain men who had this vow upon them, and purified himself with them: Which was agreeable to the custom among the Jews, as Petitus and others have observed out of Maimonides, who affirms, that others might assist the Nazarites in the accomplishment of their vow, and partake with them in it, by abstaining from wine, &c. for some time, as they did.

Ver. 22. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying.] The tabernacle having been lately erected, to which the people were all to resort, they are invited to it by the directions here given, how they should be dismissed, when they came to worship; which was in such a manner, that they might believe (as R. Menachem glosses) the Divine Benediction would descend upon them from the celestial habitation of the Deity, when they devoutly frequented his house on earth.

Ver. 23. Speak unto Aaron and his sons, saying.] Whose proper office it was to bless the people; as it was to offer their sacrifices, and burn incense, Deut. xxi. 5.

——On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel, &c.] Standing so that they might be seen, with their hands lifted up and spread; speaking with a loud voice, and with their faces toward the people, Lev. ix. 22.

Ver. 24. The Lord bless thee, &c. ver. 25, 26.] When this benediction was pronounced in the sanctuary, if we may believe the Jews, it was but one, and delivered without any pause, the people keeping a profound silence; but out of the sanctuary, in their synagogues, it was distributed into three parts; the priest pausing at the end of each verse, and the people saying, Amen to each of them. In the sanctuary also they pronounced the name Jehovah, which is here thrice repeated; but in their synagogues, they used some other name instead of it. So the Mischna Sotæ, cap. 7. sect. 6.

The repetition of this name thrice in these three verses, and with a different accent each time, as R. Menachem observes, induced the Jews themselves to suppose there was some mystery in it; which we may be thought to understand, tho' they at present do not. For it may be considered by us, as relative to the three Persons in the ever blessed and venerable Trinity; who are one God, from whom all blessings flow to the children of men, 2 Cor. chap. xiii. 14. This mystery, as Luther wisely expresses it, upon Psal. v. is here occulte insinuatum, secretly insinuated, tho' not plainly revealed. And it is not hard to shew, if this were a place for it, how properly God the Father may be said to bless and keep us; and God the Son, to be gracious unto us; and God the Holy Ghost, to give us peace.

Ver. 27. And they shall put my name upon the children of Israel.] To put God's name upon them, was to commend them to his almighty goodness; or, to bless them, by calling upon the Lord, and beseeching him to bestow all that they desired upon them.

——And I will bless them.] The Jews from hence observe, that God's blessing, in some sort, depends upon the blessing of the priest, which they thought so necessary, that such priests as were admitted to no other service, might perform this, lest the people should at any time want it. So Chaskuin, upon Deut. xxi. 5. and Jalkut, as Wagenseil observes, upon the Gemara Sotæ, cap. 7. sect. 26. whose words are these, the blessing pronounced by a priest, who hath some blemish in his body, ought to be accounted legitimate.

Jonathan here paraphrases these words in this manner, I will bless them in my WORD, or by my WORD; which is the apostolic doctrine, that God the Father hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings, in, or by Christ, Ephes. i. 3. who, with the Holy Ghost, is most high in the glory of the Father. And it is observable, that the Jews think it utterly unlawful to add a fourth benediction to these three; tho' they find one in Deut. i. 2. The Lord God of your fathers, make you a thousand times so many more as you are, and bless you as he hath promised you.

CHAP. VII.

1 The offering of the princes at the dedication of the tabernacle. 10 Their several offerings at the dedication of the altar. 89 God speaketh to Moses from the mercy-seat.

AND it came to pass on the day that Moses had fully set up the tabernacle, and had anointed it, and sanctified it, and all the instruments thereof, both the altar and all the vessels thereof, and had anointed them, and sanctified them;

2 That the princes of Israel, heads of the house of their fathers, (who were the princes of the tribes, and were over them that were numbred) offered:

3 And they brought their offering before the LORD, six covered waggons, and twelve oxen; a waggon for two of the princes, and for each one an ox: and they brought them before the tabernacle:

4 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

5 Take it of them, that they may be to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; and thou shalt give them unto the Levites, to every man according to his service.

6 And Moses took the waggons and the oxen, and gave them unto the Levites.

7 Two waggons and four oxen he gave unto the sons of Gershon, according to their service.

8 And four waggons and eight oxen he gave unto the sons of Merari, according unto their service, under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

9 But unto the sons of Kohath he gave none: because the service of the sanctuary belong-belonging unto them, was that they ſhould bear upon their ſhoulders.

10 ¶ And the princes offered for dedicating of the altar, in the day that it was anointed, even the princes offered their offering before the altar.

89 And when Moſes was gone into the tabernacle of the congregation, to ſpeak with him; then he heard the voice of one ſpeaking unto him from off the mercy-ſeat, that was upon the ark of teſtimony, from between the two cherubims: and he ſpake unto him.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs on the day that Moſes had fully ſet up the tabernacle, and had anointed it, and ſanctified it, &c.] See Lev. viii. 10, 11. where it is ſaid, he anointed (as it here likewiſe follows) all belonging to it; which being ſeven days in accompliſhing, as appears from ver. 35. of that chapter, it is evident that the word day doth not here preciſely denote the very day on which the tabernacle was erected; but more largely, at, or about, that time, as it muſt neceſſarily ſignify, ver. 84. of this chapter, after he had ſet up the tabernacle, and not only ſanctified and anointed it, but received orders about ſacrifices, and anointed the prieſts, with the reſt mentioned in the book of Leviticus; and alſo had numbered the people, ordered their encampment, and the encampment of the Levites, and given them their charge about the tabernacle. In ſhort, when Moſes had done all things mentioned hitherto in this book, then followed this dedication of the altar. And whoſoever will compare this chapter with the ſecond, may be eaſily convinced, that this offering of the princes was not made till the camp was formed, and the tribes ranged under their ſeveral ſtandards, for the princes offered in the ſame order and method, that they are diſpoſed there.

Ver. 3. And they brought their offering.] The LXX. tranſlate the Hebrew word Korbanam, τὸ δῶρον αὐτῶν, their gift, or their preſent, which they made to God, conſiſting of ſeveral articles for various uſes.

——— Six covered waggons, and twelve oxen.] They firſt made a donation for the ſervice of the tabernacle; that ſuch parts of it as were moſt cumberſome might be conveniently carried, and that they might be free from duſt, rain, or hail. The waggons were covered, being not ordinary carriages, but ſuch as were uſed by great perſons. So the LXX. underſtood it, who tranſlate the Hebrew word Tzabbim by λαμπήνη, in Iſai. lxvi. 20. and here ἁμάξας λαμπηνίκας. Now as Pollux reckons λαμπὶς among the waggons and chariots then uſed, ſo Heſychius tells us, as learned men have obſerved, that it ſignifies ſuch waggons as were uſed by illuſtrious perſons, and that they were covered above.

Ver. 4. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] It ſeems Moſes did not accept theſe preſents, till he had orders from the Deity, in the words that follow in the fifth verſe, &c.

Ver. 7. Two waggons and four oxen to the ſons of Gerſhon, according to their ſervice.] As they were feweſt in number who could be capable of ſervice, ſo they had leſs burdenſome things to carry than the ſons of Merari, chap. iv. 25, 40. and therefore had fewer carriages allowed them.

Ver. 8. And four waggons and eight oxen he gave unto the ſons of Merari, according to their ſervice.] They were the moſt numerous, but had the greateſt burden; and therefore were allowed more carriages and oxen, chap. iv 31, 32, 48.

Ver. 9. But unto the ſons of Kohath he gave none, becauſe the ſervice of the ſanctuary belonging unto them, was that they ſhould bear upon their ſhoulders.] The Seventy tranſlate it more exactly, becauſe they had the ſervice of the holy thing, (τῆ ἁγίᾳ, as the ark is called, chap. iv. ver. 4.) they ſhall carry it on their ſhoulders; which was for the greater honour and dignity of the ark, and of the law contained in it; as Maimonides, R. Levi ben Gerſom, and others, obſerve; and that the form and ſtructure of the ark might not be diſcompoſed, (as Maimonides adds, More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 14.) nor the ephod and the breaſtplate ruffled; as they might have been by the ſhaking of a waggon; yet they all obſerve, that this was not ſo peculiar to the ſons of Kohath, but that the prieſts, the ſons of Aaron, upon ſome ſpecial occaſion, carried the ark; particularly when they went over Jordan, Joſh. iii. 3. and at the ſiege of Jericho; at both which times a great miracle was to be wrought; and when Zadok and Abiathar carried it back to Jeruſalem, 2 Sam. xv. 29. tho' that may be otherwiſe interpreted, and there ſeems no reaſon why they ſhould carry it back, when the Levites brought it, ver. 23. and when Solomon's temple was built, 1 Kings, viii. 6. for the Levites might not go into the holy place, and therefore it was then carried by the prieſts.

Ver. 10. And the princes offered for the dedicating of the altar.] The Hebrew word chanac, which, in one place of the Pentateuch, ſignifies ſimply, to begin to uſe, or enjoy an houſe, Deut. xx. 6. here, and in ſeveral other places, ſignifies the firſt application and addiction to ſacred purpoſes, or to the divine ſervice; to which it had been deſigned and conſecrated. And this was done with ſome form of ſolemn words and actions; as Mr. Selden obſerves, Lib. 3. de Synedr. cap. 13. n. 1. and cap. 15. n. 3. And ſo among the Latins, the word inchoare, when applied to ſacred things, ſignifies, to perfect or conſummate; as Servius obſerves upon Æneid. 6. and both civil and ſacred initiations were accompanied with great feſtivity. But this is not to be underſtood, as if the dedication of the altar was the ſetting it apart, and ſanctifying it for the ſervice of God, which had been done before, and ſeven days ſpent therein, Exod. xxix. 27. Lev. viii. 4. but, as the word properly ſignifies, the beginning to uſe it, after it had been ſo ſanctified.

Ver. 11. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, they ſhall offer their offering.] Here Raſi obſerves, that Moſes would not receive their offering, till he knew the will of God, who directed in what manner and order their gifts ſhould be offered to him.

——— Each prince on his day, for the dedication of the altar.] This made the dedication a very long ſolemnity, which continued twelve days. When thoſe twelve days began, it is not eaſy to determine; but it ſeems to us a very reaſonable computation, which Fortunatus Scacchus hath made of this whole tranſaction, Myrothec. ſacr. Elæochriſm, chriſm, lib. 2. cap. 74. where he ſuppoſes, that the tabernacle being erected the firſt day of the firſt month of the ſecond year, after they came out of Egypt, ſeven days were ſpent in the conſecration of it, and of the altar, &c. and on the eighth day Moſes began to conſecrate Aaron and his ſons, which laſted ſeven days longer. Then the fifteenth day of that month was the firſt day of unleavened bread; which God commanded (as we read in this book, chap. ix.) to be obſerved in the firſt month; and laſted till the two and twentieth. The reſt of the month we may well ſuppoſe was employed in giving, receiving, and delivering the laws mentioned in the book of Leviticus. After which, on the firſt day of the ſecond month, Moſes began to number the people, according to the command in the beginning of this book; which may be ſuppoſed to have laſted three days, and then, on the fourth, the Levites were numbered: On the next day we may ſuppoſe they were offered to God, and given to the prieſt; on the ſixth day they were expiated and conſecrated, as we read in the next verſe; and on the ſeventh day their ſeveral charges were divided among them; of which we read, ch. iv. after which the princes, he ſuppoſes, began to offer on the eighth day of the ſecond month, for the dedication of the altar; which laſted till the nineteenth day incluſively; and on the twentieth day of this month, they removed (as we read in chap. x. 11, 12.) from Sinai to the wilderneſs of Paran.

Ver. 12. And he that offered his offering the firſt day, was Nahſhon the ſon of Amminadab, of the tribe of Judah.] He held the principal place among the Iſraelites, being the Naſi, the prince or captain (as we tranſlate it, Numb. ii. 3.) of the children of Judah; who had the firſt ſtandard. And yet he alone, of all the twelve great men here mentioned, is not called Naſi, prince of Judah, as all the reſt are called princes of their tribe, ver. 18, 24, 30, &c. but ſimply, Nahſhon of the tribe of Judah. The Jews aſſign ſeveral reaſons for this circumſtance; but perhaps it was, becauſe he offered firſt, which was honour enough; and there needed no more to be ſaid of him.

Ver. 13. And his offering was one ſilver charger, the weight thereof was one hundred and thirty ſhekels, and one ſilver bowl, &c.] It appears, by the metal, of which this charger and bowl were made, that they were for the uſe of the altar of burnt-offerings, in the outward court; for all the veſſels of the ſanctuary were of gold. And we take this charger (or broad diſh, or platter) to have been preſented, for receiving the fleſh which was offered at the altar, or the fine flour for the meat-offerings. And the bowl received the blood; or was uſed for pouring out wine.

——— Both of them were full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering.] Which was to attend upon the burnt-offering, and the peace-offerings, mentioned, ver. 15, 17.

Ver. 14. One ſpoon of ten ſhekels of gold, full of incenſe.] Both the metal of which it was made, and that which was in it, ſhews this ſpoon was for the uſe of the golden altar, in the ſanctuary; which may incline one to think, that both altars were now dedicated; that is, firſt began to be uſed, for the ſervice of the whole congregation. See ver. 88.

Ver. 15. One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the firſt year.] There are ſo many ſacrifices mentioned here, and in the following verſes, (no leſs than twenty-one in all) that, together with the ſilver and gold plate, they look like too great a preſent to be made out of one man's private eſtate: and therefore ſome have thought, that the reſt of the great men of the tribe of Judah joined with Nahſhon in their contributions toward it; and that it was offered in his own and their names.

——— For a burnt-offering.] This is firſt named, as being the moſt ancient ſort of ſacrifice, long before we read of any other; and being an acknowledgment of God's ſovereign dominion over all.

Ver. 16. One kid of the goats for a ſin-offering.] This, in all likelihood, was firſt offered, tho' the other be firſt mentioned; for, in the next chapter, we find the burnt-offering enjoined in the firſt place, but the ſin-offering offered before it, chap. viii. 8, 12.

Ver. 17. And for a ſacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the firſt year.] The ſacrifices were more numerous than the burnt-offering, or the ſin-offering; becauſe the prieſts, and the princes, and as many of the people as they invited, had their ſhare of them, and feaſted before the Lord upon them, with great rejoicing: Which cuſtom, as Mr. Selden obſerves, flowed from hence to the Gentiles, who dedicated their altars, and temples, and ſtatues, &c. with much ceremony; and the ancient Greeks, with more ſumptuous ſacrifices. See lib. 3. De Synedr. cap. 14. n. 3. where he alſo ſhews, how they were dedicated among the Romans with plays, and feaſting, and publick largeſſes: And, at laſt, their feaſts became anniverſary, as the feaſt of dedication among the Jews was, after the time of Antiochus; in which feaſt were illuminations, as we now ſpeak, by ſetting up of candles, or lamps, in token of joy.

Ver. 18. On the ſecond day.] Their offerings were thus diſtributed, to be offered on ſeveral days, that confuſion might be avoided, and every tribe might diſtinctly expreſs their devotion to God, and be graciouſly accepted by him; and the ſolemnity rendered more remarkable, by continuing it ſo long as twelve days. For which reaſon, the feaſt of dedication, after Matthias had purged the temple and the altar, after the profanation of them by Antiochus, was kept eight days, by the Jews, in following times: And this paraſcha (as they call it) of the law, from chap. vi. ver. 22. to chap. viii. ver. 4. of this book, was read at that feaſt.

——— Nethaneel the ſon of Zuar, prince of Iſſachar, did offer.] This tribe, and Zebulon, being under the ſtandard of Judah, are the next that offer. And ſo they proceed in the ſame order; Reuben, and thoſe under his ſtandard, offering next; becauſe they encamped next to them, ver. 30, 36, 42, &c.

Ver. 19. He offered for his offering, one ſilver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty ſhekels, &c.] It may be obſerved, once for all, that there is no difference in the offerings of theſe princes, but all offered plate of equal weight, and an equal number of ſacrifices, without the leaſt variation, either by common agreement, or by Divine appointment; that the vanity of vying one with another might be prevented: And none might boaſt of more generoſity than their brethren; and all might be confident that they were equally intereſted in the altar, and accepted by the Divine Majeſty.

Ver. 24. On the third day Eliab, the ſon of Helon, &c.] Here it may be obſerved, that Moſes thought fit to ſet down diſtinctly, and at length, the offerings of the princes of every tribe, (as he doth here, and in the following part of this chapter) tho' they were the very ſame, without any difference; that an honourable mention being made of every one a-part, none might think themſelves in the leaſt neglected.

Ver. 84. This was the dedication of the altar in the day when it was anointed.] The dedication laſting twelve days, it is apparent, the word day, in this place, neceſſarily ſignifies the time, were it more or leſs, wherein a thing was done. See ver. 88.

——— By the princes of Iſrael.] From whoſe examples princes and great men ſhould learn, as Conradus Pellicanus well applies all this, to be devoutly religious, and to poſſeſs the fear and reverence of the Lord God in their breaſts: To be ſtrong in faith, far from covetouſneſs, unanimous in their endeavours to honour God, to give a good example of faith and good works to others; to ſeek the profit of their ſubjects; aſſiſt the ſervants of God; tend their helping hand to the proficiency of true piety; and provide the miniſters of the church with all things neceſſary, that religion be not neglected and contemned by their poverty.

——— Twelve chargers of ſilver, twelve ſilver bowls, &c.] In theſe, and the following words, the whole ſum of the oblations and ſacrifices is ſet down by Moſes, that every reader, in all future times, might ſee (without the trouble of caſting up the account) how devout and generous their anceſtors were.

Ver. 87. All the oxen for the burnt-offering were twelve bullocks, &c.] Whether there were any prayers made for a gracious acceptance of the ſacrifices, which ſhould be hereafter made on this altar, we are not told; but the ſacrifices themſelves were in the nature of ſupplications, and, it is likely, they who offered them, made their humble petitions with them. And ſo the Gentiles always did at the dedication of their temples, or altars; an inſtance of which is obſerved out of Gruter, by Fort. Scacchus, and by Selden, in theſe words; HANC TIBI ARAM JUPITER OPT. MAX. DICO DEDICOQUE UTI SIS VOLENS PROPITIVS MIHI COLLEGISQUE MEIS, &c. which is a dedication of an altar to Jupiter, with a prayer that he would be gracious to him who dedicated it, and to his friends and neighbours. The like dedication there is of a temple to Priapus, near Padua, with this prayer, that he would conſtantly guard their fields, &c.

Ver. 89. And when Moſes was gone into the tabernacle of the congregation, to ſpeak with him.] That is, with God. This ſeems to be here mentioned, becauſe he had lately had a ſpecial occaſion to go and enquire particularly of God, about a matter of great importance; as will appear from chap. ix. ver. 8, 9. And it is likely he had gone in twice upon this occaſion, to conſult him about the offering of the princes, ver. 4, 5, 10, 11. And now, it is poſſible, went in again, to know if the Lord would give him any farther directions.

——Then he heard the voice of one ſpeaking unto him from off the mercy-ſeat, &c.] There God promiſed to meet him, and to commune with him, &c. Exod. xxv. 22. which ſuppoſes he would be always preſent there; and ſo he was; for the cloud of glory filled the houſe, after it was ſet up, Exod. xl. 33, 34. from whence God ſpake unto him, Lev. i. 1. and told him he would appear, i. e. reſide conſtantly, in the cloud upon the mercy-ſeat, Lev. xvi. 2. Now here he relates, how God appeared and communed with him from thence; which was by a voice that he heard of one ſpeaking to him, as he ſtood in the outward part of the ſanctuary. So the Jews underſtand it; particularly R. Solomon, who thinks that Moſes only entered into the ſanctuary, and ſtanding in the very entrance of it, heard the voice ſpeaking to him from between the two cherubims; which was very clear and ſtrong, but went no farther into the ſanctuary, where Moſes alone at that time was.

——And he ſpake unto him.] With an audible voice, and ſo diſtinctly, that he perceived and underſtood every word; which Abarbinel thinks God vouchſafed for this reaſon, that he viſibly repreſented to him in the mount, the pattern of the tabernacle, and of every thing belonging to it, whereby the form and figure of every particular was imprinted on his mind, and he was the better able to give directions how to make them exactly. So he being to write in his law all that God required them to do, he delivered every thing to him in an audible voice, that he might ſet down, in theſe books, the very words and phraſes which he heard with his ears from the mouth of God, as plainly as if he had tranſcribed them from ſome ancient volume.

To which we cannot but add, that this audible articulate voice from God, which was perceived by human ears, repreſented God as if he was incorporate; and may well be looked upon as an earneſt of that great myſtery of God manifeſted in the fleſh; who, in the fulneſs of time, became a man, and ſpake to all the Jews familiarly in their own language.

CHAP. VIII.

1 How the lamps are to be lighted. 5 The conſecration of the Levites. 23 The age and time of their ſervice.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Speak unto Aaron, and ſay unto him, When thou lighteſt the lamps, the ſeven lamps ſhall give light over-againſt the candleſtick.

3 And Aaron did ſo; he lighted the lamps thereof over-againſt the candleſtick; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

4 And this work of the candleſtick was of beaten gold unto the ſhaft thereof, unto the flowers thereof was beaten work: according unto the pattern which the LORD had ſhewed Moſes, ſo he made the candleſtick.

5 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

6 Take the Levites from among the children of Iſrael, and cleanſe them.

7 And thus ſhalt thou do unto them, to cleanſe them: ſprinkle water of purifying upon them, and let them ſhave all their fleſh, and let them waſh their clothes, and ſo make themſelves clean.

8 Then let them take a young bullock with his meat-offering, even fine flour mingled with oyl, and another young bullock ſhalt thou take for a ſin-offering.

9 And thou ſhalt bring the Levites before the tabernacle of the congregation; and thou ſhalt gather the whole aſſembly of the children of Iſrael together:

10 And thou ſhalt bring the Levites before the LORD, and the children of Iſrael ſhall put their hands upon the Levites:

11 And Aaron ſhall offer the Levites before the LORD, for an offering of the children of Iſrael; that they may execute the ſervice of the LORD.

12 And the Levites ſhall lay their hands upon the heads of the bullocks: and thou ſhalt offer the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering unto the LORD, to make an atonement for the Levites.

13 And thou ſhalt ſet the Levites before Aaron, and before his ſons, and offer them for an offering unto the LORD.

14 Thus ſhalt thou ſeparate the Levites from among the children of Iſrael: and the Levites ſhall be mine.

15 And after that, ſhall the Levites go in to do the ſervice of the tabernacle of the congregation: and thou ſhalt cleanſe them, and offer them for an offering.

16 For they are wholly given unto me, from among the children of Iſrael; inſtead of ſuch as open every womb, even inſtead of the firſt-born of all the children of Iſrael have I taken them unto me.

17 For all the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael are mine, both man and beaſt: on the day that I ſmote every firſt-born in the land of Egypt, I ſanctified them for myſelf.

18 And I have taken the Levites for all the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael.

19 And I have given the Levites as a gift to Aaron and to his ſons from among the children of Iſrael; to do the ſervice of the children of Iſrael in the tabernacle of the congregation, and to make an atonement for the children of Iſrael: that there be no plague among the children of Iſrael, when the children of Iſrael come nigh unto the ſanctuary.

20 And Moſes and Aaron, and all the congregation of the children of Iſrael did to the Levites according unto all that the LORD commanded Moſes concerning the Levites, ſo did the children of Iſrael unto them.

21 And the Levites were purified, and they waſhed their clothes: and Aaron offered them as an offering before the LORD, and Aaron made an atonement for them to cleanſe them.

22 And after that, went the Levites in, to do their ſervice in the tabernacle of the congregation before Aaron, and before his ſons: as the LORD had commanded Moſes concerning the Levites, ſo did they unto them.

23 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.

24 This is it that belongeth unto the Levites: from twenty and five years old and upward, they ſhall go in to wait upon the ſervice of the tabernacle of the congregation:

25 And from the age of fifty years they ſhall ceaſe waiting upon the ſervice thereof, and ſhall ſerve no more:

26 But ſhall miniſter with their brethren in the tabernacle of the congregation, to keep the charge, and ſhall do no ſervice. Thus ſhalt thou do unto the Levites, touching their charge.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] When this was ſpoken, is not certain: If Moſes went into the tabernacle immediately after the princes had offered, ver. 89. of the foregoing chapter; it may be thought he then ſpake theſe things to him. But both this, and what follows, concerning the Levites, ſeem rather to have been delivered after the order for giving them to the prieſts, and ſettling their ſeveral charges, chap. iii. and iv. but ſome other things intervening, which depended upon what had been ordered concerning their camp, and that of the Iſraelites; ſee ver. 4. Moſes omits this, till he had ſet down them, and ſome other matters, which he had received from God. See chap. vii. 11.

Ver. 2. Speak unto Aaron, and ſay unto him when thou lighteſt the lamps.] The oil that was ſpent in the lamps of the candleſtick was part of the offerings which the Iſraelites made for the conſtruction, and for the maintenance of the tabernacle. In the ſecond temple there was an apartment at the corner of the court of the women, which they called the chamber for the oils, becauſe thoſe that were deſtined to Divine ſervice were kept there. God had ordered that the pureſt of all ſhould be choſen for that uſe; and commanded Moſes to direct the children of Iſrael to bring virgin oil. The Hebrew term ſignifies, oil of olives beaten with a peſtle. It is ſaid, that the oil thus prepared is better than that of mills, or preſſes. The Jews declare the ſame, and it is confirmed by Pliny and Columella.

It was the buſineſs of Aaron and his ſons, to cleanſe the candleſtick, and the utenſils belonging thereto, and to prepare the oil, and light the lamps. Maimonides deſcribes theſe kind of offices in the following manner: "The prieſt takes away the match from each of the "lamps, the oil whereof is almoſt conſumed, and, likewiſe, what remains of the oil it ſelf: He cleans the "lamp, puts in another match, and half a log (that is to "ſay, half a pint) of freſh oil, and throws into the place "where the aſhes are put, near the altar, that which he "takes out. When the lamp in the middle is extinguiſhed, "he kindles it again, with ſome fire taken from the altar "in the court; but the reſt are lighted by the neighbouring lamps. He firſt lights ſix lamps, and then ſtops, and "performs the reſt of the ſervice; after which, he returns, and lights the other two. The prieſt, whoſe office it is to light up the candleſtick, carries in his hand "a little golden veſſel, called Cuz, in which he collects "the uſeleſs fragments of the oil and matches. After "having lighted five lamps, he leaves the little veſſel before the candleſtick, and goes away. He then returns, "kindles the two other lamps, takes the veſſel again, "kneels to worſhip, and then retires."

The principal queſtion that is here agitated among the learned, is, whether the lamps burnt only by night, or in the day alſo? And which ſide ſoever one takes, there are probable reaſons to be produced, and eminent authors. On the one hand, the order of God, which required that the lamps ſhould always, as it is expreſſed in one text, (Exod. xxvii. 20.) and continually be burning; as in another, (Lev. xxiv. 2.) the diſpoſition of the holy place, which ſeems to have been very dark; the teſtimony of Joſephus, that of Levi of Barcelona, of Hecatæus, related in Euſebius, and of a great number of modern interpreters, ſeem to prove, that the lamps of the holy place burnt day and night. 'Tis true, theſe authors are not agreed among themſelves, whether all the lamps were conſtantly burning, or only ſome at a time: But they unanimouſly concur in this, that there were always ſome. Joſephus reckons three, that ſerved to illuminate the holy place, without which, the prieſts could not attend their miniſtry.

There are, likewiſe, reaſons in favour of the contrary opinion: 1. The holy place had its poſition to the eaſt, and it looks as if God would not have appointed this ſituation, but only that it might receive the rays of the riſing ſun. 2. The order for cauſing the lamps to burn continually, may ſignify every night, without including the day. 3. The Hebrew word which is tranſlated to burn, alſo ſignifies, to raiſe, or diſpoſe; and perhaps the command of God was, not that the lamps ſhould be perpetually burning, but always kept in good condition, as it is expreſly required in Lev. xxiv. 4. 4. It is ſaid, in the firſt book of Samuel, chap. iii. 3. "Ere the lamps went out;" and it ſeems that this text proves, at leaſt, that ſome of them were extinguiſhed, or that they were ſuffered to go out as ſoon as the night was paſt.

We ſhall make but one obſervation more, with relation to the lamps that were continually burning in the tabernacle; namely, that in this point, there was ſome conformity between the divine worſhip, and that which the Egyptians rendered to their gods. Clemens Alexandrinus ſays, the Egyptians were the firſt who introduced the uſe of lamps into religious worſhip; and we ſhall here tranſlate a memorable paſſage of Herodotus on this occaſion: "When they met in the city of Sais, to ſacrifice and celebrate the feſtival, they light up, at night, all around "the houſes, lamps filled with ſalt and oil, the cotton or "match whereof ſwims a-top, and burns all the night. "This is called the feaſt of lighted lamps. The Egyptians, who can't be preſent at this meeting, never fail "to keep the feaſt, and light lamps round their houſes; "in conſequence of which, they are not only lighted up "at Sais, but generally throughout the whole country."

But in order to determine, agreeably to the rules of true criticiſm, whether Moſes imitated the rites of the Egyptians, or they made theirs correſpond with thoſe of Moſes, the Epocha of the eſtabliſhment of this cuſtom in Egypt ought to be ſhewn: but this is what cannot be proved, neither by the paſſage of Clemens Alexandrinus, nor that of Herodotus, nor indeed by any other author.

Verſe 9. — And thou ſhalt gather the whole aſſembly of the children of Iſrael together.] The Hebrew words col adath, which we tranſlate the whole aſſembly, frequently ſignify, all the elders of Iſrael; as in chap. xv. ver. 4. and xxv. ver. 7. and xxxv. ver. 12. and it cannot well have any other ſenſe in this place, as appears from the next verſe.

Verſe 10. —— And the children of Iſrael ſhall put their hands upon the Levites.] As men uſed to do upon their ſacrifices; which ſignified the devoting of that beaſt to God, by him who laid his hand on it at the altar, for ſuch purpoſes as he brought it; and as this was done by private men, in their burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings, as well as in their ſin-offering, (ſee Lev. i. 4. chap. iii. 2. and viii. 13.) But the Jews obſerve, that the whole congregation laid their hands only upon the ſin-offering that was offered for them, Lev. iv. 15. Therefore the Levites are here to be conſidered under that notion; as is manifeſt, from ver. 19. where God is ſaid to have given them to Aaron, &c. To make an atonement for the children of Iſrael. For the Levites being given to God inſtead of the firſt-born, by the ſanctification of which firſt-born to God, (as it is called, Exod. xiii. 1.) the whole family was ſanctified, and their ſin expiated, the offering the Levites after this manner to God was to have the ſame effect that the offering the firſt-born had, viz. the ſanctification and atonement of the children of Iſrael.

Verſe 11. And Aaron ſhall offer the Levites before the Lord, for an offering of the children of Iſrael.] The Hebrew words are more ſignificant; Aaron ſhall wave the Levites before the Lord, for a wave-offering, &c. We have often obſerved before, that this waving, or agitation to and fro, before the altar, (of which ſee Exod. xxix. 24.) was a ſolemn conſecration of a thing to God, as a ſacrifice: and therefore the Levites were preſented unto him, under the ſame conſideration, as the firſt-born were. But it was impoſſible for Aaron to wave them, as he did ſome parts of a ſacrifice; and therefore it is probable that he lifting up his hands, and turning himſelf to all ſides, (as he did when he offered a wave-offering) they, at his command, imitated the ſame motion; and ſo were offered up to God, and became wholly his; ſee ver. 21.

—— That they may execute the ſervice of the Lord.] Or, as it is more ſignificantly expreſſed in the margin, that they may be to execute, which intimates the intention of this [waving them before the Lord] that being wholly devoted to him, they might be qualified for the performance of that ſervice, to which he appointed them at his houſe.

Verſe 12. And the Levites ſhall lay their hands upon the heads of the bullocks.] It being evident, from ver. 19. that the Levites were conſidered as an expiatory ſacrifice; and yet not being devoted to death, (no more than the firſt-born were) theſe two ſacrifices, one for ſin, the other a burnt-offering, were ſubſtituted in their ſtead. Upon which therefore they were to lay their hands, that the ſin, which the children of Iſrael laid upon them, ver. 10. might be transferred to theſe beaſts, by laying their hands upon them, to be actually ſacrificed unto God, by ſhedding their blood.

—— The one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering unto the Lord.] The burnt-offering was mentioned firſt, ver. 8. being the moſt ancient of all oblations; but the ſin-offering is offered firſt, to render the other acceptable. And ſo it was when Aaron was conſecrated, Lev. viii. 14, 18. and when he offered for himſelf, Lev. ix. 8, 12. and for the people, ver. 15, 16. and (to name no more) in the cleanſing of a leper, ch. xiv. 19.

—— To make an atonement for the Levites.] The ſin-offering properly made the atonement; and the burnt-offering declared its acceptance.

Verſe 13. And thou ſhalt ſet the Levites before Aaron and his ſons.] As they were brought before the Lord, becauſe they were to be given unto him, ver. 9. ſo now they were ſet before Aaron and his ſons, becauſe they were given by God to them, ver. 19.

—And offer them for an offering unto the Lord.] Or, as it is in the Hebrew, and wave them for a wave-offering unto the Lord. Some imagine, that as Aaron waved them before, ver. 11 ſo now they were, in like manner, waved by Moſes. But it ſeems to us more probable, that the meaning is; they being waved, &c. ſhould be ſet before Aaron and his ſons, and preſented to them as God's gift, according to his order, chap. iii. 9. And ſo theſe words ought to be tranſlated, "after thou haſt waved them for "a wave-offering;" that is, after Aaron, by his order, had waved them: and thus the like words muſt be underſtood.

Ver. 19. And I have given the Levites as a gift to Aaron, and to his ſons, &c.] In the Hebrew the words are more emphatical, [I have given the Levites, given &c.] that is, the Levites, which are given unto me, ver. 16. I have given unto Aaron and his ſons, chap. iii. 9.

—— And to make an atonement for the children of Iſrael.] Not by offering ſacrifice, for that was the work of the prieſt alone; but by being offered themſelves, in the nature of an expiatory ſacrifice unto God, as we obſerved before, ver. 10 and 12. For tho' they were not ſlain at the altar, as ſacrifices were, yet they might expiate, as the ſcape goat did; which was ſent away alive into the wilderneſs, after it had been preſented unto the Lord, as theſe Levites were, Lev. xvi. 7, 10.

—— That there be no plague among the children of Iſrael.] As there would have been, if any man had preſumed to officiate in the houſe of God, but ſuch as were in this manner taken by himſelf to miniſter there.

Ver. 23. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] After the foregoing commands, he gave him ſome further inſtructions.

Ver. 24. This is it that belongeth unto the Levites.] Add this to what hath been ſaid about them.

—— From twenty and five years old and upward they ſhall go in.] Then they might begin to take the cuſtody of the tabernacle upon them, and to be door-keepers, to refuſe admittance to ſtrangers, and ſuch as were unclean; but not to load the waggons, and do ſuch burthenſome work, till they were thirty years of age; ſee chap. iv. ver. 3.

—— To wait upon the ſervice of the tabernacle, &c.] In the Hebrew, the words are, to war the warfare of the tabernacle: Which is a phraſe often uſed before, chap. iv. 3, 23, &c. and there applied to thoſe who carried the tabernacle: Which they might not do till thirty years of age; but were permitted to go in to learn, at five and twenty, as ſome reconcile theſe two. But Abarbinel obſerves, that there is nothing ſaid of their learning, but of their ſervice, or miniſtry; and therefore at the age of twenty-five years, they began that part of the ſervice, which conſiſted in the cuſtody of the tabernacle.

Ver. 25. And from the age of fifty years, they ſhall ceaſe waiting upon the ſervice thereof.] The Hebrew expreſſion is, "ſhall return from the warfare of their ſervice;" that is, be diſcharged from their function, and no longer burdened with any laborious work, as that of carrying the tabernacle was.

Ver. 26. But ſhall miniſter with their brethren.] This miniſtry is explained in the following words, to keep the charge; That is, to take care of the tabernacle, unto which they were to be a guard.

——And ſhall do no ſervice.] In the Hebrew, ſerve no ſervice; that is, do no laborious work (as was ſaid before), their age beginning to require eaſe and reſt; therefore, no miniſtry was expected from them, but what they might well perform without pains and labour.

—— Thus ſhalt thou do unto the Levites touching their charge.] Appoint them their miniſtries, according to theſe rules; which was obſerved after the ark of God was ſettled, and there was no occaſion to remove it any more; when David therefore, inſtead of carrying the ark and the tabernacle, for which there was then no further occaſion, appointed them to be ſingers in the temple, and porters, &c. for which they were fit at twenty years of age; but continued their employment no longer than till fifty, (as the Jews tell us) when their voice began to decay. Whence that obſervation of Abarbinel upon this chapter:

chapter: Age makes Levites unfit for ſervice, not blemiſhes in their bodies; but prieſts are unfit by blemiſhes in their bodies, not by age: For prieſts continued their ſervice as long as they lived; and tho' they did not begin it till twenty years of age, yet no law of God prohibited them from commencing it ſooner.

CHAP. IX.

1 The paſſover is commanded again. 6 A ſecond paſſover allowed for them that were unclean or abſent. 15 The cloud guideth the movings and encampings of the Iſraelites.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes in the wilderneſs of Sinai, in the firſt month of the ſecond year, after they were come out of the land of Egypt, ſaying,

2 Let the children of Iſrael alſo keep the paſſover at his appointed ſeaſon.

3 In the fourteenth day of this month, at even, ye ſhall keep it in his appointed ſeaſon: according to all the rites of it, and according to all the ceremonies thereof ſhall ye keep it.

4 And Moſes ſpake unto the children of Iſrael, that they ſhould keep the paſſover.

5 And they kept the paſſover on the fourteenth day of the firſt month at even, in the wilderneſs of Sinai: according to all that the LORD commanded Moſes, ſo did the children of Iſrael.

6 ¶ And there were certain men who were defiled by the dead body of a man, that they could not keep the paſſover on that day: and they came before Moſes, and before Aaron on that day.

7 And thoſe men ſaid unto him, We are defiled by the dead body of a man: wherefore are we kept back, that we may not offer an offering of the LORD in his appointed ſeaſon among the children of Iſrael?

8 And Moſes ſaid unto them, Stand ſtill, and I will hear what the LORD will command concerning you.

9 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

10 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, If any man of you, or of your poſterity ſhall be unclean by reaſon of a dead body, or be in a journey afar off, yet he ſhall keep the paſſover unto the LORD.

11 The fourteenth day of the ſecond month at even they ſhall keep it, and eat it, with unleavened bread and bitter herbs.

12 They ſhall leave none of it unto the morning, nor break any bone of it: according to all the ordinances of the paſſover, they ſhall keep it.

13 But the man that is clean, and is not in a journey, and forbeareth to keep the paſſover, even the ſame ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people, becauſe he brought not the offering of the LORD in his appointed ſeaſon: that man ſhall bear his ſin.

14 And if a ſtranger ſhall ſojourn among you, and will keep the paſſover unto the LORD, according to the ordinance of the paſſover, and according to the manner thereof, ſo ſhall he do: ye ſhall have one ordinance, both for the ſtranger, and for him that was born in the land.

15 ¶ And on the day that the tabernacle was reared up, the cloud covered the tabernacle, namely, the tent of the teſtimony: and at even there was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire until the morning.

16 So it was alway: the cloud covered it by day, and the appearance of fire by night.

17 And when the cloud was taken up from the tabernacle; then after that the children of Iſrael journeyed; and in the place where the cloud abode, there the children of Iſrael pitched their tents.

18 At the commandment of the LORD the children of Iſrael journeyed: and at the commandment of the LORD they pitched: as long as the cloud abode upon the tabernacle, they reſted in the tents.

19 And when the cloud tarried long upon the tabernacle many days, then the children of Iſrael kept the charge of the LORD, and journeyed not.

20 And ſo it was when the cloud was a few days upon the tabernacle; according to the commandment of the LORD they abode in their tents, and according to the commandment of the LORD they journeyed.

21 And ſo it was when the cloud abode from even unto the morning, and that the cloud was taken up in the morning, then they journeyed: whether it was by day or by night that the cloud was taken up, they journeyed.

22 Or whether it were two days, or a month, or a year that the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle, remaining thereon, the children of Iſrael abode in their tents, and journeyed not: but when it was taken up, they journeyed.

Ver.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes in the wilderneſs of Sinai.] Or, the Lord had ſpoken; for he now relates what was done a month ago; but not recorded till now, for a ſpecial reaſon; which was, that God having commanded them, in the month before this, to keep the paſſover, ſome perſons were unprepared for it; and thereupon a queſtion aroſe, what courſe they ſhould take? for they were much troubled at their being incapable of acting as their brethren did; which produced a new command from God, that they ſhould keep the paſſover in this ſecond month of the firſt year, after they came out of Egypt. This, Moſes being to give an account of, as a matter of great importance, he introduces it in the proper place, when he was relating what things were tranſacted in this month, ch. i. 1. and defer'd the mention of keeping the paſſover in the firſt month, till he could ſpeak of them both together.

——In the firſt month of the ſecond year, after they were come out of the land of Egypt.] In which month they were commanded to keep the paſſover, in memory of their wonderful deliverance from the land of Egypt.

Ver. 2. Let the children of Iſrael alſo keep the paſſover at his appointed ſeaſon.] Aaron having been lately conſecrated, and having offered all ſorts of ſacrifices for himſelf and the people; and God, having declared his acceptance, by fire from heaven, Lev. viii. 9. commanded the people ſhould keep the paſſover; which he had lately admoniſhed them was one of the feaſts of the Lord, Lev. xxiii. 5. but the firſt order for the obſervation of it being, that they ſhould keep this ſervice, when they came to the promiſed land, Exod. xii. 25. they might thence conclude, there lay no obligation upon them, to obſerve it here in the wilderneſs; and therefore, by a ſpecial precept, they are required to keep it, when the year was come about to the time of its firſt obſervation, that the memory of ſo ſingular a benefit might not preſently be obliterated from their minds; ſee Exod. xiii. 5.

Ver. 3. And according to all the ceremonies thereof.] If there be any difference between ceremonies and rites, we ſhould think it relates to their eating the paſſover in haſte, with their loins girt, ſhoes on their feet, and ſtaves in their hands, Exod. xii. 11. unto which they were not bound, when they came into the land of Canaan, when they were no longer travellers; but, it is likely, they were obſerved here in the wilderneſs, when they were in an unſettled condition.

Ver. 5. And they kept the paſſover on the fourteenth day of the firſt month at even.] It was not hard to procure ſo much flour, as would ſerve to make unleavened bread for that even, from ſome of their neighbours about the wilderneſs.

——In the wilderneſs of Sinai.] Where they reſted almoſt a whole year; but after they removed from thence, they were ſo uncertain in their motions from place to place, that they did not circumciſe their children, who, conſequently, could not eat of the paſſover; and therefore we never read of its being kept after this, during their forty years ſtay in the wilderneſs; nor would they have been obliged, as we ſaid, to keep it now, without this ſpecial command. Yet their doctors ſay, that this is written by Moſes, as a reproach to the Iſraelites, "that "they obſerved no paſſover in the wilderneſs, but this one "alone;" and there are Chriſtian writers, who deliver it as the opinion of the Hebrews themſelves, that they kept another paſſover, a little before they ended their wanderings in the wilderneſs, viz. in the firſt month of the year wherein Mizraim died. See Selden, de Synedr. lib. 2. cap. 2. n. 1.

Ver. 6. And there were certain men who were defiled by the dead body of a man.] And by a late law, (for there is nothing about this in the original law of the paſſover, Exod. xx.) no unclean perſon might eat of holy things, Levit. vii. 20.

Ver 7. And theſe men ſaid unto him.] Tho' they came before Moſes and Aaron, whom they found ſitting together, yet they applied themſelves to Moſes only, as the ſupreme judge in ſuch ſingular caſes: For the judges, who were conſtituted by the advice of Jethro, could not reſolve this hard queſtion; and therefore they referred it to Moſes, by whoſe judgment all difficult cauſes were reſolved, xviii. 22, 26.

——We are defiled by the dead body of a man.] And therefore, ſome may think, ſhould have been excluded out of the camp, (according to what was ordained, chap. v. 2.) and conſequently, kept from coming with ſuch queſtions, or any other buſineſs, to Moſes: But it muſt be conſidered, that when this happened, the law, now mentioned, was not given: For this was in the firſt month of the ſecond year; and that law was not given till the ſecond month, when the camps were formed.

——Wherefore are we kept back.] It was againſt their will that they were defiled by the dead body of a man (which perhaps they were bound to bury) and therefore they expoſtulate with Moſes, about their being denied the liberty, which others had; pleading, in effect, it was not their fault that they were defiled by the dead, but rather their unhappineſs; and therefore why might they not challenge a right in this ſacrifice, as well as others, ſeeing they had not forfeited it by any other voluntary guilt?

——That we may not offer an offering of the Lord.] The paſſover is called the korban of the Lord; becauſe it was to be killed, and its blood ſprinkled (which ſhews it to be properly a ſacrifice) and then eaten by God's commandment, in a grateful remembrance of an exceeding great benefit; which ſhews it to be an Euchariſtical ſacrifice. For tho' the firſt ſacrifice in Egypt, was to procure deliverance to them, and to avert the evil which fell on the Egyptians, by the deſtroying angel; yet ever after, it was a thankſgiving for a deliverance then wrought, by God's ſpecial favour to them: Of which there was a compendious commemoration made in their paſchal rites, Exod. xii. 26, 27.

Ver. 8. And Moſes ſaid unto them, ſtand ſtill.] Or, wait here a while; in which words Moſes himſelf acknowledges the difficulty of the caſe, which he could not reſolve, till he had firſt conſulted the Divine Majeſty about it. This may teach judges not to be aſhamed to confeſs their ignorance, and take advice in matters of a dubious nature; as the Jeruſalem Targum here obſerves. But we ſee no ſuch good ground for the other part of the obſervation on this verſe; that there being four difficult cauſes brought before Moſes, he expeditiouſly decided two of them, but was ſlow in the other two. Thoſe of the firſt ſort were this, and that of the daughters of Zelophehad, chap. xx. theſe he judged preſently, becauſe they were pecuniary matters; but the other two, (viz. about him that blaſphemed, Lev. xxiv. and him that gathered ſticks on the ſabbath-day, Numb. xv.) being capital cauſes, he took longer time to judge; for he put them in ward till the mind of the Lord was known: to teach thoſe who ſucceeded him in the office of judges, to "make quick diſpatch in "cauſes relating to money, but to proceed ſlowly in capital "caſes." But as this was no pecuniary cauſe, ſo it doth not appear, but that he took as much time to underſtand the mind of God in it, as in the other two, with reference to blaſphemy and ſabbath-breaking: for he went in to conſult with God, as he did alſo in the caſe of Zelophehad's daughters, whoſe cauſe he brought before the Lord, chap. xxvii. 5.

——I will hear what the Lord will command concerning you.] Theſe words ſeem to ſignify, that Moſes might go into the holy place when he pleaſed, to enquire of God, who anſwered him, in an audible voice, chap. vii. 89. whenever he deſired ſatisfaction in any doubt. So Abarbinel, who in this, forſakes the Talmudiſts: for they fancy, that becauſe God called to Moſes, and then ſpake to him out of the tabernacle, Lev. i. 1. he could never go into the holy place, but when he was called; which was true only at that time, when the glory of the Lord had newly filled the tabernacle; ſo that he durſt not come into it, till he was invited; but was not a general rule to be obſerved in all his colloquies with the Divine Majeſty, that he ſhould wait till he had a ſingular call to come to him, for it is plain by this, that he went in to ſpeak with him whenſoever he had occaſion.

Ver. 9. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] He brought this cauſe before the Lord, as his manner was in ſuch doubts, and the Lord gave him the following anſwer; which was to be a rule, not only to theſe preſent enquirers, but to all poſterity,

Ver. 10. If any man of you, or of your poſterity, ſhall be unclean.] From hence the Jews obſerve, that this is a law law concerning particular perſons only; and not concerning all the people, or the major part of them. For, as the Miſchna ſaith, in the title Peſachim, cap. 7. if all the people, or the greater part, or the prieſts, had contracted any defilement, they ought, notwithſtanding, to keep the paſſover, even in that ſtate of pollution. But if only the minority among them were defiled, then they who were exempted from that diſqualification ought to celebrate this feſtival in the firſt month, and they that were defiled, were to keep it in the ſecond. This they ground upon the very firſt words of this law, ver. 6. There were certain men, and upon theſe, if any man of you, &c. from whence ſaith Maimonides, this doctrine follows, out of ancient tradition, that "there were ſome private perſons, "who were adjourned to the ſecond paſſover; but if the "generality ſhould be defiled by the dead, they were not "to be ſo adjourned, but to ſacrifice in that uncleanneſs."

——— By reaſon of a dead body.] This caſe is mentioned inſtead of all others, of a ſimilar nature, for there was the ſame reaſon for thoſe who were unclean by a leproſy; for women in childbed, or thoſe who had a running iſſue, or had touched a dead carcaſe: And this ſome of them ground upon ver. 13. where, ſpeaking of thoſe who ſhould keep the paſſover, it is ſaid in general, the man that is clean, &c. therefore he that was any way unclean, might not keep it.

——— Or be in a journey afar off.] Out of his own country, (for it could not be kept any where but in Judea, Deut. xvi. 2.) or at ſuch a diſtance that he could not arrive at the tabernacle upon the day appointed. In the Miſchna, indeed, this dereck rechokah, as it is in the Hebrew, [a long way off] is defined to be fifteen miles from Jeruſalem, or the place where the tabernacle was. Whence Maimonides ſaith, "If any man, on the fourteenth day "of the month Niſan, at ſun-riſing, was fifteen miles or "more from Jeruſalem, this was a remote way; but if he "was at any leſſer diſtance from it, he was not compre"hended in this remote way; for he might be at Jeruſa"lem time enough in the afternoon, to keep the paſſover "that evening; tho' he went but a ſlow pace, and that on "foot." But we do not take this to be a reaſonable explication, and Philo hath determined the diſtance much better, according to the interpretation we mentioned at firſt, (lib. 3. de vita Moſes) where he ſaith, "The ſecond "paſſover was permitted to ſuch who were hindered, by "their travels into countries a great way off, from ſacri"ficing with the reſt of their nation. For it was not their "fault that they were deprived of this honour; eſpecially "conſidering that ſo ſmall a country as Judea could not "contain ſuch a populous nation, but ſent out colonies "into many places." As for thoſe who were only fifteen miles from Jeruſalem, they might eaſily have come to the feaſt, if not on the fourteenth day, yet the day before; and if this diſtance had been a good reaſon to excuſe their abſence, moſt of the nation might have ſtaid without any danger.

Verſe 15. And on the day that the tabernacle was reared up.] This is here mentioned again by Moſes, becauſe he is going to ſpeak of their removal from Sinai; which was by the direction and guidance of this cloud, which ſettled upon the tabernacle when it was firſt erected, Exodus xl. 34.

——— The cloud covered the tabernacle, namely, the tent of the teſtimony. The words may be exactly render'd out of the Hebrew, the cloud covered (the miſchan, or) dwelling place of God upon [or over] the tent of the teſtimony: that is, over that part of the tabernacle where the ark was, the cloud appeared viſibly to all, viz. over the moſt holy place, where the Lord appeared in a glorious cloud upon the mercy-ſeat, Lev. xvi. 2.

——— And at even there was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire.] The ſame cloud which was outwardly dark, was bright within, and turned that light ſide towards them in the night; when the cloudy part could not be ſeen, nor be uſeful to them.

——— Till the morning,] Till it was day, when the cloud was more ſerviceable to them than the light.

Verſe 16. So it was alway,] All the time of their continuing in the wilderneſs. See Exod. xiii. 21.

Verſe 18. At the commandment of the Lord the children of Iſrael journied.] The motion of the cloud was an indication of the divine pleaſure, that they ſhould move alſo, and go towards another ſtation: which they did, and went on as long as the cloud moved.

——— And at the commandment of the Lord they pitched.] For when the cloud ſtood ſtill, that was a Divine direction to them to diſcontinue their progreſs, and fix their ſtation where the cloud ſtood; which, as ſoon as the tabernacle was ſet up again, came down and ſettled upon it, in its uſual ſituation, [over the tent of the teſtimony,] ver. 15.

Ver. 19. And when the cloud tarried long upon the tabernacle many days,] As it ſometimes did: for Maimonides reckons that they ſtaid eighteen years in one place.

——— Then the children of Iſrael kept the charge of the Lord.] This phraſe is uſed here ſomething differently from the ſenſe it hath chap. iii. 25, 28. &c. ſignifying their obedience to God, in fixing their abode where the cloud reſted, till it moved again.

——— And journied not.] This is the explication of the foregoing words, [they kept the charge of the Lord] not daring to ſtir without the conduct of God, tho' ſometimes they ſtaid ſo long in a place, that, no doubt, it was very irkſome to thoſe who were very deſirous, if not impatient, to be in the land of promiſe. This is an inſtance of ſome regard they had to the Divine Majeſty; tho' they did not fear and reverence him ſo much as they ought to have done; which appeared by their frequent mutinies and diſobedience, recorded in their hiſtory.

Verſe 20. And ſo it was, when the cloud was a few days upon the tabernacle, according to the commandment, &c.] If they had a deſire to reſt a while longer in ſome ſtation, which was very convenient for them; yet, upon the motion of the cloud, they took down their tents and moved alſo.

Verſe 21. And ſo it was when the cloud abode from even unto the morning, and the cloud was taken up in the morning, then they journied.] That is, if it did not ſtay a whole day in a place, but ſettling in the even upon the tabernacle, it was taken up again the next morning; yet they followed its motion. This is a great inſtance of their obedience in this particular: for having reſted but one night, they might be weary, and very unwilling to take down their tents and the tabernacle, and travel again the next morning.

——— Whether it was by day or by night that the cloud was taken up, they journied.] This is a further inſtance of their being perfectly guided by God in this matter; that though they were at reſt in their beds, yet if notice was given of the motion of the cloud, they roſe up and went after it; for they were ſenſible their ſafety depended upon the protection and guidance of this glorious Phænomenon.

Ver. 22. Or whether it were two days, or a month, or a year, that the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle, &c.] Theſe words may ſeem ſuperfluous (ſaith Maimonides, p. 3. More Nevochim, cap. 50.) unto thoſe who do not conſider the intention of Moſes in this relation; which was to confute the conceit of profane people, who imagined the reaſon of the Iſraelites ſtaying ſo long in the wilderneſs, was becauſe they loſt their way. For the Arabians, he ſaith, in his days, ſtill called the wilderneſs, in which they travelled, the wandering deſert; fancying the Iſraelites were here bewildred, as we ſpeak, and could not find their way out; but wandered like men in the dark, backward and forward; not knowing which way to turn themſelves: Therefore the Scripture punctually ſhews, that all their removals, which were irregular, and the time they reſted in any place, (which was very unequal, being ſometimes for eighteen years, ſome only for one day or one night) were all ordered by a ſpecial direction of God. For which cauſe all the circumſtances of their motions are recited ſo particularly by Moſes, which ſhews alſo, that the way from Horeb to Cadeſh-barnea, on the borders of the land of Canaan, was a plain, known and beaten road, of about eleven days journey; which it was not eaſy for them to miſs; and therefore the cauſe of their going about, and of their ſtaying forty years in the wilderneſs, is that which Moſes relates.

It is obſervable, that in all theſe verſes, 18, 20, 23. where it is ſaid they journied or reſted al pi [at the mouth] which we well tranſlate at the commandment of the Lord. Onkelos renders it, at the mouth [or commandment] of the WORD of the Lord: which WORD he takes to have given to Moſes all the commandments he received: for ſo he tranſlates thoſe words, Exod. xxv. 22. And there will I meet thee, by theſe; and I will prepare (or appoint) my WORD to thee there: to deliver the divine oracles and anſwers to him.

CHAP. X.

3 The uſe of the ſilver trumpets. 11 The Iſraelites remove from Sinai to Paran. 14 The order of their march. 29 Hobab is intreated by Moſes not to leave them. 33 The bleſſing of Moſes at the removing and reſting of the ark.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Make thee two trumpets of ſilver; of an whole piece ſhalt thou make them; that thou mayeſt uſe them for the calling of the aſſembly, and for the journeying of the camps.

3 And when they ſhall blow with them, all the aſſembly ſhall aſſemble themſelves to thee at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 And if they blow but with one trumpet, then the princes which are heads of the thouſands of Iſrael, ſhall gather themſelves unto thee.

5 When ye blow an alarm, then the camps that lie on the eaſt-parts ſhall go forward.

6 When you blow an alarm the ſecond time, then the camps that lie on the ſouth-ſide, ſhall take their journey: they ſhall blow an alarm for their journeys.

7 But when the congregation is to be gathered together, you ſhall blow; but you ſhall not ſound an alarm.

8 And the ſons of Aaron the prieſts ſhall blow with the trumpets; and they ſhall be to you for an ordinance for ever throughout your generations.

9 And if ye go to war in your land againſt the enemy that oppreſſeth you, then ye ſhall blow an alarm with the trumpets; and ye ſhall be remembred before the LORD your God, and ye ſhall be ſaved from your enemies.

10 Alſo in the day of your gladneſs, and in your ſolemn days, and in the beginnings of your months, ye ſhall blow with the trumpets over your burnt-offerings, and over the ſacrifices of your peace-offerings, that they may be to you for a memorial before your God: I am the LORD your God.

11 ¶ And it came to paſs on the twentieth day of the ſecond month, in the ſecond year, that the cloud was taken up from off the tabernacle of the teſtimony.

12 And the children of Iſrael took their journeys out of the wilderneſs of Sinai; and the cloud reſted in the wilderneſs of Paran.

13 And they firſt took their journey, according to the commandment of the LORD by the hand of Moſes.

14 ¶ In the firſt place went the ſtandard of the camp of the children of Judah according to their armies: and over his hoſt was Naſhon the ſon of Amminadab.

15 And over the hoſt of the tribe of the children of Iſſachar, was Nethaneel the ſon of Zuar.

16 And over the hoſt of the tribe of the children of Zebulon, was Eliab the ſon of Helon.

17 And the tabernacle was taken down; and the ſons of Gerſhon, and the ſons of Merari ſet forward, bearing the tabernacle.

18 ¶ And the ſtandard of the camp of Reuben ſet forward according to their armies: and over his hoſt was Elizur the ſon of Shedeur.

19 And over the hoſt of the tribe of the children of Simeon, was Shelumiel the ſon of Zuriſhaddai.

20 And over the hoſt of the tribe of the children of Gad, was Eliaſaph the ſon of Deuel.

21 And the Kohathites ſet forward, bearing the ſanctuary; and the other did ſet up the tabernacle againſt they came.

22 ¶ And the ſtandard of the camp of the children of Ephraim ſet forward according to their armies: and over his hoſt was Eliſhama the ſon of Ammihud.

23 And over the hoſt of the tribe of the children of Manaſſeh, was Gamaliel the ſon of Pedahzur.

24 And over the hoſt of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, was Abidan the ſon of Gideoni.

25 ¶ And the ſtandard of the camp of the children of Dan ſet forward, which was the rere-ward of all the camps throughout their hoſts: and over his hoſt was Ahiezer the ſon of Ammiſhaddai.

26 And over the hoſt of the tribe of the children of Aſher, was Pagiel the ſon of Ocran.

27 And over the hoſt of the tribe of the children of Naphtali, was Ahira the ſon of Enan.

28 Thus were the journeyings of the children of Iſrael according to their armies, when they ſet forward.

29 ¶ And

29 ¶ And Moſes ſaid unto Hobab the ſon of Raguel the Midianite, Moſes father in law, We are journeying unto the place of which the LORD ſaid, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good: for the LORD hath ſpoken good concerning Iſrael.

30 And he ſaid unto him, I will not go; but I will depart to mine own land, and to my kindred.

31 And he ſaid, Leave us not, I pray thee; foraſmuch as thou knoweſt how we are to encamp in the wilderneſs, and thou mayeſt be to us inſtead of eyes.

32 And it ſhall be, if thou go with us, yea, it ſhall be, that what goodneſs the LORD ſhall do unto us, the ſame will we do unto thee.

33 ¶ And they departed from the mount of the LORD three days journey: and the ark of the covenant of the LORD went before them in the three days journey, to ſearch out a reſting-place for them.

34 And the cloud of the LORD was upon them by day, when they went out of the camp.

35 And it came to paſs when the ark ſet forward, that Moſes ſaid, Riſe up, LORD, and let thine enemies be ſcattered; and let them that hate thee, flee before thee.

36 And when it reſted, he ſaid, Return, O LORD, unto the many thouſands of Iſrael.

Ver. 2. Make thee two trumpets of ſilver, &c.] The particular uſes of theſe trumpets have been fully explained already, in our annotations on the Second Chapter of this Book, where the order of the tribes of Iſrael in their encampments and marches has been largely diſcuſſed, for which reaſon we think any other particulars on that ſubject unneceſſary

Ver. 29. And Moſes ſaid unto Hobab.] His wife's brother, as Theodoret underſtands it.

——— The ſon of Raguel the Midianite.] The ſon of Jethro prieſt of Midian: for Raguel and he are thought by many to be the ſame perſon, Exod. ii. 18, iii. 1. or one was the father, and the other the ſon; and then Hobab was the grandſon of Raguel.

——— Moſes his father in law.] Theſe words may either refer to Raguel, who is ſuppoſed to be Jethro; and then it is rightly tranſlated father in law; or they may as well refer to Hobab, and be tranſlated brother in law; for ſo the Hebrew word Choten ſometimes ſignifies, or a very near kinſman I cannot, without great ſtraining, be otherwiſe expounded in Judges i. 16 and iv. 11. After Jethro therefore was gone back to his own country, Exod, xviii. 27. Hobab, his ſon, ſtayed ſtill with his ſiſter Zipporah, and accompanied Moſes all the time he continued near Sinai, which was not far from Midian, whither he thought to return, now the Iſraelites were marching away from that neighbourhood; but Moſes was deſirous to have his company further, even to the land of promiſe.

——— We are journeying unto the place, of which the Lord ſaid I will give it you.] i. e. to the land of Canaan, for hither God intended to have brought them, ſhortly after this removal, as appears from Deut. chap. i. ver. 6, 7.

——— For the Lord hath ſpoken good concerning Iſrael.] Promiſed to beſtow a noble country upon us for our inheritance.

Ver. 30. And he ſaid I will not go.] This was his preſent reſolution, till Moſes had further perſwaded him.

——— But I will depart to my own land.] Which he was loth to leave, merely in hope of what the Iſraelites had not yet in poſſeſſion.

Ver. 31. And he ſaid.] i. e. Moſes replied.

——— Leave us not I pray thee.] Do not perſiſt in that reſolution; but be perſwaded to go along with us.

——— For as much as thou knoweſt, how we are to encamp in the wilderneſs.] He being a borderer upon this wilderneſs, was well acquainted with every part of it, and the better able to adviſe them how to ſecure their camp, (for the cloud only ſhewed them where it ſhould be pitched) and defend themſelves from the people on all ſides, that might be injurious to them; which made Moſes ſo earneſt with him to ſtay with them, while they had ſuch need of his aſſiſtance.

——— And thou mayſt be to us inſtead of eyes.] To give them advice and council in any difficulty they might be expoſed to, in the places where they ſtayed; or to direct them how to provide themſelves with ſuch accommodations as they wanted; for he having lived long thereabouts, could not but be well acquainted with the adjacent countries. The LXX underſtand this paſſage, as if the Jewiſh legiſlator deſired his relation to continue to be what he had hitherto proved in the wilderneſs, namely, a good adviſer like his father Jethro, aſſuring him, they would look upon him as an elder; that is, treat him with diſtinguiſhed honour.

Ver. 32. And it ſhall be, if thou go with us.] Not only ſtay with us, while we are here in the wilderneſs, but go along with us into Canaan.

——— Yea, it ſhall be.] Depend upon the punctual performance of what I here promiſe.

——— That what goodneſs the Lord ſhall do unto us, the ſame will we do unto thee.] We will aſſign thee ſome part of the poſſeſſion which God ſhall beſtow upon us. Accordingly it appears, that as Moſes prevailed with him to accompany them, ſo he and his poſterity were ſettled among the Iſraelites, Judges i. 16, and iv. 11. where either he or his father is called the Kenite, who lived in tents, not in houſes, after the manner of their forefathers in Midian.

Ver. 33. And they departed from the mount of the Lord three days journey,] They travelled three days before the cloud ſettled again upon the tabernacle; though it ſtood ſtill ſometimes, but did not deſcend, to give time for neceſſary refreſhment and for ſleep. See chap. xi. 1.

Ver. 35. And when the ark ſet forward.] The letter Nun being turned the wrong way, in the Hebrew word, which is rendered ſet forward; as it is in the word tranſlated complained, in the firſt verſe of the next chapter: the Jewiſh Doctors fancy it denotes here God's graciously converting his face towards them, at the prayer of Moſes; and in the following ſtory, the peoples averſion to God, and ungrateful turning away their hearts from him.

——— Moſes ſaid, riſe up Lord.] It ſeems very ſtrange to us, that any ſhould alledge this place as a proof, that the ark is called Jehovah; when the prayer of Moſes is ſo plainly directed to the Lord himſelf, who was there in a glorious ſymbol of his preſence, and not to the ark; conſidering alſo, that, in other places where this very form of ſpeech is uſed, the Lord and the ark are moſt manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed the one from the other: See 2 Chron. vi. ver. 41. and Pſalm cxxxii, ver. 8. And yet an anonymous Anti-trinitarian writer, confuted by Joſeph de Voiſin many years ago, obſerving that the Chaldee here, inſtead of the Lord, hath the word of the Lord, is ſo abſurd as to ſay, that the ark is called the word; becauſe God, ſaith he, p. 234. ante illam reſponſa vel oracula ſua dabat, &c. gave his anſwers or oracles before the ark, when the prieſt, in dubious matters conſulted the mouth of the Lord, which expoſition carries its own confutation in it; for if the prieſt conſulted the mouth of the Lord, as he ſpeaks, then by the word which gave the anſwer, muſt be meant the Lord himſelf; to whom Moſes here directs his prayer, as the Jeruſalem Targum excellently paraphraſes this verſe; And it came to paſs, when the ark was taken up, that Moſes liſted up his hands in prayer, and ſaid, Riſe now, O WORD of the LORD, in the ſtrength of thy power, and ſcatter the enemies of thy people, &c.

Ver.

Ver. 36. And when it reſted.] As it did wherever the cloud diſcontinued its progreſs.

He ſaid.] He prayed again, ſo the Jeruſalem Targum underſtands both this and the former verſe, Moſes lifted up his hands in prayer, and ſaid, &c. and Jonathan Uzielides, Moſes ſtood in prayer, and begged mercy of God, ſaying, &c.

——— Return, O Lord, unto the many thouſands of Iſrael.] Which Onkelos thus paraphraſes, come again, and dwell, with thy glory in the midſt of us. And ſo he did; the cloud, wherein the Divine Majeſty reſided, ſettling upon the tabernacle, over the ark of the teſtimony, as ſoon as it was again pitched. Others tranſlate it, give reſt O Lord, (which the Hebrew words, will bear) Secure us, that is, in peace, againſt the incurſions of our enemies, and all other dangers. R. Levi. Ben. Gerſom expounds it, bring back the Iſraelites into the land of promiſe, where their fore-fathers dwelt, when they were few in number; whoſe poſterity was now increaſed to ten thouſand thouſands, as the laſt words are in the Hebrew. And there were thoſe, who will have this to be a prayer for their increaſe and multiplication into many more thouſands than they were already. And thus the Jeruſalem Targum, who ſtill by the Lord underſtands his WORD; Return now O WORD of the LORD, from the vehemence of thy anger, and come back to us in thy merciful goodneſs; bleſs the myriads, and multiply the thouſands of Iſraelites.

CHAP. XI.

1 The burning at Taberah quenched by Moſes prayer. 4 The people luſt for fleſh, and loth Manna. 10 Moſes complaineth of his charge. 16 God divideth his burden unto ſeventy Elders. 31 Quailes are given in wrath at Kibroth-Hattaavah.

AND when the people complained, it diſpleaſed the LORD: and the LORD heard it; and his anger was kindled; and the fire of the LORD burnt among them, and conſumed them that were in the uttermoſt parts of the camp.

2 And the people cried unto Moſes; and when Moſes prayed unto the LORD, the fire was quenched.

3 And he called the name of the place Taberah: becauſe the fire of the LORD burnt among them.

4 ¶ And the mixt multitude that was among them fell a luſting: and the children of Iſrael alſo wept again, and ſaid, Who ſhall give us fleſh to eat?

5 We remember the fiſh which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlick:

6 But now our ſoul is dried away; there is nothing at all, beſides this manna, before our eyes.

7 And the manna was as coriander-ſeed, and the colour thereof as the colour of bdellium.

8 And the people went about, and gathered it, and ground it in mills, or beat it in a mortar, and baked it in pans, and made cakes of it: and the taſte of it was as the taſte of freſh oyl.

9 And when the dew fell upon the camp in the night, the manna fell upon it.

10 ¶ Then Moſes heard the people weep throughout their families, every man in the door of his tent: and the anger of the LORD was kindled greatly; Moſes alſo was diſpleaſed.

11 And Moſes ſaid unto the LORD, Wherefore haſt thou afflicted thy ſervant? and wherefore have I not found favour in thy ſight, that thou layeſt the burden of all this people upon me?

12 Have I conceived all this people? have I begotten them, that thou ſhouldſt ſay unto me, Carry them in thy boſom (as a nurſing-father beareth the ſucking child) unto the land which thou ſweareſt unto their fathers?

13 Whence ſhould I have fleſh to give unto all this people? for they weep unto me ſaying, Give us fleſh, that we may eat.

14 I am not able to bear all this people alone, becauſe it is too heavy for me.

15 And if thou deal thus with me, kill me, I pray thee, out of hand, if I have found favour in thy ſight; and let me not ſee my wretchedneſs.

16 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Gather unto me ſeventy men of the elders of Iſrael, whom thou knoweſt to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may ſtand there with thee.

17 And I will come down and talk with thee there: and I will take of the ſpirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they ſhall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thy ſelf alone.

18 And ſay thou unto the people, Sanctify your ſelves againſt to morrow, and ye ſhall eat fleſh (for you have wept in the ears of the LORD, ſaying, Who ſhall give us fleſh to eat? for it was well with us in Egypt) therefore the LORD will give you fleſh and ye ſhall eat.

19 Ye ſhall not eat one day, nor two days, nor five days, neither ten days, nor twenty days;

20 But even a whole month, until it come out at your noſtrils, and it be lothſom unto you: becauſe that ye have deſpiſed the LORD which is among you, and have wept before him, ſaying, Why came we forth out of Egypt?

21 And

A Plague inflicted on Israel whilst eating the Quails.

21 And Moſes ſaid, The people amongſt whom I am, are ſix hundred thouſand footmen; and thou haſt ſaid, I will give them fleſh, that they may eat a whole month.

22 Shall the flocks and the herds be ſlain for them, to ſuffice them? or ſhall all the fiſh of the ſea be gathered together for them, to ſuffice them?

23 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, is the LORD's hand waxed ſhort? thou ſhalt ſee now whether my word ſhall come to paſs unto thee, or not.

24 ¶ And Moſes went out, and told the people the words of the LORD, and gathered the ſeventy men of the elders of the people, and ſet them round about the tabernacle.

25 And the LORD came down in a cloud, and ſpake unto him, and took of the ſpirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the ſeventy elders: and it came to paſs that when the ſpirit reſted upon them, they propheſied, and did not ceaſe.

26 But there remained two of the men in the camp, the name of the one was Eldad, and the name of the other Medad: and the ſpirit reſted upon them (and they were of them that were written, but went not out unto the tabernacle) and they propheſied in the camp.

27 And there ran a young man, and told Moſes, and ſaid, Eldad and Medad do propheſy in the camp.

28 And Joſhua the ſon of Nun, the ſervant of Moſes, one of his young men, anſwered, and ſaid, My lord Moſes, forbid them.

29 And Moſes ſaid unto him, Envieſt thou for my ſake? would God that all the LORDS people were prophets, and that the LORD would put his ſpirit upon them.

30 And Moſes gat him into the camp, he and the elders of Iſrael.

31 ¶ And there went forth a wind from the LORD, and brought quails from the ſea, and let them fall by the camp, as it were a days journey on this ſide, and as it were a days journey on the other ſide, round about the camp, and as it were two cubits high upon the face of the earth.

32 And the people ſtood up all that day, and all that night, and all the next day, and they gathered the quails: he that gathered leaſt, gathered ten homers: and they ſpread them all abroad for themſelves round about the camp.

33 And while the fleſh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the wrath of the LORD was kindled againſt the people, and the LORD ſmote the people with a very great plague.

34 And he called the name of that place, Kibroth-hattaavah; becauſe there they buried the people that luſted.

35 And the people journeyed from Kibroth-hattaavah, unto Hazeroth: and abode at Hazeroth.

Ver. 1. And when the people complained, it diſpleaſed the Lord: And the Lord heard it, and his anger was kindled; and the fire of the Lord burnt among them, and conſumed them that were in the uttermoſt parts of the camp.] The Iſraelites continued in the wilderneſs of Sinai almoſt a whole year, and every day they paſſed there, was ſignalized by ſome memorable event. Of all the encampments they made, this was the moſt fertile in wonders; here it was that the law was given them, by which they were to be diſtinguiſhed from all the nations of the earth; here it was that their prieſts and Levites were inſtalled; here it was that the tabernacle, and the myſterious utenſils belonging thereto, were made; here it was that they were inſtructed in the manner of encamping for the future; and, to ſay all in one word, here it was that the foundation was laid of that kingdom, of which God was to be the gracious ſovereign. They arrived there on the firſt day of the third month, after their departure from Egypt. And they quitted that country, the twentieth day of the ſecond month of the ſecond year. During which time, they had one of the four following ſymbols, to regulate their marches, and ſometimes all four together, viz. the cloud which was taken off the tabernacle of the teſtimony; the ſound of the two trumpets, made by the order of God; the voice of God; and that of Moſes.

The ſacred hiſtory declares, that after the decampment from Sinai, they arrived at the wilderneſs of Paran: But has not informed us, whether the word Paran be a general term, appropriated to all that country where the Iſraelites wandered, during the thirty-nine years which ſtill remained of their journey. It is probable, that Taberah and Kibroth-Hattaavah, and Hazeroth, were places in that wilderneſs; but we ſhall accommodate our obſervations only to ſuch particulars as the ſacred hiſtorian thought worthy to be related with more care and exactneſs.

The long continuance of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs of Sinai, had accuſtomed them to eaſe and ſoftneſs; conſequently this march of three days did not agree with their indolent diſpoſitions; they were tired with the length of the way, and had the inſolence to murmur againſt the Almighty. 'Tis remarkable, that God bore with the crimes they committed before the promulgation of the law; and if that guilty race beheld the hand of the Deity lifted up againſt them, they feared its weight without feeling its effects; and except the ſingle inſtance of their idolatry, in making a golden calf, that arm remained ſuſpended over their criminal heads, without devoting them to deſtruction. But after the law was given them, God altered his conduct in this reſpect, and always puniſhed the crime, in proportion to the light he imparted to them. A fire, which Moſes calls, the fire of the Lord, either to denote a great fire, according to the ſtile of the ſacred language, or to ſhow that it proceeded directly from the Almighty Power, ſpread itſelf thro' the people, and conſumed thoſe who were in the remoteſt parts of the camp, which was therefore called Taberah, that is to ſay, burning.

Ver. 4. And the mixt multitude that was among them fell a luſting: And the children of Iſrael alſo wept again, and ſaid, who ſhall give us fleſh to eat?] The plague of Taberah was followed by a ſecond, which ſome confound with the firſt, tho' Moſes ſeems to diſtinguiſh them ſufficiently. It was the fatigue of the journey which occaſioned one, but concupiſcence produced the other. The ſin that cauſed it, took its birth from that ſwarm of people of all ſorts, who came out of Egypt, and it ſoon infected the ſoundeſt members among the Iſraelites. The manna which was their ordinary food, began to diſguſt them, and this miraculous bread, which the ſcripture calls the bread of Heaven, appeared to them not ſufficiently nutrimental for men. Thoſe mean and ſordid ſouls thought Egypt had a much better fund of ſubſiſtence for its inhabitants, than that Divine providence which watched over the Iſraelites, after ſo tender and wonderful a manner. It is not ſtrange, that a people entirely ſenſual ſhould argue thus. Egypt is one of the moſt fruitful countries in the world: Thoſe who inhabit it have no other care, but that of gathering its rich productions, without giving themſelves the trouble of cultivating the ſoil. Their fiſhery was ſo exuberant, that the prophet, to repreſent the deſolation which God would bring upon them, ſays; "The fiſhers "ſhall mourn, and all they that caſt angle in the brooks "ſhall lament, and they that ſpread nets upon the wa-"ters, ſhall languiſh," Iſa. xix. 8. Herodotus ſays, that during the ſix months in which the waters of the lake of Mœris flowed into the Nile, the fiſhery produces a royal treaſury of a talent every day, and twenty minæ, when they return from this river to that lake. Diodorus Siculus gives us no leſs advantagious an idea thereof. In the ſame authors, we may find an account of the reſt of the productions of Egypt. Some interpreters, for want of having rightly underſtood a paſſage in the former of thoſe authors, have aſſerted, that the Egyptians were forbidden to eat fiſh, and this was one of the reaſons why the Iſraelites had ſuch plenty of it: But beſide, that it cannot be proved that Herodotus ſpeaks of the times of Moſes, one need but peruſe the expreſſions which are quoted, to be convinced that it was only the prieſts of Egypt, and not the whole people, who were forbidden this kind of food. Pliny and Juvenal, have been reproached with the ſike blunder, namely, with the belief that onions and garlick, were worſhipped by the Egyptians, becauſe the prieſts were debarred the liberty of eating them.

The remembrance of this great plenty was very bitter to the Iſraelites. The animals they brought out of Egypt did not thrive and multiply in the wilderneſs, as they would have done in fat paſtures, and they would have been ſoon conſumed if they had been applied to feed ſuch a number of people. There are even ſome interpreters who believe, that God had prohibited the Iſraelites to eat of thoſe creatures whilſt they were in the wilderneſs, and that they ſhould be kept for ſacrificing. And this is the meaning they aſſign to the following text; "What man ſoever "there be of the houſe of Iſrael, that killeth an ox, or a "lamb, or a goat in the camp, and bringeth it not unto "the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to of-"fer an offering unto the Lord, before the tabernacle of "the Lord, Blood ſhall be imputed unto that man, he "hath ſhed blood; and that man ſhall be cut off from "among his people," Levit. xvii. 3, 4. They who thus explains this text, juſtify their notion by the following one out of Deut. chap. xii. 20, 21. "When the Lord "ſhall enlarge thy borders as he hath promiſed thee, and "thou ſhalt ſay, I will eat fleſh, (becauſe thy ſoul longeth "to eat fleſh) thou mayeſt eat fleſh, whatſoever thy ſoul "luſteth after. If the place which the Lord thy God hath "choſen to put his name there, be too far from thee; "then thou ſhalt kill of thy herd, and of thy flock, which "the Lord hath given thee, as I have commanded thee, "and thou ſhalt eat in thy gates whatſoever thy ſoul luſt-"eth after."

Be that as it will, with reſpect to theſe two paſſages, the Iſraelites murmured againſt God, and againſt Moſes, ſaying; "Who ſhall give us fleſh to eat? We remember "the fiſh which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucum-"bers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, "and the garlick: But now our ſoul is dried away; there "is nothing at all, beſides this manna, before our eyes." It is a matter of conſideration, that Moſes, to whom nothing appeared difficult, after he had accepted the commiſſion of law-giver to the people of God, loſt all courage as ſoon as ever thoſe unhappy creatures fell into any great crime. The ſins of a nation are more terrible than the moſt invincible armies. Virtue and piety are the beſt bulwark for covering and defending it. Moſes breathed out his grief in the following terms; "Wherefore haſt "thou afflicted thy ſervant? And wherefore have I not "found favour in thy ſight, that thou layeſt the burden "of all this people upon me? Have I conceived all this "people? Have I begotten them, that thou ſhouldeſt ſay "unto me, carry them in thy boſom (as a nurſing father "beareth the ſucking child) unto the land which thou "ſweareſt unto their fathers? Whence ſhould I have fleſh "to give unto all this people? For they weep unto me, "give us fleſh that we may eat. I am not able to bear all "this people alone, becauſe it is too heavy for me. And "if thou deal thus with me, kill me, I pray thee, out of "hand, if I have found favour in thy ſight; and let me "not ſee my wretchedneſs." There was, perhaps, ſomething too bitter in this complaint; nevertheleſs, God took pity of his weakneſs, which had for its motive the zeal and love of his ſervant; and accordingly, he granted him two articles of his requeſt.

In the firſt place, he ordered him to chuſe ſeventy men of the elders of Iſrael, and to bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation. He promiſed to pour down upon them ſome part of the ſame gifts he had communicated to Moſes, when he gave him the government of the whole people. It is the moſt natural meaning of the expreſſions in this text, which cannot be judged of according to the genius of our weſtern languages; "I will come "down and talk with thee there: and I will take of the "ſpirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; "and they ſhall bear the burden of the people with thee, "that thou bear it not thyſelf alone." The famous Selden has made a collection of all the rabbinical viſions, to which theſe words have given occaſion. Some Jewiſh doctors have likewiſe advanced, but without proof, that thoſe whom Moſes ſet over the people, by the advice of Jethro, his father-in-law, were devoured by the flames, for not having ſuppreſſed the ſedition which we mentioned at the beginning of this diſſertation; and that it was what rendered this new eſtabliſhment neceſſary. But it appears, by that place in Exodus, where this advice is related, that Moſes had not entruſted thoſe men with any matters of great importance; ſo that the people appealed ſtill to him in affairs of conſequence, to which they were not equal. It may alſo be preſumed, that the appointment of theſe ſeventy elders was only temporary.

It was ſoon perceived, that thoſe who were choſen by the order of God were filled with his Spirit. Scarce had they received that Spirit, but they prophеſied; an indefinite term, which ſometimes ſignifies to foretel future events, and at other times, to treat about profound and abſtracted things; but it always denotes actions or operations above meer human power. It is hard to ſay, whether the effects of thoſe gifts which theſe ſeventy men received were perpetual. The ambiguity of the Sacred Language, is the cauſe that theſe expreſſions of Moſes may be rendered almoſt indifferently, they did ceaſe, or, they did not ceaſe, ver. 25. And nothing can be leſs agreeing, than the ancient verſions, and the commentators upon this text. Two of theſe extraordinary men, Eldad and Medad, remained in the camp, for which Moſes does not aſſign the reaſon, and came not with the reſt before the tabernacle; they, however, received the ſame gifts, and propheſied as well as their brethren. Joſhua, the faithful ſervant of Moſes, ſhewed an indiſcreet zeal upon this occaſion: He thought that the credit of theſe two new prophets would eclipſe that of his maſter, and prayed him to ſilence them: but Moſes returned this noble anſwer; "Envieſt thou for my "ſake? would God that all the Lord's people were pro-"phets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon "them!" From theſe words St. Jerom, and others after him, have thought them to be two of the ſeventy, who had forbore going to the tabernacle out of modeſty: but had that been the caſe, there would have been no cauſe to wonder at their propheſying, nor for Joſhua to have forbad them; ſo that it is more likely that theſe were the two who were ſet aſide by the lots, to whom nevertheleſs God imparted the Spirit of prophecy, tho' they were not to have a ſeat in the great court of the ſeventy.

Some Jews affirm, theſe two to have been brothers to Moſes, by the mother's ſide; others, that Amram, Moſes's father, having repudiated his wife, eſpouſed another, by whom he had theſe two ſons. There is a fragment of a ſpurious book quoted in Hermas, entitled, The propheſies of Eldad and Medad, or Eldam and Medal. As for the Rabbies, they are divided about the purport of their prophecies, ſome thinking that they foretold the deſtruction of Gog and Magog; others, the prodigious flight of the quails; and laſtly, others the death of Moſes in the wilderneſs, and Joſhua's ſucceeding him.

As

As to this aſſembly of the ſeventy elders, the Jews, and after them, Grotius, and ſome other Chriſtians, have affirmed, that it was the ſame that beeame afterward ſo famous, under the name of Sanhedrin, to which even their kings and high prieſts were ſubject. The rabbies have been indefatigable to prove, that this Sanhedrin conſtantly ſubſiſted ever ſince its firſt inſtitution by Moſes; and that the members of it always aſſembled themſelves before the tabernacle, wherever that was ſet up, either in the wilderneſs, or in the promiſed land, till the building of the temple by Solomon; who, they ſay, built a ſtately room or hall, in the form of an amphitheatre, one half of which being within the temple, they were not permitted to ſit down in it, but only in the other, which was without it: They add further, that this ſupreme court was continued in Babylon, during their captivity there, and that at their return, an apartment of the ſame nature was rebuilt in the ſecond temple, and ſo continued till its total deſtruction by the Romans. But as they produce no authority for all theſe and many other particularities, relating to that aſſembly, beſide their traditions, they are juſtly rejected by the generality of Chriſtians. Certain it is, that we do not find one of ſuch an high court, either in the times of Joſhua, nor in thoſe of the Judges, or their Kings; nor indeed even after the Babyloniſh captivity, till the time of the Maccabees. And therefore we ſhall forbear giving any further account of this Sanhedrin, till we come to the time in which it is generally ſuppoſed to have been ſet up. As for theſe ſeventy elders, it is likely that they aſſiſted Moſes, during their abode in the wilderneſs, and that there was an end of their aſſembly, as ſoon as they enter'd into the land of Canaan. Their other courts of judicature ſhall be mentioned in their proper place.

The learned Divine Witſius is of opinion, that St. James had the above cited anſwer of Moſes to Joſhua in view, when he made uſe of thoſe difficult expreſſions in his Epiſtle; "Do ye think that the Scripture ſaith in vain, the "Spirit that dwelleth in us luſteth to envy? but he gi-"veth more grace," James iv. 5. The author we quote, cannot find in any part of the Scripture theſe words, which the Apoſtle fetches from thence, unleſs in the caſe we are now upon; and he thus paraphraſes the text above-mentioned; "Do you imagine that the Spirit which regenerates "us, does ſtir up to envy, or other paſſions of the like "nature? On the contrary, it affords us freſh occaſion of "thankfulneſs, and inſpires us with new pleaſure, when "our neighbours receive its gifts as well as we. Of this, "Moſes was an inſtance, when he ſaid, Art thou jealous "on my account? I wiſh that all the Lord's people were "prophets!

The Jews have no other foundation, but in their own fancies, or ſome tradition as weak as thoſe, for what they advance, namely, that it was Gerſhon the ſon of Moſes, who reported that Eldad and Medad propheſied the death of that law-giver, and that this was the occaſion of Joſhua's indignation.

It was thus God gave Moſes ſatisfaction upon the firſt head of his complaint, when he ſaid; "Wherefore have "I not found favour in thy ſight, that thou layeſt the bur-"den of all this people upon me?" The Deity likewiſe gave him ſatisfaction, as to his ſecond complaint, "Whence ſhould I have fleſh to give unto all this people?" God order'd him to prepare the people to eat the fleſh they had ſo greedily deſired, and for which they had ſhed ſo many tears. He promiſed to provide it for them "not "one day, nor two days, nor five days, neither ten days, "nor twenty days; but even a whole month, ver. 19, 20." in which the alluſion is obvious, for God intended to compare the miracle he was about to perform, with that whereby he gave the Iſraelites fleſh only for one day.

The inquietude of mind with which Moſes was affected, prevented him from recollecting that particular; and he even forgot, for a moment, that it was God the Almighty Lord, who ſpoke to him, and therefore he made this anſwer; "the people amongſt whom I am, are ſix hundred "thouſand footmen; and thou haſt ſaid, I will give them "fleſh, that they may eat a whole month. Shall the "flocks and the herds be ſlain for them, to ſuffice them; "or ſhall all the fiſh of the ſea be gathered for them, to "ſuffice them?" But God made him ſenſible, that nothing was impoſſible to the great ſovereign of the univerſe; and he reproached Moſes for his forgetfulneſs of the firſt miracle, by asking him, "Is the Lord's hand waxed "ſhort?"

But whilſt the Deity promiſed to work this new wonder, he made Moſes ſenſible that the appetite of that murmuring people ſhould be ſeverely puniſhed, inſtead of being gratified. "Nothing is more prejudicial to us in "certain caſes, than to obtain the object of our wiſhes." God ſaid he would give the people fleſh, not only till their appetites were ſatiated, but even till the fleſh, which they ſo greedily craved, "ſhould come out of their noſ-"trils, and be loathſome unto them, ver. 20." And the event proved a terrible explanation of thoſe words. A prodigious number of birds deſcended upon the camp; Moſes ſays, "there went forth a wind from the Lord, "and brought quails from the ſea." From which expreſſion, ſome interpreters have concluded, that theſe creatures were produced in the ſea: But there is nothing in the original, which can induce us to adopt this notion; the difficulty conſiſts in reconciling the account of the ſacred hiſtorian, with that of the Pſalmiſt, who determines, that it was an Eaſt and a South-wind, which brought in thoſe birds. As for the South-wind, that may eaſily be conceived: The Red-ſea was on the South of the deſerts of Arabia, where the Iſraelites were encamped; a South-wind therefore was neceſſary to bring the quails from the ſea to the camp. But what can be meant by the Eaſt-wind? Some think, that theſe birds were ſent from all quarters, and waſted to the camp by different kinds of winds. The Vulgate and the Septuagint render it, that God cauſed the Eaſt-wind to ceaſe, and the South to ſucceed it; but the learned Bochart offers a ſolution of a different kind, and which may ſerve as a key, not only to this, but a great number of other paſſages in ſcripture. According to this great man, the ſame word which in the ſacred tongue, commonly ſignifies the South-wind, is ſometimes ſtiled the Eaſt.

This wind brought ſuch a vaſt quantity of theſe creatures, that Moſes ſays, "it let them fall by the camp, "as it were a days journey on this ſide, and as it were a "days journey on the other ſide, round about the camp, "and as it were two cubits high. He that gathered leaſt, "gathered ten homers," ver. 31, 32.

Homer, or rather Chomer, is a meaſure which contains ten baths, or five buſhels. The Jews think Chomer to be the ſame with Chamer, an aſs, becauſe the letters are the ſame, and conſequently, that a Chomer is an aſs load. This prodigious quantity of quails has appeared ſo incredible to ſome learned interpreters, that they have choſen to render the word Chomer, an heap; but even this verſion of ten heaps to each perſon, or even to each family, in a camp that conſiſted of near three millions of ſouls, will appear ſtill too extraordinary, unleſs it be looked upon as altogether miraculous. However, becauſe we would not inlarge the miracle more than was needful, we ventured to depart a little from our own, and moſt other verſions, which render the words of Moſes, as if the quails had lain two cubits, that is, above a yard thick, upon the ground, which would be ſtill more prodigious: whereas the original may properly enough be rendered, that they flew no higher than two cubits from it; and this quantity was more than ſufficient to ſerve them a month, conſidering, that not only the camp, but all the ground, for a days journey round it, was covered with theſe birds.

The ſame immoderate deſires which induced the Iſraelites to long for fleſh, made them obſerve no kind of temper in the uſe of it, after they had obtained it. "To be "wiſe in the midſt of affluence, is the utmoſt effort of "virtue;" but of which, wiſer men than the Iſraelites, are not always capable. The intemperance of this people, was the cauſe of their misfortune. Stomachs, which, for a whole year, had not been accuſtomed to the digeſtion of any food, beſide the light nouriſhment of manna, could not bear ſuch as was more ſolid and heavy; and perhaps this was the only puniſhment God inflicted on them. Moſes expreſſes himſelf after a manner equally proper to underſtand it either one way or the other. He ſays, "that "while the fleſh was between their teeth, ere it was "chewed, the wrath of the Lord was kindled againſt "the people, and the Lord ſmote the people with a very "great plague, ver. 33." This may denote, either the death that was cauſed by eating this food to exceſs, or elſe, ſome particular diſeaſe with which God thought fit to puniſh puniſh them. Some of the Rabbins have believed, that the plague which God ſent amongſt them miraculouſly, was the chaſtiſement of that people. And others hold, that there was a certain poiſon proceeding from the birds themſelves, which occaſioned the death of the Iſraelites. This plague, what ever it was, gave the name of Kibroth-Hattaavah, or the tomb of luſting, to the camp in which they then were ſtationed.

We have not even made it a doubt, whether the hiſtory we are now relating be different from that in Exod, xvi. ſince the ſmalleſt attention may ſuffice to diſcover, that theſe two events ought to be diſtinguiſhed. The which is mentioned Exod. xvi. 1. happened "the fifteenth day of "the ſecond month" after the children of Iſrael went out of Egypt; but this we have been now treating of was after the twentieth day of the "ſecond month of the ſe-"cond year." The miracle related in Exodus was at the camp of Sin, between Elim and Sinai; but this happened in that part of the Wilderneſs of Paran, which was called the tomb of luſtings. The people ate but one day of the birds mentioned in the book of Exodus, but they fed a whole month upon thoſe that are ſpoken of here. Theſe differences are plain, and 'tis ſufficient to point them out, without naming the interpreters who have confounded ſuch diſagreeing relations.

A famous queſtion is moved here among the learned, with reſpect to the nature of theſe birds; and the debates it has occaſioned are too conſiderable to be paſſed over in ſilence.

Some think, theſe animals were quails, others, that they were locuſts, or graſshoppers.

The great Bochart has carried the proofs for the firſt opinion, to a point that ſeems to be a demonſtration; for he ſhews by authentic quotations, that quails come in vaſt flights to ſeveral parts of the world, and particularly to thoſe where the Iſraelites then ſojourneyed; and he even proves, that they are taken, for the ſpace of "a whole "month, which is exactly the time appointed for the "Iſraelites." Athenæus furniſhes him with arguments for Greece; and numberleſs authors ſupply him for Italy. Geſner relates, that when, in the beginning of the ſpring, theſe birds croſs the ſea towards Italy, they catch a hundred thouſand of them within the compaſs of five miles; and take them for a month together. Pliny ſays, that the quails are ſo tired ſometimes in their paſſage, that they fall upon ſhips in ſuch abundance, as to entangle the ſails and rigging, and ſink whole boats with their weight. The famous critic abovementioned, has a number of other quotations, to prove what Joſephus has advanced, namely, that the gulf of Arabia is one of thoſe places where the greateſt numbers of theſe birds are found.

But if all theſe evidences be not ſufficient to come up to the idea Moſes gives us of the quantity of quails that fell about the camp of the Iſraelites, our author ſupports his aſſertion, by reſtraining the expreſſions of the ſacred hiſtory. He pretends, that the Hebrew word which is tranſlated an omer, and of which it is ſaid, that he who gathered the leaſt of theſe birds had however ten homers, does not always import a meaſure, but is ſometimes taken for a heap. Thus it is he underſtands what is ſaid in Exodus, viii. 14. that they gathered the frogs together upon heaps. The ſame word is likewiſe uſed in that text of Judges, xv. 16. where Sampſon ſays, with the jaw-bone of an aſs, heaps upon heaps, &c. and if this explanation had failed him, he was ready with another, and would have ſolved the difficulty, by underſtanding the heads of families only, in lieu of every individual Iſraelite; and he endeavours to prove, that the words of Moſes ought to be reſtrained; for if they were to be taken literally, every ſingle perſon among the people would have gathered thirty times more quails than were neceſſary for one month, which was the time that God had preſcribed.

As for that other expreſſion, that they were as it were two cubits high upon the ground, and a days journey on this ſide, and a days journey on the other ſide of the camp, this author reduces it, without ſcruple, to a leſs hyperbolical idea, by ſuppoſing either that there was the ſpace of two cubits between the heaps of quails, or that there were heaps of ſuch a height in ſeveral places; or laſtly, that they flew at ſuch a diſtance from the ground. This laſt opinion, which we have hinted at before, is likewiſe entertained by Philo, and many other learned Jews, and it agrees likewiſe with the flight of thoſe birds.

This ſyſtem of the famous Bochart began to be favourably received, when his learned contemporary Ludolphus oppoſed it with ſuch a number of weighty arguments, as could hardly be reſiſted, Com. ad Hiſt. Æthiop. lib. 1. cap. 4. p. 171, &c.

For, 1. He obſerves, that the original word Selaw, which occurs but three times in the whole Bible, namely, in Exodus xvi. 13. Numbers xi. 31. and Pſal. cv. 40. may be derived, according to the opinion even of Bochart himſelf, from a word importing plenty, and which agrees better with locuſts than with quails: He adds, that all the Oriental Verſions, and the Arabian Authors, have kept the Hebrew word without underſtanding it. That Joſephus is the firſt who explained it by the word quails, but without giving any reaſon for his opinion.

2. He relates a paſſage out of Porphyry, De Abſtinent. lib i. p. 55. which determined him to underſtand the equivocal word of the original, by that of locuſts. This philoſopher tells us that an army, almoſt ſtarved to death in the deſarts of Africa, was relieved by a cloud of locuſts, which contributed to their ſupport; and he conjectures, that the deſires and wants of the Iſraelites were ſupplied by a like event, in the wilderneſs of Arabia.

3. He multiplies evidences upon one another, to convince us of the unconceivable numbers of locuſts in the eaſt. Strabo, [lib. xvi. p. 1118.] mentions a people in Arabia, who lived upon the locuſts which the winds brought to them, and Diodorus Siculus, [lib. iii. p. 162.] ſays, that theſe creatures lie on heaps on the ground, and that they are preſerved for uſe, by ſalt.

Pliny tells us, Hiſt. lib. x. cap. 23. what a noiſe they make in their flight; that they darken the very ſun; that the people over whoſe lands they fly, tremble leſt their lands ſhould be as it were ſwallowed up by them; that they are a very bad omen to the reapers, to whom they approach; and that they eat, ſcorch, and deſtroy every thing. Francis Helvarez, in his voyage to Ethiopia ſays, that through the whole dominions of Presbyter-John, the locuſts do unſpeakable damage; that they cover the ground, fill the skies, and obſcure the ſun; that the fields through which they paſs, look as if they were burnt; that theſe creatures have forced whole nations to abandon their habitations; and that large companies of men, women, and children; have been found in the roads dying with fear, at the ſight of theſe formidable inſects. To theſe teſtimonies he adds thoſe of Clenard, Peter Kirſtenius, St. Angelo, and ſome others.

4. He gives us an exact account of the manner of preparing theſe creatures for food; ſhews they are a very ſalutary and palatable food, allowed of by the laws of Moſes, and that they were even ſerved up at the table of kings.

5. After theſe preliminaries, he proceeds to examine the text of Moſes, and labours to prove, that there are none of the expreſſions in it, but what are conformable to his ſyſtem: For, 1. Moſes declares, that the wind brought theſe birds; which agrees leſs with quails than with locuſts. 2. It is ſaid, That they fell by the camp, as it were a days journey on this ſide, and as it were a days journey on the other ſide, round about the camp, and as it were two cubits high; and that he who gathered leaſt, gathered ten homers. The pains which the learned Bochart has taken to limit theſe expreſſions, are proofs, as our authors think, that they do not ſignify quails, and it is a difficulty that does not occur in the ſyſtem which affirms them to be locuſts. 3. Moſes ſays, that the people gathered them, which they could not well have done, if they were quails; ſince there would have been need of a miracle to make thoſe birds to ſuffer themſelves to be ſo eaſily taken; the killing, and drawing their blood, would have required a great deal of time; whereas the locuſts might be eaſily gathered. But, 4. A triumphant reaſon given by our author, is borrowed from what the text ſays, namely, the people ſpread them all abroad, round about the camp. Let the reader, Says our author very judiciouſly, make ſuch an experiment in relation to quails; let him lay them abroad, and expoſe them to the heat of the ſun, after having killed them, and he will ſoon find them ſwarm with vermin.

We

We think it ſufficient to hint the reaſons aſſigned by Ludolphus, in order to invalidate theſe of the learned man whom he oppoſes.

If it ſhould be objected, that the Iſraelites deſired fleſh, which at firſt ſight ſeems to agree better with quails than locuſts; we anſwer, the word fleſh is not always taken in a limited ſenſe: Hence it comes, that Moſes ſaid to God, on occaſion of the peoples asking for fleſh; ſhall the flocks and the herds be ſlain for them, to ſuffice them? Or ſhall the fiſh of the ſea be gathered together to ſuffice them?

The multitude and bigneſs of theſe locuſts, as deſcribed by Ludolphus, and eſpecially the paſſages he relates, both from ancient and modern authors, concerning the fatal devaſtations they made in certain places, may ſerve for a comment to one of the texts in ſcripture which ſeems the moſt hyperbolical, and which, perhaps, is one of thoſe that may nevertheleſs be underſtood in a litteral ſenſe; 'tis that of Joel, where the prophet threatens a famine, of which it would be hard to determine the epocha, but which was to be occaſioned by locuſts. He ſeems to abandon himſelf to the fire of an oriental imagination, in the notion he gives us of theſe creatures; and yet he has not varied from the truth, nor mis-repreſented the nature of them. "A great people and a ſtrong, ſays he, Joel "ii. 2, 3, &c. there hath not been ever the like, neither "ſhall be any more after it, even to the years of many "generations. A fire devoureth before them, and behind "them a flame burneth: The land is as the garden of "Eden before them, and behind them a deſolate wilder-"neſs, yea, and nothing ſhall eſcape them. The appear-"ance of them, is as the appearance of horſes, and as "horſemen, ſo ſhall they run. Like the noiſe of cha-"riots on the tops of mountains ſhall they leap; like the "noiſe of a flame of fire that devoureth the ſtubble, as a "ſtrong people ſet in battle array. Before their face "the people ſhall be much pained, all faces ſhall gather "blackneſs. They ſhall run like mighty men, they ſhall "climb the wall, like men of war, and they ſhall march "every one his ways: And they ſhall not break their "ranks, neither ſhall one thruſt another, they ſhall walk "every one in his path; and when they ſhall fall upon the "ſword, they ſhall not be wounded. They ſhall run to "and fro in the city; they ſhall run upon the wall: They "ſhall climb up upon the houſes: They ſhall enter in at "the windows like a thief. The earth ſhall quake before "them, the heavens ſhall tremble, the ſun and the "moon ſhall be dark, and the ſtars ſhall withdraw their "ſhining."

CHAP. XII.

1 God rebuketh the ſedition of Miriam and Aaron. 10 Miriams leproſy is healed at the prayer of Moſes. 14 God commandeth her to be ſhut out of the hoſt.

AND Miriam and Aaron ſpake againſt Moſes, becauſe of the Ethiopian woman, whom he had married: for he had married an Ethiopian woman.

2 And they ſaid, Hath the LORD indeed ſpoken only by Moſes? hath he not ſpoken alſo by us? And the LORD heard it.

3 (Now the man Moſes was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth)

4 And the LORD ſpake ſuddenly unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, and unto Miriam, Come out ye three unto the tabernacle of the congregation. And they three came out.

5 And the LORD came down in the pillar of the cloud, and ſtood in the door of the tabernacle, and called Aaron and Miriam: and they both came forth.

6 And he ſaid, Hear now my words: If there be a prophet among you, I the LORD will make my ſelf known unto him in a viſion, and will ſpeak unto him in a dream.

7 My ſervant Moſes is not ſo, who is faithful in all mine houſe.

8 With him will I ſpeak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark ſpeeches; and the ſimilitude of the LORD ſhall he behold: wherefore then were ye not afraid to ſpeak againſt my ſervant Moſes?

9 And the anger of the LORD was kindled againſt them, and he departed.

10 And the cloud departed from off the tabernacle, and behold, Miriam became leprous, white as ſnow: and Aaron looked upon Miriam, and behold, ſhe was leprous.

11 And Aaron ſaid unto Moſes, Alas, my lord, I beſeech thee, lay not the ſin upon us, wherein we have done fooliſhly, and wherein we have ſinned.

12 Let her not be as one dead; of whom the fleſh is half conſumed, when he cometh out of his mothers womb.

13 And Moſes cried unto the LORD, ſaying, Heal her now, O God, I beſeech thee.

14 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, if her father had but ſpit in her face, ſhould ſhe not be aſhamed ſeven days? let her be ſhut out from the camp ſeven days, and after that, let her be received in again.

15 And Miriam was ſhut out from the camp ſeven days: and the people journeyed not till Miriam was brought in again.

16 And afterward the people removed from Hazeroth, and pitched in the wilderneſs of Paran.

Ver. 1. And Miriam and Aaron ſpake againſt Moſes becauſe of the Ethiopian woman, whom he had married.] We can ſee no good reaſon why Miriam ſhould be named before Aaron, unleſs, as it is very probable, ſhe began the ſedition recorded in this chapter, and drew her brother Aaron into it.

Zipporah, the wife of Moſes, being engaged in a diſagreement with Miriam her ſiſter-in-law, in which Aaron eſpouſed the part of the latter, is by them called a Cuſhite or Ethiopian; tho' it is plain ſhe was a Midianite, being one of Jethro's daughters. To reconcile which, ſome have affirmed, that Midian was in the land of Cuſh, or at leaſt, very near it, from the words of the prophet, Habak. iii. 7. "I ſaw the tents of Cuſhan in affliction, "and the curtains of the land of Midian did tremble." Others think that it was not Zipporah, but Tharbis the Ethiopian princeſs, whom Moſes is affirmed by Joſephus to have married, and whom he would now have forſaken; but it ſeems more probable, that Cuſhite was a term of reproach or contempt, as Gipſy is with us; and that they called her by that name with no other view. The words therefore might be properly rendered thus; and Miriam and Aaron reflected upon Moſes, upon the account of his Cuſhite, becauſe he had taken a Cuſhite to wife: There being nothing more frequent than ſuch repetitions in the Old Teſtament. As for the reaſon of this quarrel, 'tis likely that Zipporah had ſpoken, as they thought, too much in praiſe of her husband, upon the account of his converſing ſo frequently with God, which made them reply, Has God ſpoken to him alone, has he not ſpoke to us alſo? Upon this, God called them to the tabernacle, ſharply reproved Miriam and Aaron, and highly extolled the merit of his ſervant Moſes, but not a word is mentioned about his wife.

Ver. 9. And the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt them, and he departed.] He withdrew his preſence from the door of the tabernacle, immediately before they could make an anſwer: Which was a token of exceeding great diſpleaſure; as it is in us, when we will not ſo much as hear what men ſay for themſelves, when they have highly and notoriouſly offended us, and we reprove them for it, but turn away from them.

Ver. 10. And the cloud departed from off the tabernacle.] It was not merely taken up from it, (as it always was, when they were to remove their camp) but quite diſappeared for a time; or ſtood at a great diſtance from them, till Miriam was removed from the tabernacle, and carried out of the camp: For that was one reaſon of its departure; the Divine majeſty not deſigning to ſtay where ſo impure a creature was. This was alſo a manifeſt token of God's diſpleaſure againſt them.

——— And behold Miriam became leprous.] Or, was become leprous; a proper puniſhment for pride, and detraction: But it was not inflicted upon Aaron, becauſe he was to judge of leproſy, and was not the firſt in the tranſgreſſion. And beſide, it is likely, God would not have one, who was ſo lately conſtituted his high-prieſt, become vile and contemptible.

——— White as ſnow.] Which is a mark of an incurable leproſy, when all the body was over-ſpread with it, Exod. iv. 6. 2 Kings v. 27.

——— And Aaron looked upon Miriam.] As the prieſt was bound to do; whoſe office it was to inſpect the diſtemper with which ſhe was then afflicted, and judge whether it was a leproſy or not, chap. xiii. 2, &c.

——— And behold ſhe was leprous.] He could not but judge her to have a leproſy, and conſequently pronounce her unclean.

Ver. 11. And Aaron ſaid unto Moſes] He was made ſenſible that Moſes had greater intereſt in God than himſelf, and therefore deſires his interceſſion for them.

——— I beſeech thee lay not the ſin upon us.] He ſupplicates him as his ſuperior, and humbly begs his pardon; and that he would obtain remiſſion of the puniſhment which they had juſtly deſerved by their ſin: For he was afraid he himſelf might ſuffer, as he ſaw ſhe did.

——— Wherein we have done fooliſhly, and wherein we have ſinned.] He prays him to look upon their offence, as proceeding from folly and weakneſs, tho', in itſelf, a great ſin.

Ver. 12. Let her not be as one dead.] For ſo ſhe was, not only legally, being to be ſeparated from the living, but naturally alſo; this being the worſe kind of leproſy, which ate into the very fleſh, and made her look like an abortive (as it here follows) or ſtill-born child, which had lain long dead, and was half waſted away in its mothers womb.

Ver. 13. And Moſes cried unto the Lord.] Moſt earneſtly petitioned the Lord for her; ſuch was his meekneſs and piety. And his crying, perhaps, ſuppoſes the Divine majeſty to be gone afar off, if not out of ſight.

——— Heal her now, O God, I beſeech thee.] For it was beyond any other power but his, to recover her.

Ver. 14 And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, if her father had but ſpit in her face.] An expreſſion of extreme anger, abhorrence, and contempt, Job xxx. 10. Iſa. lii. 6.

——— Should ſhe not be aſhamed ſeven days.] She could not have the confidence to come immediately into his preſence; but be aſhamed for a conſiderable time, to look him in the face.

——— Let her be ſhut out of the camp.] Much more is it fit, that Miriam ſhould avoid my preſence, and not preſume to come before me; who have ſet a greater mark of my diſpleaſure and deteſtation upon her. For the leproſy ſtruck to her, and made her unfit for all converſation with God or man.

——— Seven days, and after that, let her be received in again.] She might be preſently freed from the leproſy; but kept out of the camp ſo long, to declare God's reſentment againſt her; and to humble her, by expoſing her to ſhame.

Ver. 15. And Miriam was ſhut out of the camp ſeven days; and the people journeyed not till Miriam was brought in again.] For the cloud was gone which ſhould have directed them in their motions. And beſide, this reſpect, perhaps, was ſhown unto her, becauſe ſhe was a propheteſs; and whereby ſhe was allowed ſufficient time to humble herſelf before God, and implore his pardon for her tranſgreſſion.

Ver. 16. And afterward the people removed.] Which ſhews that the cloud, which departed from the tabernacle, ver. 10. returned again to it, together with Miriam, that it might guide them in their removal to another ſtation; for, till it was taken up from the tabernacle, they ſtirred not from the place where they were, chap. ix. 17, 18.

——— From Hazaroth, and pitched in the wilderneſs of Paran.] Where they were before; ſee chap. x. 12. but now were brought into another part of it, called Rithmah, chap. xxxiii. 18. which was called alſo by the name of Kadeſh-barnea, chap. xiii. 26. Deut. i. 20. or elſe we muſt ſuppoſe theſe two places to have been ſo very near together, that they might be ſaid to have pitched either in the one or the other. This ſtation was at the foot of the mountain, on the South part of Canaan, Deut. i. 20. ſo that their next march might have been into the promiſed land, if they themſelves had not prevented it by their repeated rebellion. This removal was in the fourth month of the ſecond year after they came out of the land of Egypt; ſee chap. xi. 20, 25.

1 The names of the men who were ſent to ſearch the land. 17 Their inſtructions. 21 Their acts. 26 Their relation.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Send thou men, that they may ſearch the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Iſrael: of every tribe of their fathers ſhall ye ſend a man, every one a ruler among them.

3 And Moſes by the commandment of the LORD, ſent them from the wilderneſs of Paran: all thoſe men were heads of the children of Iſrael.

4 And theſe were their names: of the tribe of Reuben, Shammua the ſon of Zaccur.

5 Of the tribe of Simeon, Shaphat the ſon of Hori.

6 Of the tribe of Judah, Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh.

7 Of the tribe of Iſſachar, Igal the ſon of Joſeph.

8 Of the tribe of Ephraim, Oſhea the ſon of Nun.

9 Of the tribe of Benjamin, Palti the ſon of Raphu.

10 Of

10 Of the tribe of Zebulon, Gaddiel the ſon of Sodi.

11 Of the tribe of Joſeph, namely, of the tribe of Manaſſeh, Gaddi the ſon of Suſi.

12 Of the tribe of Dan, Ammiel the ſon of Gemalli.

13 Of the tribe of Aſher, Sethur the ſon of Michael.

14 Of the tribe of Naphtali, Nahbi the ſon of Vophſi.

15 Of the tribe of Gad, Geuel the ſon of Machi.

16 Theſe are the names of the men which Moſes ſent to ſpie out the land. And Moſes called Oſhea the ſon of Nun, Jehoſhua.

17 ¶ And Moſes ſent them to ſpie out the land of Canaan, and ſaid unto them, Get you up this way ſouth-ward, and go up into the mountain:

18 And ſee the land what it is, and the people that dwelleth therein, whether they be ſtrong or weak, few or many;

19 And what the land is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad; and what cities they be that they dwell in, whether in tents, or in ſtrong holds;

20 And what the land is, whether it be fat or lean, whether there be wood therein or not. And be ye of good courage, and bring of the fruit of the land (now the time was the time of the firſt-ripe grapes.)

21 ¶ So they went up and ſearched the land, from the wilderneſs of Zin, unto Rehob, as men come to Hamath.

22 And they aſcended by the ſouth, and came unto Hebron; where Ahiman, Sheſhai, and Talmai, the children of Anak, were (now Hebron was built ſeven years before Zoan in Egypt.)

23 And they came unto the brook of Eſhcol, and cut down from thence a branch with one cluſter of grapes, and they bare it between two upon a ſtaff; and they brought of the pomegranates, and of the figs.

24 The place was called the brook Eſhcol, becauſe of the cluſter of grapes which the children of Iſrael cut down from thence.

25 And they returned from ſearching of the land after forty days.

26 ¶ And they went and came to Moſes and to Aaron, and to all the congregation of the children of Iſrael unto the wilderneſs of Paran, to Kadeſh; and brought back word unto them, and unto all the congregation, and ſhewed them the fruit of the land.

27 And they told him, and ſaid, We came unto the land whither thou ſenteſt us, and ſurely it floweth with milk and honey; and this is the fruit of it.

28 Nevertheleſs, the people be ſtrong that dwell in the land, and the cities are walled, and very great: and moreover, we ſaw the children of Anak there.

29 The Amalekites dwell in the land of the ſouth: and the Hittites, and the Jebuſites, and the Amorites dwell in the mountains: and the Canaanites dwell by the ſea, and by the coaſt of Jordan.

30 And Caleb ſtilled the people before Moſes, and ſaid, Let us go up at once, and poſſeſs it; for we are well able to overcome it.

31 But the men that went up with him, ſaid, We be not able to go up againſt the people, for they are ſtronger than we.

32 And they brought up an evil report of the land which they had ſearched, unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, The land thro' which we have gone to ſearch it, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof; and all the people that we ſaw in it, are men of a great ſtature.

33 And there we ſaw the giants, the ſons of Anak, which come of the giants: and we were in our own ſight as graſhoppers, and ſo we were in their ſight.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] The Iſraelites being now come to the borders of Canaan, the Lord ordered Moſes to exhort them to go up, and take poſſeſſion of it, and not to fear nor be diſcouraged; as we read in Deut. i. 21. But the people (out of a diſtruſt of God's power, as Moſes ſeems to intimate, Deut. ix. 23.) deſired they might firſt ſend ſome to ſearch out the land, before they attempted its conqueſt, Deut. i. 22. About which it is likely Moſes conſulted the Divine Majeſty, who gave them leave ſo to do.

That faith which is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not ſeen, Heb. xi. 1. is a noble virtue. To believe upon the ſingle teſtimony of an infallible God, to hope, becauſe it is he who promiſes, and to travel without knowing whither one goeth, like the father of the faithful, how dark ſoever theſe ways are, by which he is pleaſed to guide us, is the moſt noble diſpoſition of a regenerate ſoul. But, on the other hand, nothing is more uſual among weak men, than to ſhew an unſtable and fluctuating temper, when God covers, under a veil of futurity, thoſe good things which he preſerves for a reward of their perſeverance: And nothing is more worthy of the condeſcention of God, than to give them ſome earneſt, of the felicity he intends them.

The children of Iſrael ſhew'd ſuch a weakneſs of ſpirit, with regard to the land of Canaan, as had already coſt them much pains, and the conqueſt of that country was to coſt them a great deal more. They were come to Paran, and encamped at a place in that wilderneſs called Kadeſh-barnea, which reached as far as Petra, a town on the ſouth-ſide of Paleſtine; thus it is deſcribed by Euſebeus, and St. Jerome. There it was that a number of people came to Moſes, ſaying, Deut. i. 22. "We will

" ſend men before us, and they ſhall ſearch us out the " land, and bring us word again by what way we muſt go " up, and unto what cities we ſhall come."

Ver. 2. Send thou men that may ſearch the land of Canaan, &c.] The Divine oracle commanded Moſes, on this occaſion, to make choice of ſome of the chief perſons among the Iſraelites to go and view Paleſtine; and to the end it might be done without partiality, he was directed to ſingle them out of every tribe. Caleb and Hoſhea, the ſon of Nun, are the beſt known of theſe named in the Sacred Hiſtory. Moſes tells us, that God changed the name of the latter, for that of Joſhua; but does not intimate the time of changing it, nor whether this name was given to that brave man, after the valour he had ſhewn in the engagement he had with the Amalekites, as ſome interpreters think, or whether it was in the circumſtance we are now treating of, as others maintain.

Ver. 4. And theſe were their names: Of the tribe of Reuben, Shammua the ſon of Zaccur.] There is little to be obſerved concerning this verſe, and thoſe which follow to the 16th; but that it is evident theſe were not the ſame men, who, in the firſt chapter of this book, are called the heads and princes of the tribes; being inferior perſons, who ruled over ſome part, not over a whole tribe. The three firſt tribes alſo that are here mentioned, ſprang from the three eldeſt ſons of Jacob (for Levi did not make a tribe in Iſrael): But in the enumeration of the reſt, there is not any order obſerved, of which we find it difficult to aſſign the true reaſon. Perhaps, they being to diſperſe themſelves, when they entered the country they were to ſearch, (ſee ver. 22.) and thinking it not prudent to go above two, at the moſt, in company, caſt lots who ſhould be aſſociated: and the firſt lot fell to thoſe of the tribe of Reuben and Simeon; the next to thoſe of Judah and Iſſachar, and ſo to the reſt.

The Names of theſe twelve Explorators or Spies, and their Tribes, are as follow:

Of the tribe of
REUBEN	Shammua, the ſon of Zaccur.
SIMEON	Shaphat, the ſon of Hori.
JUDAH	Caleb, the ſon of Jephunneh.
ISSACHAR	Igal, the ſon of Joſeph.
EPHRAIM	Oſhea, (afterward called Joſhua) the ſon of Nun.
BENJAMIN	Palti, the ſon of Raphu.
ZEBULUN	Gaddiel, the ſon of Sodi.
MANASSEH	Gaddi, the ſon of Suſi.
DAN	Ammiel, the ſon of Gemalli.
ASHER	Sethur, the ſon of Michael.
NAPHTALI	Nahbi, the ſon of Vophſi.
GAD	Geuel, the ſon of Machi.

Moſes gave theſe twelve Iſraelites the difficult commiſſion of running through and ſurveying the land of Canaan, ordering them to begin at the ſouth part, which was the neareſt to the camp of Kadiſh-barnea, and to continue their march towards the mountain of the Amorites, which, in the book of Deuteronomy, chap. i. 24. is ſimply called the mountain, probably becauſe it was directly in their view, and to deſcend afterwards into the plain or valley. He directed them to examine the ſtrength and weakneſs of the people of the land; to obſerve whether they were numerous or not; whether they encamped in tents, as did moſt of the Arabians; or whether they dwelt in fenced cities, like other nations. Above all, he recommended to them to obſerve the nature of the ſoil, and bring ſome of its productions with them. This was the more practicable, becauſe the time of their vintage drew near. Moſes did not give theſe directions for his own inſtruction, ſince the education he had received, could not ſuffer him to be ignorant of the ſtate of a country ſo nearly ſituate to Egypt, where he was born and bred; and the wonders which God wrought to bring his people to it, were ſufficient to create in his mind a high idea of it. He himſelf tells us his deſign, in the book of Deuteronomy, chap. i. 21. it was to ſtrengthen the exhortation he had been giving to the children of Iſrael; " Behold the Lord " thy God hath ſet the land before thee: go up and " poſſeſs it, as the Lord God of thy fathers hath ſaid unto " thee; fear not, neither be diſcouraged.

The ſpies executed their commiſſion, and went from the wilderneſs of Sin, which was on the ſouth of Paleſtine, to the town of Rehob, which was on the oppoſite extremity, near Hamath, a city, or perhaps a province, that bordered on the Holy Land; but concerning which we hardly find two commentators of the ſame ſentiments.

Hebron was one of the firſt towns they arrived at: it was formerly called Kirjath-arba, that is to ſay, the city of Arba. Arba was the father of Anak, and his poſterity were ſtill in that city when the ſpies arrived there. Euſebius places it at twenty-two miles diſtance from Jeruſalem, and on the ſouth ſide of that metropolis of Judea. There is in the famous work of the late Reland, an exact criticiſm on the different ſentiments of interpreters on this ſubject. Moſes obſerves, that Hebron was built ſeven years before Zoan, a city in Egypt, called Tanais by the Greeks, probably from the word Zoan. Hebron was built, if we may believe ſome of the Rabbins, by Ham, one of Noah's ſons, the father of Mizraim, from whom the Egyptians deſcended. 'Tis probable, that Moſes gave the preference to Hebron above Zoan, to blot out of the minds of the Iſraelites thoſe falſe notions they had learned in Egypt, of the antiquity of that country: at leaſt it is certain, that in the following ages, the Egyptians aſcribed to their nation and people an origin which went up much higher than that of the creation. They even affirmed, that their country was older than the gods, and that theſe were born there.

From Hebron the ſpies proceeded to a certain brook, ver. 24. of which Moſes ſays nothing more, ſave only, that it was called ſince Nahal-Eſchol, that is, A cluſter of grapes. There they cut down a bunch of grapes of a prodigious ſize, and carried it to the camp, where they arrived forty days after they had ſet out from thence. It was ſo heavy, that it was a burden for two men, who hung it on a pole, which they bore upon their ſhoulders. It is ſomething extraordinary, that, when the holy Scriptures open ſuch a field for our meditations, the commentators ſhould have ſtarted queſtions of the ſmalleſt importance, and the leaſt capable of being illuſtrated. What could be leſs neceſſary, than to know who thoſe two men were, by whom this luxuriant cluſter was carried; and what could be more uncertain than the opinion of thoſe who, for we know not what reaſons of convenience, pretend it was Joſhua and Caleb? It is likewiſe a weak proceeding in thoſe, who attempt to diſcover the myſtery of our religion in types which have not the leaſt analogy to that Sacred Inſtitution. Of this caſt is that which ſome of the ancients pretend to find in this circumſtance of the ſacred Story. St. Auſtin is not the only Doctor of the primitive church who has entertained this notion, but it is he who has carried it to the higheſt exceſs: " The ſon of God " (ſaith he) is called the cluſter of grapes: He it was that " was typified by that which the ſpies carried hanging " upon a pole, to repreſent the Saviour of the World " faſtened and hanging on the croſs. The two men who " bore it, may denote the two people — He who went " firſt, may repreſent the Jews, that preceded the coming " of the Son of God, and who bore him in the law, and " the prophets, who all bare witneſs of Jeſus Chriſt, as " St. Paul ſays, and who have turned their backs, and " not their faces, to God, as God himſelf complains " by the miniſtry of Jeremiah." St. Auguſt. Enarrat. in Pſal. Tom. viii. in Pſal. viii. pag. 33.

The relation which Moſes gives us of the greatneſs of the cluſter of grapes, brought to the camp by the ſpies, is not one of thoſe facts that are not to be believed, without ſubmitting ones reaſon to the determination of God's Word: For we may find, among ſeveral interpreters, a long liſt of paſſages from profane hiſtory, which are much more incredible in all appearance. What the Sacred Hiſtorian declares has nothing hyperbolical in it ſelf, and we may rationally receive it as he has recorded it, and not render it incredible by fabulous additions, ſuch as thoſe of ſome Rabbins who affirm, that this cluſter of grapes, required the ſtrength of eight men to carry it. Philo, like them, has attempted to give the hiſtory of Moſes an air of incredibility, by endeavouring to render it miraculous.

The ſpies produced the excellent fruits they brought from the land of Canaan, before all the people, to whom they ſhewed this redundant cluſter, together with the figs and and pomgranates of an exquiſite taſte. But inſtead of improving the deſires which the ſight of ſuch noble productions was capable of raiſing in the peoples minds, and inſtead of animating them to overcome the difficulties which retarded the conqueſt of that land whoſe fruits were ſo delicious, they made a report capable of entirely diſcouraging their auditors.

Ver. 27. — We came unto the land whither thou ſenteſt us.] We ſuppoſe they choſe ſome of their number, to ſpeak in the name of the reſt: and firſt they give an account of the land, as was required, ver. 19, 20.

——— And ſurely it floweth with milk and hony.] Their firſt report of the condition of the land, was as honeſt as could be deſired; for they teſtify it to be ſuch as God promiſed to beſtow upon them, Exod. xxxiii. 3.

——— And this is the fruit of it.] They prove what they ſay, by a ſample of the product of it; but they even derived from this a criminal opportunity of intimidating their brethren. You ſee this goodly fruit, how vaſt it is: but believe it, the inhabitants of the country exceed us, and all other men, in ſtature, as much as this fruit exceeds all other of the ſame kind, throughout the world. So Wagenſeil explains the ſenſe of their diſcourſe in that place, Sect. 4.

——— And moreover, we ſaw the children of the Anakims there.] Theſe were the grand children of Arba (from whom Hebron had the name of Kirjath-arba, i. e. the city of Arba) who was the father of Anak, whoſe family was more eminent than any other in Canaan; theſe three ſons of his being men not only of great ſtature, but likewiſe as eminent for their valour. Bochart thinks (lib. 1. Canaan, cap. 1.) that Anak ſignifies as much as the Roman name Torquatus; being like to that Gaul whom Manlius vanquiſh'd: And that Ahiman ſignifies as much as, who is my brother? importing, there was none to be compared with him: Seſai he takes to be as much as Sixtius, viz. ſix cubits high, as Goliah was. And Talmi he derives from Talam, a furrow: as if he ſeemed in length to equal a furrow in the field. Theſe were the people who ſtruck the Iſraelites with terror; for it is probable their whole family were of a very large ſtature, tho' inferior to theſe. And indeed, they were ſo very formidable to all their neighbours, that it became a proverbial ſaying in thoſe countries, Who can ſtand before the children of Anak? Deut. ix. 2.

As true as the account which the ſpies gave of this people, might be in ſome particulars, it was related in ſuch a manner, as to repreſent the conqueſt of the country exceeding difficult, if not impoſſible. So they explain their meaning in expreſs words, ver. 31. and ſo the Iſraelites underſtood them, Deut. i. 28. where theſe terrifying people are called the ſons of the Anakims: for they ſaw not only thoſe three mentioned before, ver. 22. but others alſo who deſcended from them, and were gigantick perſons. So the LXX tranſlate theſe words, υἱοὶ γιγάντων, as likewiſe the Chaldee; and the Jews uſe the word Anakim to ſignify giants; particularly Benjamin Tudelenſis, pag. 3. of his Itinerary: where l'Empereur thinks it probable they were called Anakims, a torque quo colla ſuperbe cingebant, from a collar or chain which they proudly wore about their necks: for the word Anak properly ſignifies collum torque cingere, pag. 136. to wreath a chain about the neck. But it is evident they had their name from their progenitor, Anak, the ſon of Arba: but from whence he derived his name, we are unable to declare.

Ver. 29. The Amalekites dwell in the land of the ſouth.] They do not repreſent the Amalekites as inhabitants of the land of Canaan; but obſerve that they lay on the ſouth border of it: where, if they went about to enter, in all probability, that nation (which were their early enemies when they came out of Egypt) would help to oppoſe them in their attempt, as much as the people of Canaan. For their intention, in the following report, was to ſhew what a ſtout people they muſt encounter, which way ſoever they endeavoured to enter into Canaan.

——— And the Hittites, and the Jebuſites, and the Amorites dwell in the mountains.] Which were in the entrance of the land of Canaan on the ſouth eaſt part of it. Particularly the Amorites, it is evident were planted there, upon the mountains of the borders of Canaan, Deut. i. 27. and xliv. And many of them had made an expedition into the country beyond Jordan, where they had poſſeſſed themſelves of Baſhon and Heſhbon, and all the land berween the rivers Jabbok and Arnon. For they were a very martial people, and of great ſtature, Amos ii. 9. which made theſe ſearchers of their land afraid of them; and bid their brethren conſider whether they thought they ſhould be able to diſpute their paſſage with them: Which they plainly ſuggeſt, in their opinion, they could not. For the Jebuſites were another mighty people, whom, after the conqueſt of Canaan, they could not of a long time diſpoſſeſs of mount Sion. We need not ſay how terrible the Hittites were; for it is probable from thence came the word Hittha, which ſignifies a fright and ſudden conſternation; as Bochart hath obſerved in his Phaleg lib. iv. cap. 36.

——— And the Canaanites dwelt by the ſea.] It is certain, the Canaanites dwelt by the Mediterranean, and they ſeem to have had their names from merchandizing; for which that ſituation was moſt proper, and for that reaſon, others of them were ſeated near Jordan.

This we think is plain from Deut. i. 7. and beſide, the word ſea alone, commonly ſignifies the Mediterranean, called likewiſe the Inland Sea. But it being plain, that they were alſo ſeated, as it here follows, upon the river Jordan, it is poſſible, that by ſea, may be meant in this place, The Dead Sea, or the lake of Geneſareth, or both of them; becauſe they were near Jordan, which flowed into them.

— And by the coaſt of Jordan.] Where the Canaanites were ſeated, as is evident from Deut. xi. 30. for there were both weſtern and eaſtern Canaanites, as appears from Joſh. xi. 3. and they frequently joyned with the Perizzites (particularly Judg. i. 4.) who were a fierce, rough people, dwelling in the woody part of the mountains. So that the intention of the men, who made this report, was, to repreſent to the people, that whether they invaded the land by the Southern parts, or the Eaſtern, they would find both ſtrongly guarded by a mighty nation, much ſuperior to them in force: Which account, as the following verſe ſhows, created a tumult among the people.

Ver. 30. And Caleb ſtilled the people.] It is plain by this, that the people underſtood by their way of ſpeaking, countenances and geſtures, that the meaning of thoſe men who made this report (which was not altogether falſe in it ſelf) was, that the country indeed was very rich and deſirable, yet it was impoſſible for them to drive the inhabitants out of it: Which inflamed them into a mutinous diſpoſition, as Caleb perceived by their looks and confuſed murmurs; and therefore kept forth, before it brake out, to quiet their ſpirits with his account of the country and inhabitants, in which Joſhua, no queſtion joyned with him. It is not indeed here mentioned, becauſe Caleb, perhaps, ſtood next to them who began the commotion, and therefore ſpoke firſt: But he was ſeconded by Joſhua, we may be ſure: becauſe we find him mentioned in the next chapter, and in the firſt place, together with Caleb, as endeavouring to appeaſe the tumult. And he is not only exempted from the puniſhment inflicted on the people for their rebellion, chap. xiv. 30, 38. but is expreſsly ſaid to have followed the Lord fully, as well as Caleb, chap. xxxii. 12.

——— Before Moſes.] The Hebrew phraſe El Moſcheh, may ſignify that he ſtilled them, as they were coming towards Moſes in a ſeditious manner; or, quieted them ſo far, as to make them hearken to Moſes; when they were ready to fly in his face. One of the doctors in the Gemara ſaith, that Joſhua being about to ſpeak, they bitterly reproached him, and would not ſuffer him to proceed: And therefore, Caleb thought good to give them many blandiſhing words, and to call Moſes, this ſon of Amram, which looked like contempt of him; whereby he ſtilled them, and diſpoſed them to liſten to him. And then he ſaid, Is not he the perſon that brought us out of Egypt, who divided the Red-ſea, for us to paſs thro' it; that gave us manna from Heaven? What if he ſhould bid us make ladders and climb up into the ſkies, ſhould we not obey him?

——— And ſaid, Let us go up at once, and poſſeſs it.] He ſpeaks as if it were already their own, (as indeed it was, by God's gift) and they had nothing more to do but enter and take poſſeſſion of it.

——— For we are able to overcome it.] There will be no ſuch difficulty, as theſe men repreſent, in the conqueſt of it.

Ver. 31. But the men that went up with him.] Who, if they had not perſiſted in their unbelief, the people, perhaps, might have been perfectly appeaſed, by Caleb and Joſhua.

——— Said, we be not able.] Now they diſcloſed their minds more plainly, in their reply to Caleb, whom they oppoſe directly; and declare their opinion without reſerve, that they were not an equal match for their enemies.

——— To go up againſt the people, for they are ſtronger than we.] Theſe men had no confidence in the promiſe and power of God, on which Caleb and Joſhua relied; but meaſured all things by human ſtrength.

Ver. 32. And they brought up an evil report of the land which they had ſearched, unto the children of Iſrael.] In the heat of their oppoſition, they now diſparage the country which they had before praiſed, (ver. 27.) and alſo ſtretched their report of the inhabitants beyond the truth.

— Saying, the land thro' which we have gone to ſearch, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof.] Unleſs we ſuppoſe there was a great plague at this time in the country, as the Hebrews do, (who love to excuſe their forefathers ſins) this was a groſs falſhood. But take it as they ſuppoſe, it will even then be a very malignant report. For if they ſaw the people of the country every where, as they paſſed along, carrying their neighbours to their graves (as the Jews tell the tale) this mortality which they ſhould have aſcribed to the providence of God, by whom it was inflicted, that they might have fewer enemies to oppoſe them, and that theſe ſpies might paſs more freely, and leſs obſervable; they moſt wickedly aſcribe to the badneſs of the air: Which being very unhealthy to the natives, would, as might reaſonably be thought, prove much more unſalutary to ſtrangers. Thus bad minds, (as the aforeſaid Gemara gloſſes well enough upon this ſtory) turn that which God intends for their benefit, into their hurt. And if we had any better authority for this ſtory, the word achal (which we tranſlate eat up) would well enough agree with it. For as Maimonides obſerves, in the firſt part of More Nevoch. cap. 30. it is uſed in the holy ſcriptures, concerning any kind of conſumption, deſtruction, or deſolation: As here in this book, chap. xi. 1. Lev. xxvi. 38. 2 Sam. ii. 26, &c.

——— And all the people that we ſaw in it were men of great ſtature.] The Hebrew phraſe is, men of meaſures, ἄνδρες ὑπερμήκεις, as the LXX. tranſlate it, men of larger ſize than the reſt of mankind, which we have no reaſon to think was true: But having ſeen the ſons of Anak in one part of the country, they imagined all the reſt of the people to reſemble them in ſtature. For this is the deſcription of that giant of Gath, mentioned 1 Chron. xx. 6. where he is called a man of meaſure, and 2 Sam. xxi. 20 where he is called, in the plural number, (as they are here) a man of meaſures; ἀνὴρ ὑπερμέγεθης, a man above the common bigneſs. And thus very great houſes are called houſes of meaſure, Jer. xxii. 24.

Ver. 33. And there we ſaw the giants, the ſons of Anak, which came of the giants.] Who were deſcended from a gigantick race of men; particularly from Arba, who was their grandfather, as Joſhua tells us, chap. xiv. 15. and chap. xv. 13, 14, &c. where he ſhows how Caleb drove theſe Anakims out of their cities, and made them fly to the Philiſtines; where there were ſome remainders of them, till the days of David. And others of them, fled into Greece; for there was a race of men among the Greeks called Ἀναχες, who, Voſſius thinks it probable, might deſcend from theſe children of Anak, lib. de orig. & Progreſſu Idol. cap. xiii.

——— And we were in our own ſight as graſhoppers.] Their fear magnified the inhabitants of Canaan above meaſure; tho' no doubt they were men of an extraordinary height; and there are ſtill ſuch, in ſome parts of the world, as Job Ludolphus obſerves in his commentary upon his hiſtory, Ethiopica, lib. i. cap. 2. n. 22.

——— And ſo we were in their ſight.] One of the Jewiſh doctors calls theſe men lyars: For tho' their fear might make them ſeem in their own ſight as graſhoppers, yet how could they tell, ſaith he, that they themſelves were ſo contemptible in the ſight of the children of Anak? Here the Gemariſts endeavour to help them out, by continuing the tale of the great mortality, which was then in thoſe countries. Where a funeral feaſt (as the manner was) being one day celebrated under certain cedar-trees, which are very ſhady; the ſpies got up to the top of them, to hide themſelves among the thick boughs. But the people below happening to look up, the ſpies heard them ſay, there are men got up into the trees, who look like graſhoppers. But there needs no ſuch inventions to defend them, when an hyperbole will do it: Their plain meaning being this, that the Anakims looked down upon them with the utmoſt contempt.

CHAP. XIV.

1 The people murmur at the news. 6 Joſhua and Caleb labour to ſtill them. 11 God threatneth them. 13 Moſes perſwadeth God and obtaineth pardon. 26 The murmurers are deprived of entring into the land. 36 The men who raiſed the evil report, die by a plague. 40 The people that would invade the land againſt the will of God, are ſmitten.

AND all the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried; and the people wept that night.

2 And all the children of Iſrael murmured againſt Moſes, and againſt Aaron: and the whole congregation ſaid unto them, Would God that we had died in the land of Egypt, or would God we had died in this wilderneſs,

3 And wherefore hath the LORD brought us unto this land, to fall by the ſword, that our wives, and our children ſhould be a prey? were it not better for us to return into Egypt?

4 And they ſaid one to another, Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt.

5 Then Moſes and Aaron fell on their faces before all the aſſembly of the congregation of the children of Iſrael.

6 ¶ And Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh which were of them that ſearched the land, rent their clothes.

7 And they ſpake unto all the company of the children of Iſrael, ſaying, The land which we paſſed through to ſearch it, is an exceeding good land.

8 If the LORD delight in us, then he will bring us into this land, and give it us; a land which floweth with milk and honey.

9 Only rebel not ye againſt the LORD, neither fear ye the people of the land; for they are bread for us: their defence is departed from them, and the LORD is with us: fear them not.

10 But all the congregation bade ſtone them with ſtones: and the glory of the LORD appeared in the tabernacle of the con-congregation, before all the children of Iſrael.

11 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, How long will this people provoke me? and how long will it be ere they believe me, for all the ſigns which I have ſhewed among them?

12 I will ſmite them with the peſtilence, and diſinherit them, and will make of thee a greater nation, and mightier than they.

13 ¶ And Moſes ſaid unto the LORD, Then the Egyptians ſhall hear it (for thou broughteſt up this people in thy might from among them.)

14 And they will tell it to the inhabitants of this land: for they have heard that thou LORD art among this people, that thou LORD art ſeen face to face, and that thy cloud ſtandeth over them, and that thou goeſt before them, by day time in a pillar of a cloud, and in a pillar of fire by night.

15 Now if thou ſhalt kill all this people, as one man; then the nations which have heard the fame of thee, will ſpeak, ſaying,

16 Becauſe the LORD was not able to bring this people into the land which he ſware unto them, therefore he hath ſlain them in the wilderneſs.

17 And now, I beſeech thee, let the power of my Lord be great, according as thou haſt ſpoken, ſaying, 18 The LORD is long ſuffering, and of great mercy, forgiving iniquity and tranſgreſſion, and by no means clearing the guilty, viſiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation.

19 Pardon, I beſeech thee, the iniquity of this people, according unto the greatneſs of thy mercy, and as thou haſt forgiven this people, from Egypt, even until now.

20 And the LORD ſaid, I have pardoned according to thy word:

21 But as truly as I live, all the earth ſhall be filled with the glory of the LORD.

22 Becauſe all thoſe men which have ſeen my glory, and my miracles which I did in Egypt and in the wilderneſs, and have tempted me now theſe ten times, and have not hearkned to my voice;

23 Surely they ſhall not ſee the land which I ſware unto their fathers, neither ſhall any of them that provoked me, ſee it:

24 But my ſervant Caleb, becauſe he had another ſpirit with him, and hath followed me fully; him will I bring into the land, whereinto he went; and his ſeed ſhall poſſeſs it.

25 (Now the Amalekites, and the Canaanites dwelt in the valley) To morrow turn you, and get you into the wilderneſs by the way of the Red ſea.

26 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, ſaying,

27 How long ſhall I bear with this evil congregation which murmur againſt me? I have heard the murmurings of the children of Iſrael, which they murmur againſt me.

28 Say unto them, As truly as I live, ſaith the LORD, as ye have ſpoken in mine ears, ſo will I do to you:

29 Your carcaſes ſhall fall in this wilderneſs; and all that were numbred of you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old and upward, which have murmured againſt me.

30 Doubtleſs ye ſhall not come into the land concerning which I ſware to make you dwell therein, ſave Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun.

31 But your little ones, which ye ſaid ſhould be a prey, them will I bring in, and they ſhall know the land which ye have deſpiſed.

32 But as for you, your carcaſes they ſhall fall in this wilderneſs.

33 And your children ſhall wander in the wilderneſs forty years, and bear your whoredoms, until your carcaſes be waſted in the wilderneſs.

34 After the number of the days in which ye ſearched the land, even forty days (each day for a year) ſhall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye ſhall know my breach of promiſe.

35 I the LORD have ſaid, I will ſurely do it unto all this evil congregation, that are gathered together againſt me: in this wilderneſs they ſhall be conſumed, and there they ſhall die.

36 And the men which Moſes ſent to ſearch the land, who returned and made all the congregation to murmur againſt him, by bringing up a ſlander upon the land;

37 Even thoſe men that did bring up the evil report upon the land, died by the plague before the LORD.

38 But

38 But Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, which were of the men that went to ſearch the land, lived ſtill.

39 And Moſes told theſe ſayings unto all the children of Iſrael: and the people mourned greatly.

40 ¶ And they roſe up early in the morning, and gat them up into the top of the mountain, ſaying, Lo, we be here, and will go up unto the place which the LORD hath promiſed: for we have ſinned.

41 And Moſes ſaid, Wherefore now do you tranſgreſs the commandment of the LORD? but it ſhall not proſper.

42 Go not up, for the LORD is not among you; that ye be not ſmitten before your enemies.

43 For the Amalekites, and the Canaanites are there before you, and ye ſhall fall by the ſword: becauſe ye are turned away from the LORD; therefore the LORD will not be with you.

44 But they preſumed to go up unto the hill-top: nevertheleſs, the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and Moſes departed not out of the camp.

45 Then the Amalekites came down, and the Canaanites which dwelt in that hill, and ſmote them, and diſcomfited them, even unto Hormah.

Ver. 1. And all the congregation lifted up their voice, and cryed; and the people wept that night.] Nothing can be conceived more deplorable than the condition in which Moſes found himſelf at that juncture. One would have been tempted to believe, that God, and the people too, had concurred to put the patience and conſtancy of that meek man to the utmoſt tryal. On one hand, the Iſraelites were for making him reſponſible for all the hardſhips they met, in the ways by which God had been pleaſed to guide them. On the other hand, it ſeemed as if God intended alſo to make him anſwerable for the complicated rebellion of the Iſraelites. God told him, that this new crime which thoſe wretches had committed, involved in it a character of contempt of his wonders, which rendered them unworthy of pardon. He would again have had Moſes to agree to the deſtruction of a nation that did not deſerve to exiſt. He made him a yet better offer than that which he propoſed, on account of the idolatry of the golden calf, and promiſed not only, as before, to multiply his deſcendants, but likewiſe to render them more numerous and powerful than all that multitude of rebels.

Moſes oppoſed to this anger of the Almighty, that buckler he had already uſed with ſuch ſucceſs, namely, prayer, That which he poured out on this occaſion, was one of the moſt ardent; but there are ſome circumſtances in which the zeal and favour of the moſt powerful interceſſors is unavailing. And there may be certain times, in which, tho' Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me, ſays the Lord, yet my mind cannot be towards this people; Caſt them out of my ſight, and let them go forth, Jer. xv. 1.

God was not however, intirely inflexible to the voice of his ſervant; but granted him ſome reſpite of his vengeance, and conſented not to bring ſuch a plague upon the people as ſhould exterminate them in an inſtant. But he pronounced a ſentence againſt them which contained two fatal clauſes in it: One of them was, that none of thoſe perſons who came out of Egypt, and had been ſo ungrateful, and inſenſible of his favours, ſhould ever enter into the land of promiſe. The other was, that their children ſhould wander forty years, before they took poſſeſſion of that country; thus ſharing in the puniſhment of their fathers ſins: The event plainly juſtified this laſt clauſe: Two years were already elapſed ſince their departure from Egypt, and there remained ſtill thirty eight before the conqueſt of Canaan. But there is ſome difficulty in the meaning and accompliſhment of the firſt clauſe. It is asked, whether it literally involved every individual Iſraelite that came out of Egypt, excepting two? or whether it was not limitted? Here follows the text of Moſes, verſe 21, &c. "But as truly as I live, all "the earth ſhall be filled with the glory of the Lord. "Becauſe all thoſe men which have ſeen my glory, and "my miracles which I did in Egypt, and in the wilder- "neſs, and have tempted me now theſe ten times, and "have not hearkened to my voice; ſurely they ſhall not "ſee the land which I ſware unto their fathers, neither "ſhall any of them that provoked me, ſee it: But my "ſervant Caleb, becauſe he had another ſpirit with him, "and hath followed me fully: Him will I bring into the "land whereunto he went; and his ſeed ſhall poſſeſs it, "and Joſhua likewiſe. —— But your little ones, which you "ſaid ſhould be a prey, them will I bring in, and they "ſhall know the land you have deſpiſed. But as for "you, your carcaſes ſhall fall in this wilderneſs. And "your children ſhall wander in the wilderneſs forty years "and bear your whoredoms, until your carcaſes be waſted "in the wilderneſs. After the number of the days in "which ye ſearched the land, even forty days (each day "for a year) ſhall ye bear your iniquities, even forty "years, and ye ſhall know my breach of promiſe. I "the Lord have ſaid, I will ſurely do it unto all this evil "congregation, that are gathered together againſt me."

This paſſage, wrong underſtood, has given a handle to a miſtake that has met with a general reception; namely, that of all thoſe who came out of Egypt, none but Joſhua and Caleb arrived at the land of promiſe. The words therefore which we have quoted, will admit of four reſtrictions.

Firſt, Joſhua and Caleb were excepted out of the general rule; this is not diſputed.

Secondly, This ſentence involved none but the tribes that had been numbered. This is no leſs evident from the text; your carcaſes ſhall fall in this wilderneſs, &c.—After the number of the days in which ye ſearched the land, &c. 'Tis plain, that there is an alluſion to the enumeration, or muſter made in the firſt chapter of this book. Now there was a poſitive law, which is related, verſe 49, of the ſame chapter, which forbids the compriſing of the Levites in the ordinary muſters: Only thou ſhalt not number the tribe of Levi, neither take the ſum of them among the children of Iſrael. 'Tis added in the next chapter, that this order was obſerved: The Levites were not numbered among the children of Iſrael, as the Lord commanded Moſes. Hence it is that Eleazer, who was above twenty years old when he came out of Egypt, was found in the land of Canaan, as appears Joſh. xiv. 1. The Levites, according to what Moſes ſays of them, Numb. iii. verſe 43, and who were counted ſeparately, amounted to twenty two thouſand two hundred threeſcore and thirteen. It is to be obſerved, that whereas the reſt of the Iſraelites were not numbred but from twenty years of age, the Levites were reckoned from a month old and upwards, Numb. iii. 39. The reaſon of the law which prohibited the numbering of the Levites is obvious; it was, that ſuch numberings, or muſters, were for thoſe who were obliged to go to the wars. Now the Levites were excuſed from that ſervice, as being ſufficiently employed in that of the tabernacle; and this diſpenſation of theirs was likewiſe imitated by the Gentiles. Strabo obſerves, that it was already the practice in the days of Homer, for in all the enumerations which that poet makes of thoſe that went againſt the city of Troy, we find none that came from the town of Alalcomenium, becauſe it was dedicated to the goddeſs Minerva. Cæſar obſerves the ſame of the Druids, and it is upon this ancient law, that ſome of the fathers endeavour to build certain eccleſiaſtical immunities.

Thirdly, The conſtant cuſtom of not numbering the Iſraelites till after the age of twenty years, furniſhes us with another reſtriction, as well as it exempts a great number number of people from the ſentence pronounced againſt thoſe who rebelled. The women alone, if we only ſuppoſed them equal to the men, would already give us the number of ſix hundred thouſand ſouls. But how many do we not find excepted from this rigour in the number of thoſe that were under twenty years? Now if we were to ſuppoſe that there is in every ſociety, or body of men, two perſons under twenty, to one above, that would give us one million and two hundred thouſand children, which being joined to ſix hundred women, brings them up to one million eight hundred thouſand ſouls. And yet is next to a demonſtration, that there is uſually in all ſocieties four, or it may be five heads, under twenty years, to one above it.

Fourthly, Theſe three reſtrictions render the fourth unneceſſary to our calculation. It is however received by a great number of interpreters, who cannot digeſt that we ſhould explain literally what Moſes ſays in this chapter, to wit, that all the congregation lifted up their voice and cryed; and the people wept that night, and all the children of Iſrael murmured, &c. Now it is certain, that theſe expreſſions, all the congregation of Iſrael, do often import no more than the heads, or a conſiderable part of the people. Perhaps they ought to be conſtrued ſo here; and as the ſentence which God denounced did not relate to any but thoſe who had tempted him ten times, who had not obeyed his voice, but provoked him to wrath, there were, perhaps, ſeveral among the Iſraelites that did not embark in that crime, and conſequently were not involved in that puniſhment.

Ver. 36. And the men which Moſes ſent to ſearch the land.] That is, ten of them.

Ver. 37. Even thoſe men, &c. died by the plague.] Either by the peſtilence, threatned, verſe 12. or by lightning, or ſome other ſudden death; about which there is a diſpute among the Hebrew doctors, in the Gemara on Sota, cap. 7. ſect. 11. where ſome of them ſay, they died of a quinſey, which choaked them; or, as others, their tongues ſwelled, and hung out of their mouths and were full of worms, &c. So that their puniſhment was ſuitable to their ſin, (as they conclude) with their tongues they offended, and in their tongues they ſuffered.

——— Before the Lord.] Whoſe glory appeared upon the tabernacle, before them all, verſe 10. unto which we take theſe words to relate; ſignifying that they died in his preſence (and perhaps by a flaſh of fire from thence) on that very day, upon which this murmuring was raiſed by their falſe report.

Ver. 38. But Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, which were of the men that went to ſearch the land.] Here Joſhua is mentioned with Caleb, and placed firſt, as in verſe 6, as Caleb was in verſe 30. which ſhews there was no difference made between them.

——— Lived ſtill.] This is ſet down to ſhew God's faithfulneſs in his promiſe to them; who, we ſuppoſe, were now in the company of the reſt of the ſearchers of the land, before the Lord, and had no hurt, when all the other ten fell down dead on a ſudden; which made their preſervation the more remarkable.

Ver. 39. And Moſes told all theſe ſayings unto all the children of Iſrael.] Acquainted them with the doom which God had paſſed upon them.

——— And the people mourned greatly.] Were extreamly afflicted at the news; but did not beſeech him to pray for them, as at other times, chap. xi. 2. becauſe he had told them the doom was irreverſible.

Ver. 40. And they roſe up early in the morning and gat them up unto the top of the mountain.] They reſolved they would go up: or they prepared themſelves for it; for they did not actually go up; as appears by the following words.

——— Saying, Lo, we be here.] We are ready to do as Joſhua and Caleb exhorted us, chap. xiii. 30, and xiv. 9. They ſeem now to be as forward, as before they were backward to go to poſſeſs the land; which their riſing early ſignified;

Ver. 41. And Moſes ſaid, wherefore now do you tranſgreſs the commandment of the Lord?] Why do you ſtill continue in your diſobedience to God; who commands you to return, and not to go forward? ver. 25.

Ver. 42. ——— For the Lord is not among you;] The cloud did not ſtir to conduct them; by which they might have underſtood, that their attempt was preſumptuous.

——— That ye be not ſmitten before your Enemies.] Who, without God's help, would be too ſtrong for them.

Ver. 43. For the Amalekites and Canaanites, are there before you.] Either they were removed out of the valley where they were before, ver. 25. Or, their main body being there below, they ſent a ſtrong party to poſſeſs themſelves of the top of the mountain, and to make good the paſs againſt the Iſraelites.

Ver 44. But they preſumed to go up to the hill top.] They audaciouſly endeavoured to aſcend the mountain, againſt the divine command; which is a ſtrong inſtance of a hardned infidelity.

——— Nevertheleſs the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and Moſes departed not out of the camp.] The cloud ſtood ſtill over the tabernacle; and therefore Moſes and the Levites and the ark (which went before them, when they firſt removed from Sinai, chap. x. 33.) did not ſtir out of the place where they were encamped, to conduct them. But this ſeems to ſignify that all the other camps, except that of the Levites, i. e. the whole body of armed men, moved without the guidance of God, who could not favour them, becauſe they moved againſt his expreſs command.

Ver. 45. Then the Amalekites came down and the Canaanites.] With whom the Amorites alſo joined, Deut. chap. i. ver. 44.

——— Which dwelt in that hill.] Who had poſted themſelves there, and poſſeſſed themſelves of the top of the mountain, ver. 43. and ſee ver. 25.

——— And ſmote them.] Having a great advantage of them that were climbing up the hill: from whence they came pouring down upon them.

——— And diſcomfitted them.] It is not ſaid how great a ſlaughter they made of them; but it is likely it was not ſmall, becauſe they chaſed them a good way. Thus began God's threatning to be immediately fulfilled, that their carcaſes ſhould fall in the wilderneſs, ver. 29. by their own wilfulneſs.

——— Even unto Hormah.] A place in the confines of Canaan, near the dead ſea: ſo called from the deſtruction that was here made of the Iſraelites, and afterward of the Canaanites, chap. xxi. 3. Judges i. 17. and upon the occaſion of this calamity which befel the Iſraelites, and the great mortality which followed, while they ſtayed in the wilderneſs, Moſes is thought to have penned the XCth Pſalm; in which he ſignifies the life of man was now ſhortened, and reduced to ſeventy or eighty years, that is, made but half as long as the lives of their forefathers.

CHAP. XV.

1 The law of the meat-offering and the drink-offering. 13 29 The ſtranger is under the ſame law. 17 The law of the firſt of the dough for a heave-offering. 22 The ſacrifice for ſins of ignorance. 30 The puniſhment of preſumption. 32 He that violated the ſabbath is ſtoned. 37 The law of fringes.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, When ye be come into the land of your habitations, which I give unto you,

3 And will make an offering by fire unto the LORD, a burnt-offering or a ſacrifice, in performing a vow, or in a free-will-offering, or in your ſolemn feaſts, to make a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD, of the herd, or of the flock:

4 Then ſhall he that offereth his offering unto the LORD, bring a meat-offering of a tenth deal of flour mingled with the fourth part of an hin of oyl.

5 And the fourth part of an hin of wine for a drink-offering ſhalt thou prepare, with the burnt-offering or ſacrifice, for one lamb.

6 Or for a ram, thou ſhalt prepare for a meat-offering, two tenth deals of flour mingled with the third part of an hin of oyl.

7 And for a drink-offering, thou ſhalt offer the third part of an hin of wine, for a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD.

8 And when thou prepareſt a bullock for a burnt-offering, or for a ſacrifice in performing a vow, or peace-offerings unto the LORD:

9 Then ſhall he bring with a bullock a meat-offering of three tenth-deals of flour mingled with half an hin of oyl.

10 And thou ſhalt bring for a drink-offering, half an hin of wine, for an offering made by fire of a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD.

11 Thus ſhall it be done for one bullock, or for one ram, or for a lamb, or a kid.

12 According to the number that ye ſhall prepare, ſo ſhall ye do to every one, according to their number.

13 All that are born of the country, ſhall do theſe things after this manner, in offering an offering made by fire of a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD.

14 And if a ſtranger ſojourn with you, or whoſoever be among you in your generations, and will offer an offering made by fire of a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD: as ye do, ſo ſhall he do.

15 One ordinance ſhall be both for you of the congregation, and alſo for the ſtranger that ſojourneth with you, an ordinance for ever in your generations: as ye are, ſo ſhall the ſtranger be before the LORD.

16 One law, and one manner ſhall be for you, and for the ſtranger that ſojourned with you.

17 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

18 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, When ye come into the land whither I bring you,

19 Then it ſhall be, that when ye eat of the bread of the land, ye ſhall offer up an heave-offering unto the LORD.

20 Ye ſhall offer up a cake of the firſt of your dough, for an heave-offering: as ye do the heave-offering of the threſhing-floor, ſo ſhall ye heave it.

21 Of the firſt of your dough ye ſhall give unto the LORD, an heave-offering in your generations.

22 ¶ And if ye have erred, and not obſerved all theſe commandments which the LORD hath ſpoken unto Moſes,

23 Even all that the LORD hath commanded you by the hand of Moſes, from the day that the LORD commanded Moſes, and henceforward among your generations:

24 Then it ſhall be, if ought be committed by ignorance without the knowledge of the congregation; that all the congregation ſhall offer one young bullock for a burnt-offering, for a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD, with his meat-offering, and his drink-offering, according to the manner, and one kid of the goats for a ſin-offering.

25 And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, and it ſhall be forgiven them, for it is ignorance: and they ſhall bring their offering, a ſacrifice made by fire unto the LORD, and their ſin-offering before the LORD, for their ignorance.

26 And it ſhall be forgiven all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, and the ſtranger that ſojourneth among them; ſeeing all the people were in ignorance.

27 ¶ And if any ſoul ſin through ignorance, then he ſhall bring a ſhe-goat of the firſt year for a ſin-offering.

28 And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for the ſoul that ſinneth ignorantly, when he ſinneth by ignorance before the LORD, to make an atonement for him; and it ſhall be forgiven him.

29 You ſhall have one law for him that ſinneth through ignorance, both for him that is born amongſt the children of Iſrael, and for the ſtranger that ſojourneth among them.

30 ¶ But the ſoul that doth ought preſumptuouſly (whether he be born in the land, or a ſtranger) the ſame reproacheth the LORD; and that ſoul ſhall be cut off from among his people.

31 Becauſe he hath deſpiſed the word of the LORD, and hath broken his command-

ment; that ſoul ſhall utterly be cut off: his iniquity ſhall be upon him.

32 ¶ And while the children of Iſrael were in the wilderneſs, they found a man that gathered ſticks upon the ſabbath-day.

33 And they that found him gathering ſticks, brought him unto Moſes and Aaron, and unto all the congregation.

34 And they put him inward, becauſe it was not declared what ſhould be done to him.

35 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, The man ſhall be ſurely put to death: all the congregation ſhall ſtone him with ſtones without the camp.

36 And all the congregation brought him without the camp, and ſtoned him with ſtones, and he died; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

37 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

38 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and bid them that they make them fringes in the borders of their garments, throughout their generations, and that they put upon the fringe of the borders a ribband of blue.

39 And it ſhall be unto you for a fringe, that ye may look upon it and remember all the commandments of the LORD, and do them: and that ye ſeek not after your own heart, and your own eyes, after which ye uſe to go a whoring:

40 That ye may remember, and do all my commandments, and be holy unto your God.

41 I am the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: I am the LORD your God.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] We read in Deut. i. 46. that they abode in Kadeſh, where the foregoing murmuring was, many days: during which time, and in the latter part of this ſecond year, after they came out of Egypt, it is very probable all that we read in this chapter, and in the four following, was tranſacted.

Ver. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them.] Theſe words were not directed to the whole congregation, but to the younger ſort, who had not forfeited the favour of God; as their fathers had done; ſeveral of whom, it is likely, were already dead, according to the doom God had paſſed upon them; and the reſt looked upon themſelves as diſinherited, chap. xiv. ver. 12. and therefore theſe precepts were not delivered to them.

——— When ye come into the land of your habitations which I give unto you.] This ſhews he ſpeaks to the children of the murmurers, whom he promiſed to bring into the land of Canaan, chap. xiv. 31. and would therefore have well inſtructed in the manner of ſacrificing, wherein God's worſhip and ſervice very much conſiſted; which is the reaſon why he further explains what he had heretofore ſaid about this matter. But hence it appears that they were not bound to obſerve theſe laws till they came to Canaan.

Ver. 3. And will make an offering by fire unto the Lord.] This comprehends all the ſacrifices which were burnt upon the altar, either in whole or in part.

——— A burnt-offering.] This was the principal, and moſt ancient ſacrifice of all other; which was wholly burnt upon the altar, every morning and every evening, Exod. xxix. 40. of which he treats in the firſt of Leviticus.

——— Or a ſacrifice.] This undoubtedly ſignifies peace-offerings, as appears from ver. 8. and from the words here following; and likewiſe from the uſe of the word ſacrifice in other places, Exod. xviii. 12. Lev. xiv. 10.

——— In performing a vow, or in a free-will offering.] Theſe words explain what he means by a ſacrifice, viz. peace-offerings; which were offered in performance of ſome vow, or freely of their own accord, Lev. vii. 16. and xxii. 21. or by God's command upon their ſolemn feaſts; as it here follows.

——— And at your ſolemn feaſts.] Mentioned Levit. xxiii. 37. and Numb. xxix. 39.

——— To make a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord.] Leviticus i. 9.

——— Of the herd of the flock.] Under the word flock is comprehended both kids and lambs: for the Hebrew words tſon and ſeh ſignify both; as many have obſerved, particularly Bochart in his Hierozoicon, p. 1. lib. 2. cap. 42.

Ver. 4. Then ſhall he that offereth his offering unto the Lord.] Of any of the forenamed ſorts.

——— Bring a meat-offering.] As a neceſſary appurtenance to ſuch ſacrifices.

——— Of a tenth deal of flour.] That is the tenth part of an ephah, as is expreſsly declared, chap. xxviii. 5. which was an omer. See Exod. xvi. 36.

——— Mingled with the fourth part of an hin of oyl.] See Exod. xxix. 40. In this, ſuch meat-offerings, as were acceſſories to other offerings, and a part of the ſacrifice, which went before, differed from thoſe meat-offerings which were not dependent upon a foregoing ſacrifice; but offered alone by themſelves: for in theſe latter the oyl was only poured upon the meat-offering, Lev. ii. 1, &c. and not mingled or macerated with the flour; as it is here ordered: and there was this further difference between them, that thoſe meat offerings which were acceſſory to other ſacrifices, were all burnt on the altar, in honour to God, as Joſephus obſerves, lib. 3. cap. 10. but when a meat-offering was ſolitary, as we may call it, as the principal offering which a man then made, a little part of it only was burnt upon the altar, and the prieſt had the reſt; as appears from the ſecond chapter of Leviticus.

Ver. 5. And a fourth of a hin of wine for a drink-offering ſhalt thou prepare.] See Exod. xxix. 40.

——— With the burnt-offering or ſacrifice.] Whether it were a whole burnt-offering or a peace-offering, ver. 3. this wine was wholly poured upon the altar; and the prieſt had none of it.

——— For one lamb.] It was the ſame for one kid. If there were more than one, the drink-offering, as well as the meat-offering, was increaſed; particularly upon the ſabbath, chap. xxviii. 9. And the true reaſon why meat-offerings, and drink-offerings, are required to attend upon the burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, was, becauſe theſe ſacrifices were a feaſt, and are called the bread or food of God, chap. xxviii. 2. And therefore as bread and wine, as well as fleſh, are our refection; ſo God required them at his table. And ſalt, though not here named, was alſo added, becauſe it was not to be omitted in any ſacrifice, Lev. ii. 13. as alſo frankincenſe; becauſe it is ſaid both ver. 7. and ver. 10. this drink-offering was for a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord; which ſeems to allude to the fragrancy of frankincenſe.

This was a thing ſo well known, that the heathens imitated the ſame practice, in all their ſacrifices, which were ever accompanied with a meat-offering: Inſomuch that Pliny ſaith, without this molſa ſalſa, no ſacrifice was thought to be good: Nullum ſacrificium ratum fieri exiſtimant, lib. 30. cap. 5. And long before him we met with it in Homer, in thoſe known words of his;

——— Οὐλοχύτας πρῶβάλλοντο.

And as for wine, Brentius, in his paraphraſe on Leviticus, takes notice of that phraſe in him, no leſs obvious,

——— Ἐπὶ δ' ὤιθοπον οἶνον

which they not only poured upon the ſacrifice, as it ſtood at the altar ready to be offered, but upon its fleſh, when it was burning there; as we find in Virgil, Georg. 4.

Ter liquido ardentem perfudit nectare flammam.

And in many other places.

Ver. 6. Or for a ram, thou ſhalt prepare for a meat-offering, two tenth deals, &c.] This being a nobler ſacrifice than a lamb, a larger meat-offering, and drink offering alſo, as appears by the next verſe, is required to attend it.

Ver. 7. And for a drink-offering, thou ſhalt offer a third part of a hin of wine, &c.] Whereas for a lamb a fourth part was ſufficient, ver. 5;

Ver. 8. And when thou prepareſt a bullock.] This is a ſacrifice of the herd, as the former of the flock, mentioned ver. 3.

——— For a burnt-offering, or for a ſacrifice in performing a vow, or peace offering unto the Lord.] That is, free-will offerings; which were one ſort of peace-offerings, as thoſe for performance of a vow were the other; ſee ver. 3. But free-will offerings, are peculiarly called by the name of peace-offerings, becauſe they were the moſt acceptable of this ſort; being offered purely out of love and affection to God, and not as a payment which was due upon a vow.

Ver. 9. Then ſhall he bring with the bullock, a meat-offering of three tenth deals of flour, &c.] The meat-offerings increaſed proportionably to the ſacrifices upon which they attended: one tenth deal, with a fourth part of a hin of oyl, being ſufficient for a lamb, ver. 4. and two tenth deals, with a third part of a hin of oyl, for a Ram, ver. 6. but three tenth deals of flour, and half a hin of oyl, is here required to accompany the ſacrifice of a bullock.

Ver. 10. And thou ſhalt bring for a drink-offering half a hin of wine, &c.] The ſame was to be obſerved in the drink offering; which is larger, in this ſacrifice, than in the two former, ver. 5, 7.

Ver. 14. And if a ſtranger ſojourn with you.] There were two ſort of ſtrangers among the Iſraelites; ſome that intirely embraced and profeſſed the jewiſh religion, into which they were admitted by circumciſion, &c. others that were permitted to live among them, having renounced all idolatry, but did not ſubmit to their whole religion. The Talmudiſts expound this place of the former ſort.

——— Or whoſoever be among you in your generations.] One would think this ſhould ſignify the other ſort of ſtrangers; but they make it only an explication of the former: whether he was a proſelyte that ſojourned for a time, or were ſettled among them.

——— And will offer an offering made by fire, of a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord.] Any of the fore-mentioned offerings, which could be offered, as is here directed, by none but one that was ſubject to their law. For though another proſelyte, who worſhipped the true God, but was not circumciſed, might bring a burnt-offering; yet they ſay it was without a meat and drink offering; and no peace-offerings were accepted from him.

Ver. 17. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,] Theſe commands were given, in all likelihood, at the ſame time with the foregoing.

Ver. 18. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, when ye come into the land, whither I bring you.] The Jews acknowledge ſuch kind of offerings, as here follow: And firſt fruits, were due by the law, only from the corn, &c. that grew in the land of Canaan; but by the decree of their wiſe men, they were to bring them out of Syria, and out of the land of Og and Sihon; as Maimonides ſaith, in his treatiſe called Biccurim, cap. 2.

Ver. 19. When ye eat.] i. e. When it is ready to be eaten; for they offered it before they ate of it.

——— Of the bread of the land.] So corn is called, Pſalm civ. 14. and the meaning ſeems to be, that when they made bread of the new corn of the land, they ſhould, out of the dough, firſt make a cake, and offer it to the Lord, before they baked bread for their own uſe.

——— Ye ſhall offer up an heave-offering unto the Lord.] This is explained in the next verſe, of offering a cake out of the firſt dough, whether it were of wheat, or barley, or rye, or oats, or that which they call cuſemim (which they deſcribe to be a kind of wheat, or barley, different from that which is commonly known by thoſe names) for of theſe five kinds of grain, the Talmudiſts ſay, this cake was to be offered; and that out of the gleanings, and the ſheaf left in the field, and out of the corners of the field.

Ver. 20. Ye ſhall offer up a cake of the firſt of your dough for an heave-offering.] Not upon the altar; but it was given to the prieſts, on whom God beſtowed all their heave-offerings, chap. xviii. 8. yet they are ſaid to be offered to the Lord, becauſe they were heaved or lifted up to him, as the creator of heaven and of earth; and then given to his miniſters, who had it in his right.

——— As ye do the heave-offering of the threſhing-floor, ſo ſhall ye heave it.] That is, as the firſt fruits of the harveſt were given to the prieſts, and not offered upon the altar, ſo ſhould this be given them, Lev. xxiii. 16, 17. and ſo was the firſt fruits of their oyl and their wine, &c. Numb. xviii. 12, 13. all which the Jews call the great Terumah, or heave-offering.

Ver. 21. Of the firſt of your dough ſhall ye give unto the Lord, an heave-offering in your generations.] This being a new law, not given before, he repeats it, that they might be the more obſervant of it: As we may ſee they were by this; that it was one of the things that rendered a woman infamous (tho' not ſo as to give her the bitter water) if ſhe did not ſeparate this cake from the firſt dough of the new corn, to be preſented to God; but either made her husband believe ſhe had done it, when ſhe had not, or ate it herſelf; as Mr. Selden obſerves, lib. iii. Uxor. Hebr. cap. 17. And therefore, at this very day, the Jews are ſo nice in this point, that they take enough to make a cake, aſſoon as the meat is mingled with water. The proportion is not mentioned in the law; but their wiſe men ſay, it was to be the forty-fourth part of the whole dough: See Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. cap. 34. The Cabbaliſts obſerving that this verſe begins with the letter mem, and ends with mem, conclude (after their way) that therefore they were to give a fortieth part, becauſe mem is the numeral letter for forty.

Ver. 24. Then it ſhall be, that if ought be committed by ignorance, without the knowledge of the congregation;] It is commonly ſaid, that Moſes here ſpeaks concerning ſins of omiſſion (as we call them) as in Lev. iv. 13. concerning thoſe committed by the whole congregation, here of ſuch as were committed by ſome leſſer number of them, called, the congregation; ſuppoſe the LXX elders, or the rulers of thouſands, and hundreds, &c. who are ſometimes called by this name, chap. xxv. 7. chap. xxxii. 12. Joſh. xxiv. 4. But the Jews generally think Moſes here ſpeaks of ſtrange worſhip, which was to be expiated by this ſacrifice of a goat for a ſin-offering. And therefore an excellent perſon of our own, after long conſideration of this matter, comes to this concluſion, that in Leviticus, God requires a young bullock to be ſlain for a ſin-offering, when the whole congregation, tho' adhering to the true worſhip of God in every thing, were led ignorantly to do ſomething againſt ſome negative precept (as they call it) to practice, that is, what God hath forbidden (ſo thoſe words ſeem to import, Lev. iv. 13, 14.) but this kid of the goats here mentioned for a ſin-offering, together with a young bullock for a burnt-offering, was to be ſacrificed, when all the people, forgetting the holy rites preſcribed by Moſes (which often happened under bad kings) fell by a common error, into idolatrous worſhip, which agrees very well with what is ſaid in the two preceding verſes; where he ſpeaks of not obſerving thoſe holy rites about ſacrifices. See Dr. Owtram, lib. 1, de ſacrificiis, cap. 14. ſect. 2.

——— Then all the congregation ſhall offer one young bullock for a burnt-offering.] Having neglected theſe laws ordained by Moſes, and worſhipped God in a wrong manner, according to the rites uſed in other countries (or at leaſt miſtaking the proper ſacrifices and rites belonging to them, which they ought to have offered) this burnt-offering, we ſuppoſe, is commanded to be offered, when they ſaw their error, in token that they returned to God's true true religion, and that way of worſhip which he had preſcribed.

——— With his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.] Preſcribed above, ver. 8, 9, 10. and which they had neglected to offer formerly with a burnt-offering.

It is well obſerved by Mr. Thorndike out of Maimonides, that all the congregation (if we underſtand thereby the whole body of the people) could not poſſibly offer theſe ſacrifices; but the great conſiſtory offered them, as often as they occaſioned the breach of the law, by interpreting it erroneouſly.

——— And one kid of the goats for a ſin-offering.] To expiate for what had been done after the manner of the Heathen, contrary to the laws of God's worſhip here delivered by Moſes, or otherwiſe than he directed: from whence it was (which adds much probability to this) that when Hezekiah reſtored the true worſhip of God, after the temple had been ſhut up, and the daily ſacrifice omitted, and many idolatrous rites there uſed, by the ignorance of the people, in the days of his father (2 Chron. xxviii. 24. chap. xxix. 3.) he cauſed ſeven bullocks to be offered for a burnt-offering: and as many goats for a ſin-offering; and ſo Ezra did at the reſtoration of the divine ſervice, after they came out of Babylon, Ezra viii. 35. And it makes no difference, that Moſes here requires only one of a ſort to be offered, whereas Hezekiah offered ſeven, and Ezra twelve; for this only proves, that one was abſolutely neceſſary, but more than one was acceptable; eſpecially when exceeding great errors had been committed in God's worſhip.

Ver. 25. And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for all the congregation.] Who had thus committed an error in the worſhip of God out of ignorance: Being miſled by the great interpreters of the law; who therefore were to bring this ſacrifice in the name of them all. For it is apparent, by this as well as the former verſe, that all the congregation were concerned in this ſacrifice, as much as in that, Lev. iv. 13. and the ſame appears from the next verſe, where he ſaith, all the people were in ignorance.

Ver. 30. But the ſoul that doth ought preſumptuouſly.] Not meerly knowingly, but wilfully and audaciouſly; in contempt of the Divine Majeſty and his authority: For ſo the Hebrew phraſe, with an high hand, ſignifies, as Maimonides obſerves in More Nevoch. P. 3. cap. 41. where he ſaith, it imports a ſin, not only publickly and openly committed, but with pride and inſolence; it proceeding not meerly from an ill cuſtom a man hath contracted of doing amiſs, but from an expreſs intention to contradict the law of God, and ſet himſelf in defiance of it: Which is the reaſon of what follows.

——— The ſame reproacheth the Lord.] "No man ſinned thus" (ſaith Maimonides in the place before-named) "but he who had a ſettled opinion in his mind, contrary "to the law of God; in which he diſſented from it. "And the common received expoſition of this place is, "that it ſpeaks of an idolator; becauſe he oppoſed the "chief and principal foundation of the law, for no man "worſhipped a ſtar, or a planet, but he who believed its "eternity: Which is moſt repugnant, of all other things, "to the law of God; which, in the very firſt word of it, "declares, that all the world had a beginning, and was "made by him whom the Jews worſhipped." Thus he. But doing any thing with an high hand doth not ſignify any one certain kind of ſin, as the Jews generally fancy (who think he ſpeaks here only of an idolator or blaſphemer: See Selden, lib. i. de Synedr. cap. 6. p. 101.) but a certain manner of ſinning, with deſpite to the commands of God, and contempt of his authority, in any kind of ſin whatſoever. And this Maimonides himſelf afterward acknowledges, in the words following: "There ſeems to "me to be the ſame reaſon in all other tranſgreſſions, which "are committed contemptuouſly againſt any law of God; "as, if an Iſraelite ſeethed a kid in his mothers milk; or "wore heterogeneous garments, or rounded the corners "of his head, or his beard, in contempt of the law. "For the conſequence of this is, that he believes this law "not to be true; which in my judgment, ſaith he, is the "meaning of theſe words, he reproacheth the Lord.

——— And that ſoul ſhall be cut off from among his people.] No ſacrifice would make an atonement for ſuch a man; but he was to die, either by the hand of heaven, or of the judges. Sometimes God ſaith, he will cut off idolators, and ſuch as conſulted familiar ſpirits, Lev. xx. 5, 6. Sometimes he only ſaith, certain offenders ſhall be cut off; as here in this, and many other places, of which phraſe, Maimonides hath judiciouſly reſolved, that in this place it ſignifies cutting off by the hand of the magiſtrates, as in the caſe of apoſtacy to idolatry, Deut. xii. 13, &c. not that all their goods were to be deſtroyed, and nothing left to their heirs, (as when they ſerved other gods) but, tho' a whole tribe had, with an high hand, tranſgreſſed any precept of the law, that is, denied it to be God's law, he thinks they were only to be all killed. Juſt as all the people thought in the caſe of the Reubenites, Gadites, and half tribe of Manaſſeh, who only building an altar on the other ſide of Jordan, contrary to God's law, as was imagined, all the reſt of the tribes of Iſrael gathered together, to go up to war againſt them, and cut them off, Joſh. xxii. 11, 12, &c. 22, 23. where they acknowledged they deſerved to periſh, if they had built an altar for worſhip, as their brethren thought they had done.

Ver. 32. And while the children of Iſrael were in the wilderneſs they found a man.] The Jews, who would not be thought ignorant of any thing, ſay, this man was one of theſe who preſumed to go up to the mountain, when Moſes forbad them, chap. xiv. 44. And ſome of them ſay expreſsly, his name was Zelophehad; about the dividing of whose eſtate, a queſtion afterwards aroſe, chap. xxvii. 1, &c. So the Chaldee paraphraſe aſcribed to Jonathan and others.

——— That gathered ſticks on the ſabbath day.] This the Jewiſh doctors would have to be the very next ſabbath, after its inſtitution in the wilderneſs; which is to make this hiſtory miſplaced, and the foregoing alſo, without any neceſſity.

Ver. 33. And they found him gathering ſticks.] Admoniſhed him (as the Jews ſay) of the unlawfulneſs of it, and deſired him to deſiſt. But he would not hearken unto them, and therefore (as it here follows) they brought him unto Moſes, &c. as one that contemptuouſly, and with an high hand, offended God. For they make this an inſtance of ſuch a preſumptuous ſin as is mentioned before, ver. 30, 31. which is not improbable. And it appears from hence, that they obſerved the Sabbath, while they were in the wilderneſs; and therefore did not bring him before Moſes on that day, but the next after; or at leaſt he was not judged till the next day.

——— Brought him unto Moſes and Aaron, and unto all the congregation.] Moſes was the chief judge, who was to determine ſuch caſes: though we may conceive the LXX elders (who were conſtituted before this happened, chap. xi. 24, &c.) to have been now ſitting, and Moſes at the head of them. But he being not deprived of any authority, by their creation, who were added only to give him eaſe, it is more likely this man was ſet before Moſes, as the ſole judge in this caſe. For God ſpeaks to him alone, ver. 35. when he directs what ſhould be done with him. Yet Aaron and the elders, as appears by theſe words, were preſent, and called here all the congregation, when this offender was brought before him.

Ver. 34. And they put him in ward.] By the order of Moſes, as they did the man that blaſphemed, Lev. xxiv. 12. to ſecure him, till the mind of God was known how he ſhould be puniſhed.

——— Becauſe it was not declared what ſhould be done to him.] They knew very well, that he was to die; for it had been declared, Exod. xxxi. 14. and chap. xxxv. 2. but they queſtioned what kind of death he ſhould ſuffer, as the Jews interpret it For they obſerve this difference between that caſe of the blaſphemer in Leviticus, and this here of the ſabbath-breaker, that there they doubted whether he ſhould be puniſhed by them, or by the hand of Heaven; but here, what kind of death they ſhould inflict upon him. Though there are ſome who imagine, the queſtion here alſo was, Whether the ſenſe of the law was, that they ſhould expect his puniſhment from God, or he be put to death by the court of judgment?

Ver. 35. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, the man ſhall ſurely be put to death.] By this anſwer, it ſeems to us, the queſtion was not at firſt, What death he ſhould die? but whether he ſhould be put to death or no? That is, whether the gathering and binding up ſticks into a faggot, was ſuch a work as is forbidden in the law, Exodus xx, unto which death was afterwards threatened in the places before-mentioned. And the reſolution was, that he ſhould be put to death, as a man that denied God, the Creator of the world; tho' not in words, yet in fact. For he who did any work on the ſabbath, as Aben Ezra notes upon Exod. xx. denied the work of Creation; tho' he did not in downright terms deny God himſelf. For the ſabbath being a ſign, as God calls it, that they were the worſhippers of him, who made all things; the contempt of that was a renouncing of their religion, and therefore deſerved to be puniſhed with death; the belief of the creation of the world being the very foundation of the jewiſh religion; as the belief of its eternity was the foundation of the Pagan. This made the breach of this precept, of keeping the Sabbath ſtrictly, which is more frequently repeated than any other, for the reaſon before-mentioned, ſo heinous a crime, and ſo ſeverely puniſhed; for by this a true worſhipper of God was diſtinguiſhed from a profane perſon and an idolater.

——— All the congregation ſhall ſtone him with ſtones, without the camp.] This was a puniſhment inflicted for very enormous crimes, ſee Lev. xx. 2. ch. xxiv. 12. And this man was condemned to ſuffer it, becauſe he was the firſt breaker of this ſacred law. And he doing it preſumptuouſly, as is ſuppoſed from the connection of this ſtory, ver. 30, 31. in contempt of the law; and not deſiſting from his impiety, when he was admoniſhed to forbear, as we ſaid ver. 33. it highly aggravated his guilt; being no leſs than a reproaching of the Lord, and a deſpiſing of his Word. Whence the Vulgar ſaying of the Talmudiſts, "He that denies the Sabbath, is like to him "that denies the whole law."

Ver. 37. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] This was ſpoken, it is moſt likely, about the ſame time that the foregoing paſſage happened, and the commands mentioned in the beginning of this chapter were delivered. For this that follows, is a direction for the better obſervation of all the reſt of God's commandments.

Ver. 38 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and bid them that they make them fringes.] This is the beſt word we have in our language, to expreſs the Hebrew word Tzitzith, which imports ſomething of an ornament reſembling a flower, as the word tzitz ſignifies. Of how many threads they conſiſt, and after what faſhion they are made by the Jews at this day, ſee Buxtorf's Synagoga Judaica, cap. 9.

——— In the borders of their garments.] Or, as it is in the Hebrew, In the wings of their garments, which had four skirts, as appears by Deut. xxii. 12. at the bottom of each of which they were to have a fringe: which ſeem to have been only threads left at the end of the web unwoven; at the top whereof they put a lace, as it here follows.

——— Throughout their generations.] To be a perpetual mark of their religion, and put them in mind of their duty.

——— And that they put upon the fringe of the borders a ribband.] Or a lace; which both bound the fringe faſt at the top, and alſo made it more conſpicuous and obſervable; which was the intention of it. For by this they were diſtinguiſhed from all other people who were not Jews; as well as put in mind of the precepts of God, as it follows in the next verſe.

——— Of blue.] Or, as ſome would have it tranſlated, of purple. But the Hebrew writers ſay Thecheleth ſignifies that colour which we now call Ultramarine; as Braunius hath obſerved, Lib. 1. de Veſtitu Sacerd. Hebr. cap. 13. and Bochart Hierozon. P. 1. Lib. 4. cap. 10. 11. There is another very learned perſon alſo, who hath more lately ſhewn, out of an excellent MS. in his poſſeſſion, what the Jews deliver concerning the way and manner of dying this colour: which being not eaſy to compaſs, the Jews at this day, inſtead of this colour, are contented to uſe white. See J. Wagenſeil upon the Gemara Sotæ, cap. 2. annot. 8.

Ver. 29. And it ſhall be to you for a fringe.] Or rather it (that is, the ribband) ſhall be unto you upon the fringe; or, to the fringe; added to it, to make it the more noted; being of a diſtinct colour from the fringe, which was all of the ſame colour. And the garment, the Jews ſay, in the ſelvedge of which theſe fringes were, was their upper garment, called Talith, being a kind of cloak.

——— That ye may look upon it, and remember all the commandments of the Lord.] i. e. when they looked down, this fringe and lace which they ſaw there, might put them in mind of the duty they owed to God; who commanded this, not for it ſelf, but to remember them they were a holy people, bound to God by peculiar laws, which they ſhould be as careful to obſerve, as to wear thoſe fringes. Hence it was that they, who pretended to greater ſanctity than others, enlarged theſe fringes, as our Saviour obſerves, Matt. xxiii. 5. i. e. extended them to a greater length, ſo that they ſwept the ground, which made them more obſervable, as Braunius notes out of the Gemara of Gittim. lib. 1. de veſt. ſacerd. Hebr. cap. 3. n. 16. where he alſo obſerves, that their ſuperſtition increaſed to ſuch a degree that they contrived theſe fringes might be ſo wrought, as to denote the ſix hundred and thirteen precepts contained in the law of Moſes; that ſo they might be put in mind of all the commandments of the Lord.

CHAP. XVI.

1 The rebellion of Korah, Dathan and Abiram. 23 Moſes ſeparateth the people from the rebels tents. 31 The earth ſwalloweth up Korah, and a fire conſumeth others. 36 The cenſers are reſerved to holy uſe. 41 Fourteen thouſand and ſeven hundred are ſlain by a plague for murmuring againſt Moſes and Aaron. 46 Aaron by incenſe ſtayeth the plague.

NOW Korah the ſon of Izhar, the ſon of Kohath, the ſon of Levi; and Dathan and Abiram the ſons of Eliab, and On the ſon of Peleth, ſons of Reuben, took men.

2 And they roſe up before Moſes, with certain of the children of Iſrael, two hundred and fifty princes of the aſſembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown.

3 And they gathered themſelves together againſt Moſes and againſt Aaron, and ſaid unto them, Ye take too much upon you, ſeeing all the congregation are holy every one of them, and the LORD is among them: wherefore then lift you up your ſelves above the congregation of the LORD?

4 And when Moſes heard it, he fell upon his face:

5 And he ſpake unto Korah, and unto all his company, ſaying, Even to morrow the LORD will ſhew who are his, and who is holy; and will cauſe him to come near unto him: even him whom he hath choſen, will he cauſe to come near unto him.

6 This do; Take you cenſers, Korah, and all his company;

7 And put fire therein, and put incenſe in them before the LORD to morrow: and it ſhall be that the man whom the LORD doth chooſe, he ſhall be holy: ye take too much upon you, ye ſons of Levi.

8 And Moſes ſaid unto Korah, Hear, I pray you, ye ſons of Levi:

9 Seemeth

9 Seemeth it but a ſmall thing unto you, that the God of Iſrael hath ſeparated you from the congregation of Iſrael, to bring you near to himſelf, to do the ſervice of the tabernacle of the LORD, and to ſtand before the congregation, to miniſter unto them?

10 And he hath brought thee near to him, and all thy brethren the ſons of Levi with thee: and ſeek ye the prieſthood alſo?

11 For which cauſe both thou, and all thy company are gathered together againſt the LORD: and what is Aaron, that ye murmur againſt him?

12 ¶ And Moſes ſent to call Dathan and Abiram the ſons of Eliab: which ſaid, We will not come up.

13 Is it a ſmall thing that thou haſt brought us up out of a land that floweth with milk and honey, to kill us in the wilderneſs, except thou make thy ſelf altogether a prince over us?

14 Moreover, thou haſt not brought us into a land that floweth with milk and honey, or given us inheritance of fields and vineyards: wilt thou put out the eyes of theſe men? we will not come up.

15 And Moſes was very wrath, and ſaid unto the LORD, Reſpect not thou their offerings: I have not taken one aſs from them, neither have I hurt one of them.

16 And Moſes ſaid unto Korah, Be thou and all thy company before the LORD, thou, and they, and Aaron to morrow:

17 And take every man his cenſer, and put incenſe in them, and bring ye before the LORD every man his cenſer, two hundred and fifty cenſers; thou alſo and Aaron each of you his cenſer.

18 And they took every man his cenſer, and put fire in them, and laid incenſe thereon, and ſtood in the door of the tabernacle of the congregation with Moſes and Aaron.

19 And Korah gathered all the congregation againſt them, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and the glory of the LORD appeared unto all the congregation.

20 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, ſaying,

21 Separate your ſelves from among this congregation, that I may conſume them in a moment.

22 And they fell upon their faces, and ſaid, O God, the God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, ſhall one man ſin, and wilt thou be wroth with all the congregation?

23 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

24 Speak unto the congregation, ſaying, Get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.

25 And Moſes roſe up, and went unto Dathan and Abiram; and the elders of Iſrael followed him.

26 And he ſpake unto the congregation, ſaying, Depart, I pray you, from the tents of theſe wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, leſt ye be conſumed in all their ſins.

27 So they gat up from the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, on every ſide: and Dathan and Abiram came out, and ſtood in the door of their tents, and their wives, and their ſons, and their little children.

28 And Moſes ſaid, Hereby ye ſhall know that the LORD hath ſent me to do all theſe works: for I have not done them of my own mind.

29 If theſe men die the common death of all men, or if they be viſited after the viſitation of all men; then the LORD hath not ſent me.

30 But if the LORD make a new thing, and the earth open her mouth, and ſwallow them up, with all that appertain unto them, and they go down quick into the pit; then ye ſhall underſtand that theſe men have provoked the LORD.

31 ¶ And it came to paſs as he had made an end of ſpeaking all theſe words, that the ground clave aſunder that was under them:

32 And the earth opened her mouth, and ſwallowed them up, and their houſes, and all the men that appertained unto Korah, and all their goods.

33 They, and all that appertained to them, went down alive into the pit, and the earth cloſed upon them: and they periſhed from among the congregation.

34 And all Iſrael that were round about them, fled at the cry of them: for they ſaid, Leſt the earth ſwallow us up alſo.

35 And there came out a fire from the LORD, and conſumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incenſe.

36 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

37 Speak unto Eleazar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt, that he take up the cenſers out of

of the burning, and ſcatter thou the fire yonder; for they are hallowed.

38 The cenſers of theſe ſinners againſt their own ſouls, let them make them broad plates for a covering of the altar: for they offered them before the LORD, therefore they are hallowed: and they ſhall be a ſign unto the children of Iſrael.

39 And Eleazar the prieſt took the braſen cenſers, wherewith they that were burnt had offered; and they were made broad plates for a covering of the altar:

40 To be a memorial unto the children of Iſrael, that no ſtranger which is not of the ſeed of Aaron, come near to offer incenſe before the LORD; that he be not as Korah, and as his company: as the LORD ſaid to him by the hand of Moſes.

41 ¶ But on the morrow all the congregation of the children of Iſrael murmured againſt Moſes and againſt Aaron, ſaying, Ye have killed the people of the LORD.

42 And it came to paſs when the congregation was gathered againſt Moſes and againſt Aaron, that they looked toward the tabernacle of the congregation: and behold the cloud covered it, and the glory of the LORD appeared.

43 And Moſes and Aaron came before the tabernacle of the congregation.

44 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

45 Get you up from among this congregation, that I may conſume them as in a moment: and they fell upon their faces.

46 ¶ And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, Take a cenſer, and put fire therein from off the altar, and put on incenſe, and go quickly unto the congregation, and make an atonement for them: for there is wrath gone out from the LORD; the plague is begun.

47 And Aaron took as Moſes commanded, and ran into the midſt of the congregation: and behold, the plague was begun among the people: and he put on incenſe, and made an atonement for the people.

48 And he ſtood between the dead and the living, and the plague was ſtayed.

49 Now they that died in the plague, were fourteen thouſand and ſeven hundred, beſide them that died about the matter of Korah.

50 And Aaron returned unto Moſes, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and the plague was ſtayed.

Ver. 1. Now Korah the ſon of Izhar, the ſon of Kohath, the ſon of Levi, &c.] The honour and glory which God had heaped upon the families of Moſes and Aaron occaſioned an inſurrection among the people, the certain time of which we cannot learn in the Sacred Hiſtory; but it is very probable that it was in ſome part of the latter half of the ſecond year after they came out of Egypt, before they removed from Kadeſh-barnea.

It is evident from the words of Moſes, if rightly tranſlated, that Korah was the chief promoter of this conſpiracy. The words of the original run thus: And Korah took Dathan and Abiram, and On, and they roſe up with two hundred and fifty of the children of Iſrael, &c. ver. 1, 2, &c. What has miſled moſt tranſlators, is the conjunction vau, and, before Dathan, from whence they have derived the verb vajikach, took, though in the ſingular, to relate to all the four, though they have been forced to make up the ſenſe by the addition of an accuſative. Thus ſome read it: and Korah, Dathan, &c. took men, others, took cenſers, others, took two hundred and fifty men: Whereas the verb being in the ſingular, can only relate to the firſt, namely, Korah; and he it was who took, or as the word may bear it, ſtirred up both Dathan, and Abiram, and On, &c. As for the vau, and, it is plain, that it is often joined to the firſt as well as the other words that follow in order, in the ſame manner as the Greeks do their καὶ, or the Lattins their et and que, as in hominesque, deosque & cœlum, & Maria, & tellus, and the like.

This critical obſervation was thought neceſſary, becauſe ſome authors have ſuppoſed this rebellion to have been at firſt excited by the Reubenites, in order to preſerve the prieſthood in the old chanel of the firſt-born, which they ſaw Moſes was now going to tranſfer to the tribe of Levi; but this ſuppoſition is quite contrary to the whole tenor of the Moſaic account.

The perſons concerned in this conſpiracy pretended, that Moſes unjuſtly arrogated to himſelf all the civil authority. And Korah in particular ſaid, that Aaron had uſurped, and fixed in his own family, the honour of the prieſthood, and complained that the Levites were conſtrained to wait upon the prieſts. The chiefs of the ſedition drew in a great part of the people to rebel. Among the conſpirators, there were two hundred and fifty of the princes of Iſrael, who alledged to Moſes and Aaron, what God had ſaid, without diſtinction to Iſrael, namely, "If "ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, "then ye ſhall be a peculiar treaſure unto me above all "people; for all the earth is mine, and ye ſhall be unto "me a kingdom of prieſts, and a holy nation," Exodus xix. 5, 6.

Moſes was apprehenſive that ſuch an attempt againſt God, would bring down a ſudden puniſhment on thoſe who were guilty; wherefore, before he returned them any anſwer, he prayed to God for them. Then he propoſed to them, that God himſelf ſhould be the umpire of this diſpute, and that the deciſion of it ſhould be left entirely to him; adding, that God would ſhew the next day, after a manner that ſhould leave no room for doubting, who they were that he had choſen to exerciſe the moſt auguſt functions of his worſhip. He directed each of them to bring their cenſers, in order to make this trial. After having thus endeavoured, by prayer, to avert the ſtrokes with which theſe mutineers were threatened, and after having done his endeavour to calm the ſpirit of rebellion which threatened him, he ſeverely rebuked Korah, the ring-leader, repreſenting to him, that he oppoſed God himſelf, in oppoſing the miniſters he had ſet over the people, and who had not arrived at the eminent ſtations which were the object of his jealouſy, but by God's own choice. He reproached him with his ingratitude, which hindered him from acknowledging the honour that God had done to his tribe, in appointing it for the ſervice of the tabernacle; and that he was ſenſible his own family had been diſtinguiſhed among thoſe of his tribe, and had received the moſt ſacred things directly from the hands of the prieſts. He alſo called for Dathan and Abiram, to lay before them the horridneſs of their crime, to induce them to prevent the fatal conſequences thereof. But they refuſed to go to him; and replied, that thoſe commands of his were an effect of that dominion which he had tyrannically uſurped over over them, and that it crowned all the reſt. They exclaimed againſt the miſchiefs he had done the people, in bringing them out of Egypt, from a country which, ſaid they, much better deſerved to be called a land flowing with milk and honey, than that of Canaan, which he vainly endeavoured to carry them to.

Moſes appealed to God for his innocence, upon the reproach of tyrannizing over them, and proteſted, that he was ſo far from affecting a deſpotic power over them, as they unjuſtly affirmed, and ſo far from violently diſpoiling them of their goods, as was the manner of arbitrary governors, that he had never taken an ox or an aſs from any of them.

The day appointed for the determination of the diſpute, arrived. Korah called his two hundred and fifty accomplices, who came each of them with a cenſer to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; that is, to that of the court, but not of the holy place, the entrance into which was allowed to none but the prieſts. It appears, by our former deſcription of the tabernacle, that the holy place could not hold a hundred and fifty men, as ſome interpreters have thought; beſide, it was requiſite that the people ſhould be eye-witneſſes of the tryal that was about to be made, which would have been impracticable, if it had been tranſacted within the holy place.

It is asked by the commentators, where could theſe conſpirators get ſuch a number of cenſers? In anſwer to which, ſome of them produce, upon this occaſion, ſeveral paſſages out of profane hiſtory, to prove that theſe kind of ſacred veſſels were antiently very common in private families. Cicero ſays, there was ſo great a number of them in Sicily, that one could not find a houſe without them. Demoſthenes ſays the ſame of Greece; and Athenæus, of Egypt. We, however, leave it to the antiquaries to examine, whether the interpreters have not confounded the cenſers with the Pateræ, or cups that were deſtined to libations. But be that as it will, it is conjectured, that theſe plotters brought cenſers with them out of Egypt, and that there were abundance of them among the precious utenſils which they borrowed of the Egyptians.

Scarce were Korah and his accomplices aſſembled before the tabernacle of the congregation, when God ſhewed by a miraculous token, that he preſided over the action for which the people were called together. He cauſed that ſupernatural ſymbol of his preſence, of which we have often ſpoken, to appear, and which Moſes calls the glory of the Lord. Out of the midſt of this extraordinary phænomenon proceeded a voice, which addreſſed it ſelf to Aaron and Moſes, and exhorted them to ſeparate themſelves from that ſeditious company, whom God was determined to conſume in an inſtant; but the prayers of theſe holy men ſuſpended the execution of this fatal decree.

Hereupon they received a new order, namely, that they ſhould go into the camp, where Dathan and Abiram remained, and urge the people, who were near the tents of thoſe three heads of the ſedition, to remove from them. This order was obeyed, "But Dathan and Abiram came "out, and ſtood in the door of their tents, and their "wives, and their ſons, and their children," ver. 27. together with their accomplices, the number of whom is not ſpecified. Then Moſes ſpoke to the people to the following purpoſe; "You will know immediately, whether I "have intruded my ſelf into the functions of head and "lawgiver of Iſrael, without the expreſs orders of God, "and whether it is of my own meer motion, or by that "wherewith God hath inſpired me, that I have done all "theſe things that are unjuſtly laid to my charge. If "any of theſe men, whom you now ſee, die a common "death, I am content to bear for ever the title of an im"poſtor, with which they blacken me. But if God "works a miracle, and cauſes the earth to open her "mouth and ſwallow them, and all belonging to them, "you will, I hope, be then convinced that it is leſs againſt "me, than againſt God himſelf, the only author of ſuch a "wonder, that they have rebelled."

The earth anſwered, by trembling, to the voice of Moſes, and immediately ſwallowed the perſons he had mentioned, together with their children, and all that belonged to them. Moſes ſays of thoſe wretches, that they went down alive into the pit; ſome think it may be rendered hell; and ſeveral of the commentators have underſtood by this expreſſion, the place of the damned. But beſide, that it is not probable that all thoſe who are mentioned in this place ſhould be condemned to everlaſting torments; it is ſaid, that all the goods of theſe conſpirators were ſwallowed, as well as their perſons, in the pit. This is more than neceſſary to prove, that the place in queſtion was not hell, ſtrictly ſo called, and it is even worthy of conſideration, that there is not one ſingle text throughout all the Old Teſtament, to which we are obliged to annex the ſame notion we have at preſent, of the word hell. Perhaps alſo, there is none in the New Teſtament neither, where that word may not bear a different conſtruction; if we except that in which it is ſaid of the rich man, that being in torments in hell, &c. Luke xvi. 23.

This firſt ſtroke of vengeance was ſoon followed by a ſecond: A miraculous fire conſumed the two hundred and fifty men, who waited, with their cenſers, at the door of the tabernacle, for the determination of heaven. Moſes does not tell us whence this fire proceeded; but only declares, that it came out from the Lord; an indefinite expreſſion, of which it is no great matter if we do not know the exact meaning.

It is remarkable, that after Moſes had ſaid, in the beginning of this Relation, that On the ſon of Peleth, was engaged among the leaders of the ſedition, he ſhould not ſay one word more of him in this tragical account. And above all it is to be obſerved, that although this hiſtorian has ſpoken very prolixly of Korah, as well as of his crime, and of the fate in which he involved his accomplices, yet has he not told us the nature of the puniſhment that was inflicted on him. The vulgar prejudice makes him deſcend into the pit with Dathan, and Abiram; and ſome of the learned are of the ſame ſentiment. But others think he was conſumed with the two hundred and fifty conſpirators. Each of theſe notions may perhaps be thought probable, but neither of them is certain. When the Sacred Hiſtory relates the firſt ſtrokes of God's judgment, it declares indeed, that Moſes exhorted the people to fly from the tents of Korah, Dathan and Abiram; but doth not add that Korah was there, nor that he had left the door of the tabernacle, whither he went a little before. It affirms, indeed, that Dathan and Abiram, remained at the entrance of their tents, with their families, and that they were ſwallowed up, with all the men that appertained unto Korah, and all their goods; but doth not ſay that Korah was ſwallowed up with them. So that this narration has nothing poſitive enough to determine us upon the queſtion, Whether Korah was ſwallowed up by the earth, with Dathan and Abiram? When Moſes relates the ſecond puniſhment, he ſays, indeed, that the two hundred and fifty accomplices, who were at the door of the tabernacle, were all conſumed, but he ſtill makes no mention of Korah. The Pſalmiſt alſo ſays, "The earth "opened and ſwallowed up Dathan, and covered the "company of Abiram," without taking the leaſt notice of the other.

The manner in which the verſions received by the proteſtants tranſlate a paſſage in this book, chap. xxvi. 10, 11. does indeed determine the queſtion. It runs thus; "The earth opened her mouth and ſwallowed "them up, together with Korah, when that company died, "what time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men, and "they became a ſign. Notwithſtanding the children of Ko"rah died not." But this verſion is both conteſted, and conteſtable. The Vulgate gives a quite different ſenſe to the words of the original; and renders it, the earth opened and devoured Korah. And the more we weigh the expreſſions of the text, the more they appear to us equivocal, and improper to decide the queſtion relating to the death of Korah. And if we were to count the votes among the ancient and modern verſions, we ſhould find them much divided. Joſephus is one of thoſe who thinks that Korah was conſumed by fire.

That which is demonſtrable is, that all his children ought not to be enumerated among thoſe of whom it is ſaid, that they appertained to him, and were ſwallowed up. It is likely, that having embarked in the conſpiracy of their father, they became ſenſible of the heinouſneſs of it, and ſubmitted to the exhortations of Moſes. We find their pedigree in the Chronicles, 1 Chron. vi. 22, 37. ix. 19. 2 Chron. xx. 19. There they are reckoned among thoſe who preſided over the muſic in the temple, and even ſeveral of the Pſalms are aſcribed to them; ſee the titles of Pſalm, xlii, xlv, xlvi, xlvii, xlviii, xlix, lxxxiii, lxxxv, lxvxvii, and lxxxviii. Whether it were, that they compoſed them, or that they were appointed to ſing them.

God commanded that the cenſers of thoſe perſons whom the fire had conſumed, ſhould be beaten into plates, and applied to cover the altar of burnt-offerings, and remain a memorial of their crime and puniſhment, to deter thoſe who ſhould be inclined to imitate the example of their ſedition. But this ſtroke of Divine juſtice did not even ſuſpend that biaſs which the people always had towards murmuring and rebellion. The very next day to that fatal one, in which they had ſeen ſuch dreadful inſtances of the wrath of God, the whole congregation, that is to ſay, the greateſt part of the Iſraelites, required an account from Aaron and Moſes, of thoſe whom the Lord had cauſed to die miraculouſly, and charged them with being the authors of their death. The ſame ſymbol of God's preſence, which appeared upon the occaſion of the firſt murmuring, and which preſaged the puniſhment thereof, appeared again, and was yet a more fatal one to thoſe who were guilty of this ſecond crime. God exhorted Moſes, and Aaron again, to depart from among thoſe mutineers. They obeyed; but made new inſtances to God, to avert the ſcourge, which was like to be as general as fatal. God ſtruck this blow of vengeance, notwithſtanding their interpoſition, and ſent among the Iſraelites a kind of mortality, of which we are not told the nature. But at the ſame time, that his juſtice thus purſued the rebels, his goodneſs imparted to Aaron the means of putting a ſtop to the evil. Moſes, by the order of God, bid him do a thing, of which we have only this ſingle inſtance in all the Sacred Hiſtory: It was, to take his cenſer, and put incenſe into it, which was to be kindled at the fire that burnt perpetually on the altar of burnt-offerings, and to paſs through the whole camp, making an atonement for the people. Aaron obeyed this order, and went into the midſt of an unſpeakable number of people dead or dying. Fourteen thouſand ſeven hundred of them had been already ſacrificed to the wrath of heaven. But the incenſe offered by this prieſt, aſcended in a ſweet ſavour of reconciliation, even up to God, and put a ſtop to the mortality.

A certain Jewiſh doctor applies to Aaron, upon this occaſion, the following words of the prophet; "He hath "poured out his ſoul unto death: And he was numbered "with the tranſgreſſors, and he bore the ſin of many, "and made interceſſion for the tranſgreſſors," Iſa. liii. 12. But if this Rabbin had been educated in a better ſchool, and if he had penetrated farther into the meaning of the prophets, he would not have conſidered Aaron in this circumſtance, but as a figure of him, of whom Iſaiah ſpeaks in that myſterious chapter, and who repreſents himſelf to us in a book, rejected indeed by the Jews, but dictated by the ſame unerring ſpirit, as holding "a "golden cenſer, in which he offered to God incenſe, the "ſmoak whereof aſcended up before God, being mixed "with the prayers of the ſaints," Revel. viii. 3. and which rendered them the more efficacious by this myſtical union.

CHAP. XVII.

1 Aarons rod among all the rods of the Tribes, only flouriſheth. 10 It is left for a monument againſt the rebels.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and take of every one of them a rod, according to the houſe of their fathers, of all their princes, according to the houſe of their fathers, twelve rods: write thou every mans name upon his rod.

3 And thou ſhalt write Aaron's name upon the rod of Levi: for one rod ſhall be for the head of the houſe of their fathers.

4 And thou ſhalt lay them up in the tabernacle of the congregation, before the teſtimony, where I will meet with you.

5 And it ſhall come to paſs, that the mans rod whom I ſhall chooſe, ſhall bloſſom: and I will make to ceaſe from me the murmurings of the children of Iſrael, whereby they murmur againſt you.

6 ¶ And Moſes ſpake unto the children of Iſrael, and every one of their princes gave him a rod apiece, for each prince one, according to their fathers houſes, even twelve rods: and the rod of Aaron was among their rods.

7 And Moſes laid up the rods before the LORD, in the tabernacle of witneſs.

8 And it came to paſs that on the morrow Moſes went into the tabernacle of witneſs; and behold the rod of Aaron for the houſe of Levi was budded, and brought forth buds, and bloomed bloſſoms, and yielded almonds.

9 And Moſes brought out all the rods from before the LORD unto all the children of Iſrael: and they looked, and took every man his rod.

10 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Bring Aarons rod again, before the teſtimony, to be kept for a token againſt the rebels: and thou ſhalt quite take away their murmurings from me, that they die not.

11 And Moſes did ſo: as the LORD commanded him, ſo did he.

12 And the children of Iſrael ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying, Behold, we die, we periſh, we all periſh.

11 Whoſoever cometh any thing near unto the tabernacle of the LORD, ſhall die: Shall we be conſumed with dying?

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] The tragical end of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, with their accomplices, having corroborated the authority of Aaron and Moſes, it pleaſed God that there ſhould remain a monument which might ſecure the prerogatives of the tribe of Levi, and make them be owned as long as the commonwealth of Iſrael endured. He therefore ordered Moſes to receive, from the hands of each chief or head of his reſpective tribe, a rod or ſtick, and to write upon all of them the name of each head, and then to put them into that part of the tabernacle where God gave thoſe tokens of his preſence, which occaſioned that whole ſacred tent to be called the tabernacle of meeting, or of the preſence. This order was performed: The twelve tribes (that of Joſeph being counted for two, one of which bore the name of Ephraim, and the other of Manaſſeh, the ſons of that patriarch,) preſented each of them their rod, and Moſes depoſited them in the place which God had appointed.

pointed. He likewiſe placed in the midſt of them, the rod of the tribe of Levi, writing upon it the name of Aaron, as God commanded.

The commentators enquire, why God choſe a rod to be the inſtrument of the miracle he was preparing to work? The opinion which has the moſt probability in it is, that the heads of the tribes were wont to carry rods, as badges of their authority; but the examples borrowed from Scripture, by thoſe who advance that opinion, have ſo little analogy therewith, that it would be in vain to relate them.

The Jews have here given a flight to their fancy, always fertile in fabulous ſtories; and tell us ſeveral chimerical circumſtances, concerning that rod which was marked with Aaron's name. Some of them have advanced, that it was taken from the tree of life; that an Angel had given it to Seth; that he had planted it in the wilderneſs, where Moſes found it, and that it was the very ſame with which he wrought thoſe miracles in Egypt, and at the Red Sea. Others pretend, that it was tranſmitted from Adam to Enoch; from Enoch to Joſeph; from Joſeph to the houſe of Pharaoh, from whence Jethro ſtole it, to give it to Moſes: Fables, that only ſerve to ſhew the falſe biaſs of thoſe minds that entertain them.

The day after Moſes had placed the rods of all the tribes in the tabernacle, that upon which Aaron's name was written, was found covered with flowers, and buds, and the fruit of an almond tree. So miraculous a product has no need of being magnified; but the Jews diſcover ten wonders therein: The almonds that this favourite rod bore, have cauſed ſome interpreters to conjecture, that all the reſt were of the ſame wood; which is indeed likely enough, becauſe it rendered the trial which God thought fit to make, the leſs obnoxious to ſuſpicion.

The end which God propoſed, in cauſing the rod of the tribe of Levi, to flouriſh and bud, is ſhewn ver. 5. "It "ſhall come to paſs that the mans rod whom I ſhall chuſe, "ſhall bloſſom: and I will make to ceaſe from me the "murmurings of the children of Iſrael, whereby they "murmur againſt you." The miracle had the intended effect. Moſes produced, before all the Iſraelites, the rod which God had been pleaſed to diſtinguiſh in ſo eminent a manner. At the ſight of it, the people were ſenſible of the aggravations of their crime, in rebelling againſt Moſes and Aaron, and of the greatneſs of the puniſhment which ought to have attended it. They were afraid, leſt this new miracle ſhould be the harbinger of a new plague, and as people who are terrified, frequently magnify the objects of their conſternation, the Iſraelites ſaid, without grounds, that not only all ſuch as ſhould diſpute with the tribe of Levi about their privileges, and ſhould incroach upon the ſacerdotal function without a call, would be conſumed; but likewiſe, that all who came near to the tabernacle would be puniſhed, for their preſumption, with a violent death.

But ſome doctors of the primitive church, among the Chriſtians, and others who adhere to them, have thought, that God had greater views in this miracle than what are related by Moſes. There are but few of the doctrines in the religion of Jeſus Chriſt, and few of the precepts in his morality, of which they have not found out emblems or types, in the rod which has been the ſubject of this Diſſertation.

After Moſes had communicated to the Iſraelites, the miracle which God had wrought in favour of Aaron and his tribe, he thought fit to perpetuate the remembrance of it to future ages, and placed this rod, by the order of the Deity, in the tabernacle, before the teſtimony. That is to ſay, the ark; ſo it is in the original. St. Paul tells us, it was in the ark with the golden pot that had manna, and the tables of the covenant, Heb. ix. 4.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 The charge of the prieſts and Levites. 9. The prieſts portion. 21. The Levites portion. 25 The heave-offering to the prieſts out of the Levites portion.

AND the LORD ſaid unto Aaron, Thou and thy ſons, and thy fathers houſe with thee, ſhall bear the iniquity of the ſanctuary: and thou and thy ſons with thee, ſhall bear the iniquity of your prieſthood.

2 And thy brethren alſo of the tribe of Levi, the tribe of thy father, bring thou with thee, that they may be joined unto thee, and miniſter unto thee: but thou and thy ſons with thee, ſhall miniſter before the tabernacle of witneſs.

3 And they ſhall keep thy charge, and the charge of all the tabernacle: only they ſhall not come nigh the veſſels of the ſanctuary and the altar, that neither they, nor you alſo die.

4 And they ſhall be joined unto thee, and keep the charge of the tabernacle of the congregation, for all the ſervice of the tabernacle: and a ſtranger ſhall not come nigh unto you.

5 And ye ſhall keep the charge of the ſanctuary, and the charge of the altar; that there be no wrath any more upon the children of Iſrael.

6 And I, behold, I have taken your brethren the Levites from among the children of Iſrael: to you they are given as a gift for the LORD, to do the ſervice of the tabernacle of the congregation.

7 Therefore thou and thy ſons with thee, ſhall keep your prieſts office for every thing of the altar, and within the vail, and ye ſhall ſerve: I have given your prieſts office unto you, as a ſervice of gift: and the ſtranger that cometh nigh, ſhall be put to death.

8 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Aaron, Behold, I alſo have given thee the charge of mine heave-offerings, of all the hallowed things of the children of Iſrael; unto thee have I given them, by reaſon of the anointing, and to thy ſons by an ordinance for ever.

9 This ſhall be thine of the moſt holy things reſerved from the fire: every oblation of theirs, every meat-offering of theirs, and every ſin-offering of theirs, and every treſpaſs-offering of theirs, which they ſhall render unto me, ſhall be moſt holy for thee and for thy ſons.

10 In the moſt holy place ſhalt thou eat it; every male ſhall eat it: it ſhall be holy unto thee.

11 And this is thine; the heave-offering of their gift, with all the wave-offerings of the children of Iſrael: I have given them unto thee, and to thy ſons, and to thy daughters with thee, by a ſtatute for ever ever: every one that is clean in thy houſe, ſhall eat of it.

12 All the beſt of the oyl, and all the beſt of the wine, and of the wheat, the firſt-fruits of them which they ſhall offer unto the LORD, them have I given thee.

13 And whatſoever is firſt ripe in the land, which they ſhall bring unto the LORD, ſhall be thine; every one that is clean in thine houſe, ſhall eat of it.

14 Every thing devoted in Iſrael ſhall be thine.

15 Every thing that openeth the matrix in all fleſh, which they bring unto the LORD, whether it be of men or beaſts, ſhall be thine: nevertheleſs, the firſt-born of man ſhalt thou ſurely redeem, and the firſtling of unclean beaſts ſhalt thou redeem.

16 And thoſe that are to be redeemed, from a month old ſhalt thou redeem according to thine eſtimation, for the money of five ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, which is twenty Gerahs.

17 But the firſtling of a cow, or the firſtling of a ſheep, or the firſtling of a goat, thou ſhalt not redeem, they are holy: thou ſhalt ſprinkle their blood upon the altar, and ſhalt burn their fat for an offering made by fire, for a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD.

18 And the fleſh of them ſhall be thine, as the wave-breaſt, and as the right ſhoulder are thine.

19 All the heave-offerings of the holy things, which the children of Iſrael offer unto the LORD, have I given thee, and thy ſons, and thy daughters with thee, by a ſtatute for ever; it is a covenant of ſalt for ever, before LORD, unto thee and to thy ſeed with thee.

20 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Aaron, Thou ſhalt have no inheritance in their land, neither ſhalt thou have any part among them: I am thy part, and thine inheritance among the children of Iſrael.

21 And behold, I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Iſrael, for an inheritance, for their ſervice which they ſerve, even the ſervice of the tabernacle of the congregation.

22 Neither muſt the children of Iſrael henceforth come nigh the tabernacle of the congregation, leſt they bear ſin, and die.

23 But the Levites ſhall do the ſervice of the tabernacle of the congregation, and hey ſhall bear their iniquity: It ſhall be a ſtatute for ever throughout your generations, that among the children of Iſrael they have no inheritance.

24 But the tithes of the children of Iſrael, which they offer as an heave-offering unto the LORD, I have given to the Levites to inherit: therefore I have ſaid unto them, Among the children of Iſrael they ſhall have no inheritance.

25 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

26 Thus ſpeak unto the Levites, and ſay unto them, When ye take of the children of Iſrael the tithes which I have given you from them for your inheritance, then ye ſhall offer up an heave-offering of it for the LORD, even a tenth part of the tithe.

27 And this your heave-offering ſhall be reckoned unto you, as though it were the corn of the threſhing-floor, and as the fulneſs of the wine-preſs,

28 Thus you alſo ſhall offer an heave-offering unto the LORD, of all your tithes which ye receive of the children of Iſrael: and ye ſhall give thereof the LORDs heave-offering to Aaron the prieſt.

29 Out of all your gifts ye ſhall offer every heave-offering of the LORD, of all the beſt thereof, even the hallowed part thereof out of it.

30 Therefore thou ſhalt ſay unto them, When ye have heaved the beſt thereof from it, then it ſhall be counted unto the Levites, as the increaſe of the threſhing-floor, and as the increaſe of the wine-preſs.

31 And ye ſhall eat it in every place, ye and your houſholds: for it is your reward for your ſervice, in the tabernacle of the congregation.

32 And ye ſhall bear no ſin, by reaſon of it, when ye have heaved from it the beſt of it: neither ſhall ye pollute the holy things of the children of Iſrael, leſt ye die.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſaid unto Aaron.] Intermediately by Moſes, it is moſt likely, unto whom God was wont to communicate all that he would have delivered, either to Aaron, or to the people, chap. xvii. 4. And having wrought more miracles than one, to eſtabliſh Aaron in the prieſthood; he now lets him know that the honour he had granted him, was an office of extraordinary importance and burden; and wherein he was to conduct himſelf with the utmoſt care and circumſpection: and he again declares what the duty of the Levites was, together with that of the prieſts; from ver. 1. to ver. 8. And from thence he proceeds to tell them, what maintenance he had ſettled upon both, for their encouragement in the performance of their duty.

——— Thou and thy ſons, and thy fathers houſe with thee,] You and the Levites (whom he calls his fathers houſe) who had the charge of the ſanctuary.

——— Shall bear the iniquity of the ſanctuary.] If the ſanctuary were profaned, thro' the negligence of the Levites

Levites who were to keep ſtrangers, and unclean people, from entering in it; and if the prieſts were remiſs, and did not take care to ſee the Levites diſcharge their duty; the puniſhment of ſuch profanation, he tells them ſhould fall upon them.

——— And thou and thy ſons with thee, ſhall bear the iniquity of the prieſthood.] Suffer the puniſhment of it; if they permitted any perſon, who was not of the line of Aaron to offer incenſe, or perform any part of the ſacerdotal functions; or if they themſelves ſhould miniſter in any ſtate of impurity, or under the diſqualification of a blemiſh, or did any thing contrary to the rules of their office.

Ver. 2. And thy brethren alſo of the tribe of Levi, the tribe of thy father.] This was intended as a comfort to the Levites, and to render them more contented than they had been, in their inferior offices, that the prieſts were to conſider them as their brethren.

——— Bring thou with thee,] Into the tabernacle.

——— That they may be joined with thee,] as aſſiſtants to thee there.

——— And miniſter unto thee,] In ſuch things as we mentioned upon chap. iii.

——— But thou and thy ſons with thee ſhall miniſter before the tabernacle of witneſs.] The words ſhall miniſter, not being in the Hebrew, ſome think the Deity ſtill ſpeaks of the Levites, and tranſlate the words thus, both to thee, and to thy ſons with thee, (they ſhall miniſter as was ſaid before) before the tabernacle of witneſs. But they who advance this opinion, do not conſider what is meant by the tabernacle of witneſs, which ſignifies the moſt holy place, ſee chap. ix. 15. and chap. x. ver. 11. before which the Levites did not miniſter; but before the tabernacle of the congregation, as Moſes expreſsly declares, chap. iii. 7. where they attended upon the prieſts in the court of the ſanctuary; in which the prieſts only could miniſter; as Aaron alone did, upon one certain day only, in the moſt holy place.

Ver. 8. And the Lord ſpake unto Aaron, ſaying.] Having acquainted him, in the foregoing part of the chapter, particularly in the preceding verſe, what ſhould be the work of him and his ſons, God proceeds to tell him what recompence he ſhould have for his ſervice at the altar of burnt-offerings, and in the ſanctuary. Of which he gives him a large account (from this verſe to the 20th) that he might want no encouragement to be vigilant and ſedulous in his employment.

——— Behold, I alſo have given thee the charge.] Aaron is here called upon to obſerve the large grant which God now makes him, as well as the work he had enjoined him to perform: for by giving him the charge of what follows, he means beſtowing them upon him for his own uſe; with an injunction, to admit no perſon whatever into any participation of them.

—— Unto thee have I given them, by reaſon of the anointing.] Becauſe thou art conſecrated, by being anointed with the holy oyl to the office of a prieſt, Lev. viii. 12.

Ver. 9. This ſhall be thine of the moſt holy things, reſerved from the fire.] From the altar of burnt-offerings; for there were ſome things called moſt holy, which were their portion, that came not from thence, but out of the ſanctuary, viz. the twelve cakes, which were taken off the table, and given to Aaron and his ſons every ſabbath-day, Lev. xxiv. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.

—— Every oblation of theirs.] In the Hebrew, all their Korbans; which is a larger word than Zebach, comprehending not only ſuch ſacrifices as were killed at the altar (which are properly called Zebachim) but all the Minchas, or meat-offerings (as we tranſlate it) which were of things inanimate; and the ſacrifices of birds alſo, whoſe blood was never poured out at the altar. And therefore Korban ſeems here to be a general word, comprehending all the particulars which follow, eſpecially if all be tranſlated exactly, as the words are in the Hebrew.

——— Every meat-offering of theirs, &c.] In the Hebrew the words are, for all their meat-offerings; which makes the ſenſe plainer, if the whole be thus tranſlated, "All their Korbans (or oblations) for all their meat-offerings, and for all their ſin-offerings, and for all their treſpaſs offerings;" of all which the prieſt had a part. Concerning the meat-offerings, or rather, the bread-offerings (for ſo Mincha may moſt fitly be tranſlated, the ſacrifices being fleſh, which were not eaten without their concomitants of bread and drink) ſee Lev. ii. ver. 3, 10. chap. vi. ver. 15, 16. where the fleſh of the ſin-offerings, except thoſe whoſe blood was brought into the moſt holy place, is given alſo unto them, ver. 26. and ſo are likewiſe the treſpaſs-offerings, in the next chapter, Lev. vii. 6, 7. As for burnt-offerings, they were entirely the Lord's; and peace-offerings were not accounted things moſt holy, but reckoned among the leſs holy; as appears from ver. 11. of this preſent chapter.

——— Which they ſhall render unto me.] Theſe words relate only to the treſpaſs-offerings, immediately before named; which were attended with a recompence of the wrongs done, either unto the Lord, Lev. v. 15, 16. or unto their neighbours, Lev. vi. 5. Numb. v. 8, 9.

——— Shall be moſt holy for thee, and for thy ſons] To be uſed by none elſe; as it follows in the next verſe.

Ver. 10. In the moſt holy place ſhalt thou eat it.] That is, in the place where they performed their ſacred office, in that part of the tabernacle next the ſanctuary, which is called moſt holy, in compariſon with the reſt, which were more remote; becauſe none were permitted to enter into it but the prieſts; ſee Lev. vi. 16. where it is ſaid expreſly, It ſhall be eaten in the holy place, in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation.

Ver. 11. And this is thine.] The Deity now mentions the leſs holy things, as before the moſt holy; which he beſtowed upon Aaron and his whole family.

——— The heave-offerings of their gifts, with all the wave-offerings of the children of Iſrael.] That is, the breaſt of their peace-offerings, which are here called their gift, which was waved before the Lord, and the right ſhoulder heaved; and then given to the prieſt for his portion, Lev. vii. ver. 30, &c. and ſo was the right ſhoulder of the ram, which was offered for the Nazarite, Numb. vi. 19, 20.

——— Every one that is clean in thy houſe, ſhall eat of it.] Not only their wives, and their daughters, who were not married, but thoſe who were divorced, or widows, and returned to their father's houſe, without children; or had children begotten by a prieſt; ſee Lev. xxii. 13. together with their ſervants alſo, whether bought with their money, or born in their houſe; tho' not hired ſervants, or mere ſojourners, Lev. xxii. 10, 11. But thoſe things were to be eaten in a clean place, Lev. x. 14. ſomewhere within the camp, as afterwards in Jeruſalem, Deut. xii. ver. 6, 7, 17, 18. and no unclean perſon was permitted to eat of them, Lev. vii. 20, 21. and chap. xxii. 4. And beſide, when any Iſraelite killed an ox, a ſheep, or a goat, for his own uſe, he was bound to give the prieſt the ſhoulder, the two cheeks, and the maw; as the Jews underſtand, Deut. xviii. 3.

Ver. 12. All the beſt of the oyl, and all the beſt of the wine, &c.] The Greek tranſlates the Hebrew word Cheleb [fat] by μυελὸς, marrow, Gen. xlv. 18. but here ἀπαρχὴ, the firſt fruits of the oyl, &c. ſignifying theſe firſt fruits were to be of the very beſt of all the things here mentioned; which were to be brought in the beginning of the vintage, and of the harveſt: the preciſe quantity of which is no where determined; but, the Jews ſay it was at leaſt the ſixtieth part of the whole, ſee Exod. xxii. 29. ch. xxiii. 19. Deut. xviii. 4. where mention is made of the firſt fruits, which every private man was to offer; beſide which, there were firſt fruits offered, in the name of the whole congregation, Lev. xxiii. 10, 17. all which were appropriated to the prieſts as a compenſation for their ſervice.

——— The firſt fruits of them, which they ſhall offer unto the Lord, them have I given thee.] Mr. Thorndike thus diſtinguiſhes the two ſorts of firſt fruits, mentioned here, and in other places; the one was to be taken by the prieſts at the barn and wine-preſs, as he thinks that here ſpoken of was: the other was to be brought to the ſanctuary; namely, thoſe mentioned Exod. xxii. and xxviii. and Deut. xxvi. 1, 2. The quantity of either of them being in the moderate account, a fiftieth part, as St. Jerom determines upon Ezek. xlv. which is agreeable to the Jewiſh Conſtitutions in Maimonides, of firſt fruits, cap. 2. and of ſeparations, cap. 3. But the Scripture, Ezekiel xlv. 13. requires only the ſixtieth part. See rites of the Church in a Chriſtian State, pag. 210.

Ver. 13. And whatſoever is firſt ripe in the land, which they ſhall bring unto the Lord, ſhall be thine.] Some take this to ſignify the firſt fruits of all other things, beſide corn, wine, and oyl, mentioned in the foregoing verſe. But it being a different word from that which we tranſlate firſt fruits, (viz. Biccurim, not Reſhith) it is moſt probable that God here intends, either the firſt ripe, (as we tranſlate it) before the reſt of the harveſt and vintage, or thoſe voluntary offerings of this ſort, which any one pleaſed to make; and which ſeem to be intended in theſe words, which they ſhall bring unto the Lord; that is, ſpontaneouſly, over and above the ordinary firſt fruits.

The Jews generally underſtand by Biccurim, ſuch things as are ripe before the reſt, either in the field or elſewhere; whether they were wheat, barley, or any other ſort of grain; or figs, grapes, pomgranates, olives or dates; which they bound about with a ruſh, and ſaid, let this be for the firſt fruits; which every man might bring, in what meaſure he pleaſed, none being appointed by the law.

Ver. 14. Every thing devoted in Iſrael, ſhall be thine.] Of thoſe things which the Hebrews call Cherem (a thing devoted) Moſes ſpeaks in Lev. xxvii. 21, 28. And they were either ſimply devoted, in ſuch words as theſe, Let this thing be a Cherem. Or, with an addition, ſpecifying ſome particular purpoſe, Let this be a Cherem offered by me for holy uſes. The firſt ſort were the entire property of the prieſts; but the latter were employed about the temple, or its veſſels, or the ſacerdotal veſtments. And theſe devoted things, which became the portion of the prieſts, differed, in this particular, from free-will offerings, that every thing which was offered as a Cherem, might be eaten only by the prieſts in the holy place; but other free-will offerings, by the whole family in any clean place.

Ver. 16. And thoſe that are to be redeemed.] Namely, of the firſt-born of men (not of unclean creatures which were to be redeemed by a lamb, Exod. xiii. 13.) and that after they were eight days old, Exod. xxii. 30.

——— From a month old ſhalt thou redeem.] Then the money was due, but they commonly ſtaid till the fortieth day, when the woman was purified.

——— According to thy eſtimation.] Some think this relates not to what follows, that the prieſt ſhould ſet a value upon them, for that was a ſtated rate, five ſhekels for every one, but to what goes before, that after a child was a month old, the prieſt ſhould appoint a day for the payment of the redemption-money; either immediately after the woman had lain in a month, or on the fortieth day, that ſhe might be purified, and the child redeemed at the ſame time. But it rather refers to what follows; for though the price be determined, yet ſo it is in another caſe, Lev. xxvii. 3, 4. and notwithſtanding is ſaid to be by the eſtimation of the prieſt; becauſe he was to take this money, not according to the quality of the perſon, but as much of a poor man as of a rich, and not more of a rich man than of a poor perſon.

——— For the money of five ſhekels, &c.] Which was the price ſet upon the firſt-born, when they were exchanged for the Levites, chap. iii. 46, 47. This redemption of every firſt-born was a circumſtance of great moment, and therefore ſo often mentioned, as the very learned Dr. Alix obſerves, In his reflections on the four laſt books of Moſes, chap. iii. For as the ſeparation of the tribe of Levi to God's ſervice, inſtead of the firſt-born, whom God ſpared and preſerved in Egypt, (of whom we read in the third chapter of this book) made every Levite a living memorial of that great miracle wrought at the departure of the Iſraelites from the Land of Egypt; ſo this law, concerning the redemption of the firſt-born, made a further impreſſion upon their minds, of that mighty hand of God which compelled Pharaoh to let the Iſraelites depart out of his country.

Ver. 17. But the firſtling of a cow, or of a ſheep or a goat, thou ſhalt not redeem.] For they were clean creatures; and only unclean beaſts were to be redeemed, ver. 15.

——— They are holy.] That is, they are ſeparated, by my appointment, for an holy uſe; namely, to be offered in ſacrifice; not redeemed, or applied to any other purpoſe.

Ver. 19. ——— It is a covenant of ſalt for ever before the Lord, even unto thee, &c.] This covenant is called a covenant of ſalt, with reſpect to its intended duration; For as ſalt is the greateſt preſervative againſt putrefaction, by its intermixture with the fleſh of animals, ſo the durableneſs of this covenant was properly repreſented by that idea, which is moſt expreſſive of perpetuity.

Ver. 20. And the Lord ſpake unto Aaron, ſaying, thou ſhalt have no inheritance in their land.] That is, in the land of the Children of Iſrael, who are mentioned in the preceding verſe: where having told him what reward he and his family ſhould have for his ſervice, he bids them be ſatisfied therewith, and not expect any more. And indeed it was ſo very liberal a proviſion, that their deſires could not reaſonably extend any further. For as they had two ſorts of firſt fruits, ſo after a tithe of that which was given to the Levites, there was another tithe of what remained to be employed in ſacrificing at Jeruſalem; that is, it was beſtowed, for the moſt part, upon the prieſts and Levites, to whom, in conjunction with the poor, it wholly belonged every third year, Deut. xv. 22, 28. Exod. xxiii. 19. xxxiv. 20. Add hereunto the firſt-born, all the ſin-offerings, and their ſhare in the peace-offerings, and the skins of the ſacrifices (which alone conſtituted a great revenue as Philo obſerves) and it will appear, it could not be ſo little as a fifth part of the fruit of the country that came to the prieſts for their maintenance, as Mr. Thorndike obſerves In the Rights of the Church in a Chriſtian State, page 211.

——— Neither ſhalt thou have any part among them.] When the land was divided, no fields, or vineyards, &c. were to be given to the prieſts, or to any of the tribe of Levi. And as the Jewiſh Doctors ſay, they were to have no part among their brethren in the ſpoil: So Jarchi upon this place, and Maimonides, and others, who endeavour to anſwer the objection which may be raiſed againſt this from the 31ſt chapter of this very book, ver. 28, 29. where a tribute was taken of the prey they obtained from the Midianites, and given to Eleazer and the Levites. This tribute, ſay they, was offered, becauſe the ſpoil came by executing God's vengeance upon a land that was not theirs, chap. xxv. 17. But of the land of Sihon and Og, (which God beſtowed upon the Iſraelites, as he did the land of Canaan) nothing was given to the prieſts and Levites; for they were admoniſhed to the contrary by theſe words: Neither ſhalt thou have any part among them; no not of the ſpoil.

Certain it is, that of the land of the country they were to have no part, God having otherwiſe provided for them, that they might attend altogether on his ſervice, and not employ their time in tilling the ground, or feeding cattle; which would have engroſſed their thoughts very much from their ſacred employments. Yet the Levites had certain cities, and their ſuburbs aſſigned to them, ch. xxxv. 2, &c. which was executed by Joſhua as God commanded, Joſh. xxi. 2, 3. whereby they were diſperſed among the tribes of Iſrael, that they might the better inſtruct the people in the Divine Law, Deut. xxxiii. 10. 2 Chron. xxx. 22. Malachi ii. 4, 5, &c. By accident alſo the prieſts came to have ſome land. See Lev. xxvii. 20, &c.

——— I am thy part, and thine inheritance among the children of Iſrael.] For they were maintained in the houſe of God, and lived upon his altar, and were fed from his table; as it is explained in Joſh. xiii. 14. The ſacrifices of the Lord God of Iſrael made by fire, are their inheritance, as he ſaid unto them: Which is given as the reaſon why Joſhua gave them no inheritance. And ſee ver. 33. of that chapter, where the Lord God of Iſrael is ſaid to be their inheritance: who, it appears by the foregoing part of this chapter, and other places, made ſuch an ample proviſion for them, that if he had likewiſe given them any part of the land of Canaan, there would have been too great an inequality between them and the reſt of the tribes of Iſrael. For without any ſhare in the land, their portion was far richer than that of any other perſons whatever. We have ſaid enough to prove this already; but it may not be amiſs to ſet it before the reader again, a little more diſtinctly. They had yearly the firſt fruits of the whole country, which were, at leaſt, the ſixtieth part of the fruits it produced; and as the tenth part of the tithes was given to the Levites, as it follows below, verſe 26. and all free-will offerings: together with the money which aroſe from perſons and things devoted to God; and all the firſtlings of cows, ſheep and goats; and the redemption-money for the firſtlings of ſuch creatures as were unclean; unclean; ſo they had all the meat-offerings, offerings for ſin, and treſpaſs-offerings; together with the breaſt and ſhoulder of all peace offerings, and the skins of all burnt-offerings; and the loaves made of the firſt dough, and the ſhew-bred, and, (as Joſephus and others expound, Deut. xviii. 3.) a conſiderable part of every beaſt that was killed for private uſe; beſide the cities and lands about them, which were aſſigned to the Levites. If theſe particulars therefore be well conſidered, there will appear a vaſt difference between the prieſts and the reſt of the people. For the firſt fruits alone, if they were not leſs than the ſixtieth part of the product of the country, might ſeem ſufficient, eſpecially if the firſtlings be added; the prieſts not being the ſixtieth part of the people; no, nor the hundredth part, as learned men have computed.

Ver. 21. And behold.] Now the Deity gives the Levites notice of the recompence he would make them for their ſervice, as he had told the prieſts what they ſhould have for theirs. And Aaron had the delivery of this grant made to them from God, that they might ſee he did not regard himſelf, and the intereſt of his family only.

——— I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Iſrael] See Lev. xxvii. 30. and 2 Chron. xxxi. 5, 6. where they are diſtinctly mentioned. Aben Ezra thinks the tenth, rather than any other part, was aſſigned, becauſe it was a perfect number; ten being in ſimple numbers the higheſt to which we can riſe, without repeating the number under it. For it is, as he ſpeaks, the beginning of the ſecond combination, and the end of the firſt, whereupon all numbers depend: which Mr. Mede hath expreſſed, in our judgment, far better; who looks upon it as God's favourable dealing with men, in requiring but the tenth; which is, in truth, the leaſt part of their goods, according to the firſt diviſion. For when we proceed beyond ten, we begin to make a new diviſion, as eleven is ten and one, &c. But we need not have recourſe to ſuch niceties.

——— For an inheritance,] Inſtead of a ſhare in the land of Canaan, which other tribes had divided among them. And a larger inheritance this was than any other tribe poſſeſſed; for this was the ſmalleſt tribe of all, as appears by comparing the account which is given of them in the beginning of this book. For all the males of this tribe, from a month old and upward, were but two and twenty thouſand, chap. iii. 29. whereas, in the tribe of Judah alone, there were above threeſcore and fourteen thouſand men of war, chap. i. 26, 27. And yet the Levites had a tenth part of the product of the whole country; and the twelve tribes had only the other nine parts among them. Such a care had God of thoſe who were peculiarly devoted to his ſervice.

Ver. 22. Neither muſt the children of Iſrael henceforth come nigh the tabernacle of the congregation,] Or rather, Therefore the children of Iſrael muſt not come nigh, ſo as to perform any of the offices belonging to the prieſts and Levites; who were appointed to do every thing belonging to the ſervice of God there; and had their reward for it alſo appointed.

Ver. 23. But the Levites ſhall do the ſervice of the tabernacle of the congregation.] It was their work in a peculiar manner, and therefore no other perſons were to intermeddle with it: that is, they alone guarded the tabernacle, and afterwards the temple; opened the gates of it; kept out all ſtrangers, carried the tabernacle, and its veſſels, when they were to be removed, &c.

——— And they ſhall bear their iniquity.] They ſhall die for it, if they permit any one elſe to come there and do their work.

——— It ſhall be a ſtatute for ever throughout their generations, that among the children of Iſrael they have no inheritance.] As all other perſons were excluded from ſerving in the tabernacle; ſo they who officiated there were excluded from any inheritance among their brethren. This was made an unalterable law, which provided another ſeparate maintenance for them, by the tithes of all the land; as here it again follows.

Ver. 24. But the tithes of the children of Iſrael, which they offer as an heave-offering unto the Lord,] That the people might not grudge to pay them the tithes for their ſervice, they are repreſented as an heave-offering, which they offered to God, in gratitude to him, of whom, as the Lord Paramount, they held their land. Not that they were heaved up or waved before the Lord; but they were of the ſame nature with thoſe things that were ſo offered to him, namely, holy things, ſeparate to his uſes, all which are called by this name of Terumah, ver. 8. and particularly all the offerings which God required to be freely brought, for the building him a ſanctuary, are called by this name Terumah, or heave-offering, Exod. xxv. 2.

——— I have given to the Levites to inherit.] The Iſraelites gave them to God, and he gave them to the Levites for their inheritance, who had as much right to them, as the other tribes had to their land; which was the reaſon he ordered they ſhould have no portion in the land of Canaan with the other tribes, as it here follows; therefore have I ſaid unto them, among the children of Iſrael ſhall they have no inheritance: for he had given them the tithes to inherit. But R. Solomon Jarchi obſerves alſo, that the Levites themſelves had no right to them, till they had taken out the tenth part from their tenth, and given it to the prieſts, as is here immediately directed.

Ver. 25. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,] In all the foregoing part of the chapter, ver. 1, 8, 20. the Lord ſpake unto Aaron (tho' by Moſes) but here his order is particularly directed to Moſes; becauſe that which follows would better come from him, than from Aaron, who was employed in acquainting the Levites with the donation God had made of the tithes to them, ver. 21. but it would not have been ſo proper for him to tell them, what was to be given out of the tithes to himſelf, and to the prieſts.

Ver. 26. Thus ſpeak unto the Levites, and ſay unto them, when ye take of the children of Iſrael the tithes, which I have given you from them for your inheritance,] In theſe words Moſes confirms the report which Aaron had made to them, that the tithes of the land ſhould be theirs, and their brethren the children of Iſrael have no right to them.

——— Then ſhall ye offer an heave-offering for the Lord,] As the Iſraelites made their grateful acknowledgments to God, by offering their tithes to him, for the uſe of his ſervants, the Levites, ver. 24. So it was but fit that the Levites ſhould be ſo grateful as to offer to him the tithe of their tithes (as it here follows) for ſuch uſes as he ſhould appoint.

——— Even a tenth part of the tithe.] For the tenth part which God reſerved to himſelf out of the land which he give the children of Iſrael, was a kind of rent paid to him their ſupream Lord: and he aſſigning this rent over to the Levites for their maintenance, thought good notwithſtanding to reſerve a tithe of this tenth part to himſelf; that thereby he might, as it were, hold his poſſeſſion, and keep Seiſen (as the lawyers ſpeak) of his own inheritance.

Ver. 27. And this your heave-offering ſhall be reckoned unto you.] Be accepted by God, as the offerings heaved up to him in the ſanctuary are, ver. 24. tho' it be but the hundreth part of the whole fruit of the land.

——— As though it were the corn of the threſhing floor, and as the fulneſs of the wine preſs.] As if you paid ſuch a tithe, as you receive from the Iſraelites, out of all their own fields and vineyards: that is, they were to believe their offering of this ſmall part, to be as acceptable to God, as that of all the tribes of Iſrael; and that they ſhould have the ſame right to what remained, when they had performed this, as the people had to all the reſt of the fruits of the earth, when they had paid the tenth part to the Levites.

Ver. 28. Thus you alſo ſhall offer an heave-offering unto the Lord, of all your tithes which ye receive of the children of Iſrael:] God would have them know, that he ordered this, becauſe he would not have the Levites alone offer nothing to him, from whom they received ſo much; but they alſo ſhould make him a grateful acknowledgment as well as others.

——— And ye ſhall give thereof the Lords heave-offering.] It is called ſo often the Lords heave-offering, that they might the more willingly pay it, out of a thankful ſenſe of what they owed to him, the donor of all.

——— To Aaron the prieſt.] This tithe is thought by ſome to have been deſigned for the high prieſt alone. Two great men in their time were of this opinion, namely, Nicholaus Lyra, and the famous Alphonſus Teſtatus.

ſtatus. And another very learned perſon of our nation, biſhop Montague, thinks it not altogether improbable, that ſuch a proviſion as this might be made for the high prieſt and his family, and in order to ſupport their ſtate and dignity: he being a man of great power, and only leſs than the kings of Iſrael; and the inferior prieſts having a noble maintenance, without this, from the firſt fruits and offerings of the people.

But there is nothing to ſupport this conjecture, except the mere letter of the text: for Joſephus expreſly ſays the contrary, lib. 6. Archæolog. cap. 4. and his opinion is juſtified by the generality of the Jewiſh Writers, together with St. Jerom, who declare that all the prieſts had their ſhare in this tenth paid by the Levites; which till it was paid the Levites might not appropriate to their own uſe, any part of their tithes, and to ſecure this, the prieſt was to be with the Levites, when they took tithes, as we read, Nehem. x. ver. 37, 38. to take care that they ſet out a tenth part of them for the prieſts: Where by the prieſt the ſon of Aaron, we cannot think is meant the high prieſt himſelf (for that had been below his dignity) but ſome prieſt, we ſuppoſe, delegated by him to take care of the concerns of the whole order of prieſthood, and particularly of the high prieſt's intereſt; who, it is probable, had a principal ſhare, among the reſt, in this revenue, perhaps, a tenth part out of their tenth; but for this we have no authority; tho' we take it for certain, that when he ſaith this tenth ſhould be given to Aaron the prieſt, the meaning is, that, as it was not for himſelf alone, but all his ſons had a ſhare in it, ſo he himſelf was not excluded from an honourable portion of it.

It may ſeem ſtrange, perhaps, that there is no particular portion ſet out for the high prieſt by himſelf, if this be not it. But it is to be conſidered, that all the forenamed proviſion from ver. 8. to ver. 20. was made for him in the firſt place, and for the prieſts together with him. For ſo the words run, unto thee have I given them, and to thy ſons, ver. 8, 9, &c. and he had this privilege alſo, that he did not miniſter by lot, as the other prieſts did in their ſeveral courſes, but when he pleaſed, and might take to himſelf what ſacrifices he thought good to offer, ver. 9, 10. as Maimonides tells us in Cele Mikdaſch, cap. 5. where he ſpeaks concerning the prerogatives of the high prieſt.

Ver. 22. Out of all your gifts.] Not only out of their tithes, but out of all their other poſſeſſions, which God gave them; their fields, for inſtance, which were in the ſuburbs of their cities.

——— Ye ſhall offer every heave-offering of the Lord.] As a grateful acknowledgment of the divine bounty to you, upon whom he hath beſtowed ſo many good things. See ver. 28.

——— Of all the beſt thereof,] And that not of the refuſe, but of the beſt of the tithe, and other things that were given them: By which is not to be underſtood, that they were bound to ſelect the very beſt, (which would have been to have given them more than a tenth part) but they were to give the prieſts as good as they left for themſelves; for that was the rule, Lev. xxvii, ver. 32, 33. And it was but reaſon the prieſts ſhould have this honourable proviſion made for them above the Levites, their vocation being more honourable, and their ſervice more noble, in the very ſanctuary it ſelf; for which cauſe this tenth of the tithe of the land was aſſigned them; which, they being but few in compariſon with the Levites, made the allowance to every one of them much greater than to any of the Levites. And yet, as an augmentation to it, they had the firſt fruits, and their fees, as we ſaid before, out of the ſacrifices, and other things, wholly to their own uſe.

——— Even the hallowed part thereof, out of it.] The ſacred part was the tenth part, which they might not uſe; it being taken by God for his part, Lev. xxvii. 30. By which all the reſt was ſanctified to the uſe of the owner, when this part was taken out of it, which may poſſibly be here alſo intended.

Ver. 30. Therefore thou ſhalt ſay unto them,] Tell them the reaſon why this tenth part muſt be ſeparated from the reſt.

——— When ye have heaved the beſt thereof from it,] That is, when ye have taken out the tenth part, as an offering to the Lord.

——— Then it ſhall be counted to the Levites, as the increaſe of the threſhing floor, and as the increaſe of the wine preſs.] Then the remainder may be as freely uſed by them, as the corn or the wine of any mans land in Iſrael, when he hath paid his tithe. But till then, it was unlawful for him to enjoy it, becauſe God was firſt to be ſerved. This is made more plain in the next verſe.

Ver. 31. And ye ſhall eat it.] After the hallowed part was taken out, ver 29. all the reſt was theirs, to be enjoyed as men do that which is their own.

——— In every place.] This ſeems to be ſaid, to diſtinguiſh theſe from the holy things given by God to the prieſts; which being offered at the altar, were to be eaten only in the holy place; but the tithes, tho' they were a kind of offering to the Lord, yet not being preſented at the altar, might be eaten any where, after the tenth part was given to the prieſt.

——— And your houſholds.] All their family, ſervants as well as others, might eat of them, whether they were clean or not; and more than this, they might ſell them to ſtrangers, to buy other neceſſaries with the money they yielded, or exchange them for other commodities.

Ver 32. —— When ye have heaved from it the beſt of it:] When they had taken out the tenth part as ſacred to God's ſervice, ver. 28. they might ſafely uſe the reſt themſelves, as they pleaſed; for God had given it to them for their ſupport, and therefore would not puniſh them for eating it, as he did thoſe who ate holy things which did not belong to them.

——— Neither ſhall ye pollute the holy things of the children of Iſrael,] Nor would there be any danger of polluting the holy things, which God had reſerved to himſelf, by turning them to a common uſe; as there would have been, if they had eaten the tithes, or other gifts, before the tenth part, which was Gods, was taken out of them.

——— Leſt ye die] In the Hebrew it is, nor ſhall ye die; as thoſe did, who intermedled with the holy things which God reſerved for his miniſters alone.

CHAP. XIX.

1 The water of ſeparation made of the aſhes of a red heifer.
11 The law for the uſe of it in purification of the unclean.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, ſaying,

2 This is the ordinance of the law which the LORD hath commanded, ſaying, Speak unto the children of Iſrael, that they bring thee a red heifer without ſpot, wherein is no blemiſh, and upon which never came yoke.

3 And ye ſhall give her unto Eleazar the prieſt, that he may bring her forth without the camp, and one ſhall ſlay her before his face.

4 And Eleazar the prieſt ſhall take of her blood with his finger, and ſprinkle of her blood directly before the tabernacle of the congregation ſeven times.

5 And one ſhall burn the heifer in his ſight; her skin, and her fleſh, and her blood, with her dung ſhall he burn.

6 And the prieſt ſhall take cedarwood, and hyſſop, and ſcarlet, and caſt it into the midſt of the burning of the heifer.

7 Then the prieſt ſhall waſh his clothes, and he ſhall bathe his fleſh in water, and after-afterward he ſhall come into the camp, and the prieſt ſhall be unclean until the even.

8 And he that burneth her ſhall waſh his clothes in water, and bathe his fleſh in water, and ſhall be unclean until the even.

9 And a man that is clean ſhall gather up the aſhes of the heifer, and lay them up without the camp in a clean place, and it ſhall be kept for the congregation of the children of Iſrael, for a water of ſeparation: it is a purification for ſin.

10 And he that gathereth the aſhes of the heifer, ſhall waſh his clothes, and be unclean until the even: and it ſhall be unto the children of Iſrael, and unto the ſtranger that ſojourneth among them, for a ſtatute for ever.

11 ¶ He that toucheth the dead body of any man, ſhall be unclean ſeven days.

12 He ſhall purify himſelf with it on the third day, and on the ſeventh day he ſhall be clean: but if he purify not himſelf the third day, then the ſeventh day he ſhall not be clean.

13 Whoſoever toucheth the dead body of any man that is dead, and purifieth not himſelf, defileth the tabernacle of the LORD; and that ſoul ſhall be cut off from Iſrael: becauſe the water of ſeparation was not ſprinkled upon him, he ſhall be unclean; his uncleaneſs is yet upon him.

14 This is the law, when a man dieth in a tent; all that come into the tent, and all that is in the tent, ſhall be unclean ſeven days.

15 And every open veſſel which hath no covering bound upon it, is unclean.

16 And whoſoever toucheth one that is ſlain with a ſword in the open fields, or a dead body, or a bone of a man, or a grave, ſhall be unclean ſeven days.

17 And for an unclean perſon they ſhall take of the aſhes of the burnt heifer of purification for ſin, and running water ſhall be put thereto in a veſſel:

18 And a clean perſon ſhall take hyſſop, and dip it in the water, and ſprinkle it upon the tent, and upon all the veſſels, and upon the perſons that were there, and upon him that toucheth a bone, or one ſlain, or one dead, or a grave:

19 And the clean perſon ſhall ſprinkle upon the unclean on the third day, and on the ſeventh day: and on the ſeventh day he ſhall purify himſelf, and waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and ſhall be clean at even.

20 But the man that ſhall be unclean, and ſhall not purify himſelf, that ſoul ſhall be cut off from among the congregation: becauſe he hath defiled the ſanctuary of the LORD, the water of ſeparation hath not been ſprinkled upon him, he is unclean.

21 And it ſhall be a perpetual ſtatute unto them, that he that ſprinkleth the water of ſeparation, ſhall waſh his clothes, and he that toucheth the water of ſeparation, ſhall be unclean until even.

22 And whatſoever the unclean perſon toucheth, ſhall be unclean: and the ſoul that toucheth it, ſhall be unclean until even.

Ver. 2. This is the ordinance of the law which the Lord hath commanded, ſaying, Speak unto the children of Iſrael, that they bring thee a red heifer without ſpot, &c.] The ceremony of killing and burning a red heifer, for the purification of the Iſraelites from the pollutions mentioned in this chapter, was performed in the following manner. The high-prieſt was to be careful that the animal had not any ſpot or blemiſh; and that it had never been yoaked. It was likewiſe to be carried out of the camp, where he killed it, and made a ſeven-fold aſperſion of the blood with his fingers; towards the ſanctuary, after which, a large fire being kindled, it was flung into it, with its skin, intrails, and other appurtenances, and a bundle of cedar-wood, hyſſop and ſcarlet, and burnt to aſhes before his face, himſelf helping to caſt her into the fire; and this was to be done in the preſence of all the people. The aſhes were then gathered and laid up for uſe, and all who aſſiſted in the performance of this ceremony were to be unclean till evening. Whenever afterwards any perſon had contracted a pollution, ſuch as made him unclean ſeven days, he was to be ſprinkled with water (in which ſome of theſe aſhes had been thrown) on the third and ſeventh day, on which laſt he was to be clean; but if he neglected being ſprinkled on the third, he was not to be clean till the tenth day. This law was ſo ſevere againſt thoſe who were polluted by touching a dead body, or by coming into the tent or room where it lay, that if they preſumed to go into the tabernacle, before they had been thus purified, they were to be cut off, as having polluted the ſanctuary. The very veſſels that were in the place uncovered, as well as the place it ſelf where the corps lay, were likewiſe defiled, till ſprinkled with this water of ſeparation, as it is called in the text. How often this grand ceremony was repeated from Moſes to the captivity, is not agreed. Some affirm, that the heifer, which was burnt by Eleazar, Aaron's ſon, had its efficacy continued to them all that time; others, that there was one burnt every year, and that ſome of the aſhes of it were ſent to every city and town in Iſrael.

It is juſtly wondered, that this water, thus mixed with the aſhes of the red heifer, ſhould purify the unclean, and at the ſame time, pollute not only thoſe who aſſiſted at the ſlaying, burning, and gathering the aſhes of it, but even thoſe who ſprinkled the unclean perſon with it, ver. 7, 8. The Jews have a very ancient tradition, that Solomon, who was maſter of all other myſteries and knowledge, and could account for every precept in the law, even thoſe which prohibited the eating ſwine's fleſh, or wearing mixtures of linnen and wool, yet confeſſed himſelf ignorant of this ceremonial, with reſpect to the red heifer. The learned Spencer has ventured, however, to dive deeper than that wiſe monarch, by the aid of his infallible rule, either of conformity, or oppoſition to the Egyptian rites: He ranks, therefore, the red heifer under this laſt claſs, becauſe that nation offered nothing but male animals, and had an averſion to all red-hair'd creatures, and even to the colour it ſelf; whereas the Moſaic law makes no diſtinction of colours in any caſe but this.

But we beg leave to obſerve here, that the Jews were as little fond of the red, as the Egyptians, and that Moſes commanded the uſe of ſcarlet in ſacrifices for ſin, only to expreſs the guilt of it. Accordingly, all the inſpired writers compared ſins of the deepeſt guilt, to crimſon and ſcarlet, as they did innocence to white, Iſa. i. 18. and this we think ſufficiently accounts for the colour of the heifer.

And here we beg leave to ſubjoin a remark to the ſame effect, which is, that in the 22d Pſalm, which abounds with many particularities relating to the paſſion of the bleſſed Jeſus, there is one expreſſion, not hitherto obſerved, nor rightly rendered by any tranſlation we have yet ſeen. It is where he is called a worm, and no man, ver. 6. for it is plain, the Hebrew, tholahath, is no where uſed in ſcripture, but to expreſs, either the crimſon or ſcarlet colour it ſelf (in which caſe it is commonly joined to the word ſhani, and ſignifies double dyed;) or, at moſt, the inſect from which that dye is made, unleſs it be taken figuratively to imply a deep degree of guilt, as in the place above quoted out of Iſaiah. The moſt litteral tranſlation therefore, of the expreſſion uſed by the Pſalmiſt, is this; As for me, I am a ſcarlet inſect or worm, and not a man; but the figurative ſenſe will be plainly this; I bear the ſcandal and reproach of the deepeſt guilt, and am wholly free from it; I am reputed a ſinner, and yet am free from ſin. We ſhall only add, that the Jews, Maimonides excepted, whom Spencer affects to follow, allow, that there is a deeper myſtery in the ordinances of the red heifer, than in any of the whole ſcripture, and highly condemn the preſumption of thoſe who pretend to dive into that deep abyſs. However, what was a myſtery to the Jews, is ſufficiently explained to the Chriſtians, by the Apoſtle to the Hebrews, chap. xiii. 11, 12. and to which we think Spencer has given but a jejune and trifling anſwer.

Whether or no this ſacrifice was to be numbered among the burnt-offerings which were made for the whole nation, is a diſpute among the learned, both Jews and Chriſtians, which we ſhall not enter into; but it is certain, that the author of the epiſtle to the Hebrews, conſidered it as typical of the great Meſſiah, who therefo e ſuffered without the gates of the city (even as the heifer was burned without the camp) and whoſe blood is of much greater efficacy, in imparting purity and ſanctification to men, than that of bulls and goats, the aſhes of an heifer, or any other legal ſacrifices.

CHAP. XX.

1 The children of Iſrael come to Zin, where Miriam dieth. 2 They murmur for want of water. 7 Moſes ſmiting the rock, bringeth forth water at Meribah. 14 Moſes at Kadeſh deſireth paſſage through Edom, which is denied him. 22 At Mount Hor Aaron reſigneth his place to Eleazar, and dieth.

THEN came the children of Iſrael, even the whole congregation, into the deſert of Zin, in the firſt month: and the people abode in Kadeſh; and Miriam died there, and was buried there.

2 And there was no water for the congregation: and they gathered themſelves together againſt Moſes, and againſt Aaron.

3 And the people chode with Moſes, and ſpake, ſaying, Would God that we had died when our brethren died before the LORD.

4 And why have ye brought up the congregation of the LORD into this wilderneſs, that we and our cattle ſhould die there?

5 And wherefore have ye made us to come up out of Egypt, to bring us in unto this evil place? it is no place of ſeed, or of figs, or vines, or of pomegranates, neither is there any water to drink.

6 And Moſes and Aaron went from the preſence of the aſſembly, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and they fell upon their faces: and the glory of the LORD appeared unto them.

7 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

8 Take the rod, and gather thou the aſſembly together, thou and Aaron thy brother, and ſpeak ye unto the rock before their eyes, and it ſhall give forth his water, and thou ſhalt bring forth to them water out of the rock: ſo thou ſhalt give the congregation and their beaſts drink.

9 And Moſes took the rod from before the LORD, as he commanded him.

10 And Moſes and Aaron gathered the congregation together before the rock, and he ſaid unto them, Hear now, ye rebels; muſt we fetch you water out of this rock?

11 And Moſes lift up his hand, and with his rod he ſmote the rock twice: and the water came out abundantly, and the congregation drank, and their beaſts alſo.

12 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and Aaron, Becauſe ye believed me not, to ſanctify me in the eyes of the children of Iſrael: therefore ye ſhall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them.

13 This is the water of Meribah, becauſe the children of Iſrael ſtrove with the LORD: and he was ſanctified in them.

14 ¶ And Moſes ſent meſſengers from Kadeſh, unto the king of Edom, Thus ſaith thy brother Iſrael, Thou knoweſt all the travel that hath befallen us:

15 How our fathers went down into Egypt, and we have dwelt in Egypt a long time: and the Egyptians vexed us and our fathers.

16 And when we cried unto the LORD, he heard our voice, and ſent an angel, and hath brought us forth out of Egypt: and behold, we are in Kadeſh, a city in the uttermoſt of thy border.

17 Let us paſs, I pray thee, through thy country: we will not paſs through the fields, or through the vineyards, neither will we drink of the water of the wells: we

Moses bringeth Water out of the Rock.

J. Basire Sculp.

we will go by the kings high way, we will not turn to the right hand, nor to the left, until we have paſſed thy borders.

18 And Edom ſaid unto him, Thou ſhalt not paſs by me, leſt I come out againſt thee with the ſword.

19 And the children of Iſrael ſaid unto him, We will go by the high-way: and if I and my cattle drink of thy water, then I will pay for it: I will only (without doing any thing elſe) go through on my feet.

20 And he ſaid, Thou ſhalt not go through. And Edom came out againſt him with much people, and with a ſtrong hand.

21 Thus Edom refuſed to give Iſrael paſſage through his border: wherefore Iſrael turned away from him.

22 ¶ And the children of Iſrael, even the whole congregation, journeyed from Kadeſh, and came unto mount Hor.

23 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes and Aaron in mount Hor, by the coaſt of the land of Edom, ſaying, 24 Aaron ſhall be gathered unto his people: for he ſhall not enter into the land which I have given unto the children of Iſrael, becauſe ye rebelled againſt my word at the water of Meribah.

25 Take Aaron and Eleazar his ſon, and bring them up unto mount Hor.

26 And ſtrip Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his ſon: and Aaron ſhall be gathered unto his people, and ſhall die there.

27 And Moſes did as the LORD commanded: and they went up into mount Hor, in the ſight of all the congregation.

28 And Moſes ſtripped Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his ſon; and Aaron died there in the top of the mount: and Moſes and Eleazar came down from the mount.

29 And when all the congregation ſaw that Aaron was dead, they mourned for Aaron thirty days, even all the houſe of Iſrael.

Ver. 1. Then came the children of Iſrael, even the whole congregation, into the deſert of Zin.] From Rithmah, or Kadeſh-barnea, they came into this wilderneſs, after many removals to other ſtations, of which Moſes gives an account in chap. xxxiii. from ver. 19. to ver. 36. For God led them by the cloud, quite back again to the Red-ſea, (chap. xiv. 25.) and from thence brought them into this wilderneſs of Zin; which is quite different from that mentioned in Exod. xvi. called Sin: For this lay on the confines of Idumea, as appears from ver. 14, 15.

——— In the firſt month.] Of the fortieth year after they came out of the land of Egypt. For Moſes gives an account of the tranſactions only of the two firſt years after they came out from thence, and the laſt: The reſt he paſſes over in ſilence, as being ſpent in tireſome journies; whereby all above twenty years old were conſumed, by one diſeaſe or other. In theſe travels he ſhews how, at ſeveral removals (mentioned, chap. xxxiii.) they were led back from Kadeſh-barnea to Ezion-Geber, that is, from the north to the ſouth of the ſhore of the Red-ſea, in which journey they compaſſed the land of Edom many days, Deut. ii. 1. that is, many years. For from the time they left Kadeſh-barnea, till they returned back again, was thirty-eight years, Deut. ii. 14.

——— And the people abode in Kadeſh.] Not in Kadeſh-barnea, which was the fifteenth ſtation, and in the confines of the ſouth part of Canaan, chap. xxxiv. 4. Joſh. xv. 3. but another Kadeſh on the confines of the land of Edom, towards the Red-ſea, chap. xxxiii. 36. Deut. ii. 3. Judges xi. 17.

——— And Miriam died there.] Four months before her brother Aaron, chap. xxxiii. 38. and eleven months before Moſes; being older than either of them. For ſhe was near one hundred and thirty years old, as may be collected from Exod. ii. 4, 7. where it appears, ſhe was not a child when Moſes was born.

——— And was buried there.] In Kadeſh, where ſhe died. But we read of no mourning for her, as there was for Aaron a little after, ver 29.

Ver. 2. And there was no water for the congregation: and they gathered themſelves together, againſt Moſes, and againſt Aaron.] Thirty-nine years of wonders, which the Iſraelites had paſſed in the wilderneſs, were enough to have convinced them, that God watched for their preſervation after a moſt extraordinary manner. The puniſhments he had inflicted upon that generation which was conſumed in the deſert, ought certainly to have prevented that which ſtill ſubſiſted from being ever guilty of murmurings and rebellions. And yet, when they were upon the very borders of Paleſtine, and had almoſt arrived at the end of their travels, finding themſelves expoſed to the ſame trials as their fathers had ſuſtained, they ingratefully committed the ſame crimes. If ſuch a behaviour were capable of any excuſe, it would reſult from the diſtreſs to which they were reduced: They were in the wilderneſs of Zin, near the city of Kadeſh, at the extreme parts of Idumea. The waters which Moſes had cauſed to guſh out of the rock of Horeb, formed ſtreams which always flowed after them; and ſo St. Paul means, when he ſays, they did all drink the ſame ſpiritual drink: For they drank of that ſpiritual rock that followed them, and that rock was Chriſt, 1 Cor. x. 4. That is, it repreſented him. When they arrived at the wilderneſs of Zin, theſe waters ceaſed entirely. Perhaps, it was becauſe God had a deſign to try them, or poſſibly, becauſe he was preparing to aſwage their thirſt without a miracle; the place in which they encamp'd being ſurrounded with many fountains, which they did not yet perceive.

The remembrance of the wonders which God had wrought, in delivering their fathers from a danger like that to which they found themſelves expoſed, could neither prevent, nor calm their fears: They forgat God their Saviour, which had done great things in Egypt: Wonderous works in the land of Ham, and terrible things by the Red-ſea; Pſalm cvi. 21. They believed their Divine Benefactor was about to extirpate their whole race by a violent death, and even when they were juſt ready to enter into the promiſed land. They made the fatal confeſſion of their jealouſy to Moſes, and did it in ſuch a manner, as would have been a ſufficient provocation for God to have abandoned them to the peril, of which they complained ſo ungratefully, had he treated them with the ſeverity due to their tranſgreſſion, "Would God, ſaid they, that we had "died when our brethren died before the Lord. And "why have ye brought up the congregation of the Lord "into this wilderneſs, that we and our cattle ſhould die "there? And wherefore have ye made us to come up out "of Egypt, to bring us unto this evil place? It is no "place of ſeed, or of figs, or vines, or of pomegranates; "neither is there any water to drink," ver. 3, &c.

Aaron and Moſes returned no anſwer to a people who were generally as ready to take up ſtones againſt their leaders, leaders, as to find fault with their management. They ſought for refuge in the tabernacle, and placed themſelves under the ſhadow of the Almighty, Pſalm xci. 2. as a fortreſs inacceſſible to all dangers. There they poured out the anguiſh of their ſouls unto the boſom of a gracious God, who was moved with their diſtreſs, and commanded Moſes to take the rod which was depoſited in the tabernacle; after which, he was to aſſemble the congregation, and ſpeak to the rock, that the water might flow from it. Whether God meant that rod which had flouriſhed in the tabernacle, as the words, before the Lord, ſeem to intimate, or that which had already been the inſtrument of ſo many wonders in the hands of Moſes, as other circumſtances ſeem to determine, is a particular that cannot be eaſily demonſtrated.

Exceſſive grief is frequently as oppoſite to the ſpirit of religion, as worldly tranſports and pleaſures. Moſes was, probably, in the firſt condition; for his ſiſter Miriam was juſt dead; and, perhaps, the ſedition of the Iſraelites falling out at that juncture, might have diveſted his ſoul of that faith and reſignation which was ſo natural to him. He even ſuſpected the veracity of God's promiſes; and the Sacred Hiſtory ſeems to hint, that he was chargeable with this crime. It has not, indeed, declared it in expreſs terms, for it only ſays, that Moſes and Aaron gathered the congregation before the rock, and he ſaid unto them, Hear now ye rebels, muſt we fetch you water out of this rock? ver. 10, &c. It is added, that Moſes lifted up his hand, and with his hand ſmote the rock twice: And the water came out abundantly. ——And again, that God immediately pronounced this ſurpriſing decree againſt theſe two brothers; Becauſe ye believed me not, to ſanctify me in the eyes of the children of Iſrael; therefore ye ſhall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them, ver. 12.

There would be ſome difficulty in the events we have been relating, if we were obliged to determine our ſelves between the opinions which ſome interpreters have advanced, upon the nature of the ſin of Aaron and Moſes. A certain Rabbin reckons up twenty ſeveral opinions among the Jews upon this matter, and chuſes the leaſt probable among them. He thinks, that God commanded Moſes to aſſemble the Gnedah, that is to ſay, the congregation of the people, inſtead of calling together the Kahal, that is, according to the ſame Rabbin, the congregation of the princes, or chief men. [Sepher Jechaia, or Shelſcheleth Haekabalath, pag. 12.] The Talmudiſts ſay, that the crime of Moſes conſiſted in the manner of his addreſſing himſelf to the people, and they hold the following maxim: "He "that treats the church with contempt, is guilty of as "great a ſin as if he had blaſphemed againſt God." The great Lightfoot, who was much more judicious than theſe Rabbins, conjectures, that Moſes having ſeen that God cauſed water to iſſue out of the rock a ſecond time, believed that the Iſraelites were not yet to enter into the land of Promiſe; and that as the former waters had not diſcontinued their flow, but becauſe the Iſraelites were arrived at the borders of that land; ſo they would not have returned, but becauſe God thought fit to make that people ſtill wander a long while in the wilderneſs.

But it ſeems to us, that theſe ſeveral comments are more likely to obſcure than illuſtrate the text. The Pſalmiſt ſays expreſsly, that they "angered him at the waters "of ſtriſe, ſo that it went ill with Moſes for their ſakes: "becauſe they provoked his ſpirit, ſo that he ſpake un-"adviſedly with his lips," Pſal. cvi. 32. The ſentence that God pronounced againſt him and Aaron declares, in ſo many words, "that they had not ſanctified him in the "Eyes of the children of Iſrael." Theſe words, therefore, which Moſes ſpake unadviſedly with his lips, were, in all probability, the ſame we have already cited, namely, Ye rebels, muſt we fetch you water out of this rock? and the reproach which the ſearcher of all hearts made him hereupon, ought to convince us, that this queſtion proceeded from a principle of unbelief. The ſecond blow that Moſes gave the rock, was owing, in all appearance, to the ſame diſpoſition of mind; for we cannot come into the notion of thoſe, who judge that his offence conſiſted in ſtriking it at all, becauſe the only direction given him was to ſpeak to it; for he was juſtifiable in believing that God would not have commanded him to take the rod, if it had not been to ſtrike the rock. The blow he had formerly given to that in Horeb, made him judge that God would make uſe of ſomething more than a bare voice upon this ſecond occaſion.

It ſeems as if the divine vengeance, which had only been reſtrained by the piety of Moſes and Aaron, during the ſeveral murmurings of the Iſraelites, was going to ſhower down upon them, as ſoon as ever that barrier was removed. But God drew out of the very boſom, as we may ſay, of his own mercy, a forbearance that was no longer owing to the leaders of this people. The rock opened, and the ſtreams guſhed forth. But leſt incredibility, authorized by thoſe who ought to have prevented it, or at leaſt to have checked it, ſhould go on, and ſpread triumphantly, God thought fit to inflict a temporal chaſtiſement on Aaron and Moſes. The latter did indeed pour out moſt fervent prayers to him for the revocation of this ſentence; he ſubmitted himſelf, and asked pardon of the Lord, ſaying, "Lord, thou haſt already ſhewn thy "ſervant the wonderful effects of thy power, and great-"neſs; thou waſt pleaſed to chuſe even me to be the mi-"niſter of this ſeries of miracles, which ought to convince "this people of the eaſineſs of their acceſs to a country "into which thou haſt ſo ſolemnly promiſed to conduct "them. I ſtand in need of no new proofs of thy perfec-"tions, in order to convince me that there is no being in "the whole world equal to thee, or that will not be for-"ced to ſubmit to thy ſupreme commands. But wilt "thou leave thy own work unfiniſhed? Shall this people "enter into the promiſed land, and ſhall he who has had "the glory of bringing them thus far, be alone excluded? "Doſt thou only ſhew me the very borders of it, to ren-"der me the more ſenſible of the rigour of thy juſtice, "which has condemned me not to ſee the whole of it? "Suffer me, I pray thee, to paſs theſe waters of Jordan; "let me enter into a country that has been the object of "ſo many wiſhes and deſires, and enjoy the fruits of thoſe "labours we have undergone to reach it." See Deut. iii. 23, &c.

All theſe prayers were rejected. The holy perſon, who had ſo often averted the wrath of God, which was ready to conſume ſuch a rebellious nation, could not appeaſe that Divine vengeance with which he himſelf was now purſued; and whilſt a crowd of Iſraelites, if we may ſo ſay, abounding in diſtruſts, murmurings, rebellions, and luſts, were permitted to ſee that river open it ſelf, in order to make a paſſage for them into the land of Promiſe with ſongs of triumph; Moſes found himſelf ſhut out for one ſingle act of unbelief. "The Lord (ſays he) was "wrath with me for your ſakes, and would not hear me: "and the Lord ſaid unto me, Let it ſuffice thee, ſpeak "no more unto me of this matter. Get thee up into the "top of Piſgah, and lift up thine eyes weſtward, and "northward, and ſouthward, and eaſtward, and behold "it with thine eyes, for thou ſhalt not go over this Jor-"dan." A dreadful example to all thoſe whoſe calling requires them to deliver the commands of God to the reſt of mankind! A puniſhment well adapted to awaken the miniſters of the living God! St. Paul alludes thereto, perhaps, in theſe remarkable words; I keep under my body, and bring it into ſubjection; leſt that by any means when I have preached to others, I my ſelf ſhould be a caſt away, 1 Cor. ix. 27.

In a word, if interpreters are ever worthy of excuſe for having confounded two events ſo far diſtant from each other, it is for thinking that the hiſtory related in the 17th chapter of Exodus is the ſame with that we have now mentioned. There is a great analogy between them: In the firſt caſe we hear of the people murmuring againſt Aaron and Moſes for bringing them out of Egypt: we find the ſame murmuring in this latter caſe. In the firſt inſtance, Moſes prays ardently to God: he does the ſame in this. In the firſt, God promiſes to cauſe water to guſh out of the rock: he makes the ſame promiſe here. In the firſt, Moſes is ordered to take a rod; the ſame order is given here. In the firſt, Moſes ſtrikes the rock: he does the ſame here. In the firſt, the camp of the Iſraelites takes the name of Meribah, that is to ſay, ſtrife, or contention; ſo it is likewiſe called here. And yet all theſe reſemblances do not hinder theſe two hiſtories from differing ſenſibly. The firſt of thoſe events happen'd the firſt year that the people came out of Egypt; the ſecond, at the end of their travels, thirty nine years compleatly after their their departure. The firſt gave Moſes an opportunity to obey punctually the commands of God; the ſecond is related as a fatal period, in which that law-giver forgot the great motives which ought to have made him believe what God had pronounced. The firſt happen'd in the wilderneſs of Zin, upon mount Horeb; the ſecond in that of Tſin, on the borders of Idumea.

The Gentiles were not, perhaps, entirely ignorant of theſe hiſtories, but they have ſtrangely diſguiſed them. Tacitus relates, that Moſes being ready to periſh with thirſt, and all the multitude of people under his conduct, ſaw a herd of wild aſſes climbing up a rock, followed their track, and diſcovered ſeveral fountains of water.

Gerard Voſſius thinks he diſcovers the footſteps of the ſame hiſtories in the Bacchantes of Euripides, where it is ſaid, that one of the prieſteſſes of Bacchus ſmote with her rod, or Thyrſus, one of the rocks of mount Cytheron, and that a ſtream of water guſhed out; the ſentiments of that learned man are approved by Bochart.

Monſieur Huet aſcribes to the ſame origin, what the heathens have advanced of Priapus and Janus, to the former of which falſe divinities they attribute the faculty of diſcerning fountains; and of the latter they ſay, that he made water come out of a rock.

Ver. 13. This is the water of Meribah,] called Meribah-kadeſh, Deut. xxxii. 51. to diſtinguiſh it from that Meribah mentioned Exod. xvii. 7. where the Iſraelites were guilty of the ſame crime.

——— Becauſe the children of Iſrael ſtrove with the Lord;] Expoſtulated with him moſt undutifully; and accuſed him of unkindneſs to them, ver. 3, 4.

——— And he was ſanctified in them.] The Hebrew doctors differ very much in their opinions about this alſo, whether he was ſanctified in the waters, or in the people of Iſrael, or in Moſes and Aaron. Some fancy it is meant of the waters, namely, that God did himſelf great honour in bringing waters again out of a rock; and therefore the name of the place was called Kadeſh, for his being ſanctified there. Thus Chaskuni. But it ſeems to have been called ſo before this time; being a place well known to the Edomites, ver. 16. The common opinion is, that Moſes and Aaron are the perſons ſpoken of: for God's name, ſaith R. Solomon, is much revered, when he doth not ſpare even his holy ones, Lev. x. 3. But Nachmanides expounds it of the Iſraelites, before whoſe face (as he explains the words, ſanctified in them) God's power, and faithfulneſs, and goodneſs appeared: and who alone are mentioned in this verſe; not Moſes and Aaron. But all three opinions in the iſſue, concur in this one; that God made his power, &c. appear in the eyes of all the Iſraelites, by bringing water out of a rock; and at the ſame time demonſtrated his holineſs and impartial juſtice, in puniſhing his deareſt ſervants for their unbelief.

Ver. 14. And Moſes ſent meſſengers.] By God's order, as his words ſeem to import, Deut. ii. 2, 3, 4.

——— From Kadeſh.] On the confines of the king of Edom's country.

——— Unto the king of Edom.] When the Iſraelites came out of Egypt, Moſes ſpeaks of Edom as governed by dukes, Exod. xv. 17. For the ſucceſſors of Eſau at firſt had no higher title, Gen. xxxvi. 15, &c. Not long after, ſays biſhop Patrick, it ſeems, their poſterity became kings; and he adds, that thirty nine years after the Iſraelites came out of Egypt, the Edomites were ſtill under kingly government. This king, to whom Moſes now ſends meſſengers, the great Archbiſhop Uſher takes to have been Hadar, the laſt of thoſe whom Moſes mentions, Gen. xxxvi. 39. and who for his inhumanity to the children of Iſrael, was ſhortly after puniſhed with death; and the kingdom turned again into the government by dukes. For Moſes (as that prelate thinks) writing the book of Geneſis in the latter end of his life, (or then adding ſome neceſſary particulars to what he had written before) reckons immediately after Hadar, ſeveral dukes reigning all at one time, in various parts of the country, which they had ſhared among them. See Uſſer. Chronolog. Sacra cap. ii.

We have ventured to depart from this great authority, in our Annotations on the thirty ſixth chapter of Geneſis, where the ſovereignty of the dukes and kings of Edom has been largely diſcuſſed, and we hope with that modeſty that always ought to be obſerved, when our ſentiments happen to differ from thoſe of very excellent and learned men.

——— Thus ſaith thy brother Iſrael,] In the language of thoſe times, all that were nearly related called one another brethren: and theſe two nations deſcended from two twin-brothers.

——— Thou knoweſt.] For they could not but have received intelligence before this time of ſuch publick things.

——— All the travel that hath befallen us.] How we, and our fathers before us, have travelled from place to place, without any certain habitation. See Pſalm cv. 13.

Ver. 15. How our fathers went down into Egypt,] Which was ſuch a known event, (they being invited by Pharaoh, who ſent carriages for them) that the Edomites could not be ignorant of it.

Ver 16. And when we cried unto the Lord, he heard our voice, and ſent an angel.] See Exod. iii. 2, &c. Maimonides here by angel, underſtands Moſes himſelf; for the prophets are ſometimes called angels, i. e. meſſengers ſent from God, Judg. ii. 1. This he aſſerts in the firſt part, and more than once in the ſecond, of More Nevochim. But it is very unreaſonable to think, that Moſes would thus magnify himſelf to the king of Edom, who underſtood no ſuch language, and could not but be the more induced to hearken to his embaſſy, if he believed the Iſraelites were under the conduct of a heavenly miniſter, who, as other Jews think, was Michael the prince of the heavenly hoſt; whom they commonly underſtand by the angel here mentioned. But many great men, particularly Maſicus, thinks this is ſhort of the truth, unleſs we underſtand by Michael, the eternal ſon of God; who was, as he ſpeaks, the perpetual prince and director of the people of God. For tho' he was then properly made the meſſenger of the Father, when he took on him our fleſh, and dwelt here among us; yet, from the beginning, it was his conſtant care to reconcile men to God, and preſerve religion among them. So that he might be called the angel of God, before he became man, becauſe God the father, by him, communicated with men about all things neceſſary for their welfare. And the Jews ſeem to have ſome obſcure notion of this: For what elſe could Moſes Gerundenſis mean, when he affirms, that the Angel whom Moſes ſaw in the buſh, was the ſame whom Jacob calls the God of Bethel, and whom he calls the Angel-redeemer: Of whom Moſes, ſays he, ſpeaks in this place, and in Deut. vi. 12. The Lord brought us out of Egypt. Certain it is, that thus the ancient Chriſtians underſtood ſuch places, taking the Angel here ſpoken of to be the eternal logos, or word, as St. John calls the eternal ſon of God: Whoſe ſenſe, no man, we think, hath better explained than the learned Mr. Thorndike; who, tho' he confeſſes it to be plain by the Scriptures, that it was always an Angel that appeared under the Old Teſtament, who is ſometimes called by the proper name of God, (Jehovah) yet this is no prejudice to what the fathers of the church teach, concerning the appearing of the eternal word; who was that Lord who then aſſumed ſome angelical nature, wherein he might appear, to deal with men for a ſhort time; after which, he diſmiſſed it, when he had accompliſhed thoſe purpoſes for which he aſſumed it.

——— And behold we are in Kadeſh.] Near to Kadeſh; for it is not likely they were admitted into the city itſelf, which gave its name to the adjacent country.

Ver. 17. Let us paſs, I pray thee, through thy country.] In our way to the land of Canaan: which God hath promiſed to give us.

——— We will not paſs through the fields, or through the vineyards.] They engaged not to turn aſide, as they went along, into any private mens grounds; ſee chap. xxi. 22.

——— Neither will we drink of the water of the wells.] Which any private perſon had digged for his own uſe; but only of the rivers, which are common to all creatures.

Ver. 18. And Edom ſaid unto him, thou ſhalt not paſs by me, leſt I come out againſt thee with the ſword.] The king orders them to deſiſt from their attempt; for he would oppoſe their paſſage with all his forces. He was afraid, leſt they ſhould ſeize his country, or ſpoil it: and therefore, would not truſt their declarations which they made to the contrary.

Ver. 19. And the children of Iſrael.] Who were ſent upon this meſſage, ver. 14. or elſe ſome new ambaſſadors, whom Moſes diſpatched with new intreaties, after he had been informed of his denial.

——— Said unto him.] Gave him new aſſurances of their honeſt intentions.

——— We will go by the highway.] Believe us we will not ſtep out of the common road.

——— And if I and my cattle drink thy water.] Out of the wells before-mentioned, ver. 17. which private men had digged; and therefore had a propriety in them.

——— Then will I pay for it.] For water was commonly ſold in thoſe dry countries; where it was very ſcarce.

——— I will only without doing any thing elſe.] The Hebrew words ein dabar (which we tranſlate, without doing any thing elſe) literally ſignifies in our language, it is no word, that is, not mere fair promiſes; but we will perform what we ſay.

——— Go through on my feet.] Go through as faſt as we can travel on foot.

Ver. 20. And he ſaid thou ſhalt not go through.] He perſiſted in his reſolution; and would not rely on their moſt ſolemn aſſeverations. Yet he conſented (as appears by Deut. ii. 28, 29.) to furniſh them with neceſſary proviſions for their money.

Ver. 21. Thus Edom refuſed to give Iſrael paſſage through his border.] Which Grotius cenſures in his book de jure Belli & Pacis, cap. 2. ſect. 13. as contrary to the law of nations; by which the high ways, as well as the ſea, and the rivers of all countries, ought to be free for all that have an inclination to paſs through them, upon juſt occaſions. And he gives many examples of ſuch permiſſion, out of Heathen authors; and therefore looks upon the denial of this, as a juſt ground of war with Sihon, and Og, (mentioned in the next chapter) as it might have been with Edom and Moab, had not God prohibited it. Nor can he think that the apprehenſions the Edomites might be under of ſuffering ſuch a vaſt number of people to paſs through their country, can alter the caſe; for no man's fear is to take away another man's right: And there might have been means contrived to remove this fear, by letting them paſs through in ſmall companies at a time, or unarmed. He had better have ſaid, in our opinion, by giving hoſtages on both ſides, for the performance of conditions: For the Iſraelites might have been equally terrified at paſſing through that country in ſmall parties, or, at being obliged to diſarm themſelves in their paſſage. But when all is ſaid, it ſeems not clear, that all men have ſuch a right, as that great man thinks they may claim. For no man can challenge a paſſage through a private mans ground, without his permiſſion; and every prince hath the ſame dominion in all his territories, that a private man exerciſes in his own land. There are many examples alſo, as Gronovius hath obſerved, of countries which have ſuffered extremely by granting this liberty (which ſhows that princes have reaſon to deny it, for their peoples ſecurity) and the examples of thoſe who have granted it, are examples of fact, rather than of right; and of ſuch as were not in a condition to refuſe what was demanded. See Selden's Mare Clauſum, lib. i. cap. 20.

——— Wherefore Iſrael turned away from him.] By God's command; who ordered them alſo to buy what they wanted of the Edomites, Deut. ii. 5, 6. for they ſtayed ſome time at Kadeſh by their conſent, before they removed; that they might furniſh themſelves, as they offered, with neceſſaries, Judg. ii. 17.

Ver. 22. And the children of Iſrael, even the whole congregation,] For they might not divide into ſeveral bodies, lying in ſeveral places; but were to march together when the cloud moved, in the order God appointed, chap, x. 13, 14, &c.

——— Journeyed from Kadeſh, and came to mount Hor.] Another place upon the edge of the Edomites country, chap. xxxiii. 37. where they pitched in a part of that mountain which was called Moſera, Deut. x. 6. Whether mount Hor gave the name of Hori to him, who was the anceſtor of Seir, and the firſt planter of the country, which was afterwards conquered by Eſau, Gen. xxxvi. 20, 30. Deut. ii. 12. or had its name from him, cannot be determined. But Hori we are ſure was the firſt poſſeſſor (of whom there is any memory) of this mountain Hor; which was afterward called Seir (from one deſcended from him) and after that, Edom.

Ver. 24. Aaron ſhall be gathered unto his people: For he ſhall not enter into the land which I have given unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] The ſentence denounced by the Deity againſt Moſes and Aaron, began now to be ſtrictly executed with reſpect to the latter. That Pontif aſcended the mount of Hor, which the learned Ainſworth ſuſpects to be an eminence of the mountain of Libanus, to the North of Paleſtine. There he appeared clothed in his ſacerdotal garments, after the ſame manner as when he entered into the moſt holy place, and to ſhow that he was about to appear in the preſence of that God who inhabited the tabernacle only ſymbolically. He then ſtripped himſelf of his ſacred veſtments, as did in future times the prieſts or prophets of the Heathens; witneſs Caſſander and Amphiaraus, when they were about to expire. Aaron put his pontifical habit on his ſon Eleazar, as a token of reſigning his office to him; and ſhewed, by this action, the imperfection of a prieſthood, in which thoſe who exerciſe it ſtand in need of a ſucceſſor; and the neceſſity of an everlaſting prieſthood, and of a prieſt who ſhould live for ever, to make interceſſion for myſtical Iſrael, Hebr. vii 25. Finally, he was gathered to his fathers, and buried on the mount. Bochart thinks, this was a mark of diſtinction, and that the moſt eminent perſons were anciently interred on hills or mountains; this he proves, by the example of Eleazar and Joſhua, and produces ſome other inſtances, with which profane hiſtory furniſhed him.

CHAP. XXI.

1 Iſrael with ſome loſs deſtroy the Canaanites at Hormah.
4 The people murmuring are plagued with fiery ſerpents.
7 They repenting are healed by a braſen ſerpent. 10 Sundry journeys of the Iſraelites. 21 Sihon is overcome.
33 And Og.

AND when king Arad the Canaanite, which dwelt in the ſouth, heard tell that Iſrael came by the way of the ſpies; then he fought againſt Iſrael, and took ſome of them priſoners.

2 And Iſrael vowed a vow unto the LORD, and ſaid, If thou wilt indeed deliver this people into my hand, then I will utterly deſtroy their cities.

3 And the LORD hearkned to the voice of Iſrael, and delivered up the Canaanites: and they utterly deſtroyed them and their cities: and he called the name of the place Hormah.

4 ¶ And they journeyed from mount Hor, by the way of the Red ſea, to compaſs the land of Edom; and the ſoul of the people was much diſcouraged becauſe of the way.

5 And the people ſpake againſt God, and againſt Moſes, Wherefore have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderneſs? for there is no bread, neither is there any water, and our ſoul loatheth this light bread.

6 And

6 And the LORD ſent fiery ſerpents among the people; and they bit the people, and much people of Iſrael died.

7 ¶ Therefore the people came to Moſes, and ſaid, We have ſinned, for we have ſpoken againſt the LORD, and againſt thee; pray unto the LORD, that he take away the ſerpents from us: and Moſes prayed for the people.

8 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Make thee a fiery ſerpent, and ſet it upon a pole: and it ſhall come to paſs, that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, ſhall live.

9 And Moſes made a ſerpent of braſs, and put it upon a pole, and it came to paſs, that if a ſerpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the ſerpent of braſs, he lived.

10 ¶ And the children of Iſrael ſet forward, and pitched in Oboth.

11 And they journeyed from Oboth, and pitched at Ije-abarim, in the wilderneſs which is before Moab, toward the ſun-riſing.

12 ¶ From thence they removed, and pitched in the valley of Zared.

13 From thence they removed, and pitched on the other ſide of Arnon, which is in the wilderneſs that cometh out of the coaſts of the Amorites: for Arnon is the border of Moab, between Moab and the Amorites.

14 Wherefore it is ſaid in the book of the wars of the LORD, What he did in the Red ſea, and in the brooks of Arnon.

15 And at the ſtream of the brooks that goeth down to the dwelling of Ar, and lieth upon the border of Moab.

16 And from thence they went to Beer: that is the well whereof the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, Gather the people together, and I will give them water.

17 ¶ Then Iſrael ſang this ſong, Spring up, O well, ſing ye unto it:

18 The princes digged the well, the nobles of the people digged it, by the direction of the law-giver, with their ſtaves. And from the wilderneſs they went to Mattanah.

19 And from Mattanah to Nahaliel: and from Nahaliel to Bamoth:

20 And from Bamoth in the valley that is in the country of Moab, to the top of Piſgah, which looketh toward Jeſhimon.

21 ¶ And Iſrael ſent meſſengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, ſaying,

22 Let me paſs through thy land; we will not turn into the fields, or into the vineyards, we will not drink of the waters of the well; but we will go along by the kings high-way, until we be paſt thy borders.

23 And Sihon would not ſuffer Iſrael to paſs through his border: but Sihon gathered all his people together, and went out againſt Iſrael into the wilderneſs: and he came to Jahaz, and fought againſt Iſrael.

24 And Iſrael ſmote him with the edge of the ſword, and poſſeſſed his land from Arnon unto Jabbok, even unto the children of Ammon: for the border of the children of Ammon was ſtrong.

25 And Iſrael took all theſe cities: and Iſrael dwelt in all the cities of the Amorites in Heſhbon, and in all the villages thereof.

26 For Heſhbon was the city of Sihon the king of the Amorites, who had fought againſt the former king of Moab, and taken all his land out of his hand even unto Arnon.

27 Wherefore they that ſpeak in proverbs, ſay, Come into Heſhbon, let the city of Sihon be built and prepared.

28 For there is a fire gone out of Heſhbon, a flame from the city of Sihon: it hath conſumed Ar of Moab, and the lords of the high places of Arnon.

29 Wo to thee, Moab; thou art undone, O people of Chemoſh: he hath given his ſons that eſcaped, and his daughters, into captivity unto Sihon, king of the Amorites.

30 We have ſhot at them; Heſhbon is periſhed even unto Dibon, and we have laid them waſte, even unto Nophah, which reacheth unto Modeba.

31 ¶ Thus Iſrael dwelt in the land of the Amorites.

32 And Moſes ſent to ſpy out Jaazer, and they took the villages thereof, and drove out the Amorites that were there.

33 ¶ And they turned, and went up by the way of Baſhan: and Og the king of Baſhan went out againſt them, he, and all his people, to the battle at Edrei.

34 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Fear him not: for I have delivered him into thy hand, and all his people, and his land; and thou ſhalt do to him as thou didſt unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heſhbon.

35 So they ſmote him and his ſons, and all his people until there was none left him alive: and they poſſeſſed his land.

Ver-

Ver. 1. And when king Arad the Canaanite.] In the Hebrew the words are thus placed, When the Canaanite king Arad: And ſo they are in the LXX. and the Vulgate: And Arad may as well ſignify a place, as a perſon: Nay, there ſeems more reaſon to tranſlate the words thus, the Canaanitiſh king of Arad: Becauſe there was ſuch a city of Canaan, mentioned Joſh. xii. 14. and Judg. i. 16. One of the ſons of Canaan, being called Arad, (as both the LXX. and the Vulgate tranſlate the Hebrew word Arad, Gen. x. 18.) who it is likely gave his name to this part of the country; the chief city of which was called after him.

——— Which dwelt in the South.] In the South part of the land of Canaan, toward the eaſtern angle of it, near the Dead Sea; ſee chap. xxxiii. 40.

——— Heard that Iſrael came by the way of the ſpies.] Which were ſent by the king Arad, as many ſuppoſe, to bring them intelligence which way the Iſraelites marched. For it being thirty-eight years ſince the ſpies ſent by Moſes went that way; or rather, they going ſo ſecretly, that it was not known which way they went, it is thought not probable that Moſes ſpeaks of them in this place. But there is no neceſſity of taking the Hebrew word Atharim to ſignify ſpies; but it may as well be the name of a place, as the LXX. underſtood it, by whom it is tranſlated Αθαρείμ. And, if the ſituation would agree to it, one might probably conjecture, the place was ſo called, from the ſpies who went from thence by the order of Moſes, to ſurvey the country. For that was a fact ſo memorable, that as it could not ſlip out of the minds of the people of Canaan, ſo they found, we make no queſtion, after they were gone, which way they came into their country, (tho' for the preſent they paſſed unobſerved) and ever after called it, the way of the ſpies.

——— Then he fought againſt Iſrael.] He marched out of his country with an army; and fell upon the Iſraelites as they paſſed that way.

——— And took ſome of them priſoners.] He attacked, it's likely, at firſt, only the skirts of their camp, where he ſurpriſed ſome of them, and carried them away captive, as the words are in the Hebrew.

Ver. 2. And Iſrael vowed a vow unto the Lord.] It was reſolved, it ſeems, that they ſhould engage them; but the Iſraelites being afraid of them, becauſe they were unexperienced in war, implore the Divine aid by this ſolemn vow.

——— If thou wilt indeed deliver this people into my hand.] Give us the victory over them.

——— Then will I utterly deſtroy their cities.] They vow to reſerve none of the ſpoil for their own uſe; but devote it all to deſtruction. For ſuch was the nature of this vow called Cherem; ſee Lev. xxvii. 29.

Ver. 3. And the Lord hearkened to the voice of Iſrael.] He approved their vow.

——— And delivered up the Canaanites.] The Iſraelites vanquiſhed their army.

——— And they utterly deſtroyed them and their cities.] Utterly devoted them to deſtruction, according to their vow. For they did not now actually deſtroy them, they remaining when Joſhua came to Canaan, who executed this Cherem, or curſe upon them, chap. xii. 14. which, if it had been executed now, they muſt have entered into the land of Canaan at this time; from whence we cannot imagine they would have returned, to march further about, before they got into it; but have gone on to proſecute their victory, by ſubduing the country, as they had begun.

——— And he called the name of the place Hormah.] From the Cherem (or Herem as ſome write it) which was pronounced againſt it: And when it was put in execution, this name became more proper to it, Judg. i. 17.

Ver. 4. And they journeyed from mount Hor.] Where their camp was pitched, when the king of Arad aſſaulted them; and whither they returned, after they had overthrown him.

——— By the way of the Red-ſea.] Towards Ezion Geber, as we read Deut. ii. 18.

——— To compaſs the land of Edom.] Which extended itſelf unto the Red-ſea.

——— And the ſouls of the people were much diſcouraged becauſe of the way.] The word we tranſlate diſcouraged, ſignifies two things; to faint, and to breath ſhort, thro' the anguiſh and bitterneſs of one's ſpirit, Exod. vi. 9. And ſecondly, To be angry at, or, at leaſt impatient, by reaſon of ſome trouble. And ſo it may be beſt taken in this place, (as Buxtorf obſerves in Hittor. ſerp. Ænei, cap. i.) not ſimply for their being tired, with a tedious, long, and troubleſome march; but that accompanied with no ſmall indignation and wrath: Which did not only burn within, but broke out into words of great impatience; as appears by what follows. Whence the Hebrew words Ketzar-Ruach (ſhort of ſpirit) ſignifies angry, or haſty, Prov. xiv. 29. and in Job. xxi. 4. we tranſlate it, troubled, and Zach. xi. 8. loathed; where it had better been tranſlated, I was angry with them. Now that which made the people thus fret, or faint, if we will have it ſo interpreted, was the way wherein they were now led; which was about the land of Edom. For when they were come towards Canaan, in the middle of the fortieth year, at the end of which they were promiſed to enter in and poſſeſs it, they are carried back again toward the Red ſea, whither God had ſent their fathers, after they had brought a falſe report upon the land, chap. xiv. 25. This made them think, perhaps, that they ſhould never come to Canaan; or, at leaſt, it was tedious to march ſuch a great way about, after they had been kept ſo long from their inheritance, and were lately in ſuch hopes of it, when Moſes demanded a paſſage into it through the country of Edom.

——— And the people ſpake againſt God, and againſt Moſes,] This ſhews they were in a very great rage; which made them ſo forgetful of their duty, as to charge God himſelf with ill conduct: whereas their fathers were wont only to murmur againſt Moſes and Aaron.

——— Wherefore have you brought us out of Egypt,] The Hebrew word Heelithunu (made us to go up) is a ſtrange word, as Dr. Lightfoot calls it, in this language; declaring the great indignation they were in when they uttered it.

——— To die in the wilderneſs?] As if they had ſaid (ſo Abarbinel explains it) what can we expect or hope for but death, from this long continuance in the wilderneſs?

——— For there is no bread, neither is there any water? For we want the moſt neceſſary things for the ſupport of life, (as he alſo well explains it.) This they inconſiderately uttered in a rage, for they had both, by a miraculous providence over them. They themſelves immediately confeſs they had manna; and that they lately received water out of the rock: But nothing would ſatisfy them, unleſs they were brought to a country, where bread and water was to be obtained without a miracle. For the meaning of their complaint was, that God did not deal with them as he did with other people, who (to ſpeak in our common phraſe) did not live from hand to mouth, as the Iſraelites did, who had bread given them only to ſuffice for one day and no more; and that ſuch bread as they deſpiſed. It is likely alſo that they now began to want water again, which did not follow them, as formerly, out of the rock; and what they had in their veſſels, perhaps, was almoſt exhauſted.

——— And our ſoul loatheth this light bread.] As for the bread God beſtowed upon them, they were ſo far from being ſatisfied with it, that they loathed it, and called it by the ſcornful name of light bread; ſo we tranſlate the Hebrew word Hakkilkel: which, being the doubling of a word, which ſignifies light or vile in that language, imports as much as very deſpicable, exceeding vile: or as the LXX tranſlate it, very empty; having no ſubſtance in it to fill their ſtomachs. So Abarbinel expounds this paſſage, we are tired with long journies, which require more ſolid bread than this to ſupport us.

Ver. 6. And the Lord ſent fiery ſerpents among the people,] God put a ſtop, by the ſtrokes of his avenging hand, to thoſe murmurings, which reaſon and religion were not ſtrong enough to prevent. He ſent ſerpents among this rebellious people, whoſe venemous bites produced ſuch inflammations in their bodies, as occaſioned the death of ſome of the guilty perſons, and violent pains to all of them. The Iſraelites had not been preſerved till now from this plague, but by a continual ſeries of miracles; for the wilderneſs through which they travelled, was full of ſerpents of all ſorts. Moſes repreſents it as one of the greateſt mercies and miracles done in favour of of this people, that they had been ſecured from them; leſt thou forget the Lord thy God — who led thee through that great and terrible wilderneſs, wherein were fiery ſerpents, and ſcorpions, and drought; where there was no water, &c.

The ſacred Hiſtorian is not particular enough in the accounts he gives us of the ſerpents which God rendered ſubſervient to his vengeance: but the epithet fiery, which is beſtowed upon them juſtifies our account of their malignant nature, in the fatal effects they produced: But there are many ſpecies of ſerpents that are known to be equally noxious.

The learned Bochart has made the ſame reflection in the hiſtory of animals mentioned in ſcripture, and one would imagine he intended to conclude from thence, that it was impoſſible to determine the kind of fiery ſerpents which are ſpoken of here: But he afterwards affirms, that it was the ſame ſort which the Greeks call Hydras, or Aquaticks, becauſe of their living chiefly in water. 'Tis true, he raiſes an objection againſt himſelf, which ſeems at firſt to overturn his own foundation, namely, that the wilderneſs in which the Iſraelites were, ſeemed to be a very improper place for the ſhelter of thoſe creatures. But he maintains, that the Hydras change their nature when the water fails them, and that they then become Cherſydras, or terraqueous animals, or Hydras living in dry places. Gerard Voſſius advances another conjecture; and pretends that the fiery ſerpents mentioned by Moſes, were of the ſame kind with thoſe which the Greeks call Preſter, or Kauſon, from a word in their language, ſignifying to burn. Fortunatus Licetus, quoted by Voſſius himſelf, had maintained before him, that the fiery ſerpents ſent againſt the Iſraelites were produced in the peoples bodies, and adds, that in Ethiopia, Egypt, and the Indies, there is a certain diſtemper called Dracunculi, which ſignifies little ſerpents; becauſe it produces great quantities of them. It would not be ſo difficult to tranſcribe all the arguments by which each of thoſe learned men ſupport their notions; and the vaſt quotations they uſe to illuſtrate them, as to prevail upon our readers to have the patience of examining them.

The children of Iſrael had recourſe to the charity of that ſame Moſes, whom they had juſt before conſidered as their greateſt enemy. They beſought him to mediate between God and them, that they might be delivered from this plague, which had already conſumed one part of the people, and was on the point of deſtroying the reſt. Moſes prayed, and God heard his ſupplications; in conſequence of which, he ordered him to make a ſerpent of braſs, and to ſet it upon the pole of a banner; for that is the moſt natural ſignification of the original. This was accordingly performed, but it is not intimated whence Moſes was ſupplied with the braſs he uſed for this purpoſe. Bochart pretends, that the place where the Iſraelites encamped, was full of copper mines, but does not prove that they worked thoſe mines, nor prepared the metals which they digged out of them. The braſen ſerpent was ſet up however, as God had commanded; and all who looked upon it were cured, as God had promiſed.

There are few compariſons more odious than that which ſome interpreters have made, between this ſerpent and the Taliſmans of the pagans. They call Taliſmans certain pieces of metal melted and ſtamped under particular aſpects of the planets, or conſtellations, to which they aſcribe extraordinary qualities or virtues, ſuch as victory over enemies; driving away noxious animals; and curing certain diſeaſes. Theſe effects, according to ſome, were produced by the immediate agency of the devil: but others aſcribe them to natural cauſes. Some learned men have juſtly oppoſed Sir John Marſham, who in the ninth ſection of his chronicle ſeems to have diſcovered ſome analogy between the magical arts of thoſe who made uſe of Taliſmans, and that which was accompliſhed by Moſes in the tranſaction before us; but he is not the firſt who has entertained this notion; ſince it had been ſtarted as long ago as in the time of the Rabbin Aben Ezra, but rejected by him with indignation. The virtue of the brazen ſerpent was altogether miraculous, and the author of the book of Wiſdom expreſſes himſelf nobly upon this ſubject, and imputes the efficacy to its true cauſe, in the following paſſage. When the horrible fierceneſs of beaſts came upon theſe, (ſays he, addreſſing himſelf to God, and ſpeaking of the Iſraelites) and they periſhed with the ſtings of crooked ſerpents, thy wrath endured not for ever. But they were troubled for a ſmall ſeaſon, that they might be admoniſhed, having a ſign of ſalvation, to put them in remembrance of the commandment of thy law. For he that turned himſelf towards it, was not ſaved by the thing that he ſaw; but by thee that art the Saviour of all. Wiſd. xvi. 5. But if ſome authors have either explained away, or weakened the efficacy of this miracle, by aſcribing a magical virtue to the brazen ſerpent, or a phyſical one of healing venemous bitings, others have increaſed it without reaſon, by ſuppoſing that the braſs would have been naturally productive of a different effect from that which it really produced; and that there came out from it, they know not what malignity, which would have augmented the inflammation of the peoples plagues, if God had not acted after a wonderful manner in healing them.

The people preſerved this ſymbol of Gods aſſiſtance, and carried it into the land of Canaan with them, where, in proceſs of time, they made it an object of their idolatry, 2 Kings xviii. 4; for which cauſe, Hezekiah broke it in pieces, and called it by way of contempt Nehuſhtan, that is, a lump of braſs. It is ſurprizing, that after ſuch peremptory circumſtances, related in the ſacred hiſtory, there ſhould be ſtill ſhewn, in the church of St. Ambroſe at Milan, a brazen ſerpent, which the Papiſts pretend to be the ſame with that of Moſes.

Lodovicus Capellus has been very induſtrious to prove, that the caballiſts diſcovered, by the myſteries of their art, the Meſſiah in the brazen ſerpent. But he is ſolidly refuted, by young Buxtorf. The Jews (if we may believe Cornelius a Lapide, in his commentary on this paſſage, page 871) have a remarkable ſaying upon this occaſion; That as the bitings of the fiery ſerpents were cured by the Iſraelites looking up to the brazen ſerpent; ſo will the bitings of the old ſerpent, inflicted on Adam and his poſterity, be healed at the time of the Meſſiah. If this ſaying was known in the days of our Saviour, 'tis probable he alluded to it, when he ſaid to Nicodemus; as Moſes lifted up the ſerpent in the wilderneſs, even ſo muſt the ſon of man be lifted up: that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have eternal life, John iii. 14. It is plain that our Lord compares faith to the looks which the Iſraelites who were wounded by the bitings of the fiery ſerpents, caſt upon that of braſs. He alſo compares the healings which attended their looks, to the fruits of faith, and the lifting up of the ſerpent, to his exaltation upon the croſs.

This alluſion is ſo much the more happy, as according to the obſervation of ſome criticks, the Syriac word which our Lord uſed, ſignifies both to lift up, and to crucify, and he expreſſed it in that ſenſe, when he ſaid; and I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me, John xii. 32. The prophet, perhaps, made the ſame alluſion too, when ſpeaking of the evangelical ages, he ſaid; at that day ſhall a man look to his maker, and his eyes ſhall have reſpect to the holy one of Iſrael. Iſa. xvii, 7. and in another place he introduces the Saviour of the world, uttering theſe expreſſions; look unto me, and be ye ſaved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none elſe. Iſa. xlv. 22,

But it is remarkable, that the incarnate Son of God, in repreſenting ſome particular ſimilitudes that occur between the cure of Iſraelites, and the deliverance which his own meritorious paſſion procures to all true chriſtians, gives us an inſtance of that circumſpection which ought to be obſerved in the doctrine of tyes. The great Meſſiah has not multiplied thoſe reſemblances; nor even aſſerted that the deſign of God, in cauſing the brazen ſerpent to be lifted upon a pole, was to delineate the myſteries of the goſpel, nor that the Iſraelites, by caſting their eyes on the ſerpent of braſs, had any thoughts concerning the divine redeemer, who was promiſed to the church: For he only declares in ſimple terms, that, As Moſes lifted up the ſerpent in the wilderneſs, even ſo muſt the ſon of man be lifted up.

It were to be wiſhed, that the doctors of the ancient church had been as ſtrictly careful, to follow the pattern of our bleſſed Lord; becauſe they would not then have propoſed for ſaving truths the productions of a luxuriant imagination; nor have taken the liberty to add fabulous ſancies to thoſe realities which are couched in the ſacred hiſtory: They would not have affirmed, that the pole upon which the brazen ſerpent was elevated, bore the figure of a croſs; nor would St. Auſtin then, have indulged the following flights of unaccountable enthuſiaſm. "What was this brazen ſerpent, which was liſted up "on high, ſays that father, but Jeſus Chriſt? This ſerpent was made of braſs, and had the form of a ſerpent "indeed, but not the poiſon. This was to ſhew that "Jeſus Chriſt did not take upon himſelf ſin, which is "the poiſon of the ſerpent, but only death, which was "occaſioned by the ſerpent. This ſerpent was made of "braſs, to denote the divinity and eternity of Jeſus "Chriſt; for braſs is hard, incorruptible, and will laſt "as it were, for ever, Again it was made of braſs, to "ſhew the ſplendor and glory of the croſs of Chriſt, "which has been manifeſted to all people; for ſo brazen "veſſels yield the loudeſt ſound, and ſuch as are moſt "capable of being propagated to the greateſt diſtances." How then? ſhall the ſerpent, the emblem of a diabolical ſpirit, be employed as an emblem of the ſpotleſs Lamb of God, the end of whoſe miniſtry was to deſtroy the empire of the devil! How could braſs, which, as ſome have ſuppoſed, was a repreſentation of the lowly form, that the gracious mediator between God and man, aſſumed, when he came into the world, ſerve according to others, for a type of his divinity? This is only part of the rocks upon which the ancient interpreters have ſplit, and we need not have gone back ten centuries, to look for examples of the blunders made by the learned in the doctrine of types.

The hiſtory of the brazen ſerpent carries ones thoughts naturally enough to that of the ſerpent of Eſculapus. 'Tis remarkable that the ſame creature, the aſpect of which ſerved to cure the Iſraelites, ſhould have become the ſymbol of the god of phyſick among the heathens. This pretended deity wrought many famous cures in that ſcience, as recorded in profane hiſtory. He cured Hercules, and Hyppolitus Pauſan. Corinth. p. 70. The roman emperor Caracalla made a voyage to Aſia, in order to conſult him, and Greece abounded with temples that were dedicated to his name: The moſt celebrated, is that mentioned by Pauſanias in his Corinthiacs, and which was built by the Epidaurians in Peloponeſus. It was a vaſt edifice in the middle of a wood, and there were ſeveral large columns in it, upon which they inſcribed the names of ſuch as had been cured of their reſpective diſeaſes. There were likewiſe ſeveral apartments in it for ſick people, who were obliged to lie in the temple; and during their ſleep, this pretended god is ſaid to have communicated to them the remedies for their diſtempers. The reader may find other inſtances of this ſuperſtition in Ariſtophanes, Plautus, Jamblicus, Cicero, and ſome other ancient writers.

The emblem of Eſculapius was a ſerpent wreathed, ſometimes about a ſtaff; and he is thus repreſented upon ſeveral medals. There is one of Caracalla, in Mr. Spon's enquiries into antiquity (Spon. Recherches Curienſes d'Antiquit. Diſſ. 31. p. 533) and another of Gordian, in the famous work of baron Spanheim. The reverſe of it is a man on horſeback; one of his feet reſembles a hand, in which he holds a ſtaff ſurrounded with a ſerpent. Baron Spanheim is of opinion, that this man repreſents the emperor riding through Bithinia, whither he carries health and joy, like another Eſculapius. Spanheim de Præſt. Num. Diſſ. 5. Art. 14. Tom. 1.

The ſerpent of this god appears ſometimes with the head of a man; on ſeveral medals, and particularly one in low relief, as copied by Mr. Bagarris, from a manuſcript of Ligarius, to be met with in the diſſertations of Mr. Spon.

The inſcription on that medal imports, that Cneus Gavius Philoximus, had dedicated it to the ſaviour Eſculapius, and to health. Health is called in Greek, Hygeia; and the heathens ſaid ſhe was the daughter of Eſculapius. She is repreſented on the ſame medal, as offering him ſomething to eat with her right hand, and holding a torch with her left; and both theſe figures have a buſhel on their head, after the manner of ſome Egyptian deities.

The worſhip of Eſculapius paſſed from Greece to Italy upon the following occaſion, which we ſhall relate from Aurelius Victor; de Hom. Illus. cap. 22. pag. 107. "The "Romans, ſays he, having conſulted the Oracle, at a "time when the plague made great havock in Rome, "and the adjacent country, were anſwered, that the only "method to be delivered from it, was to bring the god "Eſculapius from Epidaurus. They accordingly ſent "deputies thither, the chief of whom was Quintus Ogul-"nius; and when they arrived at the city of Epidaurus, "they immediately went to pay their adorations to the "ſtatue of Eſculapius: at which time there iſſued out "of a cavern near the idol, a ſerpent of a ſurprizing "ſize, which however, excited more reverence than fear "in the minds of all the ſpectators; and paſſing "through the middle of the town, and the whole crowd, "who were wondering at the prodigy, advanced to the "roman ſhip, and went directly to the cabin of Ogul-"nius. The deputies, charmed with this ſpeedy and "fortunate event, hoiſted ſail to carry away the god, "and landed firſt at the haven of Antium, where they "continued for ſome days, and in the mean time, the "ſerpent left the ſhip, and ſlid to ſhore, where he entered "a neighbouring temple dedicated to the God Eſcula-"pius; but returned to the veſſel ſome days after, and "the deputies continued their voyage up the river Tiber. "Upon their caſting anchor before the city of Rome, the "venerable ſerpent left the ſhip, and retired into an "iſland at a little diſtance, where the Romans took care "to build a temple for him, and immediately the plague "ceaſed."

This event is repreſented upon a medalion of Antoninus, which exhibits the appearance of a veſſel ſtopping at the iſle of the Tiber; Eſculapius is adumbrated by the figure of a ſerpent coming out of the veſſel, and is received by the river God; and ſo it is likewiſe deſcribed by Ovid. Metam. lib. 15. v. 643.

It is a queſtion worthy the curioſity of the learned, whether that which we find recorded by Moſes concerning the braſen ſerpent, be the origin of what the heathens tell us of Eſculapius.

Firſt, it is an ancient opinion, that the ſerpent caſts its skin after a certain time, and takes a new one, and ſo appears to be born, or at leaſt to become young again. This is a proper type enough of the efficacy of phyſick. Secondly, they make mention of certain ſerpents that love men, and eſpecially thoſe that are ſick, and ſeveral inſtances to that effect are given by Ælian, Lucian, Pliny, Scaliger, and Gerard Voſſius. Thirdly, phyſicians extract medicines from the moſt poiſonous ſerpents. Fourthly, Writers make mention of a certain ſpecies of ſerpents, the glances of whoſe eyes are irriſiſtable. Some of the Etymologiſts derive the word Draco, a dragon or ſerpent, from the Greek Δερκὰν, which ſignifies to have a piercing ſight. 'Tis for the ſame reaſon, that the Heathens have made the ſerpent an emblem of vigilance, and feigned that a dragon was appointed to watch the garden of the Heſperides, as is repreſented on the aforementioned medalion of Antoninus. There one ſees an apple-tree, and by it, a dragon: On one ſide, three nymphs defend the approach to it: On the other Hercules endeavours to deceive the guards.

Perhaps alſo the ſerpent is conſecrated to Eſculapius, to ſhew that the practice of phyſick requires great care and circumſpection. Fifthly and laſtly, whether it be fancy, or reality, the ſerpent has always paſſed for the moſt ſubtil of all beaſts.

But tho' reaſons of this nature may have determined the Heathens to make the ſerpent a ſymbol of their god of phyſick, ſome famous authors have ſuſpected, that this part of the Pagan theology took its origin from the writings of Moſes, and their opinion is built upon ſeveral ſimilitudes that occur between the circumſtances of the life of this great legiſlator, and what the fable relates of the life of Eſculapius. Pauſanius informs us, that Phlegyas came into Peloponeſus to view the country, under the pretence of viſiting it. He was a great warrior, famous for his rapines and incurſions. His daughter, who accompanyed him in his journey, had been impregnated by Apollo, and was delivered of Eſculapius, in the country of the Epidaurians. She expoſed the child upon a neighbouring mountain, where he was miraculouſly nurſed by a ſhe-goat, and watched by a dog, Arithenes, a ſhepherd, perceived that one of his flock was miſſing; and he at laſt finds her, ſuckling a child, which he would have taken up, up, but was dazzled with the rays that proceeded from this dawning deity, &c.

It is eaſy to trace ſeveral circumſtances of Moſes in this fable. Firſt, Eſculapius was an Egyptian, as Pauſanius acquaints us: Damaſcus ſays he was a Phœnician. Bochart believes the name to be of Phœnician original, derived from Iſch-caleb, the Dogman, becauſe Eſculapius was guarded by that animal. Secondly, Sanchoniathon ſays, he was the brother of Taautus, and it is pretended, that Taautus was Moſes. Thirdly, Eſculapius was born on the banks of a river in Theſſaly, according to Appollonius; and we might add ſeveral other reſemblances of his hiſtory to that of Moſes, which may be conſidered as ſo many probabilities for the opinion of thoſe who think the ſtory of Eſculapius is owing to that of the brazen ſerpent.

As ſoon as the Iſraelites were delivered from the dreadful plague of ſerpents, they marched towards Phunon, ſince known by the name of Mettallo Phunon, by reaſon of the copper mines with which it abounded, and might, perhaps, have its firſt name from Phinon, one of the dukes or princes of Edom, Gen. xxxvi. 41. From thence they removed to Oboth, called by Pliny, Eboda. This was their thirty ſeventh encampment; their next was at Jie-abarim, upon the borders of Moab, that is, in that part of the deſart which is oppoſite to the land of Moab, eaſtward, and is therefore called the deſart of Moab. Soon after this, as they were removing to paſs the brook, or valley of Zared: God commanded them not to commit any hoſtilities againſt the Moabites and Ammonites, becauſe he had given them the land they dwelt in, and obliged them to take a large turn round their country, to come at that of Canaan.

Ver. 13. And from thence they removed, and pitched on the other ſide of Arnon.] The Hebrew word Meheber may be tranſlated on this ſide, or on the other ſide. And ſome think they were now on this ſide of the river, and not yet gone over it: Nor did they immediately come hither from their former ſtation; but firſt to Almon Diblathaim, chap xxxiii. 46. which is alſo called Beth-diblathaim, in the wilderneſs of Moab, Jerem. xlviiii. 22. and Diblah, Ezek. vi. 13. and then paſſing by Ar, in the confines of Moab, and approaching the country of the children of Ammon, God commanded them not to invade the Ammonites, who were deſcended from Lot, as well as the Moabites, Deut. ii. 18, 19, 37. but to paſs over the river Arnon, Deut. ii. 24. to that ſide of it which belong'd to the Amorites. For this river at that time, divided the Moabites from the Amorites.

The book of the wars of the Lord, mentioned by Moſes, in the 14th verſe of this chapter, ſeems to intimate ſome ſuch miraculous tranſaction at this brook, as had been performed at the red ſea; and we find ſome paſſages in the Pſalms, and the prophet Habakkuk, which the Chaldee paraphraſt underſtands, as if the brook Arnon had been dried up; or miraculouſly divided, to make a paſſage for God's people. However, it muſt be owned, that the words of Moſes are ſomewhat obſcure, and variouſly underſtood both by Jews and Chriſtians; and that the words Vaheb Suphah, may be the proper names of places, as we find it in the margin of our bibles, and as Dav. Kimchi, and ſome chriſtians underſtand them; but ſome chuſe the expoſition of R. Solomon, who thinks the Vau to be put for the Jod, which often happens, and that it ought to be read Jaheb, and then the ſenſe will be, what the Lord brought upon Suphah, or the red ſea, and on the brook Arnon.

Ver. 14. Wherefore it is ſaid in the book of the wars of the Lord, &c.] As to the book of the wars of the Lord, the generality of chriſtians think, that it is one of thoſe that were loſt, either at the captivity, or the burning of the temple, if not during Manaſſeh's wicked reign. The generality of the Jews, unwilling to admit that one jot, much leſs a whole book, of holy writ ſhould be loſt, have fancied that the book of Judges is prophetically meant by it, and underſtand the verb Jeamer, in the future tenſe, it ſhall be ſaid or recorded in time, in the book of, &c. becauſe in Judges there are ſeveral wars mentioned between the Jews and their neighbours, in which God did viſibly appear in favour of the former.

It ſeems to us, that this book of the wars of the Lord, was ſome authentic record in thoſe countries, containing an hiſtorical account of all the wars that had been waged in thoſe parts, and which are here called, the wars of the Lord; becauſe as Abarbinel well obſerves, He is the great governor of the world, from whom, and by whom, are all things, who putteth down one, and ſetteth up another, at his good pleaſure. The ſame Abarbinel thinks, this book was written by ſome of the wiſe men of thoſe nations, who looking upon this conqueſt made by Sihon, as a very memorable tranſaction, recorded it in, which agreeably to the cuſtom of thoſe countries, were written, as he conjectures, in a poetical manner. There are thoſe, who are of opinion, that this book was written by Moſes himſelf; who left in it direction to Joſhua, how to proceed in the wars of the Lord, when he conquered Canaan. So Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, and Bonfrerius doth not much differ from him. But we take the former account to be the more probable, that Moſes juſtifies what he writes concerning this conqueſt, out of their own books, which he quotes, juſt as St. Paul, in the New Teſtament, doth one of the Greek poets.

——— What he did in the Red-ſea.] Theſe are the words of the book, out of which he quotes a ſmall fragment; and the marginal tranſlation of them is moſt proper, Vaheb in Supheh, only the word eth is omitted; which makes the ſenſe to be this, againſt Vaheb in Supheh; that is, he came (ſome ſuch word muſt be underſtood) againſt Vaheb, a king of the Moabites, and overthrew him in Supheh, a place in the frontiers of Moab. See Deut. i. 1. others underſtand by Vaheb, the place where Sihon gave the Moabites this blow; which he did by falling upon them on a ſudden, with a terrible fury. So Nachmanides underſtands theſe words beſuphah; he ſtormed the city, and made a furious aſſault, when they thought not of it; for Supheh ſignifies a whirl-wind, or ſtormy tempeſt. Iſai. v. 28.

——— And in the brooks of Arnon.] The ſame Nachmanides takes the word Veeth, which we tranſlate and in, to ſignify rather and with; and, theſe being ſtill the words of the book before mentioned, the ſenſe is this: In the ſame manner he ſmote the brooks, or torrents of Arnon; upon which he fell like a tempeſt, and carried all before him.

Ver. 15. And at the ſtreams of the brook,] None we think, hath given a better account of theſe words, than the ſame Nachmanides, who by Eſched Hannechalim (which we tranſlate the ſtreams of the brooks) underſtands either a cliff from whence the torrents flowed, as Aſchdod and Happiſgah, Deut. iii. ver. 17. are the hills from whence the ſprings guſhed, or the valley through which the torrents ran; where they made a great broad water, which is here called, an effuſion of torrents, as R. Levi, Ben. Gerſom interprets the Hebrew words, Eſched Hannechalim.

——— That goeth down to the dwelling of Ar,] which extends itſelf as far as Ar, a city of Moab. ver. 28. R. Levi, Ben. Gerſom takes the word Schebet (which we tranſlate dwelling) to ſingify a place as well as Ar, towards which, theſe torrents bent their courſe.

——— And lieth upon the borders of Moab.] Which leaneth, or belongeth unto Moab, being in the border of that country.

Thus far are the words of the Book of the wars of the Lord, and the meaning of them is, that the king of the Amorites took all theſe places by a ſudden, furious invaſion; which Moſes therefore punctually recites, to ſhew that the country of the Moabites now reached no farther than Arnon: All the brooks or torrents, and all the effuſions of water as far as Arnon, i. e. all the country about them, being taken from them by the Amorites, in whoſe poſſeſſion it now was, and perhaps, had been a long time. And therefore the Iſraelites took nothing from the Moabites when they conquered this country, nor from the Amonites neither; part of whoſe country the Amorites alſo had got from them, Deut. iii. ver. 11. and the Iſraelites took from the Amorites, when they conquered Sihon and Og; and it fell to the ſhare of the Gadites, Joſh. xiii. 25.

Ver. 16. And from thence they went to Beer.] A place which took its name from the pit or well, which was here digged by God's Orders as the next words tell us.

——— That

——— That is the well whereof the Lord ſpake unto Moſes,] That is, ſaith Abarbinel, that place was remarkable for the well that God gave us, of his own accord, without our petition, which he prevented by bidding Moſes dig it for us.

——— Gather the people together, and I will give them water,] Which they now again wanted, being removed from the river Arnon; but did not murmur about it, as they had done formerly; and therefore God moſt graciouſly, when he ſaw their diſtreſs, provided it for them.

——— Then Iſrael ſang this ſong,] This extraordinary kindneſs of God, which prevented their prayers, and gave them water out of his own good pleaſure alone, (as Abarbinel ſpeaks) tranſported them with ſuch joy, that it made them expreſs their thankfulneſs in this ſong.

——— Spring up, O well,] As ſoon as they ſaw Moſes, and the princes, thruſt their ſtaves into the earth, and the water began to bubble up, they ſaid with a loud voice, Come up, O well; that is, let waters flow abundantly to ſatisfy us all.

——— Sing ye unto it.] Or, as it is in the margin, anſwer unto it. The manner of the Hebrews was anciently to ſing their ſongs of praiſe alternately, as appears from Exod. xv. ver. 20. And ſo one company having ſaid, ſpring up, O well, (which is likely they repeated often) they called to the reſt to anſwer to them; which they did, we ſuppoſe, in the following words.

Ver. 11. The princes digged the well, the nobles of the people digged it,] The other ſide of the choir, perhaps, took up the ſong again, repeating the ſenſe of what the former company had ſaid, ——— By the direction of the law-giver,] Or, together with the law-giver, who began the work, and whoſe example they followed.

——— With their ſtaves.] With no more labour, but only thruſting their ſtaves into the ground, and turning up the earth. For as R. Levi Ben. Gerſom takes it, the ground here being ſandy and very ſoft, was eaſily penetrated, tho' they were not likely to find water in it. But they believing Moſes, and following his direction, God ſent it copiouſly to them; and with no more pains, than a ſcribe takes when he writes with his pen. For ſo he tranſlates the Hebrew word Mechokek (which we render law-giver) a ſcribe, or doctor of the law.

——— And from the wilderneſs they went to Mattanah:] This, and the place following, are otherwiſe named in chap. xxxiii. as the forenamed Ben. Gerſom underſtands it. But others, think theſe were no ſtations (which alone Moſes gives an account of in chap. xxxiii.) where the Iſraelites pitched their tents, but places through which they paſſed, till they came to the ſtation, from whence they ſent to Sihon, for leave to paſs through his country.

Ver. 19. And from Mattanah to Nahael, &c.] This, as well as the place next mentioned in this verſe, ſeem to have been in the borders of Moab.

Ver. 20. And from Bamoth in the valley.] Rather from Bamoth (which ſignifies a very high place) to the valley. Or, as it may be tranſlated, from Bamoth a valley, that is, there is a valley, in the field of Moab, &c. unto which they came next; for ſome ſuch thing muſt be underſtood.

——— That is in the country of Moab, to the top of Piſgah,] Or, to the beginning (as the Hebrew word Roſch may be interpreted) of the high mount Piſgah. That is, they pitched at the foot of it, where the mountain began; which mountain was a part of the mountains of Abarim, as appears from Deut. xxxii. ver. 49. and chap. xxxiv. ver. 1.

——— Which looks towards Jeſhimon.] Or, towards the wilderneſs. For ſo R. Levi Ben. Gerſom interprets it, to a land that was Shemmah, untiled and deſolate, viz. to the wilderneſs of Kedemoth; where they pitched and ſettled their camp; and from thence ſent meſſengers to Sihon.

Ver. 21. And Iſrael ſent meſſengers to Sihon king of the Amorites,] Theſe meſſengers were ſent from the wilderneſs of Kedemoth, which was in the skirts of his country, Deut. ii. ver. 26. or lay juſt upon it; for there was a city of this name in that country, which was given to Reuben in the diviſion of the land, Joſh, xiii. ver. 18.

Ver. 22. Let me paſs through thy land,] They do not ſeem to deſire a paſſage through the midſt of his country, but only the extream parts of it, which would have much ſhortned their journey to the fords of Jordan.

——— We will not turn into the fields, or into the vineyards, we will not drink of the waters of the well, &c.] This is the very ſame civil meſſage which they ſent to Edom, chap. xx. 17. By whoſe example they preſſed Sihon to grant them, at leaſt, as much as the Edomites and Moabites had done. See Deut. ii. 28, 29.

Ver. 23. And Sihon would not ſuffer Iſrael to paſs through his border.] This ſhews they asked only to paſs through the skirts of his country. See Deut. ii. 20.

——— But Sihon gathered all his people together.] He not only refuſed to grant their requeſt; but came in a hoſtile manner, with all the forces he could raiſe, to oppoſe their paſſage over Arnon.

——— And went out againſt Iſrael into the wilderneſs:] From whence they ſent their friendly meſſage to him, ver. 21. which Moſes in Deut. ii. 26. calls, words of peace.

——— And he came to Jahaz.] A city, it is probable, belonging to the Moabites; whither the Iſraelites perhaps, retreated when Sihon denied them a paſſage through his country. For Iſaiah plainly mentions Jahaz, as a place either in the country of Moab, or near it, chap. xv. 4. and Jeremiah alſo, calling it Jahazah, chap. xlviii. 21.

——— And fought againſt Iſrael.] Who had orders from God, not to decline the battle (as they did with the Edomites and the Moabites) and were aſſured of victory, Deut. ii. 31. for they were Amorites, whoſe country God promiſed to Abraham, Gen. xv. 21. being part of the Canaanites, whom they were commanded to deſtroy; for they were deſcended from one of the ſons of Canaan, Gen. x. 16. which made this war with them to have a juſt ground; not becauſe they denied the Iſraelites a paſſage through their country againſt the right of nations, as Grotius thinks, which was but the occaſion, not the ground of the war, but becauſe they were one of the ſeven nations condemned by God to deſtruction, (whoſe land he beſtowed upon the Iſraelites, Joſh. iii. 20. and becauſe Sihon came out armed againſt them, beyond the bounds of his own dominions; and fell upon them, when they had given no provocation.

Ver. 24. And Iſrael ſmote him with the edge of the ſword,] Utterly overthrew his army, and putting them all to the ſword, made themſelves maſters of his country.

——— And poſſeſſed his land.] For they deſtroyed all the inhabitants, men, women, and children, Deut. ii. 33, 34.

——— From Arnon unto Jabbok, even unto the children of Ammon;] This is a brief deſcription of the extent of Sihon's country; which reached from the river Arnon, the bound of the Moabites country on the ſouth, chap. xxii. 36. unto Jabbok, which was the bound of the Ammonites; but invaded no place belonging to the Ammonites, for that God had forbidden, Deut. ii. 37. by which Jepthah, two hundred and ſixty years after this, juſtified the title of the Iſraelites to all the country here mentioned; which they took not from the Ammonites, or Moabites, but from the Amorites, who were the owners of it, when they conquer'd it, Judges chap. xi. ver. 13, 15, 22, 23. For Sihon had got half their country, as well as part of the country of Moab, as appears from Deut. iii. 11. and from Joſh. xiii. 25. where it is plain, Joſhua gave the Gadites half the country of the children of Ammon, which was now taken from the Amorites, who had diſpoſſeſſed them. Joſephus deſcribes it as lying between three rivers, like an iſland; for the banks of Arnon were the bounds of this region on the ſouth-ſide, and Jabbok on the north, which running into Jordan, and the weſtern tract of it was waſhed by Jordan itſelf; and on the eaſt-part it was ſurrounded with the mountains of Arabia.

——— For the border of the children of Ammon was ſtrong.] This not mentioned here as a reaſon why the Iſraelites did not ſet upon their country, (for they were expreſly forbidden to do it, Deut. ii. 19.) but why Sihon conquered none of the Ammonites country beyond Jabbok, as he did all from Arnon thither, becauſe their frontiers on that ſide of their country were very ſtrong, by the fortifications, which it is likely they had made upon the river.

Ver.

Ver. 25. And Iſrael took all theſe cities,] All the cities of that country which lay between Arnon and Jabbok: ſome of which are named ver. 30.

——— And Iſrael dwelt in all the cities of the Amorites,] Having deſtroyed all the former inhabitants, Deut. ii. 34.

——— In Heſhbon,] Even in their Royal City.

——— And in all the villages thereof.] In Hebrew, the daughters; as villages and caſtles are called, which depend upon the metropolis, as daughters on their mother.

Ver. 26. For Heſhbon was the city of Sihon the king of the Amorites.] He had made this the ſeat of his kingdom, after his conqueſt of this country; which Moſes obſerves (together with what follows) that it might appear to poſterity they invaded no part of the Moabites territories, or of the Ammonites, but what was in the quiet poſſeſſion of the Amorites, who had taken this country from them, and perhaps in a juſt war, and long enjoyed it.

——— Who had fought againſt the former king of Moab, &c.] It is not certain that this Sihon, whom the Iſraelites now vanquiſhed, had diſpoſſeſſed the Moabites of this country; but more likely ſome of his anceſtors, who were all called by the name of Sihon, (as the kings of Paleſtine were all called Abimelech, Gen. xx. 2. and chap. xxvi. 1. and the kings of Egypt called Pharaoh) who had fought, not with the preſent king of Moab, but with one of his predeceſſors, and conquered him and his country.

——— The former king of Moab.] Theſe words are not to be underſtood, as if he fought with the king of Moab, who immediately reigned before Balak; but, as we ſaid, with ſome of his predeceſſors. So the LXX τὸ πρότερον, that heretofore was King of Moab: and in the Hebrew the words are literally, The king of Moab, the firſt, perhaps, of the preſent race.

Ver. 27. Wherefore they that ſpake in proverbs.] In the Hebrew the words are, Wherefore the proverbaliſts; that is, the poets, whoſe compoſures, in thoſe days, were very ſententious.

Say.] Have this ſong in their mouths: which ſeems to have been compoſed by ſome of the Amorites, upon the victory which Sihon got over the Moabites; particularly upon the taking of Heſhbon; which, we ſuppoſe, he beſieged immediately upon the routing of their army. This Moſes thought good to inſert in his hiſtory, as an evidence that this country belonged to the Amorites, when the Iſraelites ſubdued it. Thus he quotes a common ſaying about Nimrod, to juſtify what he writes of his greatneſs. See Gen. x. 9.

——— Come into Heſhbon.] The words either of Sihon's calling to his people; or of the Amorites exhorting one another, to go to Heſhbon, and help to repair the ruins that had been in it by the war, that it might become the royal city of their country; for that's the meaning of the following words.

——— Let the city of Sihon be built and prepared.] Let that place which Sihon hath choſen for his ſeat, be built up again, and made fit for his reception.

Ver. 28. For there is a fire gone out of Heſhbon.] Now the poet riſes into a rapture, and propheſies the conqueſt of the whole country, by the army of Sihon marching out of Heſhbon: For in the prophetical language, the deſolations made by war are compared to fire, and to the flames, which conſume all they come near, Amos i. 7, 10, 12, 14, chap. ii. 2, 5.

——— A flame from the city of Sihon.] This is but a repetition (as the manner is) of what was now ſaid in other words; expreſſing the certainty of this preſage.

——— It hath conſumed Ar, of Moab.] He ſpeaks as though he had already ſaw the thing done which he foretold; though it never came to paſs. For they did not conquer Ar, which remained in the poſſeſſion of Moab in Moſes's time, as appears from Deutronomy, chap. ii. 9, 18, 29. But in his poetical heat, (or fury, as they ſpeak) he inſults, as if they had actually taken the capital city of Moab. For ſo Ar was; and afterwards called Rabbath, and Rabbath-moba, i. e. the great city of Moab; to diſtinguiſh it from Rabbah-ammon, i. e. the city of the Ammonites. For ſo we find in Stephanus (de urbibus) ῥαββάθμωμα (it ſhould be ῥαββάθμωβα, as Bochart hath truly corrected it, in his Preface to his Phaleg) which he calls πόλις τρίτης Παλαιστίνης ἡ νῦν Ἀρεόπολις. For Ar, as we ſaid, was the old name of it, Deut. ii. 29. Iſa. xvi. 1. from whence came the name of Ἀρεόπολις, which it retained in latter ages.

——— And the lords of the high places of Arnon.] The maſters, or owners (as the word Baale may be tranſlated) of the high places, &c. i. e. thoſe that dwell in the ſtrongeſt forts of the country: Or, as ſome fancy, the prieſts of the places are here meant; or, rather their temple where Baal was worſhipped. For we find a place in this country called Bamoth-baal, Joſh. xiii. 17. The high places of Baal. And it is evident, this poet triumphs in this ὁμνίκιον, over their gods and their religion, as well as over them.

Ver. 29. Wo unto thee, Moab.] The impending calamities of that people are now predicted in the poetical ſtrains of this and the following verſe.

——— Thou art undone, O people of Chemoſh:] The idols of the Moabites, taken notice of in Scripture, are Chemoſh and Baal-peor, ſometimes ſimply Peor, or as the Septuagint write the name, Phegor. But what Gods theſe were, learned men are not agreed. St. Jerom ſuppoſes they were both names of one and the ſame idol. And from the debaucheries into which thoſe fell who defiled themſelves with their worſhip, ſeveral writers, both ancient and modern, have repreſented them as obſcene deities, not much different from Priapus. This opinion they endeavour to ſupport from the etymologies of the names, and fancy ſome impurity is implied therein.

Peor they derive from Paar, to open or ſtretch; becauſe they uſed an indecent poſture before the idol, and offered him dung; which the Jews pretend was the worſhip proper to this idol. If this derivation be true, it was moſt probably a name of contempt impoſed by the Jews; and the obſcene ceremonies they mention may have been invented to give ſome reaſon for the name.

Others however imagine, that though the Iſraelites and Solomon were drawn in to worſhip thoſe idols by debauching themſelves with Moabitiſh women; yet it does not thence follow that any immodeſt ceremonies were uſed in their worſhip; nor are any ſuch mentioned in the moſt ancient authors; and the etymologies, we think, are not much to be built on. Peor was the name of a mountain, where the high places of Baal, which word ſignifies no more than Lord, and was a title of the Sun, were ſituate; and probably was added to that name by way of diſtinction, to denote the deity they adored in that place, tho' he had probably alſo a temple in Beth-peor, which ſtood in the plain. Voſſius ſuppoſes Baal-peor to be Bacchus; and Dr. Cumberland ſays he was properly called Meon, and will have him to be the ſame Menes, Mizarim, and Oſiris, who, according to his hypotheſis, were all one and the ſame man.

This learned prelate ſuppoſes Peor was not his true name; and finding Baal-meon and Beth-meon, mentioned in Scripture, as a place lying within the old territories of Moab, concludes Meon was the proper or honourable title of this deity, whom he will have to be the ſame with Oſiris, becauſe of the obſcene proceſſions uſed in honour of the latter, agreeing very well with the immodeſt ceremonies uſed in the worſhip of the former, and from the affinity between the names of Meon and Menes. The chief reaſons he gives why Meon was the name of an idol, and the ſame with Peor, are, 1. The Septuagint and Arabic Verſions have Meon for a proper name or title of a deity. 2. The Targum of Jonathan calls Baal-meon, "a city of Balak, in which Iſrael deſtroyed the idol of "Peor in the houſe of altars." 3. Meon was ſo great a title of honour, that it is given to God himſelf in Scripture, Pſal. xc. 1. and xci. 9. though it is tranſlated dwelling-place. But we think nothing can be concluded from paſſages where the word is plainly an appellative. 4. Beth-meon ſignifies the houſe or temple of Meon; and no other than a ſuppoſed deity can be ſaid to have a temple dedicated to it. Yet there are ſeveral names of places compounded with the word Beth, which have no relation at all to idols. 5. The Iſraelites changed the name of the city Baal-meon, when they had rebuilt it, as they did that of Nebo, becauſe they were ſo named from falſe gods. But this is no neceſſary conſequence. Chemoſh ſeems to have been a different idol. Nebo is thought by ſome to have been another deity of the Moabites. It was without diſpute an idol of the Babylonians, and poſſibly the ſame with Mercury: but whether the Moabites worſhipped it is not ſo certain. There was a town of this name in that part of the ancient dominions of Moab, conquered by Sihon, which the Iſraelites rebuilt, and changed its name; Iſaiah xlvi. 1. Pſal. cvi. 28. and a part of mount Abarim, in the ſame tract, was alſo called Nebo.

Of their religious rites and ceremonies we can ſay very little. The obſcenity attributed to them by ſome authors we have already mentioned; of which, however, the Pſalmiſt takes notice in ſpeaking of thoſe who were joined to Baal-peor; but ſays only that they ate the offerings of the dead: by which words he may either mean, that the idol to which they impiouſly gave divine honour, was no more than a dead man; or elſe that their oblations were made to the infernal gods. They ſacrificed both in the open air, on mountains dedicated to that ſervice, and alſo in temples built to their idols in their cities; and beſide oxen and rams, on extraordinary occaſions, offered human victims, according to the Phœnician cuſtom.

——— He hath given his ſons that eſcaped, and his daughters into captivity, unto Sihon king of the Amorites.] This is a manifeſt triumph over their God Chemoſh, who was not able to ſave his worſhippers (whom he calls his ſons and daughters, i. e. his children) who were under his protection. No, he could not ſo much as preſerve thoſe that eſcaped the fury of the ſword, but they were afterward taken captive, to make up part of the triumph of Sihon, king of the Amorites.

Ver. 30. We have ſhot at them, Heſhbon is periſhed even unto Dibon.] The Hebrew words, vanniram abad Heſhbon ath Dibon, may as well, if not better, be tranſlated their light is periſhed (or taken away) from Heſhbon unto Dibon. So Forſterus in his Lexicon, and the Tigurin Verſion, and others. That is, their glory is gone, from one end of the country to the other: For Heſhbon and Dibon were two famous places in this territory, Joſh. xiii. 17. and ſome think this is the place called Dibon gad, chap. xxxiii. 45. which was the more noted, becauſe there Nebo, one of their gods, was worſhipped: for in Iſaiah xv. 2. Dibon is mentioned as one of their high places; and there Nebo is lamented, i. e. their god which was there worſhipped; whence Heſychus ſaith, Δηβὼν (which no doubt is this Dibon) τόπος ἔνθα ἱδρυ῀ ἱερὸν Μοαβήτων, a place where the Moabites had a temple. See Selden de diis Syris, Syntagm. 2. cap. 12.

——— We have laid them waſte even to Nophah.] Another place in that country, as appears by the words following.

——— Which reacheth unto Medeba.] That is, the territories of Nophah extended as far as Medeba, which was certainly a place in the country of Moab, Iſa. xv. 2. But the word reacheth is not in the Hebrew; and the words without it may be thus truly tranſlated, and as far as Madeba: for ſo the Hebrew particle aſcher is ſometimes uſed to ſignify ſimply. And, as Eccleſ. vi. 12. aſcher mi, and who, can tell, &c. So here aſcher ad, and unto, &c.

And here we think fit to note, that it is likely theſe verſes were ſome part of the hiſtory of thoſe countries; for a poetical way of writing was in uſe before proſe, as Strabo tells us, lib. 1. Geograph. p. 18. where he ſaith, ὁ πέζος λόγος ὁ δὲ καλιεσκευάσαμενος μίμημα τ῀ ποιητικ῀ Πρωτίσα γὰρ ἡ ποιητικὴ, &c. all ſet or artificial ſpeech, (whether hiſtorical or rhetorical) was but an imitation of poetical compoſitions; the ancients knowing no other: Cadmus and Pherecydes, and Hecatæus, being the firſt who brought in this form of writing now in uſe. See Salmaſius in Solinum, p. 841. and Cuperus in his Apotheoſis Homeri, p. 55. However, this is certain, that they who would inſtruct the people, put their leſſons into verſe, as Strabo there ſhews; where he ſays, p. 15. Οἱ Παλαιοὶ φιλοσοφίαν τὴν ἀλέγεσι πρώτην τ῀ ποιητικὴν ἀσ᾽λέγεσαν, &c. The ancients calls poetry the firſt philoſophy, forming our lives from tender years, teaching good manners, governing the paſſions and actions with pleaſure; for which cauſe the Greeks inſtituted their children in their cities by poetry, Οὐ ψυχαγωγίας χαρὶν ὑπ᾽ὸ᾽εν ψιλ῀ς ἀλλὰ σωφρονισμ῀, not merely for the ſake of bare delectation, but to form them to ſobriety.

Ver. 31. Thus Iſrael dwelt in the land of the Amorites.] This he mentions again, to make it the more obſerved, that this was the country of the Amorites into which the children of Iſrael entered, not of the Moabites; who had been expelled out of it, as was notoriouſly known; there being a ſong in every body's mouth, which continued the memory of it.

Ver. 32. And Moſes ſent to ſpy out Jaaſar,] Another city formerly belonging to Moab, but now in the poſſeſſion of the Amorites; which the Iſraelites did not take at the firſt; but after they had conquered all the country before mentioned, they ſent ſome men to bring them intelligence, which way it was beſt to attack that city alſo, and the country about it; it was not far from mount Gilead, 2 Sam. xxiv. 5, 6. 1 Chron. xxvi. 31. and both of them were famous for good paſture, and therefore given to the tribe of Reuben and Gad, who had much cattle, chap. xxxii. of this book, ver. 1, 3, 4, 35, 36. After the ten tribes were carried captive from their own land, it fell into the hands of the Moabites again; as may be gathered from Jeremiah, xlviii. 32.

——— And they took the villages thereof,] as well as the city it ſelf.

——— And drove out the Amorites that dwelt there.] If it had not been poſſeſſed by them, they would not have meddled with it.

Ver. 33. And they turned and went up by the way of Baſhan:] a famous mountain, (Pſalm lxviii. 15.) lying more northerly than the country of Sihon, and belonging alſo to the Amorites; where was very rich paſture, and an excellent breed of cattle, Deut. xxxii. 14. Pſalm xxii. 12. and ſtately oaks, Ezek. xxvii. 6.

——— And Og the king of Baſhan.] The whole country, of which he was king, had its name from that mountain, and was called the kingdom of Og in Baſhan, Deut. iii. 10. where he is ſaid, as well as Sihon, to be a king of the Amorites, ver. 8, 11. that he was of the remnant of the giants, or of the Rephaim; who were a mighty people in that country of Baſhan, (ſee Gen. xiv. 5.) which in after ages was called Batanæa.

——— Went out againſt them, he and all his people,] with all the men of war in his country.

——— To the battle at Edrei,] A city near that country, afterwards called Adara, as St. Jerom tells us in his book de locis Hebraicis. He offered the Iſraelites battle; which by God's order they accepted.

Ver. 34. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, fear him not.] They had reaſon to be courageous, (and not affrighted, becauſe he was a Giant) having lately overcome a mightier king than he; of which God puts them in mind in the end of this verſe.

——— For I have delivered him into thy hand, and all his people, &c.] For their greater encouragement, he adds his promiſe, on which he bids them rely, as if they ſaw it already done, that he would give them the victory over Og, and all his forces, and beſtow upon them his country. This hiſtory Moſes reports more at large, Deut. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c.

Ver. 35. So they ſmote him, and his ſons, and all his people, until there was none left him alive:] After they had overthrown him and his army, they purſued the victory, till they had deſtroyed all the people of the country; ſome part of which held out longer than the reſt, (as appears from chap. xxxii. 39.) but at length was wholly ſubdued by Jair, the ſon of Manaſſeh, who had all the region of Argob given him for his pains, chap. xxxii. 41. Deut. iii. 14.

——— And they poſſeſſed his land.] Wherein were ſixty walled cities, beſide a great many ſmall towns, Deut. iii. 4, 5. Joſh. xiii. 30. all which were given to the half tribe of Manaſſeh, Deut. iii. 13. Joſh. xiii. 29, 30. 1 Kings iv. 13.

CHAP. XXII.

1 Balaks firſt meſſage for Balaam is refuſed. 15 His ſecond meſſage obtaineth him. 22 An Angel would have ſlain him, if his aſs had not ſaved him. 36 Balak entertaineth him.

AND the children of Iſrael ſet forward, and pitched in the plains of Moab, on this ſide Jordan by Jericho.

2 ¶ And

2 ¶ And Balak the ſon of Zippor ſaw all that Iſrael had done to the Amorites.

3 And Moab was ſore afraid of the people, becauſe they were many: and Moab was diſtreſſed, becauſe of the children of Iſrael.

4 And Moab ſaid unto the elders of Midian, Now ſhall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the graſs of the field. And Balak the ſon of Zippor was king of the Moabites at that time.

5 He ſent meſſengers therefore unto Balaam the ſon of Beor, to Pethor, which is by the river of the land of the children of his people, to call him, ſaying, Behold, there is a people come out from Egypt: behold, they cover the face of the earth, and they abide over-againſt me.

6 Come now therefore, I pray thee, curſe me this people, for they are too mighty for me: peradventure I ſhall prevail, that we may ſmite them, and that I may drive them out of the land: for I wot that he whom thou bleſſeſt, is bleſſed, and he whom thou curſeſt, is curſed.

7 And the elders of Moab, and the elders of Midian departed, with the rewards of divination in their hand; and they came unto Balaam, and ſpake unto him the words of Balak.

8 And he ſaid unto them, Lodge here this night, and I will bring you word again, as the Lord ſhall ſpeak unto me: And the princes of Moab abode with Balaam.

9 And God came unto Balaam, and ſaid, What men are theſe with thee?

10 And Balaam ſaid unto God, Balak the ſon of Zippor, king of Moab, hath ſent unto me, ſaying, 11 Behold, there is a people come out of Egypt, which covereth the face of the earth: Come now, curſe me them; peradventure I ſhall be able to overcome them, and drive them out.

12 And God ſaid unto Balaam, Thou ſhalt not go with them, thou ſhalt not curſe the people: for they are bleſſed.

13 And Balaam roſe up in the morning, and ſaid unto the princes of Balak, Get you into your land: for the LORD refuſeth to give me leave to go with you.

14 And the princes of Moab roſe up, and they went unto Balak, and ſaid, Balaam refuſeth to come with us.

15 ¶ And Balak ſent yet again princes, more, and more honourable than they.

16 And they came to Balaam, and ſaid to him, Thus ſaith Balak the ſon of Zippor, Let nothing, I pray thee, hinder thee from coming unto me:

17 For I will promote thee unto very great honour, and I will do whatſoever thou ſayſt unto me: Come therefore, I pray thee, curſe me this people:

18 And Balaam anſwered and ſaid unto the ſervants of Balak, If Balak would give me his houſe-full of ſilver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of the LORD my God, to do leſs or more.

19 Now therefore, I pray you, tarry ye alſo here this night, that I may know what the LORD will ſay unto me more.

20 And God came unto Balaam at night, and ſaid unto him, If the men come to call thee, riſe up, and go with them; but yet the word which I ſhall ſay unto thee, that ſhalt thou do.

21 And Balaam roſe up in the morning, and ſaddled his aſs, and went with the princes of Moab.

22 ¶ And Gods anger was kindled, becauſe he went: and the angel of the LORD ſtood in the way for an adverſary againſt him: Now he was riding upon his aſs, and his two ſervants were with him.

23 And the aſs ſaw the angel of the LORD ſtanding in the way, and his ſword drawn in his hand: and the aſs turned aſide out of the way, and went into the field: and Balaam ſmote the aſs to turn her into the way.

24 But the angel of the LORD ſtood in a path of the vineyards, a wall being on this ſide, and a wall on that ſide.

25 And when the aſs ſaw the angel of the LORD, ſhe thruſt her ſelf unto the wall, and cruſht Balaams foot againſt the wall: and he ſmote her again.

26 And the angel of the LORD went further, and ſtood in a narrow place, where was no way to turn either to the right hand, or to the left.

27 And when the aſs ſaw the angel of the LORD, ſhe fell down under Balaam: and Balaams anger was kindled, and he ſmote the aſs with a ſtaff.

28 And the LORD opened the mouth of the aſs, and ſhe ſaid unto Balaam, What have I done unto thee, that thou haſt ſmitten me theſe three times?

29 And Balaam ſaid unto the aſs, Becauſe thou haſt mocked me: I would there were were a ſword in mine hand, for now would I kill thee.

30 And the aſs ſaid unto Balaam, Am not I thine aſs, upon which thou haſt ridden ever ſince I was thine, unto this day? was I ever wont to do ſo unto thee? And he ſaid, Nay.

31 Then the LORD opened the eyes of Balaam, and he ſaw the angel of the LORD ſtanding in the way, and his ſword drawn in his hand: and he bowed down his head, and fell flat on his face.

32 And the angel of the LORD ſaid unto him, Wherefore haſt thou ſmitten thine aſs theſe three times? behold, I went out to withſtand thee, becauſe thy way is perverſe before me.

33 And the aſs ſaw me, and turned from me theſe three times: unleſs ſhe had turned from me, ſurely now alſo I had ſlain thee, and ſaved her alive.

34 And Balaam ſaid unto the angel of the LORD, I have ſinned; for I knew not that thou ſtoodeſt in the way againſt me: now therefore if it diſpleaſe thee, I will get me back again.

35 And the angel of the LORD ſaid unto Balaam, Go with the men: but only the word that I ſhall ſpeak unto thee, that thou ſhalt ſpeak: So Balaam went with the princes of Balak.

36 ¶ And when Balak heard that Balaam was come, he went out to meet him, unto a city of Moab, which is in the border of Arnon, which is in the utmoſt coaſt.

37 And Balak ſaid unto Balaam, Did I not earneſtly ſend unto thee to call thee? Wherefore cameſt thou not unto me? Am I not able indeed to promote thee to honour?

38 And Balaam ſaid unto Balak, Lo, I am come unto thee: have I now any power at all to ſay any thing? the word that God putteth in my mouth, that ſhall I ſpeak.

39 And Balaam went with Balak, and they came unto Kirjah-huzoth.

40 And Balak offered oxen and ſheep, and ſent to Balaam, and to the princes that were with him.

41 And it came to paſs on the morrow, that Balak took Balaam, and brought him up into the high places of Baal, that thence he might ſee the utmoſt part of the people.

Ver. 1. And the children of Iſrael ſet forward, and pitched in the plains of Moab, &c.] Moab was the ſon of Lot, by his eldeſt daughter, and thence received his name, which ſignifies (though not in pure Hebrew, yet perhaps in ſome dialect of that tongue) of a father; and he was the progenitor of that people into whoſe territories the Iſraelites were now entered.

The poſterity of this perſon ſettled in the country bordering on the mountain where he was born, which ſome authors make part of Cœle-Syria, others of Arabia; and, having driven out the old inhabitants, poſſeſſed a large tract, thence called Moabitis, or the land of Moab, bounded on the weſt by the mountains on the eaſt of the lake Aſphaltitis, or the Dead-ſea, and by the river Jordan; on the north by the country poſſeſſed by the Ammonites, the deſcendants of Lot by his youngeſt daughters; on the ſouth by the brook, or little river Zered, which runs into the Dead Sea, and by the countries of Midian and Edom; and on the eaſt by the deſarts of Arabia; which tract might be about forty miles long, and as many broad. This country, which is chiefly mountainous, but intermixed with vallies, proper for paſturing their cattle, was given by God to the children of Moab; and the Iſraelites, notwithſtanding the great provocations they received from them, were expreſsly forbidden to diſturb them, Deut. ii. 9. However, by the time of Moſes, the Amorites, who had poſſeſſed themſelves of great part of the land of Ammon, took alſo the adjoyning part of the land of Moab, reducing their limits on that ſide to the brook Arnon, called alſo the river of Gad, 2 Sam. xxiv. 5, which empties itſelf into the lake Aſphaltitis, and before paſſed through the midſt of their territories. This the Iſraelites, ſeizing on as part of Sihon's kingdom, which was theirs by right of conqueſt, kept it for ſeveral centuries, till recovered by the Moabites, when they brake into the borders of Reuben and Gad, on the declenſion of the kingdom of Iſrael.

The chief city of Moab was Ar, Deut. ii. 9, 18, 29. ſituate on the river Arnon, called alſo Rabbah, Joſh. xiii. 25. or the great; and to diſtinguiſh it from a city of the ſame name in the land of Ammon, Rabbah-moab. In after times it was called Areopolis, by the addition of a Greek Word, ſignifying a city. The other cities of Moab were, Mizpeh, Luhith, Horonaim, and ſome others, whoſe ſituations are not certainly known.

The cuſtoms and manner of life of theſe people we know very little of. They were governed by kings, uſed circumciſion, Jerem. ix. 25, 26. and ſeem to have employed themſelves moſtly in paſturage, and breeding of cattle, wherein their riches chiefly conſiſted. They were one of the nations whoſe good the Jews were forbidden to ſeek, Deut. xxiii. nor were they permitted to intermarry with the Iſraelites, even to their tenth generations, Deut. xxiii. 3. However, they appear to have cultivated a good underſtanding with that people after their ſettlement in Canaan, as appears from the ſojourning of Elimelech there, Ruth i. 1, 2. and the reception David met with, in his troubles, at Mizpeh, 1 Sam. xxii. ver. 3. &c. What language they uſed, we cannot ſay; but ſuppoſe they ſpoke a dialect of the Canaanitiſh or Hebrew.

That this people had once the knowledge of the true God, we may not only conclude from the piety of their great anceſtor, who, without doubt, inſtructed his offſpring in their duty; but it appears from Scripture; for they retained this knowledge till the time of Moſes, even after they had monſtrouſly corrupted their religion by introducing the worſhip of falſe gods, Numb. xxiv. 11. which they ſeem to have done very early, though the time cannot be fixed. The particulars of their idolatry hath been ſufficiently diſcuſs'd in our annotations on the preceding chapter.

The firſt inhabitants of the land, afterwards poſſeſſed by the poſterity of Moab, were Emims, a great and powerful people, and of extraordinary ſtrength and ſtature, Deut. ii. 10. They were, moſt probably, deſcendants of Ham, and of the ſame gigantic race with the Anakims, and Rephaims, though the Moabites called them by the name of Emims, (Deut. ii. 10, 11.) which in Hebrew ſignifies terrible. Theſe having been much weakened by the invaſion of Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, and his allies, Gen. xiv. 5. became the eaſier conqueſt to the Moabites; who drove them out, and took poſſeſſion of their country; but about what time is uncertain. However, they kept not their new dominions long entire; for in the days of Moſes, Sihon king of the Amorites, who bordered on them eaſtward, eaſtward, fought againſt the king of Moab, the predeceſſor of Balak, and took from that nation all their land, to the north of the river Arnon.

Balak, the ſon of Zippor, was on the throne of Moab, when the Iſraelites, having ſubdued Sihon, were incamped in part of their new acquiſitions, called the plains of Moab, becauſe they had lately belonged to that nation. This prince being exceedingly diſmayed at the approach of the victorious people, whom he was not in a condition to reſiſt, and not knowing that God had forbidden them to attempt the conqueſt of his remaining territories, aſſembled the nobles, and alſo the princes of the Midianites (a branch of which nation dwelt within the borders of Moab) and acquainted them with his apprehenſions, that the Iſraelites would, as he expreſſed it, lick up all that were round about them, as the ox licketh up the graſs of the field. Having conſulted together, and not daring to truſt to their arms alone, the aſſembly agreed to ſend for Balaam, the ſon of Beor, a famous prophet or diviner of that time, in the prevalency of whoſe prayers and imprecations they had great confidence, that he might come and curſe the people, who gave them ſo much uneaſineſs.

Some Jews imagine this Balaam was an aſtrologer, who obſerving when men were under a bad aſpect of the ſtars, pronounced a curſe upon them; which ſometimes coming to paſs in neighbouring nations, gained him a great reputation. Several of the ancient fathers ſuppoſe him to be no more than a common ſoothſayer, who pretended to foretel future events, but by no juſtifiable arts. Origen will have it, that he was no prophet, but only a ſorcerer, who went to enquire of the devil; but that God was pleaſed to prevent him, and to put what anſwer he thought fit into his mouth. It cannot be denied, however, but that the Scripture expreſsly calls him a prophet; and therefore ſome late writers are of opinion, that he had been once a good man, and a true prophet, till, loving the wages of unrighteouſneſs, 2 Pet. ii. 15. and proſtituting the honour of God to his covetouſneſs, he apoſtatized from God, and betaking himſelf to idolatrous practices, fell under the deluſion of the devil, of whom he learned all his magical enchantments; though at this juncture, when the preſervation of his people were concerned, it might conſiſt with God's wiſdom to appear to him, and vouchſafe him revelations. Balaam, indeed, ſeems to have been a man of no great probity, and might by profeſſion be a diviner; but by the free acceſs he had to God, it ſeems apparent, that he was no common ſorcerer or magician.

The Jews ſay, Balaam was not his true name; but that he was ſo called, becauſe by his counſel, Bala-am, that is, he deſtroyed the people of God: And ſome have taken him to be the ſame perſon, who in the book of Job is named Eliſha. The prophetical traditions of Balaam, the Perſian Magi are ſaid to have had; and it is thought, that from his prophecy, Numb. xxiv. ver. 17. the wiſe men knew the ſignification of the ſtar which appeared at our Saviour's birth.

In order to illuſtrate what the Sacred Hiſtory declares of this ſingular man, it will be neceſſary firſt to lay down ſome principles.

Firſt, Notwithſtanding that the deſcendants of Abraham did form, ſome ages after that patriarch, the only nation that God owned, and to which he committed his oracles, there were other worſhippers of the true God throughout the world, before the conqueſt of the promiſed land. His worſhip and his knowledge were ſpread every where, when the diviſion of languages ſcattered thoſe people that combined to build the tower of Babel. Accordingly, the Holy Scriptures give us an account of believers, and ſaints, and prophets. Job and his friends dwelt in Arabia; Jethro and his poſterity, in the country of Midian; and the ſojourning of Abraham in Meſopotamia left marks there of the advocates for truth.

Secondly, The worſhip of God was frequently mixed with ſuperſtition and idolatry, even among them who profeſſed to adore the one God of heaven and earth. The Teraphim of Laban prove this.

Thirdly, This odious mixture did not hinder God from revealing himſelf to thoſe who practiſed ſuch a monſtrous and motly religion, but he even revealed himſelf ſome times to profeſſed idolaters: Abimelech and Nebuchadnezzar are inſtances of this kind of revelation.

Fourthly, It was an opinion maintained among the Gentiles, that prophets and diviners were able to ſend plagues among the people; and it was maintained, not without grounds. They had likewiſe another notion, namely, that before they beſieged any town, or fought any battle, they ſhould endeavour to fetch out the tutelar gods of their enemies. When they had ſubdued any country, they pretended that the gods, by whom ſuch countries were protected, had forſaken them: Even the inſpired men have conſecrated this opinion. Fear not the people of the land, ſaid Joſhua to the Iſraelites, terrified by the report of the ſpies, their defence (or ſhadow) is departed from them. Numb. xiv. 9. We find likewiſe, that the Heathens were wont to devote to perdition the people againſt whom they waged war. Macrobius has preſerved a form of the imprecations that were made upon ſuch occaſions. O heavenly father, ſaid the prieſt who was deſtin'd to that employment, or if thou chuſeſt rather to be called JUPITER, or if any other appellation be more grateful to thee, I conjure thee to pour out upon this army (or this town) the ſpirit of terror and tripidation. Deprive of their ſight all thoſe who ſhall level their ſtrokes againſt us, our legions, or troops. Spread darkneſs over our enemies, over their cities, their fields, and their armies. Look upon them as accurſed. Bring them under the moſt rigorous conditions that ever any enemies have been obliged to ſubmit to. As for me, I devote them alſo. And for witneſſes of the curſes I pour upon them, I have the magiſtrates, the people, &c. Macrob. Saturnal. lib. 3. cap. 9.

Fifthly, Supernatural gifts in general, and thoſe of prophecy in particular, did indeed enlighten the minds of the prophets, but not always ſanctify their hearts. The heads of God's people judge for reward, and the prieſts thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money, Mic. iii. 11. And our Lord will ſay at the great day, to many of thoſe who ſhall have propheſied in his name, and caſt out devils in his name likewiſe, and that ſhall have done many miracles in his name, I never knew you. Matth. vii. 22.

Sixthly, The greateſt wickedneſſes, and human weakneſſes of the prophets, never went ſo far as to make them pronounce oracles contrary to what was dictated by the Holy Spirit. They were obliged, by an irreſiſtable power, to ſpeak when God would have them, and to ſay what he put into their mouths. Sometimes they uttered what they would have concealed, if they could, or had underſtood the meaning of it. Caiaphas was an enemy to Jeſus Chriſt, and yet he pronounced a noble prophecy concerning him, but without knowing it himſelf, John xi. 49. Sometimes they were made to ſpeak by involuntary motions, and in ſpite of themſelves. Jeremiah had reſolved not to preach any longer, and yet he was forced to do it by ſupernatural motions, which the Spirit produced in him; Then I ſaid, I will not make mention of him, nor ſpeak any more in his name. But his words were in mine heart, as a burning fire ſhut up in my bones, and I was weary of forbearing, and I could not ſtay, Jer. xx. ver. 9. Sometimes they fell into extaſies and trances, during which they uttered involuntary ſounds. There is a remarkable paſſage in Joſephus to this purpoſe, where he introduces Balaam, ſpeaking to Balak in the following manner; Can you then imagine, that in the buſineſs of propheſying, it depends upon us to ſay, or not to ſay, what we think fit? It is God who makes us ſpeak as he pleaſes, without any voluntary concurrence on our part. I have not forgot the requeſt which the Midianites made me, and I came with the deſign of contenting them; and I thought of nothing leſs than of proclaiming the praiſes of the Hebrews, or to mention thoſe favours which God had reſolved to heap upon them. But he has been more powerful than me, who was determined to pleaſe men againſt his will. For when he enters into our hearts, he renders himſelf maſter thereof; and thus, becauſe he hath decreed to make this people happy, and to crown them with immortal glory, he has put into my mouth the words I have pronounced, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 4. cap. 4. pag. 113. We find the like paſſage in Philo too. De Vita Moſis, lib. 1. p. 646. Sometimes the repreſentation of ſome terrible puniſhment ſtrongly affecting their fancy, has ſerved as a curb to the deſign they might have formed, of changing the oracles which God had dictated to them. We ſhall preſently ſee an inſtance of both ſorts of inſpiration, in the perſon of were a ſword in mine hand, for now would I kill thee.

30 And the aſs ſaid unto Balaam, Am not I thine aſs, upon which thou haſt ridden ever ſince I was thine, unto this day? was I ever wont to do ſo unto thee? And he ſaid, Nay.

31 Then the LORD opened the eyes of Balaam, and he ſaw the angel of the LORD ſtanding in the way, and his ſword drawn in his hand: and he bowed down his head, and fell flat on his face.

32 And the angel of the LORD ſaid unto him, Wherefore haſt thou ſmitten thine aſs theſe three times? behold, I went out to withſtand thee, becauſe thy way is perverſe before me.

33 And the aſs ſaw me, and turned from me theſe three times: unleſs ſhe had turned from me, ſurely now alſo I had ſlain thee, and ſaved her alive.

Balaam. We ſhall find him terrified with a viſion, the bare remembrance whereof was, perhaps, powerful enough to awe him; and we ſhall likewiſe ſee him in an extaſy, or trance.

Theſe principles being laid down, we think we have a ſufficient key to penetrate into the meaning of what Moſes tells us concerning Balaam. This man was one of thoſe, who although inhabiting an idolatrous country, had been enlightened with the knowledge of God, was attached to his worſhip, and honoured with the gift of prophecy. He dwelt in Meſopotamia, famous for the abode of Abraham and his family. His reputation made Balak call him to his aſſiſtance, in order to prevail upon him to curſe the children of Iſrael! To invite him in a manner ſuitable to his character, which was greatly reſpected in the firſt ages, he deputed ſome of the principal lords of his court to him, and ſome of thoſe of the king of Midian, whoſe country was threatned with the ſame dangers as that of the Moabites. Thoſe deputies offered Balaam preſents, which they imagined would prove the moſt effectual method to win his mercenary ſoul. It was the cuſtom among the orientals, not to apply to any perſon of note without a preſent; and the ſame prevails to this very day.

The deputies of Balak, and thoſe of the king of Midian, imparted to Balaam the commiſſion they had received from their maſters. Balaam believed he could equally ſatisfy, both the deſire he had to make his court to thoſe two princes, and that of preſerving the majeſty of his own character. He accordingly invited the deputies to paſs a night in his houſe, and promiſed them to conſult the oracle in the mean while: But God commanded him neither to go along with thoſe ſtrangers, nor curſe a people whom he had bleſſed. Hereupon Balaam ſent them away.

Balak was apprehenſive that his firſt deputation to Balaam was not honourable enough; he therefore diſpatched a ſecond, and ſent perſons more eminent than the former. He renewed his inſtances by them, and promiſed to reward him royally, if he would comply with the requeſt he made him. This propoſal was at firſt diſpleaſing to the prophet, at leaſt he returned this noble anſwer; If Balak would give me his houſe full of ſilver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of my Lord my God. But this motion proceeded leſs from a fund of ſincere and ſolid piety, than from a ſolid fear, or a virtue which was only tranſient and ſuperficial. Not daring to violate the commands of God, he invited theſe laſt deputies, as he had done the former, to ſpend a night with him, and he then conſulted the divine oracle a ſecond time.

God knew the motions of his heart were influenced by avarice; and in order to puniſh him for asking a ſecond time to go into the land of Moab, he granted his requeſt. But ſcarce had Balaam begun to make uſe of it, before he had reaſon to be ſenſible, that one of the greateſt misfortunes with which God puniſhes indiſcreet prayers, is to hear them. Balaam was upon the way, riding upon an aſs, which, in ancient times, was the moſt uſual manner of travelling, even for perſons of the firſt rank; an angel, in a human ſhape, holding a drawn ſword in his hand, appeared to him; Balaam did not, at firſt, perceive this meſſenger of the divine will, but the aſs was ſo frightened with the ſpectacle, that he quitted the road, and hurried away the prophet far from the deputies, who probably accompanied him. Balaam ſtruck the aſs, to make her go on; but the angel prevented her, by ſtanding at the end of a track through a vineyard, which was incloſed by a wall on each ſide. There the aſs ſtopped, and cruſhed the prophet's foot againſt one of the walls. Monſieur Huet pretends, that a law of Pythagoras, forbidding men to ſtop in a place where a ſhe-aſs had lain, derived its origin from this hiſtorical circumſtance. Huet Demonſt. propoſ. 4. p. 45. Balaam redoubled his blows, and the aſs ſunk down under him; and whilſt he continued to ſtrike her, God wrought a miracle to confound him, and made that animal pronounce articulate ſounds.

The Jews have not been able to perſwade themſelves that ſo extraordinary an event did really happen. Philo accordingly ſuppreſſes it, in his Life of Moſes; and Maimonides pretends, that it only came to paſs in a viſion. And yet how often have the Rabbins themſelves fancied more ſurpriſing tranſactions, without the leaſt neceſſity? What right have they, who give myſtical interpretations to the moſt ſimple events, to refuſe acknowledging this miracle? The moſt ſevere philoſophy cannot deny, that God is able to make beings deſtitute of underſtanding and reflection, pronounce ſounds full of ſenſe, reaſon, and truth; and above all, the Heathens have no right to reproach us with this hiſtory; ſince they relate ſo many of the like nature, but not ſo well ſupported. Witneſs their account of the aſs, upon which Bacchus rode; of the ram of Phryxus; the bull of Europa; the horſes of Achilles and Adraſtus; the elephant of Porus in India; and the lamb in Egypt, when Boccharis reigned there: All which are reported to have ſpoken. And a great variety of other inſtances are enumerated by Bochart, in his Hierozoicon, p. 1. lib. 2. cap. 14. and likewiſe by Huetius, in his Alnetanæ Quæſtiones, lib. 2. cap. 12. n. 26. Which paſſages are alledged out of their books, not to prove all ſuch ſtories to be true, but that the Pagans believed them to be authentic relations, and thought it did not exceed the power of their gods to effect ſuch things. Nor could they except againſt the Bible, becauſe of the ſtrange events there recorded, the like wonders being commonly believed among themſelves; which were deviſed by the Gentile writers, and, in all likelihood, out of this ſacred hiſtory; that they might not ſeem to come behind the Jews in any thing, which might give credit to their own religion.

It is ſtrange, that Balaam ſhould not ſhew any kind of ſurpriſe, when he heard an aſs ſpeaking like a human creature. Some criticks have thought they ſolved the difficulty, by ſuppoſing that this prophet had imbibed the doctrine of tranſmigration of ſouls, which they prove to be very common in the eaſt. But could Pythagoras or Plato themſelves, who were ſuch great promoters of that doctrine; could they, we ſay, have heard ſuch an animal ſpeaking like a man, without aſtoniſhment? The conciſeneſs of the Moſaic narration does, we think, ſupply us with a better and more ſolid anſwer to this objection; and he has, undoubtedly, omitted ſome circumſtances, which would effectually ſolve it, if they were known. However, it may not be improper to obſerve, that Balaam might have been ſo tranſported with fury, by the pain he ſuffered by the cruſh of his foot, that for the preſent he did not conſider any thing, but the reſtive diſpoſition (as he then thought it) of the animal on which he rode. And St. Peter obſerves ſo much, when he declares, the dumb aſs rebuked the madneſs of the prophet: Where the word παραφρονία ſignifies, that he was beſide himſelf, not knowing what he ſaid or did, partly out of anger, and partly becauſe he was poſſeſſed with an eager deſire and hope to ſerve Balak, and obtain the riches and honour that prince had promiſed him, now he had received the divine permiſſion to go to him.

The aſs reproached Balaam with his hard-heartedneſs, and Balaam accuſed her of obſtinacy; when he at laſt perceived the angel, to whom he confeſſed the ſin he had committed, in asking leave a ſecond time to go to the king of Moab. The angel renewed that permiſſion, but charged him by the naked ſword, which he brandiſhed over his head, to ſay nothing but what ſhould be inſpired into him. This object made a very ſtrong impreſſion on the mind of Balaam, and preſented itſelf to his imagination, every time that his avarice tempted him to obey the will of Balak, and to curſe the camp of the Iſraelites.

He arrived at the borders of Moab; and as ſoon as the king heard of it, he went to meet him, to do honour to the character of this prophet, and to conciliate his favour to himſelf. He brought him to one of his towns, called Kirjath-Huzoth, that is to ſay, a city of ſtreets: Balak offered ſacrifice there; whether it was to the god Chemoſh, who was the tutelar deity of that kingdom, or to the true God, which is moſt likely, and in honour to Balaam's maſter. He ſent afterwards to the prophet, and to the lords of his court, the fleſh of the victims he had offered; as was cuſtomary in thoſe times.

The day following this ceremony, Balak led Balaam to one of the high places, which were anciently conſecrated to the falſe gods. The Gentiles uſually choſe the very higheſt places for performing their religious ceremonies; monies; and profane hiſtory affords us a thouſand inſtances to this effect. Tacitus aſſigns for a reaſon of this choice, that people were nearer to the gods in thoſe places, and could be more readily heard by them. Lucian argues much after the ſame manner, but, without doubt, rather to expoſe and ridicule this cuſtom, than defend it.

Balak took Balaam into his chariot, and brought him up into the high places of Baal, ver. 41. All nations worſhipped their gods in high places; and Baal was the god of this country; who was worſhipped in more high places than one; unto all which he brought Balaam, that he might ſee where he could take the fulleſt view of the Iſraelites, and which of them would be fitteſt for his purpoſe. Theſe high places were full of trees and very ſhady, which made them the fitter both for the ſolemn thoughts and prayers of ſuch as were devout, and likewiſe for the impure inclinations of the wicked. Baal was the name of ſeveral gods, both male and female, as our Selden ſhews in his Syntagma 2. de Diis Syris, cap 1. And we ſuppoſe Chemoſh, the god of Moab, is here called by this name, (ſignifying a lord) though that great man ſeems to take it for Baal-peor, cap. 2. of that book.

CHAP. XXIII.

1, 13, 28 Balaks ſacrifice. 7, 18 Balaams parable.

AND Balaam ſaid unto Balak, Build me here ſeven altars, and prepare me here ſeven oxen, and ſeven rams.

2 And Balak did as Balaam had ſpoken; and Balak and Balaam offered on every altar a bullock and a ram.

3 And Balaam ſaid unto Balak, Stand by thy burnt-offering, and I will go: peradventure the LORD will come to meet me: and whatſoever he ſheweth me, I will tell thee. And he went to an high place.

4 And God met Balaam; and he ſaid unto him, I have prepared ſeven altars, and I have offered upon every altar a bullock and a ram.

5 And the LORD put a word in Balaams mouth, and ſaid, Return unto Balak, and thus thou ſhalt ſpeak.

6 And he returned unto him, and lo, he ſtood by his burnt-ſacrifice, he, and all the princes of Moab.

7 And he took up his parable, and ſaid, Balak the king of Moab hath brought me from Aram out of the mountains of the eaſt, ſaying, Come, curſe me Jacob, and come, defy Iſrael.

8 How ſhall I curſe, whom God hath not curſed? or how ſhall I defy, whom the LORD hath not defied?

9 For from the top of the rocks I ſee him, and from the hills I behold him: lo, the people ſhall dwell alone, and ſhall not be reckoned among the nations.

10 Who can count the duſt of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Iſrael? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my laſt end be like his.

11 And Balak ſaid unto Balaam, What haſt thou done unto me? I took thee to curſe mine enemies, and behold, thou haſt bleſſed them altogether.

12 And he anſwered and ſaid, Muſt I not take heed to ſpeak that which the LORD hath put in my mouth?

13 And Balak ſaid unto him, Come, I pray thee, with me unto another place, from whence thou mayſt ſee them: thou ſhalt ſee but the utmoſt part of them, and ſhalt not ſee them all: and curſe me them from thence.

14 ¶ And he brought him into the field of Zophim, to the top of Piſgah, and built ſeven altars, and offered a bullock and a ram on every altar.

15 And he ſaid unto Balak, Stand here by thy burnt-offering, while I meet the LORD yonder.

16 And the LORD met Balaam, and put a word in his mouth, and ſaid, Go again unto Balak, and ſay thus.

17 And when he came to him, behold, he ſtood by his burnt-offering, and the princes of Moab with him. And Balak ſaid unto him, What hath the LORD ſpoken?

18 And he took up his parable, and ſaid, Riſe up, Balak, and hear; hearken unto me, thou ſon of Zippor:

19 God is not a man, that he ſhould lie, neither the ſon of man, that he ſhould repent: hath he ſaid, and ſhall he not do it? or hath he ſpoken, and ſhall he not make it good?

20 Behold, I have received commandment to bleſs; and he hath bleſſed, and I cannot reverſe it.

21 He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he ſeen perverſeneſs in Iſrael: the LORD his God is with him, and the ſhout of a king is among them.

22 God brought them out of Egypt; he hath as it were the ſtrength of an unicorn.

23 Surely there is no enchantment againſt Jacob, neither is there any divination againſt Iſrael: according to this time it ſhall be ſaid of Jacob, and of Iſrael, What hath God wrought!

24 Behold, the people ſhall riſe up as a great lion, and lift up himſelf as a young lion: he ſhall not lie down until he eat of the prey, and drink the blood of the ſlain.

25 ¶ And Balak ſaid unto Balaam, Neither curſe them at all, nor bleſs them at all.

26 But

26 But Balaam answered and said unto Balak, Told not I thee, saying, All that the LORD speaketh, that I must do?

27 ¶ And Balak said unto Balaam, Come, I pray thee, I will bring thee unto another place; peradventure it will please God that thou mayst curse me them from thence.

28 And Balak brought Balaam unto the top of Peor, that looketh toward Jeshimon.

29 And Balaam said unto Balak, Build me here seven altars, and prepare me here seven bullocks, and seven rams.

30 And Balak did as Balaam had said, and offered a bullock and a ram on every altar.

Ver. 1. And Balaam said unto Balak, build me here seven altars.] Upon one of the high places; which Balaam, it is likely, pitched upon as fit for his purpose.

The number Seven was much observed, we find, among the Hebrews, by God's order, (see Lev. iv. 6.) but we never read of more than one altar built by the patriarchs, when they offered their sacrifices; nor was more than one allowed by Moses. Therefore in this there was something of the heathen superstition, who worshipped the sun, which is principally meant by Baal, and offered also to all the seven planets; unless we allow the conjecture of Fortunatus Scacchus, who imagines, that as Moses erected twelve pillars, according to the number of the children of Israel, when he enter'd them into the covenant of God, Exod. xxiv. 4. so Balaam order'd seven altars to be erected, according to the number of the principal houses of Moab, Myrothec. Sacr. Elæochrism. P. ii. cap. 59. But there is no ground for the conceit of Abarbinel, who, in his preface to Leviticus, sec. 4. saith, Balaam order'd this in emulation of the seven acceptable altars to God, built by seven men famous for piety, viz. Adam, Abel, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Moses. There is more certainty in this, that these altars were erected in honour of the most High, or of the greatest of their gods: for according to the account, which both Festus and Servius have given us of the ancient times, they sacrificed to the celestial gods only upon altars (which were so called, because they were aræ altæ, built high and lofty) whereas to the terrestrial they sacrificed upon the earth; and to the infernal gods, in holes digged in the earth.

——— And prepare me here seven oxen, and seven rams.] To offer one of each upon the several altars, as it follows, ver. 2. This number was used by pious persons, both in those days, Job xlii. 8. and in after-times, 1 Chron. xv. 26.

Balaam desired Balak to offer sacrifices to the true God, which he accordingly did; and there is nothing strange in that, for idolatry does not consist in not worshipping the true God, but in joining to him other objects of religion. There were many of the ancient idolaters, who did not question the power of the God of Israel, but readily sacrificed to him. Balak stood by his burnt-offering, and Balaam said he would go aside, ver. 3. as some versions render the original word, which is hardly capable of being translated, and which may signify a deep place, and perhaps a cave. And he added, Peradventure the Lord will come and meet me; this is an indefinite and vague expression, and may signify all kinds of revelation wherewith God might have favoured this prophet. Mr. Le Clerc conjectures from this passage, that the angels appeared sometimes to those who offered sacrifices; and that such apparitions gave occasion to the famous doctrine of the Heathens, of the evocation of the deities, which Jamblicus has throughly treated of in his book of The Mysteries of the Egyptians.

Ver. 5. And the Lord put a word in Balaam's mouth, and said, Return unto Balak, and thus thou shalt speak.] God communicated himself to Balaam, after a manner which Moses does not describe, and then commanded him to return to Balak. Balaam obeyed; and in the presence of that prince pronounced oracles contrary to his own intentions, and favourable to the Israelites: "Balak, the "king of Moab (said he) has brought me from Aram, "that is to say, from Mesopotamia, out of the moun- "tains of the east, saying, Come, curse me Jacob, and "come, defy Israel; how shall I curse, whom God hath "not cursed? or how shall I defy, whom the Lord hath "not defied? From the top of the rocks I see him, and "from the hills I behold him: Lo, the people shall dwell "alone, and shall be reckoned among the nations," ver. 7, &c. The prophet foretold this kind of private life, which the Jews were to lead in Palestine, and which has occasioned the Gentiles to say of them, that they were an unsociable people: "Who can count the dust of Ja- "cob, (continued Balaam) and the number of the fourth "part of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, "and let my last end (or it may be translated, my posterity) "be like his," ver. 10. It was thus the prophet ratified the promises which God made to Abraham, and extended them yet much further. God had promised to that patriarch, that he who could tell the stars should likewise be able to number his posterity. Balaam said as much of the fourth part of the children of Israel, alluding perhaps to the manner in which the army of the Israelites encamped, which was divided into four bands.

Ver. 11 And Balak said unto Balaam, What hast thou done? I took thee to curse mine enemies, and behold, thou hast blessed them altogether.] Balak complained, that Balaam blessed the Israelites, instead of denouncing curses against them. The prophet justified himself by the declaration he had made before-hand, namely, that he could say nothing but what should be inspired into him. Balak fancied, that in changing the aspect of the camp of the Israelites, he could change that spirit wherewith Balaam was animated, and therefore brought the prophet to another place, from whence he might discover the army of the enemy; whereas he had not seen before any more than the extreme, or one fourth part only. This place was upon the mount of Pisgah, and it was called by a name which may import, the place of centinels; probably, because from thence they had a better view of the enemy. There Balak and Balaam repeated the same ceremonies, which they had already performed in the high place of Baal; and there were ratified those benedictions, which had before been bestowed upon the Israelites; "Rise up, Balak (cried Balaam, in a prophetical tran- "port) and hear; hearken unto me, thou son of Zipper: "God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son "of man, that he should repent: Hath he said, and "shall he not do it? or, hath he spoken, and shall he "not make it good? Behold, I have received command- "ment to bless; and he hath blessed, and I cannot "reverse it. He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, nei- "ther hath he seen perverseness in Israel: The Lord his "God is with him, and the shout of a king is among "them. God brought them out of Egypt; he hath as "it were the strength of an unicorn. Surely there is no "enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divina- "tion against Israel: according to this time it shall be "said of Jacob, and of Israel, What hath God wrought!" ver. 18, 19, &c.

It is pretty hard to comprehend, how it could be said with truth, of a people immersed in all kinds of wickedness, that God had not beheld iniquity nor perverseness in them. Some interpreters understand it of idolatry, and pretend to justify their criticism, by several instances from scripture, and particularly by the advice which Balaam gave afterwards, concerning the Israelites. But could it even be said, that God had not seen any idolatry in Israel? Had not their fathers been guilty of it, both in Egypt and the wilderness? Were there not strange gods among them, even in the time of Joshua? And was not this one of those crimes, toward which they had the greatest propensity?

These difficulties have induced other interpreters to affix another idea to this expression, he hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel; and to take it in a sense which it bears in other places in scripture, that is to say, not for the exemption, but pardon of sin. Thus it is that the version of the Septuagint renders it; and this notion is well enough connected with that which follows, the Lord his God is with him.

him. The preſence of God is ſometimes repreſented in ſcripture as a mark or token of pardon.

As for that other expreſſion, there is no enchantment againſt Jacob, it ſeems to be well enough rendered. However, the terms of the original are capable of a different interpretation; and might be equally tranſlated, Iſrael does not uſe any kind of inchantment or divination. The firſt of theſe verſions puts us in mind of a noble ſaying of Epictetus, which we ſhall repeat juſt as it is quoted in the excellent treatiſe of father Morgues: "There were always (ſays this father) birds of an evil "omen. The ravens are never heard to croak in vain; "'tis upon this occaſion, adds our learned author, that "Epictetus ſaid the fineſt thing that could ever be ſpoken "by any philoſopher; This croaking does not concern "me. Suppoſe it forebodes, that I ſhall loſe ſomething, "one of the members of my body, if you pleaſe; that "don't concern me. 'Tis always in my own power to be "an honeſt man; for the ravens have no influence over "my virtue."

Balaam promiſed moreover, in metaphorical terms, numberleſs ſucceſſes and triumphs to the children of Iſrael. Balak was terrified at thoſe ſpeeches, and condeſcended at length ſo far, as to deſire he would not bleſs the people, if he could not reſolve to curſe them. But Balaam made the ſame excuſes as before. Then Balak propoſed removing to another place; to which the prophet conſented. They went to mount Peor, famous for the image of Baal, to whom it was conſecrated, and upon which account this idol was called Baal-peor. Thus the Heathens ſaid Jupiter of Olympus, Mercury of Cyllene, and the like, becauſe theſe falſe gods were particularly worſhipped on thoſe mountains. The ſame religious rites were performed on mount Peor, as had been done in other high places. In the following ages, the Heathens perſwaded themſelves, that thoſe things which could not be obtained by them at the firſt immolation, would be granted at a ſecond; or if then refuſed, at a third, and ſo on: But as it was Balaam who ordered this whole ſervice, we can't allow that he practiſed this rite of the idolaters.

CHAP. XXIV.

1 Balaam leaving divinations, propheſieth the happineſs of Iſrael. 10 Balak in anger diſmiſſeth him. 15 He propheſieth of the ſtar of Jacob, and the deſtruction of ſome nations.

AND when Balaam ſaw that it pleaſed the LORD to bleſs Iſrael, he went not as at other times, to ſeek for enchantments, but he ſet his face toward the wilderneſs.

2 And Balaam lift up his eyes, and he ſaw Iſrael abiding in his tents, according to their tribes, and the ſpirit of God came upon him.

3 And he took up his parable, and ſaid, Balaam the ſon of Beor hath ſaid, and the man whoſe eyes are open, hath ſaid:

4 He hath ſaid, which heard the words of God, which ſaw the viſion of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open:

5 How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Iſrael!

6 As the valleys are they ſpread forth, as gardens by the rivers ſide, as the trees of lign-aloes which the LORD hath planted, and as cedar-trees beſide the waters.

7 He ſhall pour the water out of his buckets, and his ſeed ſhall be in many waters, and his king ſhall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom ſhall be exalted.

8 God brought him forth out of Egypt, he hath as it were the ſtrength of an unicorn: he ſhall eat up the nations his enemies, and ſhall break their bones, and pierce them through with his arrows.

9 He couched, he lay down as a lion, and as a great lion: who ſhall ſtir him up? Bleſſed is he that bleſſeth thee, and curſed is he that curſeth thee.

10 ¶ And Balaks anger was kindled againſt Balaam, and he ſmote his hands together: and Balak ſaid unto Balaam, I called thee to curſe mine enemies, and behold, thou haſt altogether bleſſed them theſe three times.

11 Therefore now flee thou to thy place: I thought to promote thee unto great honour, but lo, the LORD hath kept thee back from honour.

12 And Balaam ſaid unto Balak, Spake I not alſo to thy meſſengers which thou ſenteſt unto me, ſaying, 13 If Balak would give me his houſefull of ſilver and gold, I cannot go beyond the commandment of the LORD, to do either good or bad of mine own mind; but what the LORD ſaith, that will I ſpeak?

14 And now behold, I go unto my people: come therefore, and I will advertiſe thee, what this people ſhall do to thy people in the latter days.

15 ¶ And he took up his parable, and ſaid, Balaam the ſon of Beor hath ſaid, and the man whoſe eyes are open hath ſaid:

16 He hath ſaid, which heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the moſt High, which ſaw the viſion of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open:

17 I ſhall ſee him, but not now: I ſhall behold him, but not nigh: there ſhall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre ſhall riſe out of Iſrael, and ſhall ſmite the corners of Moab, and deſtroy all the children of Sheth.

18 And Edom ſhall be a poſſeſſion, Seir alſo ſhall be a poſſeſſion for his enemies, and Iſrael ſhall do valiantly.

19 Out of Jacob ſhall come he that ſhall have dominion, and ſhall deſtroy him that remaineth of the city.

20 And when he looked on Amalek, he took up his parable, and ſaid, Amalek was the firſt of the nations, but his latter end ſhall be that he periſh for ever.

21 And he looked on the Kenites; and took up his parable, and ſaid, Strong is thy dwelling-place, and thou putteſt thy neſt in a rock.

22 Nevertheleſs, the Kenite ſhall be waſted until Aſſher ſhall carry thee away captive.

23 And he took up his parable, and ſaid, Alas, Who ſhall live when God doth this!

24 And ſhips ſhall come from the coaſt of Chittim, and ſhall afflict Aſhur, and ſhall afflict Eber, and he alſo ſhall periſh for ever.

25 And Balaam roſe up, and went and returned to his place: and Balak alſo went his way.

Ver. 1. And when Bâlaam ſaw that it pleaſed the Lord to bleſs Iſrael, &c.] It is to be preſumed, that if Balaam had not had ſome hopes that God would have changed the bleſſing wherewith he inſpired him in favour of the Iſraelites, he would never have made this new trial: And yet it is ſaid, that "when he ſaw that it pleaſed the Lord "to bleſs Iſrael, he went not as at other times to ſeek for "enchantments, but ſet his face towards the wilderneſs. "And that he lift up his eyes, and ſaw Iſrael abiding in "his tents according to their tribes, and the ſpirit of "God came upon him," ver. 1, &c. upon which, this prophet pronounced new oracles in favour of the people. There is ſome difficulty in this account of Moſes, and it is not eaſy even to underſtand the meaning of theſe words, "he went not as at other times to ſeek for enchantments." It may be asked, Did he go to ſeek for enchantments before, when he went to meet God? Interpreters think they have found ſome paſſages in Scripture (Gen. xxx. 17. and xliv. 5.) where the verb from which the word enchantments is derived, is taken in a good ſenſe, and denotes nothing more than the knowledge of futurity. From whence they conclude, that the word enchantment ſignifies no more here, than the revelations which Balaam deſired of God, concerning the deſtiny of the Iſraelites. But they have not produced one ſingle inſtance, where the word in the original, which we render here by enchantments, has not an odious ſignification. Nevertheleſs, as we have hinted before, the ſacred hiſtorian ſays nothing throughout his whole narrative, capable of convincing us that Balaam uſed enchantments on the firſt of the two high places; and we are inclineable to think that this man, abandoned to avarice, not being able to find any thing for his purpoſe in the Divine inſpirations, would have at length betaken himſelf to magical arts; but that the ſpirit of God reſtrained him. The words we have quoted are obſcure and ambiguous; for which reaſon one can't eaſily tranſlate them, without a paraphraſe: And this is the ſenſe we would give them; "Now Balaam having ſeen "that the Lord was reſolved to bleſs Iſrael, did not go "this time to meet God." It is ſaid before, "that he "went to meet God;" but now he went to ſeek enchantments: He then "lift up his eyes, and ſaw Iſrael abiding "in his tents, according to their tribes." He went now, probably, to pronounce infernal curſes againſt that people; but the ſpirit of God exerciſing that power which it has over the minds of the prophets, cauſed him to fall into a trance, during which time he pronounced the bleſſings afore mentioned, in ſpite of himſelf.

We are ſenſible of the ſeeming ſingularity of this ſuppoſition, and it is difficult to comprehend, how a perſon animated by the ſpirit of God, ſhould, at the ſame time, have recourſe to evil ſpirits. But if the criminal deſire which he had to curſe the people of God, were compatible with a prophetical ſpirit, can it be proved that his recourſe to magical arts were not ſo too? This would not have been the ſole inſtance which the Scripture affords of a man, who, after his being enlightened with a ſpirit of propheſy, had made uſe of enchantments. Saul had been among the prophets, and yet he had recourſe to the devil for that knowledge which God refuſed him; and not being able to move heaven, he laboured to prevail upon hell. We confeſs, what we here meet with about Balaam, does not prove ſufficiently that he did extend his crime to ſuch a degree as we judge him capable of; but another paſſage in Joſhua, where this man is called a ſoothſayer, being joined to this, ſeems to add ſome weight to our conjecture: And there is no inſtance where the word ſoothſayer has any other meaning, than that of a perſon addicted to, and exerciſing, magical arts.

Balaam, raviſhed by the tranſports of the ſpirit of God, pronounced the moſt magnificent oracles in favour of thoſe people whom Balak ſo much longed to ſee laden with maledictions. "Balaam, the ſon of Beor, hath ſaid, and the "man whoſe eyes are open, hath ſaid, he hath ſaid which "heard the words of God, which ſaw the viſion of the Al"mighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open:" Thus does Balaam deſcribe himſelf. Theſe words, "having his eyes open," are equivocal in this text, and may refer to the word ſeer, which was formerly appropriated to the prophets; and yet the words in the original rather import, He who had his eyes ſhut: In which ſenſe, Balaam might allude to the condition he had been in on the way, when he did not ſee the angel of the Lord. Some Jews have thought this prophet was blind, which cannot be maintained, ſince it is ſaid of him expreſly, that "he "beheld Iſrael." Perhaps in the extaſy he was in, when he pronounced his oracle, and which is rendered by theſe words, "he that fell into a trance;" he, at the ſame time, loſt his ſight. One might therefore paraphraſe thoſe expreſſions thus; "He who during his extaſy loſt indeed his "bodily ſight, but who ſaw nevertheleſs with the eyes of "his mind, the viſion of the Almighty." He added afterwards, "How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy "tabernacles, O Iſrael!" He continued to trace, in pompous terms, the exaltation of that nation.

Balak ſet no longer any bounds to his wrath. It is ſaid, that "he ſmote his hands together," in token of his indignation, and drove away the prophet without any reward, "becauſe (as he told him) the Lord had kept him back "from honour." But before Balaam returned into Meſopotamia, he foretold the fate of Moab, and the countries round about it. Then it was he pronounced that famous oracle which has ſo divided the commentators, in all ages, to find out the meaning of it: "I ſhall ſee him, but not "now: I ſhall behold him, but not nigh. There ſhall "come a ſtar out of Jacob, and a ſcepter ſhall riſe out of "Iſrael, and ſhall ſmite the corners of Moab, and de"ſtroy all the children of Sheth," ver. 17. All opinions unite in one circumſtance, namely, that Balaam ſpoke of a conqueror; perhaps, alſo, in calling him a ſtar, he accommodated himſelf to that ancient notion, that the appearance of comets denoted either the exaltation or deſtruction of kingdoms. Some interpreters have thought, that this was the belief alſo of the wiſe men mentioned in the Goſpel, who asked, "Where is the king of the Jews? "For we have ſeen his ſtar in the eaſt." But tho' it may be unanimouſly owned, that Balaam foretold a king, they are again divided about who the king is, whom he here meant. Some think it was David who ſubdued the Moabites, and who might thus be ſaid to verify that part of the prediction, "He ſhall ſmite the corners;" or, as ſome ancient verſions of the Septuagint render it, "the princes "of Moab." But a great many commentators, both Jewiſh and Chriſtian, explain it of the Meſſiah. A Jewiſh impoſtor deceived ſeveral of his own nation, in the reign of the emperor Adrian; he aſſumed the name of Barchocheba, that is to ſay, ſon of a ſtar, and gave out that he was the Meſſiah meant by Balaam. The Jews, after having diſcovered the cheat, called him Bar-coziba, or, the ſon of a lie. There is alſo ſome obſcurity in that other expreſſion, of "deſtroying all the children of Sheth." If it be taken in the ſenſe to which it may be reſtrained, it ſignifies the church; if we affix to it the idea it naturally offers to the mind, it implies all mankind. But in which ſoever ſoever of theſe two meanings it be taken, we muſt offer it great violence to find the accompliſhment of it in David, or even in the Meſſiah. The conjecture of ſome learned men, and which hath been adopted by Monſieur Le Clerc in his commentary on this paſſage, deſerves to be related. They ſuppoſe, that there was a people who bore the name of Sheth, and that they were neighbours to thoſe of Moab. Grotius thinks it was a king of that age. Accordingly, Balaam, after having foretold the deſtruction of Moab, and of thoſe whom he cal's the children of Sheth; and, perhaps, under this emblem, of the enemies of the church, goes on to foretel that of the Idumeans, Amalekites, and the Kenites, not the deſcendants of Jethro, the father-in-law of Moſes, but of thoſe mentioned in the xvth chapter of Geneſis. All theſe nations were neighbours to that of the Moabites. At the foreſight of theſe evils that were to fall on ſo many people, "Alas! ſaid he, "who ſhall live when God doth this!" ver. 23. He extended his view even to the conqueſts of Alexander the great, over the Aſſyrians, if we may believe ſome interpreters; and likewiſe propheſied the total deſtruction of the Jews under the name of Heber, one of their patriarchs; but this comment of theirs has its difficulties.

The ſacred hiſtorian finiſhes the whole relation concerning Balaam, by this expreſſion; "And Balaam roſe up, "and went and returned to his place," ver. 25. This paſſage wants no explanation, and it is not neceſſary to refute the notion of thoſe Jews who underſtand it of his damnation; for he did not die till long after the period now in queſtion; and it was Phineas that ſlew him, chap. xxxi. 8 Some Rabbins advance, but without any proof, that he died at the age of 130 years.

Balaam was no ordinary perſon; the reputation he had acquired, and which was ſpread through the countries of Moab and Midian, cauſed him to be conſidered by the inhabitants as a marvelleſs perſon. It was not founded chiefly upon his predictions, like that of his cotemporary magicians, but upon ſupernatural revelations, wherewith God was pleaſed to honour him.

But if Balaam was a prophet, and a true one, he was alſo a bad man, and ſhewed himſelf infected with the moſt dangerous of all vices, that which an apoſtle calls the root of all evil, 1 Tim. vi. 10. and as another ſays of him, he loved the wages of iniquity, 2 Pet. ii. 15. 'Tis to this criminal inclination that all the movements he gave himſelf to obtain a reward from Balak, ought to be aſcribed. In vain did God command him to bleſs Iſrael; if his tongue obeyed, his heart rebelled. He asks, he conſults, he returns to the charge, in order to make God retract, if poſſible, what he himſelf had ſaid of God: "God is not a man that he ſhould lie, neither the ſon of "man, that he ſhould repent: Hath he ſaid it, and ſhall "he not do it! Or hath he ſpoken, and ſhall he not make "it good?" And finding that he could not change the faithfulneſs of God towards his people, he endeavoured to change the faithfulneſs of the people towards God. It may likewiſe even be preſumed, that Balaam would at length have pronounced thoſe curſes that were expected from him, if the ſpirit of God had not cauſed him to fall into a trance, and had not made uſe of him againſt his own will, to declare thoſe oracles which we have heard; or, at leaſt, if his imagination, ſtruck with the viſion he had in the way, had not continually repreſented to him the angel with a drawn ſword, ready to tranſpierce him the moment he attempted to make any alteration in what God had commanded him to ſay. Perhaps, alſo, being vexed at God's perſiſting to inſpire him with oracles favourable to the Iſraelites, he would have had recourſe to magic arts, if the ſpirit which ſeized him, had not prevented him. We can't otherwiſe underſtand what is ſaid of Balaam, that he "ſought enchantments," nor reconcile the title of prophet, which St. Peter gave him, in any other manner with that of ſoothſayer, as he is called in the book of Joſhua.

Such was the character of Balaam: Happy is he whoſe mind is enlightened by God, but more happy is the perſon whoſe heart he purifies, and whom he inſpires with ſentiments of piety, without which the moſt ſublime knowledge will only aggravate the miſeries of thoſe who have been ſo enlightned! "Incline my heart (O Lord) "unto thy teſtimonies, and not to covetouſneſs," Pſalm cxix. 36.

CHAP. XXV.

1 Iſrael at Shittim commit whoredom and idolatry. 6 Phinehas killeth Zimri and Cozbi. 10 God therefore giveth him an everlaſting prieſthood, 16 The Midianites are to be vexed.

AND Iſrael abode in Shittim, and the people begun to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab.

2 And they called the people unto the ſacrifices of their gods: and the people did eat, and bowed down to their gods.

3 And Iſrael joined himſelf unto Baal-peor: and the anger of the LORD was kindled againſt Iſrael.

4 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Take all the heads of the people, and hang them up before the LORD againſt the ſun, that the fierce anger of the LORD may be turned away from Iſrael.

5 And Moſes ſaid unto the judges of Iſrael, Slay ye every one his men, that were joined unto Baal-peor.

6 ¶ And behold, one of the children of Iſrael came and brought unto his brethren a Midianitiſh woman, in the ſight of Moſes, and in the ſight of all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, who were weeping before the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

7 And when Phinehas, the ſon of Eleazar, the ſon of Aaron the prieſt, ſaw it, he roſe up from amongſt the congregation, and took a javelin in his hand;

8 And he went after the man of Iſrael into the tent, and thruſt both of them through, the man of Iſrael, and the woman through her belly: So the plague was ſtayed from the children of Iſrael.

9 And thoſe that died in the plague, were twenty and four thouſand.

10 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

11 Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt, hath turned my wrath away from the children of Iſrael (while he was zealous for my ſake among them) that I conſumed not the children of Iſrael in my jealouſy.

12 Wherefore ſay, Behold, I give unto him my covenant of peace.

13 And he ſhall have it, and his ſeed after him, even the covenant of an everlaſting prieſthood; becauſe he was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the children of Iſrael.

14 Now

14 Now the name of the Iſraelite that was ſlain, even that was ſlain with the Midianitiſh woman, was Zimri the ſon of Salu, a prince of a chief houſe among the Simeonites.

15 And the name of the Midianitiſh woman that was ſlain was Cozbi the daughter of Zur; he was head over a people, and of a chief houſe in Midian.

16 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

17 Vex the Midianites, and ſmite them:

18 For they vex you with their wiles, wherewith they have beguiled you, in the matter of Peor, and in the matter of Cozbi, the daughter of a prince of Midian their ſiſter, which was ſlain in the day of the plague for Peors ſake.

Ver. 1. And Iſrael abode in Shittim, and the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab.] "Surely there is no inchantment againſt Jacob, neither is "there any divination againſt Iſrael," chap. xxiii. ver. 23. But what all the inchanters, and all the diviners joyned together, were unable to accompliſh, was effected by the rebellions of the Iſraelites. They were at the camp of Shittim, which was the laſt of all thoſe they ſtopped at, before their entrance into the land of Canaan. There it was that the kings of Moab and Midian put in practice the advice which Balaam gave them. His counſel to them was, that they ſhould endeavour to provoke that God againſt the Iſraelites, whoſe aſſiſtance had rendered them ſo formidable. In order to which he put them upon a deſign of ſacrificing the honour of their daughters to the ſucceſs of this enterprize, and ſo to cauſe that people to fall from impurity to idolatry, and from idolatry into the diſpleaſure of him who had fought ſo powerfully for their ſakes.

This project ſucceeded. The daughters of Moab, and thoſe of Midian, enter'd into a correſpondence with the Iſraelites, and ſoon convinced them, that there were more dangerous charms than thoſe of magic. They poſſeſſed themſelves of their hearts and ſouls, and invited them to the ſacrifices of their gods, making this the price of their infamous compliance. The Iſraelites fell into the ſnare, and offered their homage, without ſcruple, to the gods of thoſe women, whom they themſelves idolized. The ſacred hiſtorian ſays of them; "The people did eat, and "bow down to their gods. And Iſrael joyned himſelf to "Baal-peor," ver. 2, 3.

Baal, as has been formerly obſerved, is a general word, which ſignifies, Lord, and which cuſtom has appropriated to the falſe gods. 'Tis a Phœnician word, and the ſame with Bel in the Chaldaic language. Peor was the name of one of the mountains in Moab, as has likewiſe been intimated already.

Not only the laws of brevity, which we have here preſcribed to our ſelves, but likewiſe thoſe of decency, forbid us to quote thoſe authors, who have collected the various accounts of this idol, ſince it is impoſſible to read, without bluſhing, the details into which they have thought fit to enter; whether it be to refute the poſition, that the Baal-peor of the Moabites was the Priapus of the heathens, or whether it be to maintain it. Thoſe who are for the firſt of theſe ſyſtems are of opinion, that the worſhip that was paid to him was compoſed of the moſt infamous ceremonies. The Talmudiſts have carefully deſcribed the ſame, and St. Jerom pretends, that the name of Priapus is derived from that of Peor; he likewiſe adds, that Moſes would not enlarge any more on this ſubject, for reaſons of modeſty. And ſome of the commentators would have acted wiſely, if they had governed themſelves by that pattern. Monſ. Jurieu has given a ſtrange flight to his imagination, when he aſſerted, that the hiſtory of Noah has ſerved for a foundation to that of Priapus and his worſhip, Hiſt. des cultes, part 4. p. 550. Voſſius thinks, that all the ceremonies which were obſerved in honour of this pretended deity were ſymbolical, and deſtined to ſignify the influence of the ſun upon the productions of the earth. Selden maintains, that Baal-peor was the God of hell. By this poſition he explains the words of the Pſalmiſt, where it is ſaid, that the Iſraelites ate the ſacrifices of the dead, Pſalm cvi. 28. Father Calmet has extracted theſe different opinions in his Diſſertations upon Baal-peor and Chemoſh: to which he ſubjoins his own conjectures, and concludes, that the worſhip of Baal-peor is the ſame with that of Adonis, who was called Peor by the Moabites. He thinks it was the ſame god to whom the Egyptians gave the name of Oſiris; the Phœnicians that of Adonis; the Phrygians that of Athynes; the Syrians that of Atys, and the Hebrews that of Thammus.

Upon this occaſion we might ask a queſtion of more importance, namely, whether it was a crime to eat the fleſh of victims offered to idols? This matter is throughly diſcuſſed in the firſt epiſtle of St. Paul to the Corinthians, chap. viii. & x. and a digreſſion upon what that apoſtle ſays about it, will explain the queſtion propoſed, and ſerve to illuſtrate ſome paſſages of Scripture. The Apoſtle diſtinguiſhes three caſes there, in which men might be invited to eat of that ſort of food: 1. In the temples of the falſe gods. 2. In the houſes of the heathens. And thirdly, In a man's own habitation.

I. In the the temples of the falſe gods. The Gentiles, after having offered their ſacrifices, did eat in the very temple of the idols, the fleſh of the victims that had been offered to them. After having ſacrificed their hecatombs, ſays Joſephus againſt Appion, they make uſe of their temples for feaſting and revelling-places.

II. Men might be invited to eat fleſh offered to idols, in the houſes of the heathens themſelves, 1 Cor. x. 27. For after that the victims were ſacrificed, the heathen carried ſome of the remaining fleſh home with them, and made a feaſt therewith, inviting to it whom they thought fit.

III. They ate it in their own houſes: Becauſe they bought it in the ſhambles, where this kind of food was ſometimes expoſed to ſale. We read in the eccleſiaſtical hiſtory, that Julian the apoſtate had ordered that no fleſh ſhould be ſold publickly for a time, but ſuch as had been offered to the falſe gods, that the chriſtians being obliged to purchaſe it, might thence be ſaid to have, in ſome manner, partaken of the worſhip of idols.

Theſe are the three caſes to which the primitive Chriſtians were expoſed, and concerning which, in all probability, they conſulted St. Paul, for they were divided among themſelves upon this ſubject. Thoſe Chriſtians who were converted from Judaiſm, were too ſcrupulous, and we know in general, how great an averſion all thoſe Jews, who lived after the captivity, had to any thing relating to idols. It was one of their canons, that if a Gentile made a ſacrifice for his ſon or daughter, it was not lawful for a Jew to eat of the fleſh of the thing ſacrificed, [Maimon. de Idol. cap. 9: Sect. 12. pag. 52.] We find in Juſtin Martyr, that Trypho reproached the Chriſtians for eating this kind of food. And there were indeed ſome of that communion who were not ſtrict enough upon this head: but then they were ſome of thoſe who had been Gentiles, and maintained the lawfulneſs of eating at all times, and in all places, of the victims offer'd to idols. St. Irenæus give us this account of the Nicolaitans and Valentinians.

St. Paul decides the affair, by declaring, that in the ſecond caſe, Chriſtians were not forbidden to eat of thoſe meats, unleſs the weak were ſcandalized thereby: "If "any of them that believe not, bid you to a feaſt, and "ye be diſpoſed to go; whatſoever is ſet before you, eat, "asking no queſtions for conſcience ſake," 1 Cor. x. 27. Thus much for the ſecond caſe; and the third is decided by this text of the ſame Apoſtle, Whatſoever is ſold in the ſhambles, that eat, ver. 25.

But the anſwer he returns to the firſt, namely, Whether it was lawful to eat the fleſh of victims in the very temple where it was offered? is more ambiguous. For in chap. xxi. 4. &c. of this Epiſtle, he ſeems to affirm, that the matter is indifferent in it ſelf, and that it can't be evil but when it gives offence: "We know (ſays he) that an idol "is nothing in the world, and that there is none other "God

" God but one. For though there be that are called " gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods " many, and lords many) but to us there is but one God, " the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and " one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom are all things, and we " by him. Howbeit there is not in every man that know- " ledge: for ſome with conſcience of the idol unto this " hour, eat it as a thing offered to an idol; and their " conſcience being weak, is defiled. But meat commend- " eth us not to God; for neither if we eat, are we the " better; neither if we eat not, are we the worſe. But " take heed leſt by any means this liberty of yours become " a ſtumbling-block to them that are weak. For if any " man ſee thee which hath knowledge ſet at meat in the " idols temple, ſhall not the conſcience of him that is " weak be emboldened to eat thoſe things which are of- " fered to idols; and through thy knowledge ſhall thy " weak brother periſh, for whom Chriſt died?

In theſe words, St. Paul ſeems to lay down for a principle, that an idol is nothing. Whether it be, that he alludes to the term which the Jews made uſe of to deſcribe idols, which they called nothings, or whether the Greek word it ſelf imported ſo much, for it was appropriated to thoſe imaginary ſhades, which, as the Heathens aid, were wont to hover about ſepulchres. From the notion of the idols being nothing, the Apoſtle ſeems to conclude, that it is no crime to eat in their temples, no, not even the fleſh of thoſe victims that have been ſacrificed to them, unleſs ſuch a conduct does offend the weak. But in the 10th chapter, ver 20, &c. of the ſame Epiſtle, it ſeems, on the contrary, that it was an act of idolatry. For he there affirms, that the things which the Gentiles ſacrifice, they ſacrifice to devils: And as the Jews, in eating the fleſh of the victims which they offered to the true God, did communicate with him; and as the Chriſtians, who ate the bread of the Euchariſt, did communicate with that Jeſus, the ſacrifice of whoſe body was repreſented by that bread; ſo thoſe, who in the temple of the falſe gods ate of the victims offered them, did conſequently communicate with thoſe falſe gods, that is to ſay, with devils. " Flee from " idolatry (ſays the above mentioned Apoſtle) I ſpeak as " to wiſe men; judge ye what I ſay. The cup of bleſ- " ſing which we bleſs, is it not the communion of the " blood of Chriſt? The bread which we break, is it not " the communion of the body of Chriſt? for we being " many are one bread, and one body; for we are all " partakers of that one bread. Behold Iſrael after the " fleſh; are not they which eat of the ſacrifices partakers " of the altar? what ſay I then? that the idol is any " thing, or that which is offered in ſacrifice to idols, is " any thing? But I ſay, that the things which the Gen- " tiles ſacrifice, they ſacrifice to devils, and not to God; " and I would not that ye ſhould have fellowſhip with " devils," ver. 14, &c.

One of the chief cauſes of the obſcurity of St. Paul's epiſtles is, that they are filled with certain abrupt dialogues, in which the interlocutors are not ſufficiently diſtinguiſhed. What looſe Chriſtians objected to St. Paul, has been taken here for the very anſwer of that apoſtle; and people don't obſerve, that what he himſelf ſeems to ſay, was only the pretext with which the Corinthians had an inclination to cloak their idolatry. This pretext was, that an idol was nothing; that eating, or not eating, did not render perſons more or leſs acceptable to God. St. Paul grants them their poſition in the above-cited chapter, for a moment, and tells them, that if what they advanced was founded on reaſon, that altho' an idol were nothing in the world, that altho' eating, or not eating, did not make men more or leſs acceptable to God, yet the ſcandal it gave to weak ſouls, ought to be ſufficient to hinder men from going into the temples of the falſe gods. Theſe words may then be paraphraſed in this manner: You Nicolaitans, or you Gnoſticks, pride your ſelves in your Gnoſis, or knowledge. To which I anſwer, that knowledge puffeth up, and that it is only charity which edifies. You Gnoſticks, or you Nicolaitans, ſay, that we know an idol is nothing in the world, and that eating, or not eating, does not render us more or leſs agreeable to God. Allowing that your poſition be right, yet the conſequence you draw from it is wrong; and you ought to take care that the power you pretend to have, prove not an offence to the weak: For if a man ſee thee which haſt knowledge, that is to ſay, who pretendeſt to have it, ſit at meat in the idols temple, ſhall not the conſcience of him that is weak, be emboldened to eat thoſe things which are offered to idols? All this is therefore no more than a ſimple confeſſion; whereas in the tenth chapter of the ſame Epiſtle, the Apoſtle attacks the very poſition or principle, which he had before only granted for argument ſake; and there he ſhews, that a man cannot aſſiſt at thoſe feaſts, in the temples of the idols, without ſharing in the idolatry thereof.

We ſhall now finiſh this digreſſion, and conclude, that the Iſraelites were guilty of a heinous crime in reſorting to the temples of falſe gods, to eat the fleſh of the victims that were offered to thoſe idols, and thereby paying a direct worſhip to Baal-peor.

Such an irregular behaviour kindled the wrath of God againſt them; and he commanded Moſes either to cauſe the guilty perſons to be extirpated by the heads of the people, and to hang them up publickly; or elſe, as our verſion expreſſes it, to take all the heads of the people, and to hang them up before the Lord, againſt the ſun; for the original may be underſtood both ways, but the firſt tranſlation is the moſt natural. This command was complied with; and we ſuppoſe, for a reaſon we ſhall ſuggeſt by and by, that a thouſand of the Iſraelites underwent this puniſhment.

But one of the chiefs of the tribe of Simeon, whoſe name was Zimri, fancying perhaps, that the eminence of his character would ſecure him from puniſhment, even though he ſhould carry his crime to the higheſt degree, had the boldneſs to bring into the camp a Midianitiſh woman, and to conduct her into his tent in the ſight of Moſes himſelf, and in the preſence of all the people, who had been ſtruck with the utmoſt conſternation at the execution of thoſe thouſand criminals. This complication of guilt occaſioned a redoublement of the puniſhment; and God ſent a plague upon the tribe of Simeon, which conſumed twenty and three thouſand perſons. 'Tis St. Paul who determines it to this number, though Moſes makes them to amount to twenty and four thouſand; and it was to reconcile the evidence of this legiſlator to that of the Apoſtle, which induced us to ſuppoſe, that there had been one thouſand of the Iſraelites already ſacrificed to the order which God had given to Moſes. The greatneſs of this plague appears by the extream difference which was found between the enumeration of the tribe of Simeon, as related in the 26th chapter of this book, and that in the ſecond. In the latter this tribe conſiſted of fifty-nine thouſand three hundred men; in the former they were no more than twenty two thouſand and two hundred.

This plague was on the point of making a yet greater deſolation: But the zeal of Phineas, the ſon of Eleazar, and grandſon of Aaron, put a ſtop to it. This holy man, armed with a javelin, enter'd into the tent of the above-named Simeonite, and puniſhed the crime, by tranſfixing both the guilty perſons, in the very commiſſion of their guilt.

This blow of vengeance, ſtruck at ſuch a preſſing juncture, and by a man whom we ſuppoſe to have been led to it after a miraculous manner by the ſpirit of God, cannot be made a precedent to any other perſons; and nothing can be more abſurdly advanced, than the judgment which the Jews build upon this circumſtance, and which they call a judgment of zeal. The examples they quote do even eſtabliſh what we maintain, namely, that theſe extraordinary ſtrokes of vengeance are only allowed to extraordinary men. Matathias, 1 Mac. xi. 14. may have been ranked among the number of ſuch, and his action may have been commended: He obſerved a Jew ſacrificing to the falſe gods in the city of Modin; and was penetrated with grief, as well as inflamed with anger, at ſuch a ſight: Upon which he made the offerer ſuſtain the penalty which the law inflicted upon idolaters, namely, that of death, ſlaying him even upon the altar, together with him who had ſolicited him to the commiſſion of that crime.

The Jews abuſed this judgment of zeal, as they call it, upon ſeveral occaſions; and put it in practice very often, not only againſt innocent perſons, but even againſt ſuch as were endowed with the moſt eminent virtues. St. Stephen, whom they inhumanely ſtoned, and St. Paul, whom they vowed to aſſaſſinate without any form of juſtice, are glaring inſtances of their zeal without knowledge.

The zeal of Phineas was juſtly rewarded; and God confirmed to him the right he had of ſucceeding Eleazar, as his ſon, in the office of the prieſthood; and promiſed him, that this auguſt privilege ſhould be perpetuated in his family.

Ver. 12. Behold, I give unto him my covenant of peace. And he ſhall have it, and his ſeed after him, even the covenant of an everlaſting prieſthood.] It looks here as if the prieſthood were a thing different from the covenant of peace; and ſome of the Jewiſh interpreters conclude from this text, that God promiſed to Phineas a privilege of procuring pardon thenceforwards for guilty perſons. But there is nothing more indefinite in the ſacred language than the word peace: 'Tis made uſe of to denote all kinds of proſperity, and in particular that of long life. Phineas did actually enjoy it in this laſt ſenſe, as appears, Judges xx. 28. St. Jerom, and ſome other writers after him, maintain, tho' without any ground, that he is meant in the ixth chapter of the ſecond book of Chronicles, ver. 20. And even ſome of the Rabbins have advanced the notion of his living to the end of the world. The promiſe of an everlaſting prieſthood was likewiſe accompliſhed. The Jews reckon twelve high-prieſts of the race of Phineas, from his time down to Solomon; they reckon nine more from this period to the captivity; and fifteen from their re-eſtabliſhment in Judæa to the time of Antiochus Eupator, the laſt of whom was Onias, ſlain by Lyſias.

'Tis true, the high-prieſthood was for a while in the family of Ithamar, the ſecond ſon of Aaron; but it ſoon returned to that of Phineas. The ſcripture does not tell us the reaſon, why it went out of it during that ſpace of time; and it has been raſhly affirmed, that it was becauſe Phineas attempted to abſolve the daughter of Jeptha from a ſubmiſſion to her father's vow. Eli was the firſt of the family of Ithamar that enjoyed the office of the high-prieſthood. Ahitub ſucceeded him, and was ſucceeded by his own ſon Ahiaz. After him came Abimelek his brother; and he was followed by Abiathar his ſon. After him this office returned to the houſe of Phineas, in the perſon of Zadok, where it continued even to the Maccabees. This is ſufficient to make good the promiſe of an everlaſting prieſthood. The words everlaſting, perpetual, and the like terms, uſually denote a long duration, but in an indefinite and very general ſenſe.

Ver. 16. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] Some time after this, tho' not long (as appears from chap. xxxi. ver. 1, 2.) but a little before the death of Moſes.

Ver. 17. Vex the Midianites.] Among whom the pernicious commerce of the Iſraelites with the Midianitiſh women was hatched: For Balak being ſo incenſed againſt Balaam, that he bid him be gone in all haſte out of his country, (chap. xxiv. ver. 11.) Balaam would not ſtay to propound unto him the miſchievous advice which he had projected, but went to the Midianites, and there diſcover'd it; which he knew was the ſame thing, as if he had acquainted Balak with it, there being a great friendſhip between the two nations, ch. xxxii. ver. 4. It is likely alſo, that the Midianites were the firſt who adviſed, that Balaam ſhould be ſent for; which render'd their guilt the greater: But the Moabites did not eſcape, tho' (for Lot's ſake perhaps, Deut. ii. ver. 9.) their puniſhment was defer'd till future times, as Balaam propheſied, ch. xxiv. ver. 17. and they were alſo excluded, by a law made immediately after this, from the ſociety of the Iſraelites, for this very fact, ch. xxiii. 3, 4.

——— And ſmite them.] With the ſword; as we find they did, ch. xxxi.

Ver. 18. For they vex you with their wiles.] Have greatly diſtreſſed you with their ſubtle devices.

——— Wherewith they have beguiled you, in the matter of Peor.] Drawn you in to commit ſoul idolatry. Here Peor, which was a mountain in Moab, where Baal had a temple, is uſed for the idol itſelf, which was there worſhipped, being a contraction of Baal-peor; and ſo it is in ch. xxxi. ver. 18. and Joſh. xxii. ver. 17.

——— The daughter of a prince of Midian.] By whoſe conſent, no doubt, ſhe engaged in her wicked deſign; that by her noble garb and retinue, ſhe might the more powerfully entice the great men of Iſrael to idolatry.

——— Their ſiſter.] Whom the whole family were content to proſtitute, that they might compaſs the deſtruction of the Iſraelites: But by ſiſter might be meant one of the ſame country or nation, the ſame kind of language being uſed among them that was among the Jews, who called one another brethren and ſiſters, being deſcended from the ſame ſtock; as Chriſtians did all thoſe who profeſſed their religion.

——— Which was ſlain in the day of the plague.] When ſo many thouſands fell by the peſtilence.

——— For Peor's ſake.] For worſhipping Baal-peor; into which they were inveigled by the women, who invited them to a feaſt, and there by their charms excited inordinate deſires in them; which they would not ſuffer them to gratify, unleſs they would both eat of their ſacrifices, and worſhip their idol: And perhaps they told them, it was not lawful for them to comply with their inclinations, unleſs they would conform to their religion.

CHAP. XXVI.

1 The ſum of all Iſrael is taken in the plains of Moab. 52 The law of dividing among them the inheritance of the land. 57 The families and number of the Levites. 63 None were left of them which were numbred at Sinai, but Caleb and Joſhua.

AND it came to paſs after the plague, that the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Eleazar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt, ſaying,

2 Take the ſum of all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, from twenty years old and upward, throughout their fathers houſe, all that are able to go to war in Iſrael.

3 And Moſes and Eleazar the prieſt ſpake with them in the plains of Moab by Jordan near Jericho, ſaying,

4 Take the ſum of the people from twenty years old and upward; as the LORD commanded Moſes and the children of Iſrael, which went forth out of the land of Egypt.

5 ¶ Reuben the eldeſt ſon of Iſrael: the children of Reuben; Hanoch, of whom cometh the family of the Hanochites: of Pallu, the family of the Palluites:

6 Of Heſron, the family of the Heſronites: of Carmi, the family of the Carmites.

7 Theſe are the families of the Reubenites: and they that were numbred of them, were forty and three thouſand and ſeven hundred and thirty.

8 And the ſons of Pallu; Eliab.

9 And the ſons of Eliab; Nemuel, and Dathan, and Abiram. This is that Dathan and Abiram which were famous in the congregation, who ſtrove againſt Moſes and againſt Aaron in the company of Korah, when they ſtrove againſt the LORD:

10 And the earth opened her mouth, and ſwallowed them up together with Korah, rah, when that company died, what time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men: and they became a ſign.

11 Notwithſtanding the children of Korah died not.

12 ¶ The ſons of Simeon after their families: of Nemuel, the family of the Nemuelites: of Jamin, the family of the Jaminites: of Jachin, the family of the Jachinites:

20 And the ſons of Judah after their families were; of Shelah, the family of the Shelanites: of Pharez, the family of the Pharzites: of Zerah, the family of the Zarhites:

21 And the ſons of Pharez were; of Heſron, the family of the Heſronites; of Hamul, the family of the Hamulites.

22 Theſe are the families of Judah according to thoſe that were numbred of them, threeſcore and ſixteen thouſand and five hundred.

23 ¶ Of the ſons of Iſſachar after their families: of Tola, the family of the Tolaites: of Pua, the family of the Punites:

24 Of Jaſhub, the family of the Jaſhubites: of Shimron, the family of the Shimronites.

25 Theſe are the families of Iſſachar according to thoſe that were numbred of them, threeſcore and four thouſand and three hundred.

26 ¶ Of the ſons of Zebulun after their families: of Sered, the family of the Sardites: of Elon, the family of the Elonites: of Jahleel, the family of the Jahleelites.

27 Theſe are the families of the Zebulunites according to thoſe that were numbred of them, threeſcore thouſand and five hundred.

28 ¶ The ſons of Joſeph after their families, were Manaſſeh and Ephraim.

30 Theſe are the ſons of Gilead: of Jeezer, the family of the Jezerites: of Helek, the family of the Helekites:

32 And of Shemida, the family of the Shemidaites: and of Hepher, the family of the Hepherites.

33 ¶ And Zelophehad the ſon of Hepher had no ſons, but daughters: and the names of the daughters of Zelophehad, were Mahlah, and Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah.

34 Theſe are the families of Manaſſeh, and thoſe that were numbred of them, fifty and two thouſand and ſeven hundred.

35 ¶ Theſe are the ſons of Ephraim after their families: of Shuthelah, the family of the Shuthalites: of Becher, the family of the Bachrites: of Tahan, the family of the Tahanites.

36 And theſe are the ſons of Shuthelah: of Eran, the family of the Eranites.

37 Theſe are the families of the ſons of Ephraim according to thoſe that were numbred of them, thirty and two thouſand and five hundred. Theſe are the ſons of Joſeph after their families.

38 ¶ The ſons of Benjamin after their families: of Bela, the family of the Belaites: of Aſhbel, the family of the Aſhbelites: of Ahiram, the family of the Ahiramites:

39 Of Shupham, the family of the Shuphamites: of Hupham, the family of the Huphamites.

40 And the ſons of Bela were Ard and Naaman: of Ard, the family of the Ardites: and of Naaman, the family of the Naamites.

41 Theſe are the ſons of Benjamin after their families: and they that were numbred of them, were forty and five thouſand and ſix hundred.

42 ¶ Theſe are the ſons of Dan after their families: of Shuham, the family of the the Shuhamites. Theſe are the families of Dan after their families.

43 All the families of the Shuhamites according to thoſe that were numbred of them, were threeſcore and four thouſand and four hundred.

44 ¶ Of the children of Aſher after their families: of Jimna, the family of the Jimnites: of Jeſui, the family of the Jeſuites: of Beriah, the family of the Beriites.

45 Of the ſons of Beriah: of Heber, the family of the Heberites: of Malchiel, the family of the Malchielites.

46 And the name of the daughter of Aſher, was Sarah.

47 Theſe are the families of the ſons of Aſher, according to thoſe that were numbred of them; who were fifty and three thouſand and four hundred.

48 Of the ſons of Naphtali after their families: of Jahzeel, the family of the Jahzeelites: of Guni, the family of the Gunites:

49 Of Jezer, the family of the Jezerites: of Shillem, the family of the Shillemites.

50 Theſe are the families of Naphtali according to their families: and they that were numbred of them, were forty and five thouſand and four hundred.

51 Theſe were the numbred of the children of Iſrael, ſix hundred thouſand and a thouſand ſeven hundred and thirty.

52 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

53 Unto theſe the land ſhall be divided for an inheritance, according to the number of names.

54 To many thou ſhalt give the more inheritance, and to few thou ſhalt give the leſs inheritance: to every one ſhall his inheritance be given, according to thoſe that were numbred of him.

55 Notwithſtanding, the land ſhall be divided by lot: according to the names of the tribes of their fathers they ſhall inherit.

56 According to the lot ſhall the poſſeſſion thereof be divided, between many and few.

57 ¶ And theſe are they that were numbred of the Levites, after their families: of Gerſhon, the family of the Gerſhonites: of Kohath, the family of the Kohathites: of Merari, the family of the Merarites.

58 Theſe are the families of the Levites: the family of the Libnites, the family of the Hebronites, the family of the Mahlites, the family of the Muſhites, the family of the Korathites: And Kohath begat Amram.

59 And the name of Amrams wife was Jochebed the daughter of Levi, whom her mother bare to Levi in Egypt: and ſhe bare unto Amram, Aaron and Moſes, and Miriam their ſiſter.

60 And unto Aaron was born Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar.

61 And Nadab and Abihu died, when they offered ſtrange fire before the LORD.

62 And thoſe that were numbred of them, were twenty and three thouſand, all males from a month old and upward: for they were not numbred among the children of Iſrael, becauſe there was no inheritance given them among the children of Iſrael.

63 ¶ Theſe are they that were numbred by Moſes and Eleazar the prieſt, who numbred the children of Iſrael in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho.

64 But among theſe there was not a man of them whom Moſes and Aaron the prieſt numbred, when they numbred the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs of Sinai.

65 For the LORD hath ſaid of them, They ſhall ſurely die in the wilderneſs. And there was not a man left of them, ſave Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs after the plague.] Mentioned in the foregoing chapter, ver. 8, 9, 17. tho' ſome fancy it refers to all the plagues that had ſwept away the former generations except two perſons.

——The Lord ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Eleazar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt, ſaying,] As God had formerly joined Aaron with Moſes, Numb. i. ver. 1, 17, chap. xi. ver. 10. chap. iv. ver. 1. &c. ſo now Aaron being dead, he joins his ſon Eleazar with him, to ſhew that he ſucceeded not only in his place and office, but alſo in his authority.

Ver. 2. Take the ſum of all the congregation of the children of Iſrael.] They had been twice numbered before this: Once before the building of the tabernacle, in the firſt year after they came out of Egypt, when they paid every man half a ſhekel towards it, Exod. xxx. ver. 11. and 13. chap. xxxviii. ver. 25. And again, when they were to be encamped, in the ſecond month of the ſecond year, Numb. i. ver. 1, 2, &c. And now, all thoſe men who had been then numbered thirty eight years ago, being dead, (as appears from verſe 64. of this chapter) God commands them to be numbered a third time; partly that he might demonſtrate his faithfulneſs to his word, in multiplying them vaſtly, notwithſtanding all their provocations, (for their number was within eighteen hundred and twenty as many as they were at their laſt muſter) and partly, that the land they were now going to poſſeſs, might be the more eaſily divided among the tribes in juſt and equal proportions.

Ver. 4. Take the ſum of the people.] Theſe words are not in the Hebrew; but ſome expreſſion of this kind is to be underſtood, that they ſpake with them about numbering the people, from twenty years old and upward, as it here follows.

——As the Lord commanded Moſes and the children of Iſrael, which went forth out of the land of Egypt.] He ordered them to proceed according to the directions God had formerly given, in the ſecond month of the ſecond year, after they came out of Egypt, Numb. i. ver. 1.

Ver. 5, 6. Reuben the eldeſt ſon of Jacob.] This numbering being performed as the former was, Moſes uſes more conciſe language in the account he gives of it; as he doth in the foregoing verſe, and in this, and thoſe that follow, where he ſets down the number of every tribe, and the families from whence they ſprung, without ſaying, Thoſe that were numbered of the tribe of Reuben were, &c. as he doth, Numb. i. 21, &c.

——— The children of Hanoch, of whom came the family of the Hanochites, &c.] The four ſons of Reuben, whoſe families here follow, are mentioned in Gen. xlvi. ver. 9. and in Exod. vi. ver. 14. and are here mentioned again, becauſe he intends to ſet down the names, both of the children and grand-children of one of his ſons, which he did not before.

Ver. 7. Theſe are the families of the Reubenites.] The word we tranſlate families, rather ſignifies nations (Gentes) or kindreds, as we tranſlate it, Pſalm xxii. ver. 27. for all that ſprung from thoſe ſeventy perſons, who came with Jacob into Egypt, are called by the name of Miſpecoth, which the LXX here tranſlates δῆμοι people, which were divided into houſes, as the Hebrews call them; and thoſe houſes into particular perſons: This is plain from Joſhua vii. ver. 14. where, for the diſcovery of him who had ſinned in the accurſed thing, God commanded the Iſraelites to be brought by their tribes, and then that tribe by the families belonging to it; and that family which the Lord took, by houſholds, and that houſhold man by man.

——— And they that were numbered of them were forty and three thouſand, and ſeven hundred and thirty.] This being compared with Numb. chap. i. ver. 21. it appears, this tribe was leſs than it was thirty eight years ago, by near three thouſand men; for ſome whole houſholds had been deſtroyed, as it follows, ver. 9.

Ver. 8. And the ſons of Pallu, Eliab.] He ſpeaks in the plural number, when there was but one ſon of Pallu, which is very uſual in ſcripture language. See Gen. xix. ver. 29. chap. xxi. ver. 7. chap. xlvi, ver. 7. and in this chapter ver. 42.

——— Eliab.] He doth not ſay from him came the family of the Eliabites; for he made only an houſhold in the family, as we call it, of the Palluites.

Ver. 9. And the ſons of Eliab, Nemuel, and Dathan, and Abiram.] The ſame muſt be obſerved of theſe, that families did not ſpring from them, but they were houſholds belonging to the family of the Palluites.

——— This is that Dathan and Abiram famous in the congregation.] They are here again mentioned, partly to ſet a new brand upon them, for their inſolent rebellion againſt Moſes, and partly to ſhew how the Reubenites came to be ſo diminiſhed.

Ver. 10. And the earth opened her mouth, and ſwallowed them up together with Korah.] Theſe words ſeem to import, that Korah was ſwallowed up with Dathan and Abiram: But it muſt be acknowledged, that the expreſſion may receive another interpretation, and that very natural in this manner; the earth opened her mouth and ſwallowed them up (viz. Dathan and Abiram, and the reſt mentioned chap. xvi. ver. 32.) and then the next words, veeth Korah, may be thus tranſlated, and as for Korah, who was the great incendiary, when that company died, i. e. he died, when the company which offered incenſe died: for there is in many places a defect of a word, to be ſupplied from the word that follows. This is a very eaſy conſtruction, and agrees with the Pſalmiſt, Pſalm cvi, ver. 17. where he mentions only Dathan and Abiram's company as ſwallowed up, and then adds, ver. 18. A fire was kindly in their company, i. e. in the other company of rebels, and the flame burnt up the wicked, viz. Korah, and thoſe that were with him.

——— What time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men.] If the interpretation now mentioned of the foregoing words be admitted, then Korah muſt be added to the number of the two hundred and fifty men; which Moſes takes occaſion to explain in this place.

——— And they became a ſign.] A monument of God's diſpleaſure againſt thoſe that affront his miniſters; to give warning to all poſterity not to follow their pernicious courſes.

Ver. 11. Notwithſtanding the children of Korah died not.] As thoſe of Dathan and Abiram did; but their family continued famous in David's time, for perhap they left their father, and departed from the tents of thoſe wicked men, as Moſes, by God's command, exhorted the congregation, chap. xvi. ver. 24 and 26. and they obeyed, ver. 27.

Ver. 12, 13. The ſons of Simeon after their families, &c.] His ſons are reckoned up here juſt as they are, Gen. xlvi. 10. and Exod. vi. 15. only one of them, viz. Ohad is here omitted; becauſe, either he had no children, or his family was extinct before this time. The firſt of them alſo, viz. Nemuel, is there called Jemuel; and Jachin, in 1 Chron. chap. iv. ver. 24. is called Jarib; there being ſome reaſon, in proceſs of time, for ſuch alterations.

Ver. 14. Theſe are the families of the Simeonites twenty and two thouſand, and two hundred.] There was a wonderful decreaſe of this tribe in the ſpace of thirty and eight years; for they were fewer by above thirty ſeven thouſand, than they were at the laſt numbering. See chap. i. ver. 23. Many of them, it is probable, being in the ſame crime with Zimri, and the plague falling moſt heavily upon this tribe, whom Moſes in Deuteronomy xxxiii. doth not bleſs.

Ver. 18. Theſe are the families of the children of Gad, according to thoſe that were numbered of them, forty thouſand and five hundred.] This tribe alſo was leſs by above five thouſand than before, chap. i. ver. 25.

Ver. 22. Theſe are the families of Judah, according to thoſe that were numbered of them, threeſcore and ſixteen thouſand and five hundred.] This tribe was very numerous before, above all the reſt; and now this new generation, which ſprung up inſtead of the old (who were all deſtroyed except Caleb) exceeded them two thouſand. So faithful was God to his promiſe, that this ſhould be a moſt powerful tribe. Numb. i. ver. 27.

Ver. 23. The ſons of Iſſachar after their families.] He and Zebulon are mentioned next, becauſe they lay encamped together, under the ſtandard of Judah. See Numb. ii. ver. 5, 6, 7, ——— Of Tola, the family of the Tolaites.] An exceeding fruitful family, and very valliant; there being of this one family, twenty two thouſand and ſix hundred men in the days of David, 1 Chron. vii. 2.

Ver. 25. Threeſcore and four thouſand and three hundred.] This tribe alſo was exceedingly increaſed, being near ten thouſand more now than they were at their firſt numbering, chap. i. ver. 29. and chap xi. ver. 6.

Ver. 26. Of the ſons of Zebulun after their families.] There is no change of their names, which are the ſame, without any alteration, as when they went into Egypt, Gen. xlvi. ver. 14.

Ver. 27. Thoſe that were numbered of them, threeſcore thouſand and five hundred.] This tribe likewiſe was increaſed above three thouſand ſince the former numbering. See chap. i. 31. And ſo the whole camp of Judah was mightily augmented, as that of Reuben was diminiſhed.

Ver. 29. Of the ſons of Manaſſeh, of Machir, &c.] This was his only ſon; but thoſe deſcended from him, by a uſual manner of ſpeaking, are called Manaſſeh's ſons alſo, being his grandſons. Some think indeed that Manaſſeh had other ſons, which they gather from Gen. i. 22. but, if he had, their families were extinct; for none but Machir and his poſterity had any inheritance in the land of Canaan, Joſh. xvii. 1, 2. where the grand-children are called the children.

——— Machir begat Gilead, and of Gilead came the family of the Gileadites.] They were not a diſtinct family from the Machirites, but the very ſame; Machir having no ſon but Gilead. Therefore that family, which at firſt were called Machirites, were afterwards called Gileadites; or they were indifferently called, either by one or the other.

Ver. 30. Theſe are the ſons of Gilead, of Jeezer,] Called Abiezer, Joſh. xvii. 2.

——— The family of the Jeezerites, &c.] The poſterity of Gilead grew ſo numerous, that his ſons made families, and not only houſholds: ſo that the name of Gileadites being too general to diſtinguiſh them all, they were called, at length, by the name of his ſons.

Ver. 31, 32. Of Aſriel, the family of the Aſrielites, &c.] This, and all the reſt that follow, are mentioned as the ſons of Gilead; for each of whoſe children there was a lot in the land of Canaan, Joſh. xvii. 2.

Ver. 33. And Zelophehad the ſon of Hepher, had no ſons, but daughters, &c.] Whoſe caſe is conſidered in the next, and the laſt chapter of this book; where they are ordered to have an inheritance among their fathers brethren, but to marry into their own tribe. And their poſterity, we ſuppoſe, were called after their grand-fathers name, Hepherites: for ſuch a family there was, as Moſes tells us in the foregoing verſe.

Ver. 34. Numbered of them fifty two thouſand and ſeven hundred.] If this be compared with chap. i. ver. 35. it will appear that this tribe was increaſed above twenty thouſand; which is the greateſt increaſe of any other; and made good the prophecy of Jacob concerning the children of Joſeph. Gen. xlix. 22.

Ver. 35. Theſe are the ſons of Ephraim after their families.] He is mentioned after Manaſſeh, becauſe he was his younger brother, yet in their encampment this tribe had the ſtandard under which Manaſſeh marched, Numb. ii. 18, &c.

——— Of Shuthelah, the family of the Shuthelites, &c.] He is mentioned firſt alſo in 1 Chron. vii. ver. 20. where the next ſon Becher is called Bered; and Tahan called Tabath; for time is wont to make great alterations in the name of perſons and places.

Ver. 36. Theſe are the ſons of Shuthelah, of Eran, the family of the Eranites.] He had, it ſeems, but one ſon; whoſe children (after the uſual manner of ſpeaking before mentioned) were called the ſons of Shuthelah; tho' they made a diſtinct family, under the name of Eranites.

Ver. 37. Thoſe that were numbred of them, thirty two thouſand and five hundred.] Though this proved a very numerous tribe in future times, yet for the preſent they were fewer by eight thouſand than they were in the former muſter, chap. i. 33. which renders the propheſy of Moſes, a little after this, the more remarkable, Deut. xxxiii. 17. where he makes the Ephramites ten to one, in compariſon with the Manaſſites.

Ver. 38. The ſons of Benjamin after their families.] This tribe alſo was under the ſtandard of Ephraim, and therefore mentioned here, together with him and Manaſſeh. When they went into Egypt, the ſons of Benjamin were no leſs than ten, Gen. xlvi. 21. half of whom either had no children, or they were all extinct before this time; for here are only five named.

——— Of Bela, the family of the Belaites, &c.] The two firſt, Bela and Aſhhel, are there named as they are here: but the next, Ahiram, is there called Ehi; and in 1 Chron. chap. viii. Ahara: ſuch an alteration doth time make in names.

Ver. 39. Of Shupham, &c.] He is called Muppim in Gen. xlvi. 21. and Hupham is there called Huppim.

Ver. 40. The ſons of Bela were Ard and Naaman.] Tho' five of his ſons were dead without Iſſue; yet two of his grandſons deſcended from his eldeſt ſon, made diſtinct families in Iſrael. And the ſon of one of them was called after the name of his uncle, the youngeſt ſon of Benjamin, Gen. xlvi. 21. whoſe name was Ard; and in 1 Chronicles viii. 3. (by a ſmall tranſpoſition of letters) is called Adar.

Ver. 41. There were numbred of them forty five thouſand and ſix hundred.] This tribe was grown to be ten thouſand more than they were at the laſt numbering, chap. i. ver. 37.

Ver. 42. Theſe are the ſons of Dan.] Thus he ſpeaks, though he had but one. See ver. 8.

——— Of Shuham.] Called Huſhim, by a tranſpoſition of letters, Gen. xlvi. 23. juſt as the ſame tree is called Almugim, 1 Kings x. 8. and Algumim, 2 Chron. ii. 8. and the ſame city in which Joſhua was buried, is called Timnath-Serach, Joſhua xxiv. 30. and Timnah-Cheres, Judges ii. 9. And to come ſtill nearer, the ſame man is called Rechum, Nehem. xii. 3. and Cherim, ver. 15. of the ſame chapter.

——— Theſe are the families of Dan after their families.] That is, from theſe Shuhamites came all the reſt of the families of this tribe, which are not here mentioned; but into which this family was ſubdivided, when it grew very great, as it appears from the next words.

Ver. 43. All the families of the Shuhamites.] This ſhews there were more than one of them, who had names from ſome of the children of Shuham.

——— Were threeſcore and four thouſand and four hundred.] A vaſt number to ſpring from one man; when Benjamin who had ten ſons, wanted almoſt ten thouſand of this number; which is ſeventeen hundred more than were in this tribe at the laſt numbering, chap. i. 39.

Ver. 44. Of the children of Aſher after their families, &c.] They all retain the ſame names which they had when they went into Egypt, Gen. xlvi. 17. Only he who is here called Jeſhui, is there called Iſhui; and another ſon there mentioned is here omitted; his family we ſuppoſe being quite extinct.

Ver. 45. Of the ſons of Beriah, &c.] Inſtead of him, whoſe family was quite loſt, the youngeſt ſon of Aſher (Beriah) had two families ſprung from him.

Ver. 46. And the name of the daughter of Aſher was Sarah.] Or Serah, as ſhe is called Gen. xlvi. 17. He doth not ſay that a family ſprang from her, which Corn. Bertramus (cap. 6. de Republ. Jud.) ſeems to think probable, inſtead of ſome that were loſt; but ſhe was a woman, it is likely, as eminent in this tribe, as any of her brethren, for ſome virtue or other: inſomuch that the Cabbaliſts, in the ancient book Zohar, parting the heavenly region where the ſouls of holy women are, into four palaces, make four great women to be a kind of preſidents over them, viz. Pharaoh's daughter, who educated Moſes; and this Serah, the daughter of Aſher; with Jochabed, the mother of Moſes; and Deborah, the famous propheteſs. See Selden, lib. 2. de Jure Nat. & Gent. cap. 4.

Ver. 47. Were fifty and three thouſand and four hundred.] This tribe alſo fructified exceedingly, wanting but one hundred of twelve thouſand more than they were at the laſt numbering, chap. i. 41.

Ver. 48, 49. Of the ſons of Naphtali after their families, &c.] There are four of them, whoſe names were not at all changed ſince they went into Egypt. See Gen. xlvi. 24.

Ver. 50. Were forty five thouſand and four hundred.] They wanted eight thouſand of their number, Numbers i. 43. Theſe two tribes, Aſher and Naphtali, are mentioned together with Dan, becauſe they were encamped under his ſtandard, Numb. ii. 25, 26, &c.

Ver. 51. Theſe were the numbered of the children of Iſrael, ſix hundred thouſand, and a thouſand ſeven hundred and fifty.] That is, the whole number amounted to this ſum; which was but eighteen hundred and twenty leſs than they were, when they were laſt numbered, thirty eight years ago, chap. i. 46. So great was the goodneſs of God, and ſuch his faithfulneſs to his word, that when he deſtroyed all the former generation, (who were above twenty years old) he multiplied their poſterity ſo faſt, in that ſpace of time, as to make them equal, in a manner, to thoſe who went before them.

Ver. 52. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] After the people were thus numbered, and every family, and the perſons contained exactly known, then the Lord ordered as follows.

Ver. 53. Unto theſe the land ſhall be divided for an inheritance] Not to be alienated from thoſe families.

——— According to the number of names.] Of the perſons in the ſeveral families, from twenty years old and upwards, ver. 2. So that minors, who had not attained the age of twenty years when this account was taken, the Jews ſay, were not to have any ſhare in the land, though they were come to that age at the time of the diſtribution of it among them. But thoſe minors had poſſeſſions, as heirs of their fathers, according to the families.

Ver. 54. To many thou ſhalt give the more inheritance, and to few thou ſhalt give the leſs inheritance.] That is, order Joſhua to aſſign them a ſhare in the land, proportionable to the number of perſons in every tribe: ſome of which were far greater than others, and therefore to have more land, proportionable to the largeneſs of their families. But this was not meaſured merely by the number of acres, as we ſpeak, but by the goodneſs of the ſoil; for a little ground, in a rich country, would maintain more perſons than twice as much in barren. So Joſephus, lib. 5. Antiq. cap. 1. where after he had ſaid that Joſhua made a diſtribution of the land, κατὰ μεγέθος ἑκάστης τῶν φυλῶν, according to the bigneſs of each tribe; he adds, that in doing this, τιμητὸς μᾶλλον ἢ μετρητὸς τοὺς κλήρους εἶναι δεῖν, it was neceſſary to conſider the value rather than the meaſure of every portion; and gives this reaſon why the tribe of Benjamin had ſo narrow a portion allotted them, becauſe the ground was ſo very fertile about Jeruſalem, Στένοτατος ὁ κλῆρος ὅτος διὰ τὴν τῆς ἀρετῆς. This lot was very ſtrait becauſe of the goodneſs of the ſoil.

——— To every man ſhall his inheritance be given according to thoſe that were numbred of him.] That is, to every family, according to the account that had been now taken; not conſidering who might be born after this, (and thereby increaſe a family) or die, (and thereby diminiſh it) before the diviſion of the land was made. For ſeveral died, we may well think, in the wars with the Canaanites, and others were born before the country was conquered.

Ver. 55. Notwithſtanding the land ſhall be divided by lot.] When it was divided into ſo many equal ſhares as there were tribes, (a due reſpect being had to their number) they were not to chuſe which ſhare they would have; but that was to be determined by lot. The manner of which they ſay was this: Two urns being placed before him who drew the lots, and in one of which were ſcrolls of parchment, containing the names of the twelve tribes of Iſrael; and in the other, the ſeveral portions of land to be divided among them: He firſt put in his hand into the urn wherein the names were depoſited, and drew out one, ſuppoſe that of Judah; and then he put his hand into the other urn, and drew out the portion which fell to his ſhare. Or perhaps there was but one urn, wherein were the ſeveral portions of land; and they began, ſuppoſe with the eldeſt ſon of Iſrael, viz. Reuben; and taking out a ſcroll, ſaid, This is the portion of Reuben; and ſo with the reſt. But in what manner ſoever they proceeded, there were two diſtributions made, one of the whole country into twelve parts; and another of each of thoſe parts, among the ſeveral families that were in each tribe.

——— According to the names of the tribes of their families they ſhall inherit.] This ſeems to juſtify what we now advanced, that they firſt named the tribe, whoſe lot they would draw out, and which contained his inheritance. But after all this, it might happen that ſome of their lots were too ſcanty for their number, and others too large: in which caſe Eleazar and Joſhua, together with the reſt appointed for this office, chap. xxxiv. 17, &c. ordered ſome portion to be taken from thoſe who had too much, and conſigned to thoſe who had too little for their families. This appears from Joſhua xix. 9. where a portion out of the lot of Judah is ordered for Simeon, becauſe the one was too large, and the other too inconſiderable; and the ſame may be ſaid of Dan, ver. 47.

Ver. 56. According to the lot ſhall the poſſeſſion be divided.] The firſt words, which we tranſlate according to the lot, (being in the Hebrew, al pi hagoral, which literally ſignifies, according to the mouth of the lot, and is no more than, as the lot ſhall declare) the Jews have a conceit that the land was divided, not merely by lot, but by Urim and Thummim; which Eleazar then put on, as the Talmud deſcribes it in Bava Bathra, and two urns ſtandingbefore him, in one of which were the names of the twelve tribes, and in the other the names of the portions of land, he looked, by divine inſpiration, upon the Urim and Thummim, and ſaid, Let ſuch a tribe come up; which being done, he ſaid again, Let ſuch a portion of land come up for this tribe: by which means all the people before whom this was tranſacted, were ſatisfied, that their portion was allotted to them by God, and all cauſe of murmuring and contention taken away. Thus R. Solomon, and others mentioned by Buxtorf in his Hiſt. Urim and Thummim, cap. 3. and Murtinius Mauritius, in his Treatiſe de Sortione Veter. Hebr. cap. 29. ſect. 4, 5. where he obſerves, how ancient the method of dividing goods and lands by lot was in other countries. But there was no need of this ſolemnity, the diviſion of the land by the order of God, after the manner of lots, ſufficiently ſhewing, it was not by man's directions, but by God's alone, that ſuch a ſhare fell to them.

——— Between many and few.] Every tribe having its land aſſigned them by the lot, it was then divided among the ſeveral families, in the ſame manner (as theſe words ſeem to ſignify) and then every houſhold had their ſhare allotted them, according to the number of perſons that were in them; who if they were many, had a greater ſhare; if few, a leſs. By which means every man had reaſon to reſt ſatisfied, becauſe ſuch was his lot; that is, ſuch was the good pleaſure of God, who directed the lots; as we learn from Joſhua, chap. xviii. ver. 6, 8, 10. where we read expreſsly, that in the diviſion of the land, he caſt lots for them before the Lord in Shiloh, that he might order every one his portion.

Ver. 57. And theſe are they that were numbered of the Levites, after their families.] It was fit an account ſhould be taken of this tribe alſo, that it might appear how God had bleſſed them, as well as the other tribes of Iſrael, with a numerous iſſue; tho' he had cut off, in the ſpace of thirty eight years, all the former generation, from the age of twenty years and upward.

——— Of Gerſhon, the family of the Gerſhonites, &c.] The principal families in this tribe were three, deſcended from the three ſons of Levi, Gerſhon, Kohath, and Merari; whoſe names were not changed ſince their departure from Egypt till this time, Gen. xlvi. 11. Exod. vi. 16.

Ver. 58. Theſe are the families of the Levites.] The three which were named before, were the principal families, divided into thoſe leſſer branches which follow.

——— The family of the Libnites.] Deſcended from Libni, the eldeſt ſon of Gerſhon; who had another ſon, whoſe family is here omitted, (viz. Shimi) tho' mentioned Exod. vi. 17. But in this place Moſes has not given a full account of all the families of the Levites, nor is it placed in exact order; becauſe they were to have no inheritance in the land; which was the reaſon that all the families of the other tribes are ſet down ſo punctually.

——— The family of the Hebronites.] From Hebron, one of the ſons of Kohath, Exod. vi. 18. Numb. iii. 19.

——— The family of the Mahlites, the family of the Muſhites.] From the two ſons of Merari, who were called Mahli, and Muſhi, Exod. vi. 19. Numb. iii. 20.

——— The family of the Korathites.] From the great grandchild of Levi, Exod. vi. 21. Numb. xvi. 1.

——— And Kohath begat Amram.] Who was grand child to Levi, and brother to the father of Korah, Exod. vi. 18.

Ver. 59. And the name of Amrams wife was Jochabed, the daughter of Levi.] See Exod. vi. 20.

——— Whom her mother (viz. Levi's wife) bare to Levi in Egypt.] See Exod. vi. ver. 20.

——— And ſhe bare unto Amram, Aaron, and Moſes, and Miriam their ſiſter.] Who was born before Moſes, if not before Aaron. Exod. ii. ver. 4.

Ver. 60. And unto Aaron was born Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar.] Exod. chap. vi. ver. 13. where Moſes records the name of their mother.

Ver. 61. And Nadab and Abihu died, when they offered ſtrange fire before the Lord.] See Lev. x. 2. And the third chapter of this book, ver. 4. But Eleazar, who was the eldeſt next to them, was now alive, and veſted with the high prieſthood; and it is likely Ithamar alſo, being under twenty years of age, when the people murmured upon the report of the ſpies; and ſo not cut off with that wicked generation, chap. xvi. 29.

All this is here recounted, to ſhew that the tribe of Levi was preſerved, by the bleſſing of God, as well as the reſt of the Iſraelites; tho' they were to have no inheritance in the land of Canaan.

Ver. 62. And thoſe that were numbered of them, were twenty and three thouſand, &c.] Conſequently, they were a thouſand more in number than they were at the laſt muſter, chap. iii. ver. 39.

——— For they were not numbered among the children of Iſrael.] But by themſelves, for the reaſon which immediately follows.

——— Becauſe there was no inheritance given them among the children of Iſrael.] For God was their inheritance, as he declared to them, chap. xviii. ver. 20. &c. And therefore they were ordered not to be numbered thirty eight years ago, no more than now, Numb. chap. i. ver. 49, &c. The Jews are ſomething curious in their obſervations upon theſe words, among, or in the midſt of the children of Iſrael: From whence they conclude, that the Levites might have lands out of the bounds of Canaan, tho' not within it, among their brethren.

Ver. 63. Theſe are they that were numbered by Moſes and Eleazar the prieſt, who numbered the children of Iſrael in the plains of Moab.] By a ſpecial command of God, ver. 1, 2, &c.

Ver.

Ver. 64. But among theſe there was not a man of them whom Moſes and Aaron the prieſt numbered, when they numbered the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs of Sinai,] See the firſt chapter of this book, ver. 1, 2. &c. So exactly were God's threatnings fulfilled, as well as his promiſes.

Ver. 65. For the Lord had ſaid of them, they ſhall ſurely die in the wilderneſs.] God had pronounced this irreverſible doom upon the whole congregation, chap. xiv. ver. 23, 28, 29. where he ſolemnly ſwears they ſhould not enter into the land of Canaan, becauſe they had brought, or entertained an evil report of it. See Deut. ii. ver. 14, 15.

——— And there was not left a man of them, ſave Caleb, the ſon of Jephunneh, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun.] Whom God had promiſed to ſpare, becauſe they had manifeſted another ſpirit, chap. xv. ver. 24, 30, 38. And their ſurvival was as remarkable an inſtance of the veracity of God's word, as the death of all the reſt.

CHAP. XXVII.

1 The daughters of Zelophehad ſue for an inheritance 6 The law of inheritances. 12 Moſes being told of his death, ſueth for a ſucceſſor. 18 Joſhua is appointed to ſucceed him.

THEN came the daughters of Zelophehad the ſon of Hepher, the ſon of Gilead, the ſon of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, of the families of Manaſſeh the ſon of Joſeph: and theſe are the names of his daughters; Mahlah, Noah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Tirzah.

2 And they ſtood before Moſes, and before Eleazar the prieſt, and before the princes, and all the congregation, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, ſaying,

3 Our father died in the wilderneſs, and he was not in the company of them that gathered themſelves together againſt the LORD in the company of Korah; but died in his own ſin, and had no ſons.

4 Why ſhould the name of our father be done away from among his family, becauſe he hath no ſon? Give unto us therefore a poſſeſſion among the brethren of our father.

5 And Moſes brought their cauſe before the LORD.

6 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

7 The daughters of Zelophehad ſpeak right: thou ſhalt ſurely give them a poſſeſſion of an inheritance among their fathers brethren; and thou ſhalt cauſe the inheritance of their father to paſs unto them.

8 And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, If a man die, and have no ſon, then ye ſhall cauſe his inheritance to paſs unto his daughter.

9 And if he have no daughter, then ye ſhall give his inheritance unto his brethren.

10 And if he have no brethren, then ye ſhall give his inheritance unto his fathers brethren.

11 And if his father have no brethren, then ye ſhall give his inheritance unto his kinſman that is next to him of his family, and he ſhall poſſeſs it: and it ſhall be unto the children of Iſrael a ſtatute of judgment, as the LORD commanded Moſes.

12 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Get thee up unto this mount Abarim, and ſee the land which I have given unto the children of Iſrael.

13 And when thou haſt ſeen it, thou alſo ſhalt be gathered unto thy people, as Aaron thy brother was gathered.

14 For ye rebelled againſt my commandment (in the deſert of Zin, in the ſtrife of the congregation) to ſanctify me at the water, before their eyes: that is the water of Meribah, in Kadeſh in the wilderneſs of Zin.

15 ¶ And Moſes ſpake unto the LORD, ſaying,

16 Let the LORD, the God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, ſet a man over the congregation.

17 Which may go out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out, and which may bring them in; that the congregation of the LORD be not as ſheep which have no ſhepherd.

18 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Take thee Joſhua the ſon of Nun, a man in whom is the ſpirit, and lay thine hand upon him.

19 And ſet him before Eleazar the prieſt, and before all the congregation: and give him a charge in their ſight.

20 And thou ſhalt put ſome of thine honour upon him, that all the congregation of the children of Iſrael may be obedient.

21 And he ſhall ſtand before Eleazar the prieſt, who ſhall ask counſel for him after the judgment of Urim before the LORD: at his word ſhall they go out, and at his word they ſhall come in, both he, and all the children of Iſrael with him, even all the congregation.

22 And Moſes did as the LORD commanded him: and he took Joſhua and ſet him him before Eleazar the prieſt, and before all the congregation.

23 And he laid his hands upon him, and gave him a charge, as the LORD commanded by the hand of Moſes.

Ver. 1. Then came the daughters of Zelophehad, the ſon of Hepher, &c.] Who are mentioned before, chap. xxvi. ver. 33. juſt as they are here, only their genealogy is here more fully ſet out, that their father was the grandſon of Manaſſeh, the ſon of Joſeph, from whom he was lineally deſcended, but left no ſons behind him. Now theſe young women hearing Moſes ſay, (as he did in the foregoing chapter) that the Lord commanded the land of Canaan ſhould be divided among thoſe who were now numbered; and obſerving, that only males from twenty years old were enumerated, ver. 2. immediately apprehended, that they, as being females, were excluded from having any inheritance among the Iſraelites, and conſequently the family would be extinguiſhed in them. This was the foundation of what follows, whereby it appears, that every individual was immediately acquainted with the laws which Moſes received from God; and there was a faithful regiſter kept of every one who was born in each family and tribe, to prevent all diſputes about the true heirs to mens eſtates.

Theſe daughters of Zelophehad, therefore, came to petition Moſes and Eleazar for an inheritance with their fathers brethren, that his name might not be loſt in Iſrael, ſince he had left no ſons, but was dead in the wilderneſs, not for any ſedition, but had ſhared in the common fate with the reſt. Their requeſt was approved by God, and readily granted by Moſes, who allotted them a portion in their kindreds inheritance accordingly. After which, God was pleaſed to make a law, that for the future, the eſtates of thoſe who died without iſſue male, ſhould be inherited by their daughters, and if they had no daughters, that then it ſhould go to the next of the male, and in defect of that offspring, to the next of the female line, chap. xxvii. ver. 1, 2. &c. But there being ſome doubt remaining, namely, whether the latter might marry out of their tribe; that of Manaſſeh came ſoon after to Moſes, and repreſented to him the inconveniency of ſuch marriages, ſeeing thoſe heireſſes would carry the inheritance into other tribes, which might, in proceſs of time, cauſe much confuſion, and probably impoveriſh one tribe, and enrich another. This remonſtrance was likewiſe approved by God, who immediately declared, that neither theſe daughters of Zelophehad, nor any heireſſes for the future, ſhould marry out of their tribes, nor even out of their own family; as for the other females, who had no inheritance, they were permitted to marry into what tribe they pleaſed.

Ver. 12. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, get thee up into this mount Abarim, &c.] Moſes immediately after the deciſion, with reference to the daughters of Zelophehad, was commanded by God, to aſcend mount Nebo, one of the mountains that form the long ridge called Abarim, which ſtretched from the tribe of Reuben into the land of Moab, on each ſide the river Arnon; but the true extent of which it is not eaſy to fix. Euſebius and St. Jerom mention them more than once; the former places it about ſix miles weſtward of Heſhbon. The mounts Piſgah, Peor, and Nebo, where Moſes died, were part of the ridge Abarim, or, as the original has it, Habarim, which ſignifies, either paſſes, or paſſengers.

From the ſummit of this mount Moſes was to take a view of the promiſed land, ſince his rebellion in the deſert of Zin had debarred him from entering into it, and he was ſhortly to die in that very mountain, from whence he beheld it. Moſes was nothing ſurprized at the news of his approaching death, which he only looked upon as a haven of repoſe, after a life of the greateſt trouble and fatigue: Neither was he ſollicitous to have his commiſſion tranſmitted to his children, or in the leaſt diſpleaſed to ſee his own ſervant appointed his ſucceſſor before them; but finding his end ſo near, he made it his chief care, during thoſe few remaining days, to ſettle things in the beſt order he could. The firſt care he took, was to have Joſhua confirmed his ſucceſſor in the moſt publick and authentic manner, to prevent any oppoſition from his own family after he was dead. To this end he brought him forth in the ſight of all Iſrael, layed his hands upon him, and having preſented him to Eleazar the high prieſt, and given him all the neceſſary directions, and, in particular, that of conſulting God upon all emergencies, by the Urim and Thummim, he cauſed him to be proclaimed head, and general of all Iſrael.

What the faſhion of the Urim and Thummim was, has been already conſidered at large in our deſcription of the ſacerdotal veſtments of Aaron and the other prieſts. Exod. 28. but we beg leave to obſerve, that Joſhua could not be that prophet like Moſes, whom God promiſed to raiſe, and commanded the people under ſevere penalties to obey, Deut. xviii. 15. as our modern Jews affirm, and ſome Chriſtians, have too eaſily granted, Joſhua was, in many particulars, inferior not only to Moſes, but likewiſe to the generality of the prophets, ſince he was to have recourſe to the Urim and Thummim upon all emergencies, whereas the former converſed with God face to face, and the latter were always ready to declare the mind of God to thoſe who came to conſult them. How could he therefore be the chief prophet and director of ſuch a numerous nation, who wanted a director himſelf? Or, How could the people be charged to hear and obey him, who was himſelf to receive his orders from the high prieſt?

CHAP. XXVIII.

1 Offerings are to be obſerved. 3 The continual burnt-offering. 9 The offering on the ſabbath. 11 On the new moons. 16 At the paſſover. 26 In the day of firſt fruits.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Command the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, My offering, and my bread for my ſacrifices made by fire, for a ſweet ſavour unto me, ſhall ye obſerve to offer unto me in their due ſeaſon.

3 And thou ſhalt ſay unto them, This is the offering made by fire which ye ſhall offer unto the LORD: two lambs of the firſt year without ſpot day by day, for a continual burnt-offering.

4 The one lamb ſhalt thou offer in the morning, and the other lamb ſhalt thou offer at even;

5 And a tenth part of an ephah of flour, for a meat-offering, mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oyl.

6 It is a continual burnt-offering which was ordained in mount Sinai for a ſweet ſavour, a ſacrifice made by fire unto the LORD,

7 And the drink-offering thereof ſhall be the fourth part of an hin for the one lamb: in the holy place ſhalt thou cauſe the ſtrong wine to be poured nnto the LORD for a drink-offering.

8 And the other lamb ſhalt thou offer at even: as the meat-offering of the morning, and as the drink-offering thereof thou ſhalt offer it, a ſacrifice made by fire of a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD.

9 ¶ And on the ſabbath day, two lambs of the firſt year without ſpot, and two tenth deals of flour for a meat-offering mingled with oyl, and the drink-offering thereof.

10 This is the burnt-offering of every ſabbath, beſide the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering.

11 ¶ And in the beginnings of your months ye ſhall offer a burnt-offering unto the LORD; two young bullocks, and one ram, ſeven lambs of the firſt year without ſpot,

12 And three tenth-deals of flour for a meat-offering mingled with oyl, for one bullock, and two tenth-deals of flour for a meat-offering mingled with oyl, for one ram,

13 And a ſeveral tenth-deal of flour mingled with oyl for a meat-offering, unto one lamb, for a burnt-offering of a ſweet ſavour, a ſacrifice made by fire unto the LORD.

14 And their drink-offerings ſhall be half an hin of wine unto a bullock, and the third part of an hin unto a ram, and a fourth part of an hin unto a lamb: this is the burnt-offering of every month throughout the months of the year.

15 And one kid of the goats for a ſin-offering unto the LORD ſhall be offered, beſide the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering.

16 And in the fourteenth day of the firſt month is the paſſover of the LORD.

17 And in the fifteenth day of this month is the feaſt: ſeven days ſhall unleavened bread be eaten.

18 In the firſt day ſhall be an holy convocation; ye ſhall do no manner of ſervile work therein.

19 But ye ſhall offer a ſacrifice made by fire for a burnt-offering unto the LORD; two young bullocks, and one ram, and ſeven lambs of the firſt year: they ſhall be unto you without blemiſh.

20 And their meat-offering ſhall be of flour mingled with oyl: three tenth-deals ſhall ye offer for a bullock, and two tenth-deals for a ram,

21 A ſeveral tenth-deal ſhalt thou offer for every lamb, throughout the ſeven lambs:

22 And one goat for a ſin-offering, to make an atonement for you.

23 Ye ſhall offer theſe beſide the burnt-offering in the morning, which is for a continual burnt-offering.

24 After this manner ye ſhall offer daily throughout the ſeven days, the meat of the ſacrifice made by fire, of a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD: it ſhall be offered beſide the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering.

25 And on the ſeventh day ye ſhall have an holy convocation; ye ſhall do no ſervile work.

26 ¶ Alſo in the day of the firſt-fruits, when ye bring a new meat-offering unto the LORD, after your weeks be out, ye ſhall have an holy convocation; ye ſhall do no ſervile work.

27 But ye ſhall offer the burnt-offering for a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD; two young bullocks, one ram, ſeven lambs of the firſt year:

28 And their meat-offering of flour mingled with oyl, three tenth-deals unto one bullock, two tenth-deals unto one ram,

29 A ſeveral tenth-deal unto one lamb, throughout the ſeven lambs:

30 And one kid of the goats, to make an atonement for you.

31 Ye ſhall offer them beſide the continual burnt-offering, and his meat-offering (they ſhall be unto you without blemiſh) and their drink-offerings.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,] Moſes having numbered the people, and appointed his ſucceſſor to conduct them to their inheritance (which he had ordered to be divided among them, proportionable to the number of each tribe) nothing was more neceſſary than to perſwade them to be truly religious, as the only means to preſerve them in the enjoyment of it. This Moſes is commanded to recommend to them, in the preſent as well as in the following chapters; the circumſtances of which may be thought to have been coincident with the eighth month of the laſt year of their travels in the wilderneſs.

Ver. 2. Command the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them.] Theſe commands had been given before, but are here repeated, becauſe this was a new generation, who either had not heard them, when they were firſt delivered, thirty eight years ago; or at leaſt, had need to have their memories refreſhed. Some things alſo are now more particularly explained, and theſe alone ſhall be the ſubject of our preſent annotations.

——— My offering, and my bread.] The word and is not in the Hebrew; but the words are, my offering, my bread; which Iſaac Abarbinel thus excellently explains: "Concerning offerings for ſin, and treſpaſs offerings, and "the reſt, I ſhall not need to admoniſh you: but concern- "ing my daily ſacrifices, which are properly my own ob- "lation, my daily bread, or my food." And ſo others, by the word bread, underſtand meat or food in general, as we tranſlate ver. 24. tho' it may have a particular relation to the meat-offering which was made of meal, and always accompanied the burnt-offerings, which ſeem here to be peculiarly ſignified; tho' ſome think theſe words relate to all the ſacrifices, ſome part of which were God's portion.

——— For my ſacrifices made by fire for a ſweet ſavour unto me, ſhall ye obſerve to offer unto me in due ſeaſon.] For that reaſon this ſacrifice was to be conſtantly offered, ſays Abarbinel, that the divine fire, which came down from heaven to conſume the ſacrifices, might not be fruſtrated and burn there in vain.

From

From this place the Jews endeavour to make out their cuſtom of having ſtationary men, as they call them, to attend the daily ſacrifice: taking Moatho (in its ſeaſon) as if it had been Omatho (in its ſtations) but chiefly relying upon the firſt words of this verſe, command the children of Iſrael, who could not be all preſent at the daily ſacrifice, and therefore ſome particular perſons were choſen to repreſent all the reſt. For they thought it very undecent to have a ſacrifice offered for a man, and he not ſtand by it; and therefore the firſt prophets ordained twenty four courſes of men, choſen out of the prieſts, Levites and people, to ſtand in the temple, when the daily ſacrifice was offered in the name of all Iſrael; and pray that God would accept it from them, as if they were all preſent. This account the Miſchna gives of them in Taanith, and other places; where they ſay theſe men were reputed to be ſo neceſſary, that it was a cuſtomary expreſſion among them, without ſtations the world could not ſtand. For without ſacrifices, that is, the worſhip of God, the world would be undone; and ſacrifices could not be maintained without ſtations.

Ver. 7. And the drink-offering thereof ſhall be the fourth part part of a hin for the one lamb: In the holy place ſhalt thou cauſe the ſtrong wine to be poured out unto the Lord for a drink-offering.] The Hebrew word Schecar, commonly ſignifies any ſort of ſtrong drink, but here the nobleſt and moſt generous wine; for it was not lawful to uſe any other liquor in their ſacrifices. The Pagans had this reverence for their Gods, that they always offered to them the moſt excellent wine they had; which appears by thoſe words that occur ſo often in Homer, of mens pouring out upon their ſacrifices, ——— αἴθοπα οἶνον, black wine, or of the deepeſt colour, which was the richeſt of all growths. And Herodian, ſpeaking of the vaſt profuſeneſs of Heliogabalus, who offered hecatombs of oxen every morning, with great multitudes of ſheep, upon which he heaped all manner of ſpices, adds this alſo, (lib. 5.) οἶνόν τε τῷ παλαιοτάτῳ καὶ καλλίστῳ πολλὰς ἀμφορέας τῶν προχέων, &c. pouring out many flaggons of the oldeſt and moſt excellent wine on the altars; ſo that rivers of wine and blood were blended in one ſtream.

Ver. 9. And on the ſabbath day, two lambs of the firſt year without ſpot.] The meaning is not that whereas every morning and evening they offered one lamb, they ſhould therefore on the Sabbath-day offer two, but that there ſhould be two lambs offered on the Sabbath, over and above the daily offering, as appears from ver. 10. Whether one of them was to be offered in the morning, and the other added at the evening ſacrifice, is not ſaid; but it is moſt probable the ſacrifices on the Sabbath were ſo ordered. For the Jews ſay, that at the time of this additional ſacrifice in the morning of the Sabbath, they ſang at the temple the ſong Moſes, Deut. xxxii. dividing it into ſix parts, and ſinging one part every Sabbath; ſo that in ſix weeks they had finiſhed it, and then began again. And at the evening ſacrifice they ſang that ſong of his, Exod. xv. at which times the prieſts ſounded the trumpets three times more than they did at the ordinary ſongs.

——— And two tenth deals of flour for a meat-offering mingled with oyl, and the drink-offering thereof.] As the burnt-offerings were double on this day, ſo a double quantity of flour is ordered for the meat-offering which attended them (for only a tenth part of an ephah, ver. 5. was offered on other days) and conſequently there was as much more oyl and wine than was daily uſed. And here it may be proper to obſerve, that as ſoon as the drink-offering was poured out, the ſong before-mentioned began, with the trumpets and other inſtruments of muſick; but not till then; for the burnt-offering was not perfect, till the drink-offering, which was to accompany it, was offered; and whereby it was compleated.

Ver. 10. This is the burnt-offering of every Sabbath, beſide the continual burnt-offering and his drink-offering.] The daily ſacrifice was not to be omitted on the Sabbath, but this was to be added to it; and thence, by the Jews, called Muſaph. Of which ſort there were ſeven more; which were to be added to the ſacrifice of the day; viz. that in the new moon, ver. 11. at the paſſover, ver. 19. and the feaſt of Pentecoſt, ver. 26, in the beginning of the year, chap. xxix. ver. 1. on the day of expiation, ver. 7. On the feaſt of tabernacles there were peculiar ſacrifices for ſeven days together, Lev. xxiii. 35. and on the laſt day of the feaſt another, Numb. xxix. 35, 36, 37. All theſe were called Muſaphim, or additional ſacrifices to the daily ſacrifice.

Ver. 11. And in the beginning of your months ye ſhall offer a burnt-offering unto the Lord.] This ſolemn ſacrifice ſeems to have been ordained by God, to prevent the idolatry which was uſual among the Gentiles; who worſhipped the new moon with great rejoicings when it firſt appeared. Otherwiſe the firſt day of every month was no feſtival; but only a day on which extraordinary ſacrifices were offered, with the ſound of trumpets, as ſeems to be directed, chap. x. ver. 10. which was uſual at all ſolemn ſacrifices, otherwiſe the feaſt with blowing of trumpets was only on the new moon of the ſeventh month, and no other. And therefore it is obſervable, that there is no mention made of the firſt day of the month among the feſtivals appointed in Lev. xxiii. and conſequently ſervile work was lawful on this day; and nothing more required but only the following ſacrifices. The Jews at this day ſay, this ſolemnity was appointed rather for the women than the men, (for which they give a fabulous reaſon) who are bound to abſtain from all works; but the men only from the moſt laborious, ſuch as plowing the ground, &c.

———Two young bullocks, and one ram, ſeven lambs of the firſt year without ſpot.] All theſe were burnt-offerings, which were offered beſide the daily ſacrifice, and beſide the two lambs, if the firſt day of the month happened to be a ſabbath. In which caſe, and all others, a complication of ſolemnities became neceſſary on the ſame day; the daily ſacrifice was offered firſt, and then the reſt of the ſacrifices peculiar for that day, were to be performed, every one in their order. If the ſabbath, and new moon, for inſtance, and the feaſt of trumpets, fell out on the ſame day, they began with the daily morning ſacrifice; after which, followed the ſacrifices proper to the ſabbath; and, after that, the ſacrifice appointed on the new moon; and then, thoſe that belonged to the feaſt of trumpets: And all was concluded with the evening ſacrifice, as Abarbinel obſerves, in his Preface to the book of Leviticus.

Ver. 15. And one kid of the goats for a ſin-offering unto the Lord.] It is well obſerved, by Grotius, that theſe words, "unto the Lord," were added, to put them in mind, at this time, of the right object of worſhip, when they were in danger to offer ſacrifice to the moon, after the manner of the Heathens. This is the more to be regarded, becauſe a goat being appointed to be offered at two other ſolemnities, and to be offered for a ſin-offering, ver. 22, 30. it is not ſaid, "unto the Lord," tho certainly ſo intended; becauſe there was no danger, at thoſe times, to direct their ſacrifices to a wrong object, as there was upon the new moon, when the Heathens offered a goat to that planet, it being an animal whoſe horns reſemble thoſe of a new moon. R. Bechai long ago obſerved this: "A goat, ſaith he, was offered to extirpate "the religion of thoſe who worſhipped the moon; which "makes the Scripture ſay expreſly, unto the Lord.' And Maimonides more largely, in his More Nevoch. p. 3. cap. 46. where, after he had taken notice of the difference between ſin-offerings and burnt-offerings, the latter of which, being wholly burnt, might be properly ſaid to be unto the Lord; whereas ſin-offerings were commonly eaten by the prieſts: He adds, That this ſin-offering is peculiarly ſaid to be "unto the Lord," leſt any one ſhould think this goat to be a ſacrifice to the moon, after the manner of the Egyptians: Which was not neceſſary to be ſaid of the goats offered at other ſolemn times, becauſe they were not in the beginning of the month, nor diſtinguiſhed from other days by any natural ſign, but only by the appointment of the law; which uſes theſe words concerning this goat peculiarly, to eraſe out of mens thoughts thoſe inveterate and pernicious opinions of the Gentiles, who had long ſacrificed to the moon at this time, as they did to the ſun at his riſing, and when he entered into the ſeveral ſigns.

Ver. 24. After this manner ye ſhall offer daily throughout the ſeven days.] Upon every one of the days of unleavened bread, ver. 17. which, tho' it proved very expenſive, was yet a juſt acknowledgment of God's wonderful goodneſs to them, in bringing them out of the land of Egypt, with all their flocks and herds; which was the foundation of all their happineſs afterward, by making them a free people.

———The meat of my ſacrifice made by fire.] Here is the very ſame word with that ver. 2. where this ſacrifice is called his lechem, which we there tranſlate his bread, but here, very properly, his meat, or food; which was ſet upon his table (the altar) every day, and by his fire from heaven conſumed; which, according to the language of men, was called "his eating of it:" As the Heathen gods alſo, are ſaid "to eat the fat of their ſacrifices," Deut xxxii. 38.

Ver. 26. Alſo the day of the firſt-fruits.] Called "the "feaſt of harveſt, the firſt-fruits of their labours," Exod. xxiii. 16. and "the feaſt of weeks," when they brought the firſt-fruits of wheat-harveſt, Exod. xxxiv. 22. Deut. xvi. 10. The Jews, in their writings, commonly call this feaſt by the name of Atzereth, which is the appellation given it by the Chaldee paraphraſe upon this place; tho' Abarbinel obſerves, that this alone, of all the three great feaſts, is never called ſo in the holy Scripture. It is hard, therefore, to tell, why the Jews call it ſo in a ſingular manner; but our learned Dr. Lightfoot has made ſeveral probable conjectures about it; one of which (and moſt pertinent to this place) is, becauſe there was a reſtraint, as the word ſignifies, upon the people, from bringing their firſt-fruits, till this feaſt. If any did, they were laid by till this day came, chap. xiv. ſect. 4.

———When ye bring a new meat-offering unto the Lord after your weeks be out.] That is, the ſeven weeks, which they were to number from the morrow after the ſabbath, Lev. xxiii. 15. i. e. after the firſt day of unleavened bread: When they offered another ſort of firſt-fruits, (which muſt be carefully diſtinguiſhed from thoſe here mentioned) namely, of the barley-harveſt, which began at the Paſſover; when they were to bring "a ſheaf of their firſt-fruits unto the prieſt," Lev. xxiii. 10. the preſenting of which ſheaf was an introduction to the harveſt, and procured them liberty to begin to put the ſickle into the corn; which now, after ſeven weeks, they reaped, and carried in at this feaſt, when they brought theſe new firſt-fruits unto the Lord. All which is a deſcription of that which, in the New Teſtament, is called the feaſt of Pentecoſt; being fifty days, as we read in Leviticus, after the other great feaſt.

It is obſervable, that there is not ſo much as one peace offering ordered in all this chapter, which was a ſort of ſacrifice that was moſt for the benefit of thoſe who brought them to the altar; but all burnt-offerings (except a few ſin-offerings) which were wholly for the honour of God, and acknowledgment of his ſovereign dominion over them, and of the duty they owed him. And as the ſin-offerings were ſhadows of that great ſacrifice of God's own ſon, which was one day to be offered for the ſins of men, out of his infinite love to them; ſo the whole burnt-offerings (which were always of the moſt perfect creatures, the fineſt flour, the choiceſt fruits of the earth, and the beſt liquor) were ſhadows of that excellent degree of piety which the ſon of God intended to bring into the world; and which would prompt mankind, out of a meer motive of love to God, to devote themſelves entirely to him, and conſecrate all they had, even their own lives, to his ſervice.

CHAP. XXIX.

12 ¶ And on the fifteenth day of the ſeventh month, ye ſhall have an holy convocation; ye ſhall do no ſervile work, and ye ſhall keep a feaſt unto the LORD ſeven days.

13 And ye ſhall offer a burnt-offering, a ſacrifice made by fire, of a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD; thirteen young bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the firſt year, they ſhall be without blemiſh:

14 And their meat-offering ſhall be of flour mingled with oyl, three tenth-deals unto every bullock of the thirteen bullocks, two tenth-deals to each ram of the two rams,

17 ¶ And

17 ¶ And on the ſecond day ye ſhall offer twelve young bullocks, two rams, fourteen lambs of the firſt year without ſpot:

18 And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, ſhall be according to their number, after the manner:

19 And one kid of the goats for a ſin-offering, beſide the continual burnt-offering, and the meat-offering thereof, and their drink-offerings.

20 ¶ And on the third day eleven bullocks, two rams, fourteen lambs of the firſt year without blemiſh:

21 And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, ſhall be according to their number, after the manner:

22 And one goat for a ſin-offering, beſide the continual burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

23 ¶ And on the fourth day ten bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the firſt year without blemiſh;

24 Their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, ſhall be according to their number after the manner:

25 And one kid of the goats for a ſin-offering, beſide the continual burnt-offering, his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

26 ¶ And on the fifth day nine bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the firſt year without ſpot:

27 And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, ſhall be according to their number, after the manner:

28 And one goat for a ſin-offering, beſide the continual burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

29 ¶ And on the ſixth day eight bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the firſt year without blemiſh:

31 And one goat for a ſin-offering, beſide the continual burnt-offering, his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

32 ¶ And on the ſeventh day ſeven bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the firſt year without blemiſh:

33 And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, ſhall be according to their number, after the manner:

34 And one goat for a ſin-offering, beſide the continual burnt-offering, his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

35 ¶ On the eighth day ye ſhall have a ſolemn aſſembly: ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein.

36 But ye ſhall offer a burnt-offering, a ſacrifice made by fire, of a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD; one bullock, one ram, ſeven lambs of the firſt year without blemiſh:

37 Their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullock, for the ram, and for the lambs, ſhall be according to their number, after the manner:

38 And one goat for a ſin-offering, beſide the continual burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

39 Theſe things ye ſhall do unto the LORD in your ſet feaſts, beſides your vows, and your free-will-offerings, for your burnt-offerings, and for your meat-offerings, and for your drink-offerings, and for your peace-offerings.

40 And Moſes told the children of Iſrael according to all that the LORD commanded Moſes.

Ver. 1. And in the ſeventh month.] Which was anciently the firſt month of the year; but now the ſeventh, computing from that wherein the Paſſover was kept; which, for a ſpecial reaſon, was made the firſt. See Exod. x. 2.

——— On the firſt day of the month ye ſhall have an holy convocation, ye ſhall do no ſervile work.] So it was ordained before, in Lev. xxiii. 24, 25.

——— It is a day of blowing of trumpets unto you.] In that place of Leviticus, it is called a memorial of blowing of trumpets from morning till evening; which the Jews fancy was to awaken them to repentance, upon the great day of expiation, which followed on the tenth of this month. But it was manifeſtly intended, quite contrary, to excite them to joy and gladneſs: For zichron teruah is a memorial of jubilation, triumph, and ſhouting for joy; the word teruah being never uſed in Scripture, but for a ſound, or ſhout of gladneſs; as the Chaldee word jabbaba, which is here uſed by the paraphraſt, always ſignifies. And this agrees with their notion, who think it was a ſpecial remembrance of the creation of the world, at which the angels rejoiced. Or, it might be ordained to excite the people to a grateful remembrance of all God's benefits the year paſt. Whatſoever was the cauſe, certain it is, this ſeventh month was very famous on this account, that more ſolemn days were to be kept in it, than in all the year beſide; and, on that account, the people might be awakened, by this blowing of trumpets, to obſerve them a-right.

Ver. 7. And ye ſhall have on the tenth day of this month an holy convocation.] This ſolemn aſſembly is ordered twice before, in the book of Leviticus, chap. xvi. ver. 29, and chap. xxiii. ver. 27. and here repeated, perhaps, for the ſake of Eleazar and Joſhua, who were newly advanc'd to their ſeveral offices, that they might take ſpecial notice of it, and cauſe it to be obſerved.

Ver. 11. One kid of the goats for a ſin-offering, and the continual burnt-offering, and the meat-offerings of it, and their drink-offerings.] Theſe were no more to be omitted on the great day of atonement, than on any other day; but the ſervice of the day was to commence with the continual burnt-offering; and then followed the burnt-offerings, with the meat and drink-offerings belonging to them, and the ſin-offering here preſcribed; and then the ſacrifice of atonement, and all that is ordered in the xvith chapter of Leviticus, for the expiation of the ſins of all the people of Iſrael: Which ſacrifice the preſent Jews now wanting, and yet being ſenſible of the neceſſity of ſome ſatisfaction, but not believing in our bleſſed Saviour, who hath fully made it for all mankind, they are in a miſerable perplexity, and are reduced to the moſt wretched ſhifts to deviſe ſomething to ſupply the place of the ſacrifice of atonement, which was wont to be made for them. One is their own death; it being the continual prayer of every one of them, upon their death-bed, Let my death be the expiation for my ſins. Another (which is ſo abſurd, that Leo Modina declares they do not uſe it now in Italy, nor in the eaſtern countries) is the killing of a white cock (if one can be procured) by the men, and a white hen by the women, on the eve of this day, ſaying, Let this cock be an exchange for me; let it come in my ſtead; let it be my expiation; let it die, but I and Iſrael live happily: as Buxtorf ſhews, in his Synagog. Judaica, cap. 25. which we ſhould not here mention, were it not to ſhew, that they have the very ſame notion ſtill of a ſacrifice for ſin (even now that they can only make an imitation of it) which we have of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, who was ſubſtituted in our place, and offered himſelf to God in our ſtead; and that the oblation offered up inſtead of a ſinner, ought to be pure and innocent.

Ver. 12. And on the fifteenth day of the ſeventh month, ye ſhall have an holy convocation; ye ſhall do no ſervile work, and ye ſhall keep a feaſt unto the Lord ſeven days.] Namely, the feaſt of tabernacles, Lev. xxiii. 34. which was after the harveſt and vintage, Deut. xvi. 13. and kept ſeven days with joy and gladneſs of heart; but they were not obliged to abſtain from ſervile work all this time, but only on the firſt day, and on the ſeventh.

Ver. 13. And ye ſhall offer a burnt-offering, a ſacrifice made by fire, of a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord.] The ſame kind of ſacrifice which was preſcribed on the other feſtivals, to be offered up wholly in honour to God: But here is a far larger proportion than in any other ſolemnity.

———Thirteen young bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the firſt year, &c.] On the other feſtivals two bullocks ſufficed, chap. xxviii. 11, 19, 27. and on the feſtival in the beginning of this month, only one was appointed, but here are thirteen; and ſo they continued to be offered ſeven days ſucceſſively, with the decreaſe only of one bullock every day, till on the ſeventh day, only ſeven bullocks were offered, which, in all, made ſeventy. The rams, alſo, and the lambs, were in a double proportion to what was uſual, throughout the whole feſtival; which occaſioned a vaſt expence, but which was rendered more eaſy at this time of the year, than at any other, becauſe now their barns were full, and their wine-preſſes overflowed; and their hearts might well be ſuppoſed to be more enlarged than at other ſeaſons, in gratitude to God for his great benefits. Yet this very groſs, troubleſome, and expenſive way of ſerving God, made the beſt men among them groan, and long for the coming of Chriſt, in whoſe days, their own doctors ſay, "no ſacrifices ſhall "remain, but thoſe of thankſgiving, and praiſe, and "prayer." With which they have been forced to be content for above ſixteen hundred years; and inſtead of theſe additional ſacrifices unto the daily, have added peculiar prayers (which they alſo call Muſaphim) unto the common prayers they uſed every day.

Ver. 40. And Moſes told the children of Iſrael according to all that the Lord commanded Moſes.] He acquainted all the people (by the heads of their tribes, perhaps, of whom we read in the beginning of the next chapter) with all theſe commands of God, which concerned his worſhip and ſervice.

CHAP. XXX.

1 Vows are not to be broken. 3 The exception of a maids vow, 6 of a wives, 9 of a widows, or her that is divorced.

AND Moſes ſpake unto the heads of the tribes concerning the children of Iſrael, ſaying, This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded.

2 If a man vow a vow unto the LORD, or ſwear an oath to bind his ſoul with a bond; he ſhall not break his word, he ſhall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.

3 If a woman alſo vow a vow unto the LORD, and bind herſelf by a bond, being in her fathers houſe in her youth;

4 And her father hear her vow, and her bond wherewith ſhe hath bound her ſoul, and her father ſhall hold his peace at her: then all her vows ſhall ſtand, and every bond wherewith ſhe hath bound her ſoul, ſhall ſtand.

5 But if her father diſallow her in the day that he heareth; not any of her vows or of her bonds wherewith ſhe hath bound her ſoul, ſhall ſtand: and the LORD ſhall forgive her, becauſe her father diſallowed her.

6 And if ſhe had at all an husband when ſhe vowed, or uttered ought out of her lips, wherewith ſhe bound her ſoul;

7 And her husband heard it, and held his peace at her in the day that he heard it: then her vows ſhall ſtand, and her bonds wherewith ſhe hath bound her ſoul, ſhall ſtand.

8 But if her husband diſallow her on the day that he heard it; then he ſhall make her vow which ſhe vowed, and that which ſhe uttered with her lips, wherewith ſhe bound her ſoul, of none effect: and the LORD ſhall forgive her.

9 But every vow of a widow, and of her that is divorced, wherewith they have bound their ſouls, ſhall ſtand againſt her.

10 And if ſhe vowed in her husbands houſe, or bound her ſoul by a bond with an oath;

11 And her husband heard it, and held his peace at her, and diſallowed her not: then all her vows ſhall ſtand, and every bond wherewith ſhe bound her ſoul, ſhall ſtand.

12 But if her husband hath utterly made them void on the day he heard them; then whatſoever proceeded out of her lips con-concerning her vows, or concerning the bond of her ſoul, ſhall not ſtand: her husband hath made them void, and the LORD ſhall forgive her.

13 Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the ſoul, her husband may eſtabliſh it, or her husband may make it void.

14 But if her husband altogether hold his peace at her from day to day; thenhe eſtabliſheth all her vows, or all her bonds which are upon her: he confirmeth them, becauſe he held his peace at her, in the day that he heard them.

15 But if he ſhall any ways make them void after that he hath heard them; then he ſhall bear her iniquity.

16 Theſe are the ſtatutes which the LORD commanded Moſes between a man and his wife, between the father and his daughter being yet in her youth in her fathers houſe.

Ver. 1. And Moſes ſpake unto the heads of the tribes.] It was uſual for extraordinary aſſemblies of theſe, or other great men, to be convened upon ſpecial occaſions, as Mr. Selden obſerves, lib. ii. De Synedr. cap. xiv. n. 4. who are ſometimes called, as they are here, "the heads "of all the tribes, and the elders," Deut. v. 23. and in other places, "the heads of the people," Deut. xxx. 5. and it is commonly ſaid, by the Hebrew doctors, concerning ſuch aſſemblies, that "whereſoever the children "of Iſrael were met together, or the greater part of them, "there the SCHECHINAH (that is, the Divine Majeſty, "or the Holy Ghoſt, as they ſometimes ſpeak) was wont "to reſt."

Ver. 2. If a man.] It is reaſonable to think, that this includes the other ſex alſo, provided they be in their own power, and not ſubject to another, and enjoy a ſanity of mind.

——Vow a vow unto the Lord.] Make a promiſe to God of ſomething intended for his honour and ſervice; for that ſeems to be meant by the words, "unto the "Lord:" As, that he, for inſtance, will offer ſome ſacrifice at the feaſt above-mentioned, more than is preſcribed; or afflict his ſoul on ſome other day, beſide the day of atonement. See ver. 13.

——Or ſwear an oath to bind his ſoul with a bond.] Whether it be a ſimple vow, or bound, alſo, with a ſolemn oath; which created a double obligation, by calling God to witneſs the ſincerity of his intentions.

——He ſhall not break his word.] In the Hebrew it is, "he ſhall not profane his word;" for it being ſolemnly paſſed to God, it rendered the perſon vile and contemptible, if he did not keep it. The Jewiſh doctors very prudently adviſe their ſcholars not to accuſtom themſelves to make vows, but to reſt contented with performing what the law expreſly commands, and to abſtain from what it forbids; but if they had entered into ſuch vows, they were then to look upon it as a high affront to God not to perform them.

——He ſhall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.] If the thing be lawful, and practicable. And if he appointed no time for the performance of it, he was to think himſelf obliged to ſet about it without the leaſt delay, Deut. xxii. 21.

Ver. 3. If a woman alſo vow a vow unto the Lord.] As moſt interpreters think the word man, in the foregoing verſe, comprehends women, who were in as perfect liberty as the man he ſpeaks of; ſo the word woman here, comprehends all men, who are in the ſame circumſtances with thoſe women, whom he here directs in their vows; and conſiders them in a threefold ſtate; namely, their ſtate of virginity, their ſtate of marriage, and their ſtate of widowhood.

——And bind herſelf by a bond, being in her fathers houſe, in her youth.] That is, being a part of his family, and ſtill under his government, and not married; for the fathers power laſts no longer, as Grotius obſerves, lib. 2. de Jure Belli & Pacis, cap. v. n. 7. In which condition likewiſe are all ſons, who remain in their fathers family, undiſpoſed of in marriage; and all ſervants, who are manifeſtly in ſubjection to their maſters: and therefore could no more reſolve to do what they pleaſed, than the women here mentioned.

Ver. 4. And her father heareth her vow, and her bond wherewith ſhe hath bound herſelf.] The firſt of theſe may relate to her ſimple vows; and the next to an oath wherewith ſhe binds it, to make it firmer; which her father is ſuppoſed to hear, either when ſhe ſpake the words, or when ſhe acquainted him with her vow, as in duty ſhe was obliged to do.

——And her father ſhall hold his peace at her.] If he did not declare that he diſallowed what ſhe had promiſed, it was ſuppoſed he conſented to it; unleſs he ſaid he would take time to conſider, and neither allow or diſallow it for the preſent; in which caſe, in all reaſon, ſhe was to wait for his reſolution.

——Then all her vows ſhall ſtand, &c.] It was not in his power afterwards to diſannul any of them, if he did not contradict them when he was told of them, or after the time he had taken for deliberation.

Ver. 5. But if her father diſallow her in the day that he heareth; not any of her vows, or her bonds, wherewith ſhe hath bound her ſoul, ſhall ſtand.] Though ſhe had bound her vows with an oath, they were not to be performed, when her father had declared his will to the contrary.

——And the Lord ſhall forgive her.] The non-performance of her vow ſhall not be imputed to her as a ſin.

——Becauſe her father diſallowed her.] Whoſe conſent was ſuppoſed to be neceſſary, before the vow could be binding; ſhe being, while a part of his family, under his power, and not her own. Some have fancied, that when her father was dead, the vow revived, becauſe then ſhe was at her own diſpoſal: But it is plain, her father wholly vacated the vow, when he did not approve it; ſo that it could not recover a force it never had, being made without his conſent. The ſame is to be ſaid of a guardian, who was ſuppoſed to be in the place of a father, when he died and left his children to his care. And this power was fit to be reſerved to parents (as the learned Puffendorf obſerves) not only leſt women, in their imprudent years, ſhould undo themſelves, by vowing more than their fortunes could bear, but alſo leſt the paternal eſtate ſhould be burdened by ſuch vows, or the neceſſary affairs of the family hindered. So that this power did not flow from poſitive laws, but from natural reaſon; no perſon, who is ſubject to another, having any right to diſpoſe of thoſe things which are under that power to which that perſon is ſubject.

Ver. 6. And if ſhe had at all an husband when ſhe vowed, &c.] If ſhe was married, tho' ſtill in her father's houſe, when ſhe made this vow, then it was to be conſidered, not what her father, but her husband (under whoſe power ſhe was) ſhould determine concerning it.

Ver. 7. And her husband heard it.] Either was preſent when ſhe ſpake it, or ſhe told it to him.

——And he held his peace in the day that he heard it.] Said nothing to ſignify his diſallowance of it; then her vows ſhall ſtand as before, ver. 4.

Ver. 8. But if her husband diſallow her, &c.] See ver. 5. where there is the ſame caſe of a daughter under the power of her father, as here a wife under the power of her husband.

Ver. 9. But every vow of a widow, or of her that is divorced, wherewith ſhe hath bound her ſoul, ſhall ſtand againſt her.] The reaſon of this is ſo plain, that one would think it needed not have been mentioned, becauſe ſuch women were wholly in their own power, being free from their husbands. Therefore, it is very probable, Moſes ſpeaks here of a widow, or divorced woman, returned to her father's houſe (as the manner frequently was, Lev. xxii. 13.)

who might be ſuppoſed to recover his ancient power over her, to diſannul her vows, as he might before ſhe was married: which is here abſolutely condemned; for though ſhe lived with him, ſhe was miſtreſs of her own conduct (as we now ſpeak) and might diſpoſe of herſelf and her goods as ſhe pleaſed, without his conſent.

Ver. 10. And if ſhe vowed in her husbands houſe, or bound her ſelf by a bond with an oath.] That is, if ſhe engaged herſelf in a vow, and perhaps confirmed it with an oath, while ſhe and her husband lived together, or before ſhe was divorced from him.

Ver. 11. And her husband heard it and held his peace at her, and diſallowed her not, then all her vows ſhall ſtand, &c.] She was bound in this caſe to make them good after he was dead, or ſhe was divorced from him.

Ver. 12. But if her husband hath utterly made them void on the day he heard them, &c.] In that caſe, when ſhe was in her own power, by his death, or by a divorce, ſhe was not bound to make them good; becauſe when ſhe made them, her husband, under whoſe power ſhe then was, had utterly made them void.

Ver. 13. Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the ſoul.] This ſhews what the matter of theſe vows frequently was; namely, to abſtain from ſuch or ſuch meats, tho' in themſelves lawful; or to faſt, and eat nothing at all on other days, as well as on the great day of expiation; which was the only faſt ordained by the law of Moſes.

—— Her husband may eſtabliſh it, or her husband may make it void.] There is an excellent diſcourſe of Maimonides, in his More Nevochim, p. iii. cap. 48. to ſhew this is moſt reaſonable; where he obſerves, that as the law prohibited ſome meats, ſo pious people ſometimes vowed to forbear ſuch as were not prohibited; that by theſe means they might learn contentment with a little, or habituate themſelves to continence, and learn to reſtrain an immoderate appetite. From whence the ſaying among the doctors, that vows are the hedge of ſeparation; that is, they are a great guard to a holy life. But ſince, through the vehemence of their affections and paſſions, many women would have a tendency to act with inconſideration, if vows were in their power; great inconveniencies, diſſentions and confuſions might ariſe in families; whilſt this ſort of meat is lawful to the husband, but not to the wife; it is permitted to the daughter, but prohibited to the mother. For which reaſon, ſaith he, this authority was given to the governors of families; in all things to order them, as they ſaw would be for their profit.

Ver. 14. But if her husband altogether held his peace at her, from day to day, then he eſtabliſheth all her vows, &c.] His ſilence was to be interpreted a conſent to allow what ſhe vowed. There was no need to add the contrary; which is here to be underſtood: That if he ſaid he did not allow them, then they ſhould not bind her.

Ver. 15. But if he ſhall any ways make them void, after that he hath heard them.] If he ſhall hinder her from performing her vow, after he had given his conſent, by ſaying nothing againſt it, when he heard her make the vow.

—— Then he ſhall bear her iniquity.] God will puniſh him, not her, for not performing the vow. Paulus Fagius thinks the meaning is, that if the firſt day he heard of her vow he did not diſannul it, but attempted to do it the next day, or the third day after, he ſhould bear the blame, if the vow was not made good.

Ver. 16. Theſe are the ſtatutes which the Lord commanded Moſes between a man and his wife, between the father and his daughter, being yet in her youth, in her fathers houſe.] It is likely ſome differences aroſe in ſome families about theſe particulars; and therefore the preſent laws were made for ſettling the power of husbands over their wives, and that of parents over their children, while they were young, and continued to be part of their family.

CHAP. XXXI.

1 The Midianites are ſpoiled, and Balaam ſlain. 13 Moſes is wrath with the officers, for ſaving the women alive. 19 How the ſoldiers, with their captives and ſpoil, are to be purified. 25 The proportion whereby the prey is to be divided. 48 The voluntary oblation unto the treaſury of the Lord.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Avenge the children of Iſrael of the Midianites: afterward ſhalt thou be gathered unto thy people.

3 And Moſes ſpake unto the people, ſaying, Arm ſome of your ſelves unto the war, and let them go againſt the Midianites, and avenge the LORD of Midian.

4 Of every tribe a thouſand, throughout all the tribes of Iſrael, ſhall ye ſend to the war.

5 So there were delivered out of the thouſands of Iſrael, a thouſand of every tribe, twelve thouſand armed for war.

6 And Moſes ſent them to the war, a thouſand of every tribe, them and Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar the prieſt, to the war, with the holy inſtruments, and the trumpets to blow, in his hand.

7 And they warred againſt the Midianites, as the LORD commanded Moſes; and they ſlew all the males.

8 And they ſlew the kings of Midian, beſide the reſt of them that were ſlain; namely, Evi, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba, five kings of Midian: Balaam alſo the ſon of Beor they ſlew with the ſword.

9 And the children of Iſrael took all the women of Midian captives, and their little ones, and took the ſpoil of all their cattle, and all their flocks, and all their goods.

10 And they burnt all their cities wherein they dwelt, and all their goodly caſtles with fire.

11 And they took all the ſpoil, and all the prey, both of men and of beaſts.

12 And they brought the captives, and the prey, and the ſpoil unto Moſes and Eleazar the prieſt, and unto the congregation of the children of Iſrael, unto the camp at the plains of Moab, which are by Jordan near Jericho.

13 ¶ And Moſes and Eleazar the prieſt, and all the princes of the congregation, went forth to meet them without the camp.

14 And Moſes was wroth with the officers of the hoſt, with the captains over thouſands, ſands, and captains over hundreds, which came from the battle.

15 And Moſes ſaid unto them, Have ye ſaved all the women alive?

16 Behold, theſe cauſed the children of Iſrael, through the counſel of Balaam, to commit treſpaſs againſt the LORD in the matter of Peor, and there was a plague among the congregation of the LORD.

17 Now therefore kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him.

18 But all the women children that have not known a man by lying with him, keep alive for your ſelves.

19 And do ye abide without the camp ſeven days: whoſoever hath killed any perſon, and whoſoever hath touched any ſlain, purify both your ſelves, and your captives, on the third day, and on the ſeventh day:

20 And purify all your raiment, and all that is made of ſkins, and all work of goats hair, and all things made of wood.

21 ¶ And Eleazar the prieſt ſaid unto the men of war which went to the battle, This is the ordinance of the law which the LORD commanded Moſes;

22 Only the gold and the ſilver, the braſs, the iron, the tin, and the lead,

23 Every thing that may abide the fire, ye ſhall make it go through the fire, and it ſhall be clean: nevertheleſs it ſhall be purified with the water of ſeparation: and all that abideth not the fire, ye ſhall make go through the water.

24 And ye ſhall waſh your clothes on the ſeventh day, and ye ſhall be clean, and afterward ye ſhall come into the camp.

25 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

26 Take the ſum of the prey that was taken, both of man and of beaſt, thou, and Eleazar the prieſt, and the chief fathers of the congregation:

27 And divide the prey into two parts; between them that took the war upon them, who went out to battle, and between all the congregation.

28 And levy a tribute unto the LORD of the men of war, which went out to battle: one ſoul of five hundred, both of the perſons, and of the beeves, and of the aſſes, and of the ſheep.

29 Take it of their half, and give it unto Eleazar the prieſt, for an heave-offering of the LORD.

30 And of the children of Iſraels half, thou ſhalt take one portion of fifty, of the perſons, of the beeves, of the aſſes, and of the flocks, of all manner of beaſts, and give them unto the Levites, which keep the charge of the tabernacle of the LORD.

31 And Moſes and Eleazar the prieſt did as the LORD commanded Moſes.

32 And the booty, being the reſt of the prey which the men of war had caught, was ſix hundred thouſand and ſeventy thouſand and five thouſand ſheep,

33 And threeſcore and twelve thouſand beeves,

34 And threeſcore and one thouſand aſſes,

35 And thirty and two thouſand perſons in all, of women that had not known man by lying with him.

36 And the half which was the portion of them that went out to war, was in number three hundred thouſand and ſeven and thirty thouſand and five hundred ſheep;

37 And the LORDS tribute of the ſheep was ſix hundred and threeſcore and fifteen.

38 And the beeves were thirty and ſix thouſand, of which the LORDS tribute was threeſcore and twelve.

39 And the aſſes were thirty thouſand and five hundred, of which the LORDS tribute was threeſcore and one.

40 And the perſons were ſixteen thouſand, of which the LORDS tribute was thirty and two perſons.

41 And Moſes gave the tribute which was the LORDS heave-offering, unto Eleazar the prieſt, as the LORD commanded Moſes.

42 And of the children of Iſraels half which Moſes divided from the men that warred,

43 (Now the half that pertained unto the congregation, was three hundred thouſand and thirty thouſand and ſeven thouſand and five hundred ſheep,

44 And thirty and ſix thouſand beeves,

45 And thirty thouſand aſſes and five hundred,

46 And ſixteen thouſand perſons)

47 Even of the children of Iſraels half, Moſes took one portion of fifty, both of man man and of beaſt, and gave them unto the Levites, which kept the charge of the tabernacle of the LORD, as the LORD commanded Moſes.

48 ¶ And the officers which were over thouſands of the hoſt, the captains of thouſands and captains of hundreds, came near unto Moſes:

49 And they ſaid unto Moſes, Thy ſervants have taken the ſum of the men of war which are under our charge, and there lacketh not one man of us.

50 We have therefore brought an oblation for the LORD, what every man hath gotten, of jewels of gold, chains, and bracelets, rings, ear-rings, and tablets, to make an atonement for our ſouls before the LORD.

51 And Moſes and Eleazar the prieſt took the gold of them, even all wrought jewels.

52 And all the gold of the offering that they offered up to the LORD, of the captains of thouſands, and of the captains of hundreds, was ſixteen thouſand ſeven hundred and fifty ſhekels.

53 (For the men of war had taken ſpoil every man for himſelf)

54 And Moſes and Eleazar the prieſt took the gold of the captains of thouſands, and of hundreds, and brought it into the tabernacle of the congregation, for a memorial for the children of Iſrael before the LORD.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,] Not long before his death, as appears from the next verſe.

Ver. 2. Avenge the children of Iſrael of the Midianites.] After God had begun to execute Judgment at his own houſe, he likewiſe inflicted it upon thoſe idolatrous people who had been ſo preſumptuous as to rob him of the men he had conſecrated to himſelf. He therefore commanded the children of Iſrael to proceed with the utmoſt rigour againſt thoſe Midianites, who had ſpread ſuch odious ſnares in their way, and was pleaſed to make Moſes avenge the diſgrace of his people before he died.

The ſame reaſons which rendered the Moabites the object of the Iſraelites forbearance, ſeemed to plead in favour of the Midianites. Both of them deſcended from Abraham; the latter by Midian the ſon of Keturah, the wife of that patriarch; the former by Lot, his nephew. And the ſame reaſons that render'd the Midianites unworthy of any favour, ſeemed to ſpeak as ſeverely againſt the Moabites. The daughters of both theſe people had ſeduced the Iſraelites to the worſhip of Baal-peor, and yet God puniſhed the Midianites without recalling the indulgence he had granted to the Moabites. Some circumſtance, which the ſacred hiſtory has ſuppreſſed, has without doubt occaſioned this diſtinction; and it is probable, that the Midianites contributed, more than the Moabites, to the diſobedience of the children of Iſrael.

Sixteen thouſand of the Midianites taken priſoners in the war which we are preparing to relate, afford us a ſufficient proof of the ſtrength of that nation, and that the laws of prudence made it neceſſary they ſhould not be attack'd but by numerous armies. But a nation favoured by Heaven, and which ſaw the God of battle at their head, had a method of fighting ſuperior to all human prudence. It pleaſed God that Moſes ſhould command but a ſmall army in this expedition, in order to make it evident that the victory was owing to the Lord of hoſts alone. A body of twelve thouſand men was ſent againſt Midian, being a detachment of one thouſand out of every tribe. Phineas was probably their general; at leaſt the words of Moſes ſeem to intimate as much. Beſide, the commiſſion to revenge the injury offered to the Iſraelites, could not be intruſted in a more proper hand than his, who had begun to execute it with ſo much zeal. However, the text in the original is dubious: and accordingly, the interpreters are divided about it. The verſion from the Hebrew runs thus: "Moſes ſent them to war, a "thouſand of every tribe, them and Phineas the ſon of "Eleazar the prieſt, to the war, with the holy inſtruments, "and the trumpets to blow in his hand," numb. ver. 6.

This ambiguity has made it a queſtion, whether Phineas was ſent to command thoſe troops, or whether he was only to inſpire them with courage at the ſight of the ſacred veſſels, and with the ſound of the trumpets?

Thoſe who maintain that he exerciſed the province of a commander, found their ſuppoſition upon the ſilence of the ſcripture, in relation to any other general than Phineas, who was to head the army againſt the foe. For where is the hiſtorian, ſay they, who in giving an account of any army, could forget to make mention of the general?

Thoſe who are of the other opinion, offer to our conſideration, if not ſuperior or better reaſons, at leaſt many more in number. They affirm, for inſtance, that there is no example of a prieſt being ever placed at the head of an army. There were indeed always ſome of that function who attended the troops; but it was only for performing their religious offices, and for ſummoning the enemy to implore the mercy of the Iſraelites. To this objection the other ſide reply, that the miniſtry of Phineas was altogether extraordinary; that we are not to judge of this holy perſon by the ordinary cuſtom; and that as the zeal he teſtified in piercing Zimri and the Midianitiſh woman with his own hand, was not the leſs meritorious of praiſe for having exceeded the ordinary laws; ſo this prieſt might have been appointed commander of an army upon ſo extraordinary an occaſion, contrary to the uſual cuſtom.

It is likewiſe alledged in oppoſition to the firſt of theſe opinions, that the commiſſion of Phineas ſeems to have been reſtrained to the bearing of the ſacred veſſels, and to the ſounding of the trumpet. But as on the one hand, it can't be denied that this commiſſion was given to him; ſo neither can it be proved, that it was oppoſite to the other.

Nor is it any more determined, what were thoſe ſacred veſſels that are mentioned here: Perhaps the hiſtorian meant nothing more than the ſacred trumpets, which, he ſays, were in the hands of Phineas, or perhaps he alſo meant the ark; and in this caſe, Phineas would have been attended with ſeveral of the Levites. The Chaldee paraphraſe gives this explanation of the ſacred text; "Moſes "ſent Phineas the ſon of Eleazar to the war, and the "Urim and Thummim, in order to conſult the Lord with "them." Spencer adopts the ſame opinion, and declares that Eleazar ſinking under a weight of years and infirmities, was no longer in a condition to diſcharge the function annexed to his miniſtry, namely, to carry the Urim and Thummim; and that Phineas was ordered to go inſtead of his father. But if this ſhould be only a bare conjecture, it is yet certain, that the pontiffs had their vicars, or deputies, to ſupply their inability. And Maimonides, upon this head, furniſhes us with a remarkable paſſage: "In "caſe (ſays he) that the high prieſt ſhould happen to be "defiled, the practice was, to ſubſtitute a vicar, who offi-"ciated in his ſtead. This vicar was called his SECOND, "and uſed to ſucceed him. And he likewiſe had his ſub-"ordinate vicars, who acted with reſpect to him, as he "did with regard to the high prieſt.

The twelve thouſand men choſen out by Moſes, marched againſt the Midianites; and the battle they gave them may be rather conſidered as an execution of juſtice upon criminals, than any ordinary encounter. All the males of Midian, together with five kings, or governors of the Midianites, were ſlain with the edge of the ſword; and Balaam himſelf ſuſtained the ſame fate. We are unable to declare how this prophet, who was of Meſopotamia, and of whom the hiſtorian aſſerts, that he went his way, or returned to his his own country, happened to come into this of Midian. The Jews are of opinion, that he thought the defeat of the Iſraelites would be the puniſhment of that idolatry, into which he himſelf had been the occaſion of their being betrayed, and that he was deſirous of ſharing in their ſpoils.

The wives of the enemy, together with their little children, and all their cattle, fell into the hands of the Iſraelites; their cities, and fenced towns, were delivered up to the flames, and a general plunder was the conſequence of a general ſlaughter. All this is particularized in the chapter before us, but we think there are two obſervations neceſſary for the better explanation of it.

Firſt, The word all, upon this occaſion, as well as upon ſeveral others, ought not to be taken in the ſtricteſt ſenſe, and as if it admitted of no exception; here it only means the much greateſt number, and, without this obſervation, it would be impoſſible to reconcile what Moſes here relates; namely, that they ſlew all the males, ver. 7. with what we find in the book of Judges, which declares, "that the children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the "Lord: And the Lord delivered them into the hand of "Midian ſeven years," chap. vi. 1.

Secondly, There was ſomething very ſingular, with reſpect to the conduct which the people of God obſerved towards thoſe of Midian; nor can it be accounted for, either by thoſe directions which God had given, in relation to the wars which the Iſraelites were to wage againſt the ſeven nations, nor to thoſe rules that concerned their wars with other nations, and which were called, by the Hebrews, wars for the good of the commonwealth. The orders, in reſpect to theſe wars, were different: In relation to the firſt ſort, God commanded as follows, Deut. xx. 16, &c. "Of the cities of theſe people which "the Lord thy God doth give thee for an inheritance, "thou ſhalt ſave alive nothing that breatheth. But thou "ſhalt utterly deſtroy them —— that they teach you not "to do after all their abominations, which they have done "unto their gods, ſo ſhould you ſin againſt the Lord your "God." As for what related to other nations, this is the behaviour which the children of Iſrael were to obſerve toward them; "when thou comeſt nigh unto a city to "fight againſt it, then proclaim peace unto it. And it "ſhall be, if it make thee an anſwer of peace, and open to "thee, then it ſhall be, that all the people that is found "therein, ſhall be tributaries unto thee, and they ſhall "ſerve thee. And if it will make no peace with thee, but "will make war againſt thee, then thou ſhalt beſiege it. "And when the Lord thy God hath delivered it into thy "hands, thou ſhalt ſmite every male thereof with the edge "of the ſword. But the women, and the little ones, and "the cattle, and all that is in the city, even all the ſpoil "thereof, ſhalt thou take unto thy ſelf," Deut. xx. 10, 11, 12, &c.

It is not neceſſary to enquire, at preſent, into the meaning of theſe laws; and therefore we ſhall not determine whether the Iſraelites were obliged to perform theſe bloody executions in their utmoſt rigour, as the command of God ſeems poſitively to require; or whether the Divinity only gave them a right to this proceeding, after their conqueſts, but left them at liberty to ſpare whom they ſhould think fit, and, particularly, all thoſe who were willing to renounce their idolatry. The author of the book of Siphri is of this laſt opinion, and founds it upon that very reaſon which God himſelf alledges, when he commands them utterly to deſtroy the ſeven nations; namely, "leſt they "ſhould teach them to do after all their abominations." This ſeems to imply, that thoſe who repented of their idolatry, and would be converted, ſhould be exempted from ſuch rigorous treatment. The queſtion, however, at preſent, is, only to remove the difficulty already offered, and which conſiſts, in that the Midianites being none of the ſeven nations who were to undergo the ſeverity of theſe laws, did not yet appear to have partaken of the mildneſs of the other. We don't find that Moſes offered them peace, and that they refuſed it.

Might we not ſuppoſe that this law of mercy, which God gave, was to regulate the conduct of the Iſraelites, when the Divine Being himſelf did not ſubjoin an exception; but that, in this caſe, he expreſly ordered, that the Midianites ſhould be put to the ſword, and their cities reduced to aſhes?

The Iſraelites obeyed this law; for there was nothing in it contrary to their own inclinations: But they took pity of the Midianitiſh women, and carefully ſaved their lives; not looking upon them with that horror they ought to have had for ſuch ſeducers, but with a complaiſance that was owing to the remembrance of thoſe criminal pleaſures they had taſted with them.

This behaviour provok'd Moſes, and he made the heads of the people feel the effects of his indignation. "He "was wroth with the officers of the hoſt, with the cap-"tains over thouſands, and captains over hundreds, which "came from the battle. And he ſaid unto them, Have "ye ſaved the women alive? Behold, theſe cauſed the "children of Iſrael, through the counſel of Balaam, to "commit treſpaſs againſt the Lord in the matter of Peor," ver. 14, &c. Accordingly, this law-giver commanded them peremptorily to put to death all thoſe women who had ſeduced the Iſraelites by their beauty, and all the children that proceeded from the infamous commerce between them.

Perhaps Moſes followed ſome particular order which God had given him in this matter; but ſome commentators have thought that he would have merited praiſe for what he did, tho' God had not given any directions about that proceeding. There are, indeed, ſome caſes, in which the Deity does not think fit to give any poſitive directions, but expects that we our ſelves ſhould draw from the general rules, he has laid down, ſuch neceſſary conſequences for our behaviour, as are agreeable to our particular circumſtances, and this might be the caſe of the Iſraelites, who, undoubtedly, ought to have believed, that no objects could be more odious in the ſight of God, through the whole country of Midian, than thoſe impure and idolatrous women, who had ſeduced them into ſuch fatal offences.

After the ſeparation of what was prohibited to be kept of the plunder obtained in the war with the Midianites, God commanded that an account ſhould be taken, and a diviſion made of all that could be lawfully preſerved. The people obſerved the orders which he had made in this particular caſe: Neither can we infer from what was then practiſed, either that the like directions were given before, or ever obſerved afterwards. The firſt thing done here, was to divide the ſpoil into two equal parts, one of which was for the twelve thouſand men who had obtained the victory, and the other for the reſt of the people. Upon the firſt half, that is to ſay, the ſhare of the army, Moſes commanded them to levy "a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war which went "out to battle, one ſoul of five hundred, both of the "perſons, and of the beeves, and of the aſſes, and of "the ſheep—and to give it to Eleazar the prieſt, for an "heave-offering of the Lord, ver. 28, 29, &c." that is, to give it to the prieſts, who had no inheritance in Iſrael, becauſe God had ſaid, that he himſelf would be their lot and their inheritance, The like tribute was levied upon the peoples ſhare, and given to the Levites, who were alſo in the ſervice of God, and counted the officers of him that was the ſole king and general of the armies of Iſrael.

It was an ancient cuſtom in making war, to lay the plunder before the perſon who commanded the army; and when he had ſelected what pleaſed him beſt for his own ſhare, he diſtributed the remainder among the officers and ſoldiers.

We ſhall take it for granted therefore, that offering the tribute to the Lord, and giving it to the prieſts and Levites, was one and the ſame tranſaction, and it is not to be doubted, if we weigh theſe words of the hiſtory; "Moſes gave the tribute which was the Lord's heave-"offering, unto Eleazar the prieſt, as the Lord com-"manded Moſes. And of the children of Iſrael's half, "which Moſes divided from the men that warred—even "of the children of Iſrael's half, Moſes took one portion "of fifty, both of man, and of beaſt, and gave them unto "the Levites, who kept the charge of the tabernacle of "the Lord, ver. 41, &c." Thus there is no difficulty in the 40th verſe of this chapter, where it is ſaid, that "the Lord's tribute was thirty and two perſons." Theſe words at firſt ſeem to offer to the mind a notion of ſome ſacrifice, in which thoſe perſons were to have been offered up, or of ſome conſecration to have been made made thereof, for the ſervice of the temple. But theſe thirty two perſons were given for ſlaves to the prieſts.

There was alſo another kind of offering; for Moſes acquaints us, that after thoſe we have already mentioned, were preſented to the Lord in the perſon of the prieſts and Levites, the heads of the army came to him, and ſpake in the following manner; "Thy ſervants have taken "the ſum of the men of war, which are under our charge, "and there lacketh not one man of us, ver. 49, &c. that is to ſay, there did not periſh one ſingle Iſraelite in the engagement with thoſe of Midian. And in order to teſtify their gratitude for ſo ſignal and wonderful a mercy, they ſubjoined, "We have therefore brought an oblation "for the Lord, what every man hath gotten, of jewels, "of gold, chains and bracelets, rings, ear-rings, and "tablets, to make an attonement for our ſouls before the "Lord, ver. 50.

When this laſt offering was preſented to God, according to the intention of thoſe who tendered it, it was not diſtributed among the prieſts and Levites, but was devoted to the uſe of the tabernacle. We ought not, however, to conclude from this circumſtance, that the firſt contribution that was raiſed from the ſpoils was not appropriated to thoſe who miniſtred in holy things; for it is manifeſt, that thoſe firſt offerings, of which we have ſpoken before, and theſe latter were of a different kind. The former were taken from that part of the ſpoil which the twelve thouſand combatants had acquired in common, after the victory. The latter was ſeparated from that general maſs which was brought before Eleazar and Moſes, that the value and diviſion thereof might be made with exactneſs. The ſecond conſiſted of thoſe jewels of which the ſoldiers were not obliged to give any account, and of which it was ſaid, The men of war had taken ſpoil, every man for himſelf. The former was a tribute laid upon them by the command of God. The latter was a free gift; the ſame name was aſſigned to each; and both one and the other might be juſtly ſtiled, offerings made to the Lord.

The paraphraſe of the Targum of Jeruſalem upon theſe words, we have brought an oblation for the Lord, is ſomewhat ſingular. Moſes had ſhewn the reaſon of this latter offering to the Lord; namely, that by the muſter of the tribes which was made after the battle, it appeared that there lacked not one man: Which is thus explained by the paraphraſt. "We penetrated into the "chambers and cloſets of the kings of Midian; we found "there young damſels, abounding with charms; we took "away their ornaments from off their hands, their pen-"dants out of their ears, their bracelets from their arms, "their crochets from their breaſts, and their rings from their "fingers. But we did not caſt the leaſt laſcivious look "at them. Wherefore we hope, the oblation we now "make, will aſcend to heaven, againſt the day of the "great judgment, as an atonement made for our ſouls be-"fore the Lord."

It is not eaſy to miſtake more the ſenſe of an author, than Jonathan has done that of Moſes in this place. The army by offering theſe ſpoils to God, in conſequence of their devolving it to the tabernacle, did no more than what was performed at all times; namely, to depoſite monuments of gratitude in the temples of the gods, from whom the people thought they had received any ſignal favours. Thus, the ſword with which David ſlew Goliah, was depoſited in the ſame place where the ſacred veſtments were kept. The prodigal emperor Caracalla devoted to the god Serapis, that which he had made uſe of to kill Geta; and it was the cuſtom of the Heathens, to ſet aſide part of the plunder for the gods, before they diſtributed the reſt among the generals, the officers, and the ſoldiers. This portion was called Acrothinia, and is derived, as ſome critics think, from a word which ſignifies the top of a heap, becauſe they choſe what was deſtined for the gods from the plunder erected unto an heap or pile. The part of the ſpoils which they valued moſt, was what they took from the general of the enemies army: It was termed Eponumia; and according to the inſtitution of Romulus, they were devoted to Jupiter Feretrius. There were ſeveral methods of conſecrating to the gods, that ſhare of the booty which was deſtined for them. Sometimes it was burnt in honour of them; or, as we have ſaid already, depoſited in the temple. Hector vowed, that if he triumphed over his enemies, he would offer a like ſacrifice to Apollow. Virgil, in deſcribing the temple wherein Latinus gave audience to the ambaſſadors of Æneas, ſays, that one might ſee hanging up, chariots, whole ſets of armour, axes, plumes of feathers, lances, bucklers, maſts, and other parts of ſhips, and the like.

We have already obſerved, that the order which the Iſraelites followed in the diviſion of the ſpoils upon this occaſion, was ſomething ſingular, and that it had neither been practiſed before nor after in the like circumſtances. Abraham laid upon himſelf a much greater tribute, after the defeat of Chedorlaomer and his confederates; for he offered to God, in the perſon of his miniſter (Melchizedeck king of Salem) the tithes of all the ſpoils; whereas here, God only appropriates to himſelf one part in five hundred.

In other victories which God granted to his people, and which are mentioned in the ſacred hiſtory, we may ſee that the law of dividing the ſpoil, and of devoting ſome of it to the Lord was religiouſly obſerved. Judges ch. v. 30. 1 Sam. xxx. 20, &c.

When the children of Iſrael, grew weary of God for their king, and were deſirous of ſuch ſort of Kings ſet over them as their neighbouring nations had, they were ſoon made ſenſible, that the yokes of earthly monarchs were not ſo light and eaſy as that of their heavenly ſovereign. If we may believe what the Jews tell us, their kings had a vaſt ſhare of the ſpoils which were obtained in war. In the firſt place, they arrogated to themſelves, all that was called the treaſure of the conquered prince; and under this claſs was reckoned every thing that could contribute to the pomp and grandeur of a prince. After which, they divided the reſt into two equal parts, one of which belonged intirely to the ſovereign; and the other was divided equally among the ſoldiers. It was remarkable, that all thoſe who engaged in the expedition againſt the Midianites were obliged to abide without the camp ſeven days, if they had killed any perſon; and likewiſe whoever touched any ſlain; and that they were to purify both themſelves and their captives on the third and ſeventh days. They were alſo commanded to waſh their cloaths, and all the veſſels they had taken from the enemy. Thus Eleazar directed the people of the army; the gold, and the ſilver, the braſs, the iron, the tin, and the lead, every thing that may abide the fire, ye ſhall make it go through the fire, and it ſhall be clean: Nevertheleſs, it ſhall be purified with the water of ſeparation; and all that abideth not the fire, ye ſhall make go through the water, ver. 22. &c. The nature of which water, is deſcribed in Lev. xxi.

Spencer finds no law concerning theſe kinds of purifications in any of the books of Moſes, and offers this as a proof of his grand principle, namely, that moſt of the Moſaical rites were borrowed from thoſe of the Heathens. He makes mention of ſeveral of theſe purifications obſerved by them after a battle, notwithſtanding which, it is demonſtrable, that if Moſes did not here preſcribe particular rules to thoſe who returned from any military expedition, he had already given general directions, of which he now makes the application.

CHAP. XXXII.

1 The Reubenites and Gadites ſue for their inheritance on that ſide Jordan. 6 Moſes reproveth them. 16 They offer him conditions to his content. 33 Moſes aſſigneth them the land. 39 They conquer it.

NOW the children of Reuben and the children of Gad had a very great multitude of cattle: and when they ſaw the land of Jazer, and the land of Gilead, that, behold, the place was a place for cattle;

2 The children of Gad, and the children of Reuben came and ſpake unto Moſes, and and to Eleazar the prieſt, and unto the princes of the congregation, ſaying,

3 Ataroth, and Dibon, and Jazer, and Nimrah, and Heſhbon, and Elealeh, and Shebam, and Nebo, and Beon;

4 Even the country which the LORD ſmote before the congregation of Iſrael, is a land for cattle, and thy ſervants have cattle.

5 Wherefore, ſaid they, If we have found grace in thy ſight, let this land be given unto thy ſervants for a poſſeſſion, and bring us not over Jordan.

6 ¶ And Moſes ſaid unto the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, Shall your brethren go to war, and ſhall ye ſit here?

7 And wherefore diſcourage ye the heart of the children of Iſrael from going over into the land which the LORD hath given them?

8 Thus did your fathers, when I ſent them from Kadeſh-barnea to ſee the land.

9 For when they went up unto the valley of Eſchol, and ſaw the land, they diſcouraged the heart of the children of Iſrael, that they ſhould not go into the land which the LORD had given them.

10 And the LORDs anger was kindled the ſame time, and he ſware, ſaying,

11 Surely none of the men that came up out of Egypt, from twenty years old and upward, ſhall ſee the land which I ſware unto Abraham, unto Iſaac, and unto Jacob; becauſe they have not wholly followed me:

12 Save Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh the Kenezite, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun: for they have wholly followed the LORD.

13 And the LORDs anger was kindled againſt Iſrael, and he made them wander in the wilderneſs forty years, until all the generation that had done evil in the ſight of the LORD was conſumed.

14 And behold, ye are riſen up in your fathers ſtead, an increaſe of ſinful men, to augment yet the fierce anger of the LORD toward Iſrael.

15 For if ye turn away from after him, he will yet again leave them in the wilderneſs, and ye ſhall deſtroy all this people.

16 ¶ And they came near unto him, and ſaid, We will build ſheep-folds here for our cattle, and cities for our little ones.

17 But we our ſelves will go ready armed before the children of Iſrael, until we have brought them unto their place: and our little ones ſhall dwell in the fenced cities, becauſe of the inhabitants of the land.

18 We will not return unto our houſes, until the children of Iſrael have inherited every man his inheritance:

19 For we will not inherit with them on yonder ſide Jordan, or forward; becauſe our inheritance is fallen to us on this ſide Jordan eaſt-ward.

20 ¶ And Moſes ſaid unto them, If ye will do this thing, if ye will go armed before the LORD to war,

21 And will go all of you armed over Jordan before the LORD, until he hath driven out his enemies from before him,

22 And the land be ſubdued before the LORD: then afterward ye ſhall return, and be guiltleſs before the LORD, and before Iſrael; and this land ſhall be your poſſeſſion before the LORD.

23 But if ye will not do ſo, behold, ye have ſinned againſt the LORD: and be ſure your ſin will find you out.

24 Build ye cities for your little ones, and folds for your ſheep; and do that which hath proceeded out of your mouth.

25 And the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben, ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying, Thy ſervants will do as my lord commandeth.

26 Our little ones, our wives, our flocks, and all our cattle, ſhall be there in the cities of Gilead.

27 But thy ſervants will paſs over, every man armed for war, before the LORD to battle, as my lord ſaith.

28 So concerning them Moſes commanded Eleazar the prieſt, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and the chief fathers of the tribes of the children of Iſrael:

29 And Moſes ſaid unto them, If the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben will paſs with you over Jordan, every man armed to battle before the LORD, and the land ſhall be ſubdued before you; then ye ſhall give them the land of Gilead for a poſſeſſion:

30 But if they will not paſs over with you armed, they ſhall have poſſeſſions among you in the land of Canaan.

31 And the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben anſwered, ſaying, As the LORD hath ſaid unto thy ſervants, ſo will we do.

32 We will paſs over armed before the LORD into the land of Canaan, that the poſſeſſion of our inheritance on this ſide Jordan may be ours.

33 And Moſes gave unto them, even to the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, and unto half the tribe of Manaſſeh the ſon of Joſeph, the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og king of Baſhan, the land with the cities thereof, in the coaſts, even the cities of the country round about.

34 ¶ And the children of Gad built Dibon, and Ataroth, and Aroer,

35 And Atroth, Shophan, and Jaazer, and Jogbehah,

36 And Beth-nimrah, and Beth-haran, fenced cities: and folds for ſheep,

37 And the children of Reuben built Heſhbon, and Elealeh, and Kirjathaim,

38 And Nebo, and Baal-meon (their names being changed) and Shibmah: and gave other names unto the cities which they builded.

39 And the children of Machir the ſon of Manaſſeh went to Gilead, and took it, and diſpoſſeſſed the Amorite which was in it.

40 And Moſes gave Gilead unto Machir the ſon of Manaſſeh; and he dwelt therein.

41 And Jair the ſon of Manaſſeh went and took the ſmall towns thereof, and called them Havoth-jair.

42 And Nobah went and took Kenath, and the villages thereof, and called it Nobah, after his own name.

Ver. 1. Now the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad.] Here the children of Reuben, who was Jacob's firſt-born, are mentioned in the firſt place: but in the reſt of the chapter (ver. 2, 6, 25, 29, 32.) the children of Gad are conſtantly firſt mentioned, becauſe they were the firſt movers of that which follows, as the Hebrews conjecture.

—— Had a very great multitude of cattle.] More than any other tribe.

—— And when they ſaw the land of Jazer.] Which was lately taken from the Amorites, after they had ſlain Sihon their king, chap. xxi. 32. This city, and country belonging to it, were near the ſpring of the river Arnon; and there is frequent mention of it in the book of Joſhua, and in Iſaiah xvi. 8, 9. and Jer. xlviii. 34.

— And the land of Gilead.] A noble country, ſo call'd from the mountain Gilead, which bounded it on the eaſt, as Jordan did on the weſt, the river Jabbok on the ſouth, and mount Libanus on the north.

—That behold, the place was a place of cattle.] Which, in the fourth verſe, is called a land of cattle, γῆν κτηνοτρόφον, as the Seventy tranſlate it, fit for feeding of cattle; being famous for paſture and other grazing ground. For Baſhan was in this country, Deut. iii. 12, 13. where, every one knows, the largeſt and fatteſt oxen were bred, Pſalm xxii. 12. and ſheep alſo, Deut. xxxii. 14. and therefore is joined with Gilead, Micah vi. 14. which, being woody and mountainous in ſome part of it, was no leſs famous for breeding goats, (ſee Cantic. iv. 1.) which delight to brouſe on ſuch trees as ſhaded mount Gilead.

Ver. 2. And the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben.] Neither here, nor in the foregoing verſe, is there any mention of the children of Manaſſeh, half of which tribe had their portion in this country; becauſe they were neither the contrivers nor movers of this; but it is moſt probable had a lot aſſigned them here, becauſe theſe countries were too much for the other two tribes alone; and they of Manaſſeh had much cattle likewiſe.

—Came and ſpake unto Moſes and to Eleazer the prieſt, and unto the princes of the congregation.] For whom it was cuſtomary to aſſemble frequently, in order to diſpatch publick affairs, chap. xxvii. 2. and xxx. 1.

Ver. 3. Ataroth.] Which was part of the portion of Gad, as appears by ver. 34.

—— And Dibon.] This is mentioned as a place in the kingdom of Sihon, chap. xxi. 30. and was given to Gad alſo, as we read ver. 34.

—— And Jazer.] See ver. 1. and 35. where we find this alſo belonged to Gad.

— And Nimrah.] Called Beth-nimrah, ver. 36. and given to the ſame tribe. It is uſual, we obſerved before, for the Hebrews to cut off the firſt part of the names of places, for brevity ſake, chap. xxv. 1. but this place is elſewhere called in length Beth-nimrah, Joſh. xiii. 27. where it is mentioned as a part of Sihon's kingdom, and ſignifies as much as domus pardorum, an habitation of leopards. Bochart obſerves, that when both Iſaiah, xv. 6. and Jeremiah, xlviii. 34. mention the waters of Nimrim, they mean this very place, which was given to Gad; but in the days of thoſe prophets, it is mentioned as in the country of the Moabites; who had uſurped upon their neighbours the Gadites, and taken this place from them, as they had deprived them of Jazer; as appears from the place above-mentioned, Iſa. xvi. 8, 9. Jer. xlviii. 34.

— And Heſhbon.] The principal city of Sihon king of the Amorites, chap. xxi. 26, 27, 28. and it was given to the Reubenites, ver. 37.

—And Elealeh.] This is frequently mentioned with Heſhbon, as a place adjoining to it, ver. 37. Iſa. xvi. 9.

— And Shebam.] Called alſo Shibmah, ver. 37. and Iſa. xvi. 8, 9. Jer. xlviii. 31. where it appears to have been a place famous for vines; and in the days of that prophet was fallen into the hands of the Moabites, as were Heſhbon and Elealah alſo.

——And Nebo.] Which was given to the Reubenites, ver. 38.

— And Beon.] There is no mention of this place any where elſe, but it probably was part of the Reubenites portion, being mentioned together with other places that were given them; and may poſſibly be the place called Baal Meon, ver. 38 which they changed into Beon, becauſe of the name of Baal; but the Moabites, when it fell into their hands, reſtored part of its old name, calling it Beth Meon, Jer. xlviii. 23.

Ver. 4. Even the country which the Lord ſmote before the congregation of Iſrael.] And aſſigned it to them for a poſſeſſion, in the ſame manner as he intended to give them the land of Canaan, chap. xxi. 24, 25.

——— Is a land for cattle, and thy ſervants have cattle.] Is very fit for us, ver. 2.

Ver. 5. Wherefore, ſaid they, if we have found grace in thy ſight.] A phraſe often uſed by humble petitioners, particularly by Moſes, when he addreſſes himſelf to the Divine Majeſty, chap. xi. 15.

— Let this land be given unto thy ſervants for a poſſeſſion.] The Iſraelites poſſeſſed it hitherto in common, as belonging to them all, chap. xxi. but the children of Gad and Reuben deſire to have it aſſigned to them, as their particular portion.

— And bring us not over Jordan.] We deſire nothing in the land of Canaan.

Ver. 6. And Moſes ſaid unto the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, Shall your bretkren go to war.] Can you think it reaſonable, that the reſt of the tribes ſhould fight ſtill for what they are to poſſeſs?

——And ſhall ye ſit here?] And will you take up your reſt here, and ſettle in their conqueſt, which they have already made?

Ver. 7. And wherefore diſcourage ye the heart, &c.] Moſes ſeems to have ſuſpected, that mere timidity, and a deſpideſpicable fondneſs for eaſe and inactivity, made them deſirous of continuing where they were: which ill example might diſhearten all the reſt of their brethren, and cauſe them to entertain the ſame inclination to ſettle in the land they had conquered; and not engage in a war with the Canaanites.

Ver. 8. Thus did your fathers.] They diſcouraged all their brethren, in the ſame manner as you are now attempting.

Ver. 9. For when they went up unto the valley of Eſhcol] Men do not go up into a valley; therefore the meaning is, they went up to ſearch the country (as it is ſaid they did, chap. xiii. 21, 22.) and went on in their ſearch, till they came to the valley or brook of Eſhcol, chap. xiii. 23. where they cut down a branch with a cluſter of grapes, to ſhew what fruit the country afforded.

— They diſcouraged the heart of the children of Iſrael.] Repreſented the people and the cities to be ſo ſtrong, that they ſhould not be able to contend with them, chap. xiii. 28, 29.

Ver. 10. And the Lords anger was kindled at the ſame time, and he ſware, ſaying.] Chap. xiv. 21, 28.

Ver. 11. Surely none of the men that came up out of Egypt, from twenty years old and upward.] Chap. xiv. 22, 29, 35.

——— Shall ſee the land which I ſware unto Abraham, unto Iſaac, and unto Jacob.] Chap. xiv. 23.

— Becauſe they have not wholly followed me.] See there, ver. 22.

Ver. 12. Save Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh the Kenezite.] Many arguments have been advanced by ſome expoſitors, to prove, that Caleb is called a Kenezite, becauſe his father's name was Kenaz. And this they endeavour to prove, becauſe Othniel's father's name was Kenaz, and he was Caleb's brother, Joſh. xv. 17. his younger brother, Judges i. 13. iii. 9. ſo that their father muſt have had two names, Kenaz, and Jephunneh. But it is very ſtrange, if this be true, that Caleb is no where called the ſon of Kenaz, but conſtantly the ſon of Jephunneh; even there, where Othniel is juſt before called the ſon of Kenaz, 1 Chron. iv 13, 15. nor is Othniel any where called the ſon of Jephunneh, but always of Kenaz. And indeed there is a demonſtration againſt this opinion; for Othniel married Caleb's daughter, which by the law of Moſes was utterly unlawful, whatſoever the practice might have been before the promulgation of the law. Others therefore think it more probable, that Othniel was one of his brother's younger ſons, (for uncles and nephews are often called brethren, as Abraham and Lot were) and that from this brother, whoſe name was Kenaz, Caleb is alſo called a Kenezite: But this is likewiſe very abſurd; for the name of Kenezzi, in the Hebrew, denotes the deſcendants from one, who gave this denomination to the family; which one brother could not do to another. It is moſt probable therefore, that Kenaz was ſome common anceſtor of Othniel and Caleb, from whom Othniel's father derived his name. Accordingly we find Jephunneh called a Kenezite in Joſh. xiv. 14. where it is ſaid that "Hebron became the inheritance of Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh "the Kenezite."

—And Joſhua the ſon of Nun: for they have wholly followed the Lord.] They have obeyed him in every particular, chap. xiv. 24, 30, 38.

Ver. 13. And the Lords anger was kindled againſt Iſrael.] Moſes had declared this before, ver. 10. but repeats it again, to make them the more ſenſible of an affair that was tranſacted thirty eight years ago; and to deter them from offering the like provocation.

Ver. 14. And behold, ye are riſen up in your fathers ſtead, an increaſe of ſinful men, to augment yet the fierce anger of the Lord toward Iſrael.] That is, ye are multiplied to as great a number as your fathers, only to ſucceed them in their ſins, and thereby bring down ſtill more heavy puniſhments upon the nation.

Ver. 15. For if ye turn away from after him.] As your fathers did; who refuſed to go and poſſeſs the good land which God had beſtowed upon them.

——— He will yet again leave them in the wilderneſs.] Lead them back again into the deſart, where your fathers periſhed; and there forſake you.

——— And ye ſhall deſtroy all this people.] Who, following your own example, will refuſe to go over Jordan, ver. 5. to take poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan.

Ver. 16. And they drew near unto him.] As was cuſtomary for petitioners, when they are aſſured of their integrity, and hope to obtain their requeſt, Gen. xliv. 19.

——— And ſaid, we will build ſheepfolds here for our cattle.] There are five words in the Hebrew language for folds, for ſheep and cattle; all ſignifying a place fenced in, that they might lie ſafely, and be defended from wild beaſts. And ſo this word gedera plainly imports.

——— And cities for our little ones.] Which ſtood in need only of repairing and fortifying, (ver. 17.) for they already dwelt in thoſe cities of the Amorites, chap. xxi 25.

Ver. 17. But we our ſelves will go ready armed before the children of Iſrael, until we have brought them unto their place:] That is, a conſiderable number of them, as many as ſhould be thought neceſſary, Deut. iii. 18. in all forty thouſand, Joſh. iv. 12.

—— And our little ones ſhall dwell in the fenced cities.] Where it was neceſſary to leave ſome men to guard them from their bad neighbours, and to take care of their cattle.

—— Becauſe of the people of the land.] Who were the Moabites, the ancient proprietors of this country, chap. xxi. 26. and the Edomites, who had ſhewed no good will to the Iſraelites, as they paſſed thro' the wilderneſs.

Ver. 18. We will not return unto our houſes, until the children of Iſrael have inherited every man his inheritance.] We will not propoſe any ſettlement for our ſelves, till the reſt of our brethren be eſtabliſhed in the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, as we deſire to be in this country.

Ver. 19. For we will not inherit with them on yonder ſide Jordan, or forward.] We will not deſire any ſhare in the country beyond Jordan, though it be near to us; nor in that country which lies ſtill further weſtward.

—Becauſe our inheritance is fallen to us on this ſide Jordan eaſtward.] We look upon this as our inheritance (with which we ſhall be fully ſatisfied) here in the land of Gilead, which lay eaſtward of Jordan, and of the land of Canaan.

Ver. 20. And Moſes ſaid unto them, if ye will do this thing, if ye will go armed before the Lord to war.] To go before the Lord, was to go before the Ark; which was the ſymbol of God's preſence, over which his glory reſided. And it is to be obſerved, that theſe two tribes, Reuben and Gad (together with Simeon) always lay encamped before the ſanctuary; as appears from the ſecond chapter of this book, ver. 10, 14, 15, 16, 17. And accordingly, when the camp removed, they marched immediately before it; ſee chap. x. 18, 19, 20, 21. So that here he requires them only to hold their uſual place, when they went to the war againſt the Canaanites; and accordingly 'tis expreſsly ſaid, they did (together with the half tribe of Manaſſeh, who were joined with them) paſs over before the Lord unto battle, Joſh. iv. 12, 13.

Ver. 21. And will go all of you.] As many as ſhall be required, and can be ſpared, ver. 17.

——— Armed over Jordan before the Lord, until he hath driven out his enemies from before him.] Not only bring us into Canaan, but continue with us, till we have expelled the inhabitants of that country: which he encourages them to undertake, by repreſenting the Canaanites as the enemies of the Lord, who would therefore fight for the Iſraelites.

Ver. 22. And the land be ſubdued before the Lord.] By this expreſſion, and that in the foregoing paſſage, it appears that the ark was carried along with them to the war every where, till all hoſtilities were ended; as it was when the war begun, at the taking of Jericho, Joſhua vi. 6, 7, &c.

——— Then afterward ye ſhall return, and be guiltleſs before the Lord, and before Iſrael; and this land ſhall be your poſſeſſion.] You ſhall not only be free from all blame in this deſire, but ſhall likewiſe be gratified in it.

Ver. 23. But if you will not do ſo.] If this be not your intention; or if recede from your word.

——— Behold, ye have ſinned againſt the Lord; and be ſure your ſin will find you out.] Your guilt will then be exceeding great, and ſhall be moſt certainly puniſhed as it deſerves.

Ver. 24. Build ye cities for your little ones, and folds for your ſheep, &c.] As for the reſt of their propoſals, about their children and cattle, he conſented to them without any exception.

Ver.

Ver. 25. And the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben, ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,] The word for ſpake, in the Hebrew, being Jomer, in the ſingular number, inſtead of Jomru, in the plural, the Jewiſh doctors take it for an indication, that ſome one principal perſon ſpake in the name of all the reſt. But there is no need of this explication; for the ſingular number, in this language, is often uſed for the plural; and they never ſpake all of them together, but ſome one in the name of their brethren. And it had been better, if they had obſerved, that this ſignifies one and all (as we now ſpeak) were of the ſame mind.

——— Thy ſervants will do as my Lord commandeth.] And as they themſelves had propoſed, ver. 17.

Ver. 26. Our little ones, our wives, our flocks, and all our cattle, ſhall be there in the cities of Gilead.] Here they promiſe to leave all that was dear to them, in this country, and go to ſerve their brethren.

Ver. 27. But thy ſervants will paſs over every man armed for war, &c.] We our ſelves will go, and fight for our brethren. It hath been often ſaid (ver. 17, 21.) that this doth not ſignify all the men of war among them ſhould go, but as many as could be ſpared, and as were thought ſufficient. For it is manifeſt, the far greater part of them was left in this country to defend their wives and children, and look after their flocks and herds; as will appear, by computing all their men of war that were found in the tribes of Gad and Reuben, which were above fourſcore and four thouſand, (chap. xxvi. 7, 18.) to which, if we add the half tribe of Manaſſeh, (who were, in all, above fifty-two thouſand) there were much above an hundred thouſand men, able to bear arms; and not above forty thouſand of them marched into Canaan, as was before obſerved.

Ver. 28. So concerning them, Moſes commanded Eleazar the prieſt, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and the chief fathers of the tribes of Iſrael.] He left this in charge with the principal perſons, who had the government of affairs under him; particularly with Joſhua, who was not unmindful of it, but re-minded theſe tribes of what Moſes had ſaid, when he was about to attempt the conqueſt of Canaan, Joſh. i. 13, 14, &c.

Ver. 29. And Moſes ſaid unto them, if the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben, will paſs with you over Jordan, &c.] He repeats to theſe great men, who were to ſee it executed, what he had ſaid to the Gadites and Reubenites themſelves, ver. 21, 22.

——— Then ye ſhall give them the land of Gilead for a poſſeſſion.] They had not a right to it, till they had performed the condition upon which it was granted; namely, till their brethren were in poſſeſſion of their inheritance in the land of Canaan.

Ver. 30. But if they will not paſs over with you armed, they ſhall have poſſeſſions among you in the land of Canaan.] They ſhall then take what falls to their ſhare there; and this country ſhall be diſpoſed of as God ſhall determine.

Ver. 31. And the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben ſaid, As the Lord hath ſaid unto thy ſervants, ſo will we do.] They confirm what they had promiſed to Moſes, ver. 25. and here take all that he had ſaid, as ſpoken by the order of God, who beſtowed this land upon them, on the condition often mentioned.

Ver. 32. We will paſs over armed before the Lord into the land of Canaan.] This they offered at firſt of themſelves, ver. 17. and ſolemnly promiſed, when Moſes accepted their propoſal, ver. 27. and they now ratify and confirm it before Eleazar and Joſhua, and all the princes, ver. 28.

———That the poſſeſſion of our inheritance.] Which we have deſired to have for our inheritance.

———On this ſide Jordan.] They were now in the land of Gilead, and ſo might properly call it on this ſide Jordan; but when they were in the land of Canaan, it was ſaid to be on that ſide Jordan.

———May be ours.] Settled upon us and our poſterity.

Ver. 33. And Moſes gave unto them, even to the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, and unto half the tribe of Manaſſeh, the ſon of Joſeph.] This half tribe is not mentioned before, becauſe they did not put in any claim, till they ſaw how thoſe of Gad and Reuben would ſucceed in their petition: Which being granted, it is likely that thereupon they repreſented, alſo, what ſtore of cattle they had; and that the country would be more than enough for thoſe who had deſired it. This being found to be true, Moſes thought fit to give them a portion in it, rather than any other; becauſe the children of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, had, by their valour, ſubdued part of this country, ver. 39. Joſh. xvii. 1.

——— The kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og king of Baſhan.] Chap. xxi. 24, 29. which were the firſt countries that the Iſraelites poſſeſſed; and they who ſettled here were the firſt that were carried captive out of their land, 2 Kings xv. 29.

——— The land with the cities thereof, in the coaſts, even the cities of the country round about] The land with the cities, within ſuch a compaſs or limit; and all the towns within that circuit.

Ver. 34. And the children of Gad built Dibon and Ataroth.] They repaired and fortified theſe towns, which are mentioned before, ver. 3. for they were not deſtroyed, but only their inhabitants, Deut. ii. 34, 35. for if they had been laid in ruins, there would not have been time to rebuild them at this conjuncture. Thus Jeroboam is ſaid to have built Shechem, 1 Kings xii. 25. which was a city before, but gone to decay; and Azariah to have built Elah, 2 Kings xiv. 22. which he reſtored to Judah, as a city formerly belonging to them.

——— And Aroer.] A city of the Amorites, upon the bank of the river Arnon; as Moſes declares, Deut. ii. 36. iii. 11. iv. 48. It formerly belonged to the Moabites; but was taken from them by Sihon.

Ver. 35. And Atroth, and Shophan, and Jaazer, and Jogbehah.] We do not read of any of theſe towns elſewhere, but only of Jaazer; which ſeems to be that called Jazer, ver. 3.

Ver. 36. And Beth-nimrah.] Called ver. 3. Nimrah, for ſhortneſs, as (it may be further obſerved) Jemini is put for Benjemini, Eſther ii. 5. Sheba for Beer-ſheba, Joſh. xix. 2. where we find theſe two mentioned; but they do not ſignify two ſeveral cities, but are two names for one and the ſame city; as if he had ſaid, Beer-ſheba, which is alſo called Sheba. This is clear to a demonſtration; for otherwiſe there would be more than thirteen cities in the tribe of Simeon, contrary to ver. 6. of that chapter.

——— And Beth-haran.] A place, ſome ſay, between Dibon and Jordan.

Ver. 37. And the children of Reuben built Heſhbon and Elealeh and Kirjathaim.] This laſt was a place where a gigantic ſort of people formerly dwelt, called Emims, Gen. xiv. 5. who were expelled by the Moabites, as theſe were by the Amorites.

Ver. 38. And Nebo.] This city is mentioned in Jerem. xlviii. 2. when it was fallen again into the poſſeſſion of the Moabites, as was alſo Kirjathaim. It ſeems to have been near Dibon, being mentioned together with it, Iſaiah xv. 1. at leaſt there were in theſe places two famous temples; for the deſtruction of which, the prophet repreſents the people making lamentation. So the LXX. ἀπολεῖται ὁ Ναβαῦ, καὶ ὁ Βαμὼθ ὑμῶν, Nebo is deſtroyed where your altar is. And Heſychius ſaith of Δαιβὼν, (that is, Dibon) that it was τόπος ἔνθα ἱδρύθη ἱερὸν Μοαβιτῶν, a place where a temple of the Moabites was built. And St. Jerom ſuſpects that there was an oracle at that place; the word Nebo importing propheſy, or divination, as he obſerves.

——— And Baal-meon.] Another place, where it is likely Baal was worſhipped; which made them change the names of places, as it here follows.

——— Their names being changed.] For Nebo, as well as Baal, was the name of a god; as we learn from Iſaiah xlvi. 1. and ſeems to have been an Aſſyrian deity; there being footſteps of it in the names of ſeveral great men there; ſuch as Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuzaradan, and many others. And it is not unlikely, that they therefore changed the names of theſe cities into ſome other, becauſe they would aboliſh all remainders of idolatry in this country, according to the precept, Exod. xxiii. 23. that they ſhould not take the name of their gods into their mouth: but notwithſtanding this, they ſtill retained their ancient names; as appears from Joſhua xiii. 17. Ezek. xxv 9. So hard it is to alter any thing for the better.

——— And gave other names unto the cities which they builded.] If this may be thought to refer to all the cities here mentioned, it is manifeſt they either retained, or recovered their former names: for we read of them all in future times; particularly in the xvth and xviiith chapters, ters of Iſaiah; and Kirjathaim is mentioned in the place we now quoted out of Ezekiel.

Ver. 39. And the children of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, went to Gilead and took it.] Here Gilead is uſed in a ſtrict ſenſe, and not ſo largely as before, ver. 1, 26, 29. where it is taken for all the country, on that ſide Jordan, where Gilead was; but here, for a part of it about mount Gilead. This is plain from the next verſe; and Gilead the ſon of Machir, one would think, was the perſon who took it, Joſh. xvii. 1.

Ver. 40. And Moſes gave Gilead unto Machir the ſon of Manaſſeh.] That is, to the children of Machir, (for he was dead long ago) who had a conſiderable portion of that half of the land of Gilead, which was given to the half tribe of Manaſſeh. For one half was given to the Reubenites and Gadites, and the other half to them, Deut. iii. 12, 13. where Gilead ſignifies all that country properly ſo called; neither ſo much as the whole territory, which theſe tribes demanded, ver. 1. nor ſo little as was given to Machir, ver. 15. where Moſes ſays, And I gave Gilead unto Machir, that is, to that family of Manaſſeh, which were properly called Machirites, Numb. xxvi. 29. And to that family deſcended from his ſon, which from him were called Gileadites. For as Manaſſeh had only this ſon Machir, ſo Machir had only Gilead; but he had many, chap. xxvi. 30, 31, 32. who all raiſed families. And as a portion was given to the Machirites (and we ſuppoſe to the Gileadites) in this country, Joſh. xiii. 29, 30, &c. ſo Joſhua gave to the reſt an inheritance in the land of Canaan, chap. xvii. 2. And he aſſigns a reaſon in the foregoing verſe, why he gave Gilead and Baſhan to the poſterity of Machir, namely, becauſe they were a warlike people, inheriting their fathers valour, who was a martial man, and therefore fit to be placed in the frontiers of that country.

Ver. 41. And Jair the ſon of Manaſſeh.] One of the poſterity of Manaſſeh, by his mother's ſide: for he was the grandſon of Gilead, the ſon of Machir, by his daughter, 1 Chron. ii. 21, 22. but his father was of the tribe of Judah. It ſeems he joyned with the children of Machir in their expedition againſt Gilead, (mentioned ver. 39.) and was ſo ſucceſsful, that he took ſeveral ſmall towns in that country, and ſo had his inheritance among the children of Manaſſeh, on this ſide Jordan, where they now were. There were threeſcore of them in the whole, which were afterward called cities, Joſh. xiii. 13. 1 Kings iv. 23. but he had only twenty three for his poſſeſſion, 1 Chron. ii. 22, 23.

—— And called them Havoth-jair.] That is, the habitation of Jair. For Havah is a dwelling, as Bochart obſerves in his Phaleg. lib. 4. cap. 29. And among the Arabians the word Havoth properly ſignifies many tents orderly diſpoſed in a ring or circle; which in thoſe countries made that which we call a village For Hava, in the Arabic language, ſignifies to compaſs. The ſame he obſerves in his Hierozoicon, p. 1. lib. 2. cap. 44. p. 466.

Ver. 42. And Nobah.] Who he was, we find in no other place; but an eminent perſon, no doubt, in ſome of the families of the Manaſſites; either of the Machirites, or the Gileadites. For they only, as we ſuppoſe, inherited on this ſide Jordan.

—— Went and took Kenah, and the villages thereof.] Probably at the ſame time, that Jair took the towns above mentioned; of which this was one, 1 Chron. ii. 23. But though Jair was the chief conductor in that expedition, yet he kept, as we ſaid, only twenty three towns to himſelf: the reſt were given to them who accompanied him, of whom, Nobah may be ſuppoſed to have been one.

—— And called it Nobah after his own name.] But it retained its old name alſo: for St. Jerom ſays, there was a city in his time, called Canatha, in the region of Trachonitis, not far from Boſra.

Thus this country being ſettled upon theſe two tribes and a half, the land of Canaan was divided, by God's command, for an inheritance to the remaining nine tribes, and the other half of the tribe of Manaſſeh, Joſh. xiii. 7.

CHAP. XXXIII.

1 Two and forty journies of the Iſraelites. 50 The Canaanites are to be deſtroyed.

THeſe are the journeys of the children of Iſrael, which went forth out of the land of Egypt, with their armies, under the hand of Moſes and Aaron.

2 And Moſes wrote their goings out according to their journeys, by the commandment of the LORD: and theſe are their journies according to their goings out.

3 And they departed from Rameſes in the firſt month, on the fifteenth day of the firſt month: on the morrow after the paſſover, the children of Iſrael went out with an high hand, in the ſight of all the Egyptians.

4 (For the Egyptians buried all their firſtborn, which the LORD had ſmitten among them: upon their gods alſo the LORD executed judgments)

5 And the children of Iſrael removed from Rameſes, and pitched in Succoth.

6 And they departed from Succoth, and pitched in Etham, which is in the edge of the wilderneſs.

7 And they removed from Etham, and turned again unto Pi-hahiroth, which is before Baal-zephon: and they pitched before Migdol.

8 And they departed from before Pi-hahiroth, and paſſed through the midſt of the ſea, into the wilderneſs, and went three days journey in the wilderneſs of Etham, and pitched in Marah.

9 And they removed from Marah, and came unto Elim: and in Elim were twelve fountains of water, and threeſcore and ten palm-trees; and they pitched there.

10 And they removed from Elim, and encamped by the Red-ſea.

11 And they removed from the Red-ſea, and encamped in the wilderneſs of Sin.

12 And they took their journey out of the wilderneſs of Sin, and encamped in Dophkah.

13 And they departed from Dophkah, and encamped in Aluſh.

14 And they removed from Aluſh, and encamped at Rephidim, where was no water for the people to drink.

15 And they departed from Rephidim, and pitched in the wilderneſs of Sinai.

16 And they removed from the deſert of Sinai, and pitched at Kibroth-hattaavah.

17 And they departed from Kibroth-hattaavah, and encamped at Hazeroth.

18 And they departed from Hazeroth, and pitched in Rithmah.

19 And they departed from Rithmah, and pitched at Rimmon-parez.

20 And they departed from Rimmon-parez, and pitched in Libnah.

21 And they removed from Libnah, and pitched at Riſſah.

22 And they journeyed from Riſſah, and pitched in Kehelathah.

23 And they went from Kehelathah, and pitched in mount Shapher.

24 And they removed from mount Shapher, and encamped in Haradah.

25 And they removed from Haradah, and pitched in Mackheloth.

26 And they removed from Mackheloth, and encamped at Tahath.

27 And they departed from Tahath, and pitched at Tarah.

28 And they removed from Tarah, and pitched in Mithcah.

29 And they went from Mithcah, and pitched in Haſhmonah.

30 And they departed from Haſhmonah, and encamped at Moſeroth.

31 And they departed from Moſeroth, and pitched in Bene-jaakan.

32 And they removed from Bene-jaakan, and encamped at Hor-hagidgad.

33 And they went from Hor-hagidgad, and pitched in Jotbathah.

34 And they removed from Jotbathah, and encamped at Ebronah.

35 And they departed from Ebronah, and encamped at Ezion-gaber.

36 And they removed from Ezion-gaber, and pitched in the wilderneſs of Zin, which is Kadeſh.

37 And they removed from Kadeſh, and pitched in mount Hor, in the edge of the land of Edom.

38 And Aaron the prieſt went up into mount Hor, at the commandment of the LORD, and died there in the fortieth year, after the children of Iſrael were come out of the land of Egypt, in the firſt day of the fifth month.

39 And Aaron was an hundred and twenty and three years old, when he died in mount Hor.

40 And king Arad the Canaanite (which dwelt in the ſouth, in the land of Canaan) heard of the coming of the children of Iſrael.

41 And they departed from mount Hor, and pitched in Zalmonah.

42 And they departed from Zalmonah, and pitched in Punon.

43 And they departed from Punon, and pitched in Oboth.

44 And they departed from Oboth, and pitched in Ije-abarim in the border of Moab.

45 And they departed from Iim, and pitched in Dibon-gad.

46 And they removed from Dibon-gad, and encamped in Almon-diblathaim.

47 And they removed from Almon-diblathaim, and pitched in the mountains of Abarim before Nebo.

48 And they departed from the mountains of Abarim, and pitched in the plains of Moab, by Jordan, near Jericho.

49 And they pitched by Jordan from Beth-jeſimoth, even unto Abel-ſhittim, in the plains of Moab.

50 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho, ſaying,

51 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, When ye are paſſed over Jordan into the land of Canaan;

52 Then ye ſhall drive out all the inhabitants of the land from before you, and deſtroy all their pictures, and deſtroy all their molten images, and quite pluck down all their high places.

53 And ye ſhall diſpoſſeſs the inhabitants of the land, and dwell therein: for I have given you the land to poſſeſs it.

54 And ye ſhall divide the land by lot, for an inheritance among your families, and to the more ye ſhall give the more inheritance, and to the fewer ye ſhall give the leſs inheritance: every mans inheritance ſhall be in the place where his lot falleth; according to the tribes of your fathers, ye ſhall inherit.

55 But if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land from before you; then it ſhall come to paſs, that thoſe which ye let remain of them, ſhall be pricks in your eyes, and thorns in your ſides, and ſhall vex you in the land wherein ye dwell.

56 Moreover, it ſhall come to paſs, that I ſhall do unto you, as I thought to do unto them.

Ver.

Ver. 1. These are the journies of the children of Iſrael, which went forth out of the land of Egypt.] The ſacred hiſtorian now enters upon a brief recapitulation of the travels of the children of Iſrael through the wilderneſs; whereby the wonderful providence of God over them appears, in their protection and preſervation, from the time they departed out of Egypt, till their arrival at the borders of the land of Canaan.

——— With their armies] For they marched in the orderly manner uſual with armies. See Exod. xii. 41, 51, xiii. 18.

——— Under the hand of Moſes and Aaron.] By whom they were conducted as the miniſters of God, Exod. xii. 1, 28, 50.

Ver. 2. And Moſes wrote their goings out according to their journies.] He recorded every removal which they made from the place where they were unto another whither they journied.

——— By the commandment of the Lord.] This may refer either to their journies (which were by God's commandment, chap. x. 13.) or rather to Moſes's writing this Epitome of their travels; of which God ordered him to give a diſtinct account: Which was no unneceſſary work, but moſt uſeful to poſterity; there being no hiſtory extant in the world, as David Chytræus well obſerves, (except that of the birth, life, death, and reſurrection of Chriſt) which contains ſo many wonderful inſtances of divine providence, as this of bringing the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, and leading them through the Red Sea, and thro' the wilderneſs; concerning which Maimonides hath an excellent diſcourſe in his third part of More Nevochim, cap. 50. the ſubſtance of which is this: That it being impoſſible any miracles ſhould continue throughout all generations, due care ſhould be taken that the memory of them be not loſt, but faithfully preſerved by the hiſtory and narration of them in future times. Now there being no greater miracle than the ſubſiſtence of the children of Iſrael in the deſert for forty years; a deſert full of ſcorpions and ſerpents, deſtitute of water, uninhabited, thro' which no man had been wont to paſs (as Jeremiah ſpeaks, chap. ii. 6.) where they ate no bread, nor drank wine, or ſtrong drink, Deut. xxix. 6. God would have the particular places ſet down diſtinctly where they pitched in that howling wilderneſs; that all men might be ſatisfied (who would take the pains to examine particulars) by what an aſtoniſhing providence ſuch a multitude of people were fed every day, for forty years together; and none might be able to cavil, and ſay, that they had travelled through a country good enough, and pitched in habitable places, where they might plough and ſow, and reap; or where they might have herbs and roots for their ſuſtenance; or where manna ordinarily came down from the clouds for mens ſupport.

Ver. 3. And they departed from Rameſes.] See Exod. xii. 37. Here, in all likelihood, they ſacrificed the paſchal Lamb, and were preſerved from the deſtroying angel, which made this place very remarkable: for they ſeem to have been all ſummoned to aſſemble here as in a common rendezvous, to be ready to march away, when God ſhould give the word of command.

Ver. 5. And the children of Iſrael removed from Rameſes, and pitched in Succoth.] Exod. xii. 37. Here they received the command to ſet apart all the firſt-born unto the Lord, in memory of God's ſparing them when he ſlew all the firſt-born of the Egyptians, Exod. xiii. 1, 12, 13, &c.

Ver. 6. And they departed from Succoth, and pitched in Etham, &c.] See Exod. xiii. 20. where it immediately follows, that they were conducted hither by a miraculous cloud, which ever after led them in all their journies.

Ver. 7. And they removed from Etham, and turned again unto Pi-hahiroth.] So it is expreſsly ſaid Exod. vi. 2. Hither they were led on purpoſe, that they might ſee the wonderful power and goodneſs of God, in a place where they were fenced in by high mountains on each ſide, with the army of Pharaoh behind them, and in their front the Red Sea, through which God opened them a ſecure paſſage, rather than he would ſuffer them to fall again under the Egyptian tyranny. Here is alſo the ſingular number for the plural, in the word turned again, as was obſerved before in another word, chap. xxxii. 25. But the obſervation of the Hebrew doctors upon it, ſeems to be frivolous, namely, that with one heart they did what Moſes commanded.

Ver. 8. And they departed from before Pi-hahiroth, and paſſed through the midſt of the ſea.] Exod. xiv. 23. where Pharaoh and his hoſt were drowned; as the Iſraelites could not but recollect when they read this brief hiſtory: which, it might be expected, would alſo call to remembrance their own diſtruſt of God, notwithſtanding which he moſt graciouſly delivered them, Exod. xiv. 11, 12, &c.

Ver. 10. And they removed from Elim, and encamped by the Red Sea.] Not by that part of it, where they lately came out of it; but in a more ſoutherly ſituation, where that ſea bends towards Arabia. For the Red Sea, which Ptolomy calls the Arabian Gulph, runs a long way, like the Adriatic, now called the Gulph of Venice, or the Baltic Sea, as David Chytræus obſerves; who compares theſe three together, as much of a length; and all in ſome places broader, and ſome narrower. This ſtation is not mentioned in the Book of Exodus.

Ver. 11. And they removed from the Red Sea, and encamped in the wilderneſs of Sin.] Exodus xvi. 1. where manna firſt began to rain upon them, with which God fed them forty years.

Ver. 12. And they took their journey out of the wilderneſs of Sin, and encamped in Dophkah.] This and the next ſtation [Aluſh] are not mentioned in Exodus; becauſe nothing remarkable (it is ſuppoſed) fell out in theſe two places, as there did in the next, and they made no long ſtay there.

Ver. 13. And they departed from Dophkah, and encamped in Aluſh.] The Jewiſh Doctors find ſomething remarkable here, though Moſes is ſilent as to any particulars of that nature. For as the Sabbath was firſt commanded at Marah, which was their fifth ſtation, ſo it was firſt obſerved here at Aluſh, as they fancy, which was their tenth. And more than that, this was the only Sabbath, which, in their opinion, was exactly obſerved by the Iſraelites, the very next being profaned. The author of Sepher Coſri ſays, that according to an ancient tradition, the manna firſt deſcended at this place, P. 2. ſect. 20.

Ver. 14. And they removed from Aluſh, and encamped at Rephidim, where was no water for the people to drink.] The Almighty manifeſted, on this occaſion, his wonderful power and goodneſs, in cauſing water to guſh out of a rock for them, ver. 5, 6. And here alſo Amalek lay in wait for Iſrael, in the way, when they came out of Egypt, 1 Sam. xv. 2. and ſmote ſome that lagged behind, Deut. xxv. 16. but were vanquiſhed by Joſhua in a pitched battle, Exod. xvii. 8, 9, &c. And here Jethro alſo came to viſit Moſes, and gave him advice about the government of the people, with more eaſe both to himſelf and them, Exod. xviii.

Ver. 15. And they departed from Rephidim, and pitched in the wilderneſs of Sinai.] Exod. xix. 1, 2. This was forty ſeven days after they came from Rameſes, on the firſt day of the third month; three days after which (viz. on the fiftieth day after they came out of Egypt.) God gave them his law from mount Sinai; where Moſes was called up to the divine Majeſty, and continued in his preſence twice forty days, and was inſtructed there how to make the tabernacle, and ſet it up with all its furniture and appendages, when compleated. All ſorts of ſacrifices were ordered while they remained in this place; prieſts were likewiſe conſecrated; laws given with relation to clean and unclean things; and about marriages and feaſts, and the year of Jubile, with ſeveral other particulars ſpecified in the book of Leviticus. Here alſo the people were numbered; their encampment was ordered; and a ſecond paſſover was kept; laws were likewiſe given with reference to the water of Jealouſy and the Nazarites, with ſeveral other inſtitutions: and then, after they had continued here eleven months and twenty days, they are commanded to leave this famous ſtation; the moſt remarkable of all other, Numb. x. 11, 12.

Ver. 16. And they removed from the deſert of Sinai, and pitched at Kibroth-hattaavah.] A place in the wilderneſs of Paran, three days journey from mount Sinai, Numb. x. 23. xi. 34. where there was a dreadful ſlaughter of the people, who wantonly deſpiſed manna, and luſted after fleſh; yet here God vouchſafed to ſend his Spirit upon the LXX elders, for the aſſiſtance of Moſes.

Ver. 17. And they departed from Kibroth-hattaavah, and encamped at Hazeroth.] See chap. xi. 35. where Miriam was puniſhed for her envy at Moſes, chap. xii. 1, 10.

16 And they removed from the desert of Sinai, and pitched at Kibroth-hattaavah.

17 And they departed from Kibroth-hattaavah, and encamped at Hazeroth.

18 And they departed from Hazeroth, and pitched in Rithmah.

19 And they departed from Rithmah, and pitched at Rimmon-parez.

20 And they departed from Rimmon-parez, and pitched in Libnah.

21 And they removed from Libnah, and pitched at Rissah.

22 And they journeyed from Rissah, and pitched in Kehelathah.

23 And they went from Kehelathah, and pitched in mount Shapher.

24 And they removed from mount Shapher, and encamped in Haradah.

25 And they removed from Haradah, and pitched in Mackheloth.

26 And they removed from Mackheloth, and encamped at Tahath.

27 And they departed from Tahath, and pitched at Tarah.

28 And they removed from Tarah, and pitched in Mithcah.

29 And they went from Mithcah, and pitched in Hashmonah.

30 And they departed from Hashmonah, and encamped at Moseroth.

31 And they departed from Moseroth, and pitched in Bene-jaakan.

32 And they removed from Bene-jaakan, and encamped at Hor-hagidgad.

33 And they went from Hor-hagidgad, and pitched in Jotbathah.

34 And they removed from Jotbathah, and encamped at Ebronah.

35 And they departed from Ebronah, and encamped at Ezion-gaber.

36 And they removed from Ezion-gaber, and pitched in the wilderness of Zin, which is Kadesh.

37 And they removed from Kadesh, and pitched in mount Hor, in the edge of the land of Edom.

38 And Aaron the priest went up into mount Hor, at the commandment of the LORD, and died there in the fortieth year, after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the first day of the fifth month.

39 And Aaron was an hundred and twenty and three years old, when he died in mount Hor.

40 And king Arad the Canaanite (which dwelt in the south, in the land of Canaan) heard of the coming of the children of Israel.

41 And they departed from mount Hor, and pitched in Zalmonah.

42 And they departed from Zalmonah, and pitched in Punon.

43 And they departed from Punon, and pitched in Oboth.

44 And they departed from Oboth, and pitched in Ije-abarim in the border of Moab.

45 And they departed from Iim, and pitched in Dibon-gad.

46 And they removed from Dibon-gad, and encamped in Almon-diblathaim.

47 And they removed from Almon-diblathaim, and pitched in the mountains of Abarim before Nebo.

48 And they departed from the mountains of Abarim, and pitched in the plains of Moab, by Jordan, near Jericho.

49 And they pitched by Jordan from Beth-jesimoth, even unto Abel-shittim, in the plains of Moab.

50 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho, saying,

51 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye are passed over Jordan into the land of Canaan;

52 Then ye shall drive out all the inhabitants of the land from before you, and destroy all their pictures, and destroy all their molten images, and quite pluck down all their high places.

53 And ye shall dispossess the inhabitants of the land, and dwell therein: for I have given you the land to possess it.

54 And ye shall divide the land by lot, for an inheritance among your families, and to the more ye shall give the more inheritance, and to the fewer ye shall give the less inheritance: every mans inheritance shall be in the place where his lot falleth; according to the tribes of your fathers, ye shall inherit.

55 But if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land from before you; then it shall come to pass, that those which ye let remain of them, shall be pricks in your eyes, and thorns in your sides, and shall vex you in the land wherein ye dwell.

56 Moreover, it shall come to pass, that I shall do unto you, as I thought to do unto them.

Ver.

Ver. 1. These are the journies of the children of Iſrael, which went forth out of the land of Egypt.] The ſacred hiſtorian now enters upon a brief recapitulation of the travels of the children of Iſrael through the wilderneſs; whereby the wonderful providence of God over them appears, in their protection and preſervation, from the time they departed out of Egypt, till their arrival at the borders of the land of Canaan.

——— With their armies] For they marched in the orderly manner uſual with armies. See Exod. xii. 41, 51, xiii. 18.

——— Under the hand of Moſes and Aaron.] By whom they were conducted as the miniſters of God, Exod. xii. 1, 28, 50.

Ver. 2. And Moſes wrote their goings out according to their journies.] He recorded every removal which they made from the place where they were unto another whither they journied.

——— By the commandment of the Lord.] This may refer either to their journies (which were by God's commandment, chap. x. 13.) or rather to Moſes's writing this Epitome of their travels; of which God ordered him to give a diſtinct account: Which was no unneceſſary work, but moſt uſeful to poſterity; there being no hiſtory extant in the world, as David Chytræus well obſerves, (except that of the birth, life, death, and reſurrection of Chriſt) which contains ſo many wonderful inſtances of divine providence, as this of bringing the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, and leading them through the Red Sea, and thro' the wilderneſs; concerning which Maimonides hath an excellent diſcourſe in his third part of More Nevochim, cap. 50. the ſubſtance of which is this: That it being impoſſible any miracles ſhould continue throughout all generations, due care ſhould be taken that the memory of them be not loſt, but faithfully preſerved by the hiſtory and narration of them in future times. Now there being no greater miracle than the ſubſiſtence of the children of Iſrael in the deſert for forty years; a deſert full of ſcorpions and ſerpents, deſtitute of water, uninhabited, thro' which no man had been wont to paſs (as Jeremiah ſpeaks, chap. ii. 6.) where they ate no bread, nor drank wine, or ſtrong drink, Deut. xxix. 6. God would have the particular places ſet down diſtinctly where they pitched in that howling wilderneſs; that all men might be ſatisfied (who would take the pains to examine particulars) by what an aſtoniſhing providence ſuch a multitude of people were fed every day, for forty years together; and none might be able to cavil, and ſay, that they had travelled through a country good enough, and pitched in habitable places, where they might plough and ſow, and reap; or where they might have herbs and roots for their ſuſtenance; or where manna ordinarily came down from the clouds for mens ſupport.

Ver. 3. And they departed from Rameſes.] See Exod. xii. 37. Here, in all likelihood, they ſacrificed the paſchal Lamb, and were preſerved from the deſtroying angel, which made this place very remarkable: for they ſeem to have been all ſummoned to aſſemble here as in a common rendezvous, to be ready to march away, when God ſhould give the word of command.

Ver. 5. And the children of Iſrael removed from Rameſes, and pitched in Succoth.] Exod. xii. 37. Here they received the command to ſet apart all the firſt-born unto the Lord, in memory of God's ſparing them when he ſlew all the firſt-born of the Egyptians, Exod. xiii. 1, 12, 13, &c.

Ver. 6. And they departed from Succoth, and pitched in Etham, &c.] See Exod. xiii. 20. where it immediately follows, that they were conducted hither by a miraculous cloud, which ever after led them in all their journies.

Ver. 7. And they removed from Etham, and turned again unto Pi-hahiroth.] So it is expreſsly ſaid Exod. vi. 2. Hither they were led on purpoſe, that they might ſee the wonderful power and goodneſs of God, in a place where they were fenced in by high mountains on each ſide, with the army of Pharaoh behind them, and in their front the Red Sea, through which God opened them a ſecure paſſage, rather than he would ſuffer them to fall again under the Egyptian tyranny. Here is alſo the ſingular number for the plural, in the word turned again, as was obſerved before in another word, chap. xxxii. 25. But the obſervation of the Hebrew doctors upon it, ſeems to be frivolous, namely, that with one heart they did what Moſes commanded.

Ver. 8. And they departed from before Pi-hahiroth, and paſſed through the midſt of the ſea.] Exod. xiv. 23. where Pharaoh and his hoſt were drowned; as the Iſraelites could not but recollect when they read this brief hiſtory: which, it might be expected, would alſo call to remembrance their own diſtruſt of God, notwithſtanding which he moſt graciouſly delivered them, Exod. xiv. 11, 12, &c.

Ver. 10. And they removed from Elim, and encamped by the Red Sea.] Not by that part of it, where they lately came out of it; but in a more ſoutherly ſituation, where that ſea bends towards Arabia. For the Red Sea, which Ptolomy calls the Arabian Gulph, runs a long way, like the Adriatic, now called the Gulph of Venice, or the Baltic Sea, as David Chytræus obſerves; who compares theſe three together, as much of a length; and all in ſome places broader, and ſome narrower. This ſtation is not mentioned in the Book of Exodus.

Ver. 11. And they removed from the Red Sea, and encamped in the wilderneſs of Sin.] Exodus xvi. 1. where manna firſt began to rain upon them, with which God fed them forty years.

Ver. 12. And they took their journey out of the wilderneſs of Sin, and encamped in Dophkah.] This and the next ſtation [Aluſh] are not mentioned in Exodus; becauſe nothing remarkable (it is ſuppoſed) fell out in theſe two places, as there did in the next, and they made no long ſtay there.

Ver. 13. And they departed from Dophkah, and encamped in Aluſh.] The Jewiſh Doctors find ſomething remarkable here, though Moſes is ſilent as to any particulars of that nature. For as the Sabbath was firſt commanded at Marah, which was their fifth ſtation, ſo it was firſt obſerved here at Aluſh, as they fancy, which was their tenth. And more than that, this was the only Sabbath, which, in their opinion, was exactly obſerved by the Iſraelites, the very next being profaned. The author of Sepher Coſri ſays, that according to an ancient tradition, the manna firſt deſcended at this place, P. 2. ſect. 20.

Ver. 14. And they removed from Aluſh, and encamped at Rephidim, where was no water for the people to drink.] The Almighty manifeſted, on this occaſion, his wonderful power and goodneſs, in cauſing water to guſh out of a rock for them, ver. 5, 6. And here alſo Amalek lay in wait for Iſrael, in the way, when they came out of Egypt, 1 Sam. xv. 2. and ſmote ſome that lagged behind, Deut. xxv. 16. but were vanquiſhed by Joſhua in a pitched battle, Exod. xvii. 8, 9, &c. And here Jethro alſo came to viſit Moſes, and gave him advice about the government of the people, with more eaſe both to himſelf and them, Exod. xviii.

Ver. 15. And they departed from Rephidim, and pitched in the wilderneſs of Sinai.] Exod. xix. 1, 2. This was forty ſeven days after they came from Rameſes, on the firſt day of the third month; three days after which (viz. on the fiftieth day after they came out of Egypt.) God gave them his law from mount Sinai; where Moſes was called up to the divine Majeſty, and continued in his preſence twice forty days, and was inſtructed there how to make the tabernacle, and ſet it up with all its furniture and appendages, when compleated. All ſorts of ſacrifices were ordered while they remained in this place; prieſts were likewiſe conſecrated; laws given with relation to clean and unclean things; and about marriages and feaſts, and the year of Jubile, with ſeveral other particulars ſpecified in the book of Leviticus. Here alſo the people were numbered; their encampment was ordered; and a ſecond paſſover was kept; laws were likewiſe given with reference to the water of Jealouſy and the Nazarites, with ſeveral other inſtitutions: and then, after they had continued here eleven months and twenty days, they are commanded to leave this famous ſtation; the moſt remarkable of all other, Numb. x. 11, 12.

Ver. 16. And they removed from the deſert of Sinai, and pitched at Kibroth-hattaavah.] A place in the wilderneſs of Paran, three days journey from mount Sinai, Numb. x. 23. xi. 34. where there was a dreadful ſlaughter of the people, who wantonly deſpiſed manna, and luſted after fleſh; yet here God vouchſafed to ſend his Spirit upon the LXX elders, for the aſſiſtance of Moſes.

Ver. 17. And they departed from Kibroth-hattaavah, and encamped at Hazeroth.] See chap. xi. 35. where Miriam was puniſhed for her envy at Moſes, chap. xii. 1, 10.

Ver. 18. And they departed from Hazeroth, and pitched at Rithmah.] A place alſo in the wilderneſs of Paran, as appears from this book, chap. xii. 16. and was not far from Kadeſh-barnea, from whence the ſpies were ſent to ſearch out the land of Canaan. See chap. xiii. 26. In which place they remained a very conſiderable time, Deut. i. 46.

Ver. 19. And they departed from Rithmah, and pitched in Rimmon Parez.] This and the following ſtages are no where elſe mentioned; and ſeem to have all been in the wilderneſs of Paran, already mentioned; which was a very extenſive tract of ground, from Elana, a port in the Arabian Gulph, to Kadeſh-barnea; which, as David Chytræus computes it, was thirty German miles.

Ver. 20. And they departed from Rimmon-parez, and pitched in Libnah.] This and the reſt, to ver. 31. are places of which, as was before obſerved, we no where elſe read, and ſo can give no account of them. They were all uninhabited, and out of the road of all travellers; and perhaps had no names till they were given them by the Iſraelites; who encamped in ſo many various places, (ſometimes in mountains, as appears from ver. 23. and ſometimes in the plain) that they might be taught, that God was alike preſent every where to protect, defend and provide for their neceſſities, even there where no man dwelt. The Jews make this uſe of their travels, here recorded by Moſes, thro' ſo many unknown places, by which he brought them at laſt to Canaan; namely, to keep up their ſpirits under this long captivity, as they call it, wherein they now are, and have wandered uncertainly, from mountain to mountain, from kingdom to kingdom, from baniſhment to baniſhment, (as they themſelves ſpeak) till their Meſſiah ſhall come to redeem them: Which he will do, when their eyes are opened to ſee what one of their ancient Rabbins (Moſes Hadarſchan) hath told them, as he is quoted by Paulus Fagius, "That the redeemer was born "before him who reduced Iſrael into this laſt captivity.

Ver. 31. And they departed from Moſeroth, and pitched in Bene-jaakan.] In Deut. x. 6. Moſes ſeems to ſay the quite contrary, namely, that they "took their journey "from Beeroth, of the children of Jaakan to Moſera." But there he may be thought to ſpeak of a different place, as Druſius notes upon theſe words: Or, if he doth not, it is no wonder if, while they wandered in this tedious wilderneſs, they went backward and forward, from Bene-jaakan to Moſeroth, which he mentions in Deutronomy; and from Moſeroth back again to Bene-jaakan, which he mentions here.

Ver. 32. And they journied from Bene-jaakan, and encamped at Hor Hagidgad.] This place was alſo called Gudgodah, Deut. x. 7. if Moſes ſpeaks there of the ſame places as are mentioned here.

Ver. 33. And they went from Hor-hagidgad, and pitched in Jotbathah.] Called Deut. x. 7. Jotbath.

Ver. 34. And they removed from Jotbathah, and encamped at Ebronah.] All their removals mentioned from ver. 16. to this and the next place, are an account of their wanderings in the wilderneſs, from the ſecond year after their coming out of Egypt till the fortieth; in which time all the congregation, above twenty years of age, were conſumed, and buried in ſome part or other of this great deſert.

Ver. 35. And they departed from Ebronah, and encamped at Eziongaber.] A place on the Red-ſea, unto which they were brought before they ended their travels, 1 Kings ix. 26. xxii. 18. It had its name from the jagged rocks, reſembling the back-bone, and which ſtretched out a great way on that ſhore, as Bochart obſerves; which rocks made this part ſo dangerous, that it was forſaken in after-times, and Elah frequented as a ſafer harbour. See lib. 1. Canaan, cap. 44. It is not recorded how long they remained in any of theſe places, but it is likely a conſiderable time in ſome of them, for they ſpent thirty eight years in theſe removals.

Ver. 36. And they removed from Eziongaber, and pitched in the wilderneſs of Zin, which is Kadeſh.] See chap. xx. 1. Moſes doth not mean Kadeſh-barnea, which was on the borders of Canaan, but another Kadeſh in the skirts of this wilderneſs, toward the ſouth, nor far from the port we now mentioned (which the Greeks call Elana) on the border of Edom, where Miriam died, and where water was brought out of the rock. See chap. xx. 8, 14, 16.

Ver. 37. And they removed from Kadeſh, and pitched in mount Hor, in the edge of the land of Edom.] See chap. xx. 28.

Ver. 38, And Aaron went up into mount Hor at the commandment of the Lord.] chap. xx. 23, 24. 27. Deut. xxxii. 50. The Hebrew doctors are too conceited in their obſervation, that becauſe it is ſaid of him, and of Moſes, that they died al pi (at the mouth) of the Lord, the Lord took their ſouls out of their bodies with a kiſs. But Maimonides endeavours to make a ſober ſenſe of this, by repreſenting their meaning to be, that they expired with the tranſcendent pleaſure of divine love. More Nevoch. p, 3. cap. 51.

Ver. 39. And Aaron was an hundred and twenty and three years old, when he died in mount Hor.] He was juſt eighty and three years old, when he and Moſes firſt went with a meſſage to Pharaoh, Exod. vii. 7. By which it appears, that they were not long in working all the miracles in Egypt, before they brought the people forth: for now forty years after, he was but an hundred and twenty three years old.

Ver. 41. And they departed from mount Hor, and pitched in Zalmonah.] We read in chap. xxi. of this book, ver. 4. that they journ ed from Hor, to compaſs the land of Edom; but are not told there, where they pitched; which is here ſupplied, the name of the place being Zalmonah; which carries in it the ſignification of an image, and therefore here, perhaps, the brazen ſerpent was erected. See chap. xxi. 9.

Ver. 42. And they departed from Zalmonah, and pitched in Punon.] Where Bochart rather thinks the brazen ſerpent was ſet up; becauſe, after Moſes hath given the hiſtory of that, he ſays, they ſet forward and pitched in Oboth, chap. xxi. 10. which was the place of their abode next to Punon, as it here follows, Hierozoic. p. 1. lib. 3. cap. 12. in the latter end of it.

Ver. 44. And they departed from Oboth, and pitched in Jie-abarim, in the border of Moab.] See chap. xxi. 11. This name is tranſlated in the margin, heaps of Abarim, which may poſſibly ſignify many heaps of ſtones, which lay not far from the mountains of Abarim, ver. 47.

Ver. 45. And they departed from Jim, and pitched in Dibon-gad.] Here half the name of the firſt place is omitted, as is uſual, when the names are long. This may ſeem not to agree with chap. xxi. 12. where it is ſaid, they removed from thence, and pitched in the valley of Zered; near which, in all probability, was this Dibon-gad.

Ver. 47. And they removed from Almon-diblathaim, and pitched in the mountains of Abarim before Nebo.] We read no where when they came to this manſion; but, it is plain, they were not far from it, when God commanded Moſes to aſcend one of theſe mountains, and take a view of Canaan. See chap. xxvii. 12. But this followed their laſt manſion; and therefore it is moſt likely this is the place mentioned, chap. xxi. 20.

Ver. 49. And they pitched by Jordan, from Beth-jeſimoth.] A place where was a temple, in all likelihood, to ſome deity: For ſo Beth denotes in many compoſitions, as Beth-peor (the houſe, or temple of Baal on the top of Peor) Beth-Aſtaroth, and Beth-Baal-berith, Judges ix. 4. And Beth-Shemeſh is often mentioned; where the ſun was worſhipped. And poſſibly Jeſhimoth may be the ſame with Jeſhimon, chap. xxi. 20.

——— Even unto Abel-Shittim, &c.] Called ſimply Shittim, chap. xxv. 1. which ſome fancy had the name of Abel added to it (which ſignifies mourning) becauſe of that lamentation which was made there, by ſome for the aggraved ſins that were there committed; and by others, for the heavy puniſhment inflicted in that place. But it ſeems to have been anciently called Abel-Shittim, before this time,

Ver. 50. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes in the plains of Moab, &c.] The Deity, after he had prepared them for their entrance into the land of Canaan, ordered the firſt and principal work they ſhould there undertake.

Ver. 51. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, when ye are paſſed over Jordan, into the land of Canaan.] Accordingly Moſes did deliver this command unto them, Deut vii. 1, 2.

Ver.

Ver. 52. Then ye ſhall drive out all the inhabitants of the land from before you.] Ye ſhall not ſuffer them to dwell in the land any longer, but either deſtroy or expel them; becauſe they were abominable idolaters, devoted to extermination, Exod. xxiii. 33. Deut. xx. 16, 17, 18. by whom the Iſraelites would have been in danger to be corrupted, if they were not rooted out.

—— And deſtroy all their pictures.] Or their temples, or houſes of worſhip, as Onkelos interprets it. But others (eſpecially the Jeruſalem Jargum) underſtand it of the idols or ſtatues ſet up in thoſe temples, or ſome repreſentations of their gods.

—— And deſtroy their molten images.] Exod. xxiii. 24. xxxiv. 13. for if they ſuffered them to remain, they might be enticed to worſhip them. Theſe were idols, perhaps, in publick places, or private houſes, out of their temples.

—— And quite pluck down all their high places.] They could not throw down the mountains, upon which the people of Canaan worſhipped: But the meaning is, that they ſhould cut down the groves which were there planted, and demoliſh all the altars that ſtood in them. For there were no other temples, at firſt, but theſe groves upon mountains, where the ancient Heathens worſhipped the ſun, moon, and ſtars, unto which they thought the mountains approached nearer than the reſt of the earth, and therefore their ſacrifices there would be moſt prevalent.

Ver. 53. And ye ſhall diſpoſſeſs the inhabitants of the land; and dwell therein; for I have given you the land to poſſeſs it.] God did not intend they ſhould diſpoſſeſs the old inhabitants all at once, but by degrees, as he himſelf declares in Exod. xxiii. 29, 30. Deut. vii. 22.

Ver. 54. And ye ſhall divide the land by lot, for an inheritance among your families.] Ye ſhall follow the directions I have already given for the dividing of the land; after the old inhabitants are expelled, chap. xxvi. 53, 55.

Ver. 55. And if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land from before you.] They could not immediately drive them all out, nor was this God's intention as was before obſerved. Therefore Joſhua would not attempt it while he lived; but left ſeveral nations, or part of them, unſubdued, Judges ii. 21, 23. of which he himſelf takes notice a little before he died, Joſh. xxiii. 4, 7. where he warns the Iſraelites to have no commerce with them; promiſing them that God would in time expel them quite, ver. 5. But when the Iſraelites grew indolent and puſillanimous, and negligently ſuffered the people of Canaan to dwell among them, and contracted friendſhips with them, (as they did after Joſhua and all that generation were dead) then followed what is here threatned in the next words.

—— Then it ſhall come to paſs, that thoſe which ye let remain of them ſhall be pricks in your eyes, and thorns in your ſides.] They ſhall bring very fatal calamities upon you; and which ſhall prove as afflictive and miſchievous as a wound in the eye, which is a moſt tender part; or in the ſide, when a thorn feſters in it. Some are ſo curious, as by the firſt part of theſe words (pricks in your eyes) to underſtand their being ſtimulated to idolatry, by beholding Canaanitiſh rites of religion and manner of worſhip: And the next they take to ſignify the effect of it, in ſharp puniſhments, which ſhould befall them, for their forſaking God. Joſhua threatned the ſame before he died, chap. xxiii. 13. of which an angel, or meſſenger of the Lord minded them, Judges ii. 3. And ſo it came to paſs, as we read there, ver. 14. and throughout that whole book.

Ver. 56. Moreover, I will do unto you as I thought to have done unto them.] As I purpoſed to do unto them; that is, I will make you their ſlaves, as they were to ſeveral people, whom they ſerved many years, Judges iii. 8, 14. vi. 2. and many other places; or I will cauſe you to flee before them, and will at laſt expel you from the land I now give you.

CHAP. XXXIV.

1 The borders of the land. 16 The names of the men which ſhall divide the land.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Command the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, When ye come into the land of Canaan, (this is the land that ſhall fall unto you for an inheritance, even the land of Canaan, with the coaſts thereof)

3 Then your ſouth quarter ſhall be from the wilderneſs of Zin, along by the coaſt of Edom, and your ſouth border ſhall be the outmoſt coaſt of the ſalt-ſea, eaſtward.

4 And your border ſhall turn from the ſouth to the aſcent of Akrabbim, and paſs on to Zin; and the going forth thereof ſhall be from the ſouth to Kadeſh-barnea, and ſhall go on to Hazar-addar, and paſs on to Azmon.

5 And the border ſhall fetch a compaſs from Azmon unto the river of Egypt, and the goings out of it ſhall be at the ſea.

6 And as for the weſtern border, ye ſhall even have the great ſea for a border: this ſhall be your weſt border.

7 And this ſhall be your north border; from the great ſea, you ſhall point out for you mount Hor.

8 From mount Hor ye ſhall point out your border unto the entrance of Hamath: and the goings forth of the border ſhall be to Zedad.

9 ¶ And the border ſhall go on to Ziphron, and the goings out of it ſhall be at Hazar-enan: this ſhall be your north border.

10 And ye ſhall point out your eaſt border, from Hazar-enan to Shepham.

11 And the coaſt ſhall go down from Shepham to Riblah, on the eaſt ſide of Ain; and the border ſhall deſcend, and ſhall reach unto the ſide of the ſea of Chinnereth eaſtward.

12 And the border ſhall go down to Jordan, and the goings out of it ſhall be at the ſalt-ſea: This ſhall be your land, with the coaſts thereof round about.

13 And Moſes commanded the children of Iſrael, ſaying, This is the land which ye ſhall inherit by lot, which the LORD commanded to give unto the nine tribes, and to the half tribe.

14 For the tribe of the children of Reuben, according to the houſe of their fathers, and the tribe of the children of Gad, according to the houſe of their fathers, have received their inheritance, and half the tribe of Manaſſeh have received their inheritance.

15 The two tribes and the half-tribe have received their inheritance on this ſide Jordan near Jericho, eaſt-ward, toward the ſunriſing.

16 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

17 Theſe are the names of the men which ſhall divide the land unto you: Eleazar the prieſt, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun.

18 And ye ſhall take one prince of every tribe, to divide the land by inheritance.

19 And the names of the men are theſe: Of the tribe of Judah, Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh.

20 And of the tribe of the children of Simeon, Shemuel the ſon of Ammihud.

21 Of the tribe of Benjamin, Elidad the ſon of Chiſlon.

22 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Dan, Bukki the ſon of Jogli.

23 The prince of the children of Joſeph, for the tribe of the children of Manaſſeh, Hanniel the ſon of Ephod.

24 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Ephraim, Kemuel the ſon of Shiphtan.

25 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Zebulun, Elizaphan the ſon of Parnach.

26 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Iſſachar, Paltiel the ſon of Azzan.

27 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Aſher, Ahihud the ſon of Shelomi.

28 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Naphtali, Pedahel the ſon of Ammihud.

29 Theſe are they whom the LORD commanded to divide the inheritance unto the children of Iſrael in the land of Canaan.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] In the ſame place, where they were when God laſt ſpake to him; for they made no other removals till they marched for Canaan.

Ver. 2. Command the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, when ye come into the land of Canaan, this is the land that ſhall fall unto you, for your inheritance.] Having ſpoken to them concerning their diſpoſſeſſing the Canaanites, and dividing their land among their tribes; it was fit to deſcribe the bounds of their country, that they might know whom they were to deſtroy, and into whoſe poſſeſſions they were to enter.

—— Even the land of Canaan, and the coaſts thereof.] The land beyond Jordan; and the limits or bounds thereof.

Ver. 3. Then your ſouth quarter ſhall be from the wilderneſs of Zin, along by the coaſt of Edom.] Which bordered upon this wilderneſs, chap. xx. 1, 14.

—— And your ſouth border ſhall be the utmoſt coaſt of the ſalt ſea.] From the very tongue of it, as it is expreſſed, Joſhua xv. 2. where it appears, this was the portion of the tribe of Judah.

The ſalt-ſea is that which is called ſometimes the dead-ſea, and in other authors, Lacus Aſphaltites. See Gen. xiv. 3. The Hebrews call all great lakes by the name of ſeas; and this is called the ſalt-ſea, becauſe the water of it is very ſalt, or, as ſome expreſs it, bitter; and the dead-ſea, propter aquæ immobilitatem, as Juſtin ſpeaks, lib. xxxvi. becauſe of the ſuppoſed immoveableneſs of the water. See Voſſius de Orig. & Progr. Idolol. lib. 2. cap. 68.

—— Eaſtward.] Where the eaſtern and ſouthern borders meet.

Ver. 4. And your border ſhall turn from the ſouth to the aſcent of Akrabbim.] Or, to Maale-Akrabbim, a mountain on the ſouth end of the dead-ſea, Joſh. xv. 3. Judges i. 36. ſo called, as Bochart conjectures, from the vaſt multitude of ſcorpions found here; from which mountain alſo, it is probable, the region called Acrabatena, near Idumæa, had its name, 1 Maccab. v. 3. See Hierozoicon, p. 2. lib. 4. cap. 29.

—— And paſs on to Zin.] Either to a place called Zin, or part of the wilderneſs of Zin; which lay on the ſouth of the land of Canaan, cap. xiii. 21.

—— And the going forth thereof ſhall be the ſouth to Kadeſh-barnea.] From whence the ſpies were ſent to ſearch the land; and are ſaid expreſly to have gone up by the ſouth, cap. xiii. 22, 26.

—— And ſhall go on to Hazar-Addar.] Or, to the village of Addar, as the vulgar Latin renders it, which ſeems to be juſtified by Joſh. xv. 3. where it is ſimply called Addar. There is a place called Hezron joined with it, which may be thought to be the ſame with Hazar; but ſo is another place alſo, called Karkaa; both which may as well be thought to be here omitted, for brevity ſake, —— And paſs on to Azmon.] A place lying on the weſt-end of the mount of Edom.

Ver. 5. And the border ſhall fetch a compaſs from Azmon unto the river of Egypt.] By the river of Egypt is generally underſtood the Nile; and ſo Jonathan here renders the Hebrew word Nahal (River) by Nilus; which may ſeem to have taken its name from the word Nahal; which the ancients did not pronounce as we do now, but called it Neel, as we find in Epiphanius; from whence Nilus is eaſily made, as Bochart obſerves, Hierozoic. p. 11. lib. 5. cap. 15. Biſhop Patrick obſerves, that if the Nile be here meant, it muſt be the more northerly mouth of it, where Peluſium ſtood. See Gen. xv. 18.

But we muſt beg leave to obſerve, that the Nile is not the river of Egypt, mentioned in this verſe, but a leſſer river that ran not far from Gaza, a city in the ſouthern limits of the land of Iſrael, and this is expreſly confirmed, Joſh. xiv. 47. where the cities belonging to the tribe of Judah being enumerated, mention is made of Gaza, with her towns and villages, unto the river of Egypt: Whence it may be fairly inferred, that the Moſaical river of Egypt was not far from the city of Gaza.

—— And the goings out of it ſhall be at the ſea.] This border ended at the ſea, called the great ſea in the next verſe.

Ver. 6. And as for the weſtern border, ye ſhall have even the great ſea.] That is, the Mediterranean, or midland ſea, which lay on the weſt of Judea; and is called by the Hebrews the great ſea, in compariſon with the lake of Geneſaret, and Aſphaltites, which they alſo called ſeas.

—— This ſhall be your weſtern border.] From the river of Egypt as far as Zidon, which was a part of the promiſed land, as appears from Joſhua xiii. 6. Judges i. 31. All the cities indeed on the ſhore of this ſea, were held by the Philiſtines and others, till the time of David; but the Iſraelites had a right to them. And the famous Rabbi Juda underſtands theſe words, as if they ſhould have the weſtern Ocean itſelf for their portion, as well as the land adjacent to it; for ſo he expounds theſe words as if Moſes had ſaid, this ſhall be your weſtern border, border, viz. "The border of the ſea, and the iſles near "unto it: And the Jeruſalem Targum more plainly, And "let the great ſea be your border, i. e. the ocean and "the iſles thereof, and the cities, and the ſhips "with the ancient waters, that are in the midſt of it." See Selden in his Mare Clauſum, lib. 1. cap. 6. where he alledges this as a proof, that men anciently thought they might have dominion over the ſea, as well as the land.

Ver 7. And this ſhall be your northern border; from the great ſea, you ſhall point out for you mount Hor.] Not that mount where Aaron died; for that was on the ſouth of the land of Canaan, towards Edom; but this was diametrically oppoſite, on the north of it; and therefore muſt in all likelihood be ſome part of mount Libanus, which with Antilibanus (more toward the great ſea) bounded the promiſed land on the north. But there were ſeveral parts of mount Libanus, which were called by ſeveral names; and probably one of them was called Hor, becauſe of its eminency or height above the reſt. So the vulgar tranſlates it; reading we ſuppoſe, the Hebrew, not Hor-hahar, i. e. Hor the mountain, but Harhahar, the mountain of mountains, i. e. the higheſt mountain. The Jews generally by this mount Hor, underſtand Amanus, which is a part of Taurus (as Mr. Selden obſerves in the place before named) which the Jeruſalem Targum calls more briefly Manus.

Ver. 8. From mount Hor ye ſhall point out your border, to the entrance of Hamath.] There were two Hamaths: one called by the Greeks, Antiochia; the other Epiphania. The former called Hamath the great, Amos vi. 2. to diſtinguiſh it from the latter, which is the city that is always meant, when we read the bounds of Judea were to the entrance of Hamath northward, as here, and chap. xiii. 21. for it is certain, as Bochart obſerves, they did not reach to Antiochia, but came near to Epiphania, lib. 4. Phaleg. cap. 36. And this makes it probable, that Hor, as we ſaid before, may be a promontory of Libanus; becauſe in Joſhua xiii. 5. Hermon is joined with the entrance of Hamath, as Hor is here. Now Hermon was certainly a part of Libanus, by ſome called Sirion; by others Senir, Deut. iii. 9. and by others Sion, Deut. iv. 48.

——— And the going forth of the border ſhall be to Zedad.] Which in Ezekiel's time was reckoned the northern border (together with Hamath) from the great ſea, juſt as it is here. Ezek. xlvii. 15, 16.

Ver. 9. And the border ſhall go on to Ziphron.] Another town in thoſe parts; of which we find no mention any where elſe.

——— And the goings out of it ſhall be at Hazar-Enan.] Here it ended, which was a place that retained its name till Ezekiel's time, chap. xlvii. 17. David Chytræus ſeems to have given a full account of this northern border in a few words: It extended, ſaith he, from the Mediterranean, by the mountains of Libanus, to the fountain of Jordan; in which tract are the towns of Hamath, Zadad (in the tribe of Naphthali) Ziphron, in the ſame tribe, at the foot of Libanus, and Hazar Enan, which he takes to ſignify a village at the fountain of Jordan.

Ver. 10. And ye ſhall point out your eaſtern-border from Hazar Enan to Shepham.] A place not far from thence; for the river Jordan was certainly the eaſtern limits.

Ver. 11. And the coaſt ſhall go down from Shepham to Riblah.] A place, no doubt, near to Jordan, with which river the eaſtern limits go along. St. Jerom takes Riblah to be Antiocha; but that was in Syria, to which the promiſed land did not reach.

——— On the eaſt ſide of Ain.] The Vulgar reads it, the fountain of Daphne: And indeed Ain ſignifies a fountain; and both Jonathan and the Jeruſalem Targum take Riblah for Daphne; as they do Shepham, before mentioned, for Apamia. But this is only a vain conceit of the Jews, who would extend their bounds beyond what God gave them. For it is certain, the land of Canaan never extended to theſe places, as Bochart obſerves, lib 1. Canaan, cap. 16. And therefore Daphne, which was in the ſuburbs of Antiochia, cannot be here meant, unleſs we underſtand another place mentioned by Joſephus, lib. 4. de bello Judaico, cap. 1. which lay near the lake of Semechonites, thro' the middle of which Jordan ran. And then Ain muſt ſignify another fountain of Jordan; for it had more than one. And thus David Chytræus explains this part of the verſe, and the foregoing. The eaſtern bounds were the river Jordan, near to which were theſe places; Enan, which had its name from the fountain of the river; and Shepham, not far from thence; Riblah, which was alſo near to Jordan, lying between the lake of Semechoenites and Geneſaret.

——— And the border ſhall deſcend, and ſhall reach unto the ſide of the ſea of Cinnereth eaſtward.] To the eaſt ſide of this ſea, or lake, which had its name from a city ſo called, Joſh. xix. 35. and a country, 1 Kings xv. 20. or elſe it gave them their names: for David Chytræus will have it called Cinnereth, from the Hebrew word Cinnor, which ſignifies a harp or lute, the lake being of that ſhape or figure, about four German miles long, and two and a half broad. It is called, The Sea of Galilee; or, Tiberias in the Goſpel.

Ver. 12. And the border ſhall go down to Jordan.] That is, to the river which was eminently ſo called, and was on the eaſt part of Canaan, Gen. xiii. 11. for it was very ſmall till it came to the lake of Geneſaret, before mentioned. From whence, being augmented by ſeveral torrents and rivulets, it ran in a wider ſtream, till it fell into the Salt or Dead Sea. See Bonfrerius out of Joſephus, lib. 4. de Bello Judaico, cap. 1.

——— And its going out ſhall be at the ſalt ſea. This ſhall be your land, with the coaſts thereof round about.] As was ſaid before, ver. 2. therefore they were not to extend their right any farther; this being the country God promiſed to Abraham, when he bad him lift up his eyes, and look from the place where he was, "northward and ſouth-"ward, and eaſtward, and weſtward, and walk through "the length of the land, and breadth of it," which he aſſures to his poſterity, Gen. xiii. 14, 15, 16, 17. and now lays out for them, with the exact limits of it, in all thoſe four quarters.

Ver. 13. And Moſes commanded the children of Iſrael, ſaying, this is the land which ye ſhall inherit by lot.] He repeats it ſo often, that they might know what people they were to diſpoſſeſs, and with whom they might make friendſhip; and not extend their deſires beyond the bounds of God's gracious grant to them. By which they were placed in a very fertile and pleaſant country, bounded, as appears, by the foregoing deſcription, on the ſouth, ver. 4, 5. by great mountains, which ſheltered them from the burning air of the deſarts of Arabia; on the weſt by the midland ſea, which ſent to them refreſhing breezes; on the north by mount Libanus, which kept off the colder blaſts from that quarter; and on the eaſt, by the delightful plains of Jordan, abounding with palm-trees, eſpecially about Jericho, which yielded them a great revenue.

——— Which the Lord commanded to give to the nine tribes, and to the half tribe.] This he had not ſaid plainly before, though it was neceſſarily inferred, from his granting to two tribes and a half their inheritance beyond Jordan.

Ver. 14. For the tribe of the children of Reuben according to the houſe of their fathers, and the tribe of the children of Gad, &c. have received their inheritance.] Upon condition they performed their promiſe, to help the reſt of their tribes to win their inheritance in Canaan. So thoſe words are to be underſtood, "Moſes gave unto them the "kingdom of Sihon, &c."

Ver. 15. The two tribes and an half have received their inheritance on this ſide Jordan.] By the gift of God, as they themſelves underſtood it, xxxii. 31. The bounds of which the Jeruſalem Targum here undertakes to ſet down, and makes them extend eaſtward, as far as the great river Euphrates; having reſpect, we ſuppoſe, to Geneſis xv. 18. and Exod. xxiii. 30. where he ſets down the utmoſt bounds of the countries he intended to beſtow upon them in future times, (ſee there) but here only deſcribes the limits of that land, which they were to enjoy in preſent poſſeſſion; and was all that God granted to Abraham, when he brought him out of Chaldea, and made his firſt promiſe to him, Gen. xii. 1, 7. xiii. 14, 15, 17. xv. 7.

Ver. 16. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,] Having told them what they ſhould divide, it was proper to appoint ſome perſons to take care to ſee the diviſion made.

Ver. 17. Theſe are the names of the men which ſhall divide the land.] Though the land was to be divided by lot, yet it was fit there ſhould be ſome perſons to overſee the buſineſs, and take care there ſhould be no fraud in the drawing of them: and when they were drawn, to prevent all quarrels, by determining what portion, thoſe who had too much, ſhould give to thoſe who had too little, xxvi. 54, 55.

—— Eleazar the prieſt, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun.] Theſe were the principal perſons concerned in this great affair, who were ſo conſcientious therein, that they did it in the preſence of God, at the door of the tabernacle, Joſh. xviii. 6, 8, 10. xix. 51.

Ver. 18. And ye ſhall take one prince of every tribe, to divide the land by inheritance.] They are called in the place laſt named, "the heads of the fathers of the tribes "of the children of Iſrael.

CHAP. XXXV.

1 Eight and forty cities for the Levites with their ſuburbs, and the meaſure thereof. 6 Six of them are to be cities of refuge. 9 The laws of murder. 31 No ſatisfaction for murder.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes in the plains of Moab by Jordan near Jericho, ſaying,

2 Command the children of Iſrael, that they give unto the Levites of the inheritance of their poſſeſſion, cities to dwell in: and ye ſhall give alſo unto the Levites ſuburbs for the cities round about them.

3 And the cities ſhall they have to dwell in, and the ſuburbs of them ſhall be for their cattle, and for their goods, and for all their beaſts.

4 And the ſuburbs of the cities which ye ſhall give unto the Levites, ſhall reach from the wall of the city and outward, a thouſand cubits round about.

5 And ye ſhall meaſure from without the city on the eaſt ſide two thouſand cubits, and on the ſouth ſide two thouſand cubits, and on the weſt ſide two thouſand cubits, and on the north ſide two thouſand cubits: and the city ſhall be in the midſt: this ſhall be to them the ſuburbs of the cities.

6 And among the cities which ye ſhall give unto the Levites, there ſhall be ſix cities for refuge, which ye ſhall appoint for the man-ſlayer, that he may flee thither: and to them ye ſhall add forty and two cities.

7 So all the cities which ye ſhall give to the Levites ſhall be forty and eight cities: them ſhall ye give with their ſuburbs.

8 And the cities which ye ſhall give, ſhall be of the poſſeſſion of the children of Iſrael: from them that have many, ye ſhall give many; but from them that have few, ye ſhall give few: every one ſhall give of his cities unto the Levites, according to his inheritance which he inheriteth.

9 ¶ And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

10 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, When ye be come over Jordan into the land of Canaan:

11 Then ye ſhall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you; that the ſlayer may flee thither which killeth any perſon at unawares.

12 And they ſhall be unto you cities for refuge from the avenger; that the man-ſlayer die not, until he ſtand before the congregation in judgment.

13 And of theſe cities which ye ſhall give, ſix cities ſhall ye have for refuge.

14 Ye ſhall give three cities on this ſide Jordan, and three cities ſhall ye give in the land of Canaan, which ſhall be cities of refuge.

15 Theſe ſix cities ſhall be a refuge, both for the children of Iſrael, and for the ſtranger, and for the ſojourner among them: that every one that killeth any perſon unawares, may flee thither.

16 And if he ſmite him with an inſtrument of iron (ſo that he die) he is a murderer: the murderer ſhall ſurely be put to death.

17 And if he ſmite him with throwing a ſtone (wherewith he may die) and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer ſhall ſurely be put to death.

18 Or if he ſmite him with an hand-weapon of wood (wherewith he may die) and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer ſhall ſurely be put to death.

19 The revenger of blood himſelf ſhall ſlay the murderer: when he meeteth him, he ſhall ſlay him.

20 But if he thruſt him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait, that he die;

21 Or in enmity ſmite him with his hand, that he die, he that ſmote him ſhall ſurely be put to death; for he is a murderer: the revenger of blood ſhall ſlay the murderer when he meeteth him.

22 But if he thruſt him ſuddenly without enmity, or have caſt upon him any thing without laying of wait;

23 Or with any ſtone wherewith a man may die, ſeeing him not, and caſt it upon him that he die, and was not his enemy, neither ſought his harm:

24 Then the congregation ſhall judge between the ſlayer, and the revenger of blood, according to theſe judgments.

25 And the congregation ſhall deliver the ſlayer out of the hand of the revenger of blood, and the congregation ſhall reſtore him him to the city of his refuge, whither he was fled: and he ſhall abide in it unto the death of the high prieſt, which was anointed with the holy oyl.

26 But if the ſlayer ſhall at any time come without the border of the city of his refuge, whither he was fled;

27 And the revenger of blood find him without the borders of the city of his refuge, and the revenger of blood kill the ſlayer; he ſhall not be guilty of blood.

28 Becauſe he ſhould have remained in the city of his refuge, until the death of the high prieſt: but after the death of the high prieſt, the ſlayer ſhall return into the land of his poſſeſſion.

29 So theſe things ſhall be for a ſtatute of judgment unto you, throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

30 Whoſo killeth any perſon, the murderer ſhall be put to death by the mouth of witneſſes: but one witneſs ſhall not teſtify againſt any perſon, to cauſe him to die.

31 Moreover, ye ſhall take no ſatisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is guilty of death: but he ſhall be ſurely put to death.

32 And ye ſhall take no ſatisfaction for him that is fled to the city of his refuge, that he ſhould come again to dwell in the land, until the death of the prieſt.

33 So ye ſhall not pollute the land wherein ye are: for blood it defileth the land: and the land cannot be cleanſed of the blood that is ſhed therein, but by the blood of him that ſhed it.

34 Defile not therefore the land which ye ſhall inhabit, wherein I dwell: for I the LORD dwell among the children of Iſrael.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho, ſaying.] See xxii. 1. Hitherto nothing has been, ſaid of the Levites; but that they ſhould have no lot in the land of Canaan. But now God provides that they ſhould have habitations aſſigned them to dwell in, tho' they had no fields nor olive yards, &c. as the reſt of their brethren had. They might indeed have been able to purchaſe houſes for themſelves out of the tithes, and other things which God had long ago beſtowed upon them for their portion: But it was not fit that God's miniſters ſhould be left without any certain dwelling. And beſide, God would have them live comfortably, and not only have houſes, but a little ground about them, for their more commodious ſubſiſtance.

Ver. 2. Command the children of Iſrael, that they give unto the Levites of the inheritance of their poſſeſſion.] Out of their ſhare that ſhall fall to them in the land of Canaan, and on this ſide Jordan.

——— Cities to dwell in.] That they might not be in danger to wander up and down to ſeek an habitation.

——— And ye ſhall give alſo to the Levites ſuburbs for the cities round about them.] Some ground lying round about their cities, the reaſon of which is given in the next verſe.

Ver. 3. And the cities they ſhall have to dwell in.] That they may build houſes for themſelves to inhabit. Which did not make it unlawful for them to hire or purchaſe houſes in any other city, particularly at Jeruſalem, or the place where the tabernacle was ſettled; for we find in Scripture many proofs of their dwelling in other cities, beſide theſe which are here aſſigned to them. And in like manner, other people, with their permiſſion, might dwell with them in theſe cities, without any breach of this law.

——— And the ſuburbs ſhall be for their cattle, and for their goods.] The Hebrew word ſignifies, not only all kind of houſhold ſtuff, but whatſoever was neceſſary for them and their cattle without doors.

——— And for their beaſts.] Horſes, aſſes, mules, and all ſorts of living creatures, as the Hebrew word ſignifies. But it was not lawful for them to build houſes in theſe fields, nor plant vineyards, nor ſow corn: But they were given them only to make their dwellings more commodious; and that they might have the convenience of cattle about them, for proviſions and all other uſes.

Ver. 4. And the ſuburbs and cities which ye ſhall give unto the Levites.] To be their poſſeſſion, by as good and full right, as their brethren of the other tribes had in their lands, which fell to them for their inheritance by lot: See Lev. xxv. 31, 32, 33. where they themſelves are diſabled to alienate either the houſes or fields of their cities. But if they ſold a houſe it was to revert at the Jubilee, and the fields they could not ſo much as ſell till that time.

——— Shall reach from the walls of the city, and outward, a thouſand cubits round about.] This ſpace was for their out-houſes; as ſtables, places for hay and ſtraw, and ſuch like things, and, perhaps for gardens of herbs and flowers. The Gemara, upon the ninth chapter of Sota, ſect. 9. ſaith, that under the ſecond temple, the Levites had no ſuburbs; which were not reſtored to them after the captivity of Babylon. But there being great care taken that the people ſhould pay all the tithe of their ground unto the Levites, Nehem. x. 37. it is unreaſonable to think that care was not taken for places to lay them in.

Ver. 5. And ye ſhall meaſure from without the city.] It is not ſaid as in the foregoing verſe, from the wall of the city; therefore we take it to ſignify from the outſide of the ſuburbs before mentioned.

——— On the eaſt ſide two thouſand cubits, and on the ſouth ſide two thouſand cubits, &c.] So there was in the whole three thouſand cubits round about the city; a thouſand for the ſuburbs properly ſo called; and two thouſand more for their paſture, called properly the fields of the ſuburbs, Lev. xxv. 34. This is the moſt natural and eaſy explication of this place.

——— And the city ſhall be in the midſt.] So that there was exactly, every way ſuch a circuit of ground about it.

——— This ſhall be the ſuburbs of the cities.] Here the word ſuburbs comprehends the fields alſo. And Maimonides ſaith, that by the conſtitution of the elders, they ſet forth alſo a burying-place for every city beyond theſe limits; for they might not bury their dead within the ſuburbs or fields; which they ground upon the foregoing verſe, which appoints them for other uſes, Schemita ve Jobel, cap. 13.

Ver. 6. And among the cities which ye ſhall give unto the Levites, there ſhall be ſix cities for refuge.] Three in the land of Canaan, and three on the other ſide Jordan, ver. 14. the names of which are ſet down, Joſh. xx. 7, 8. and thoſe on the other ſide Jordan were ſet apart by Moſes himſelf before he died, Deut. iv. 43. The reaſon of their being called cities of refuge, is given in the next words.

——— Which ye ſhall appoint for the man-ſlayer.] Such a man-ſlayer as is afterward deſcribed; who killed another againſt his will.

Ver. 11. Then ye ſhall appoint you cities, to be cities of refuge for you; that the ſlayer may flee thither which killeth any perſon unawares.] Theſe were choſen out of thoſe forty-two which had been aſſigned to the tribe of Levi. They differed from the aſyla of the Greeks and Romans, in that they were deſigned to protect innocent perſons only, from the rigour of the law, in caſes of involuntary homicide, whereas theirs did equally ſhelter the guilty and innocent from it. There is an expreſs command in Exodus, with relation to wilful murder, that the guilty perſon ſhall be torn even from God's altar to be put to death, chap. xxi. 14. From which we may naturally infer, that the tabernacle was a ſanctuary to the innocent, not only during their wandering in the wilderneſs, but all the time of their abode in the land of Canaan; at leaſt, the inſtance of Job's taking refuge there, ſeems to imply as much, tho' his crime excluded him from the benefit of it, 1 Kings ii. 28. And indeed ſo ſevere were God's laws againſt murder, that if it was even committed in a fray, or in correcting of a ſervant, and other caſes; which our milder laws call Chance Medly, the guilty perſon could not go unpuniſhed, Exod. xxi. 12, 20. And where the fact was accidental and involuntary, tho' God's concern for the life of the innocent perſon was ſuch, that he not only appointed theſe cities for his protection, but ſeemed, as it were, to take the offence upon himſelf, yet he condemned him to a kind of baniſhment, till the death of the high-prieſt then in being, ver. 25. inſomuch that if he ventured out of the limits, Joſephus ſays, out of the walls of the city, it was lawful for any relations of the deceaſed either to kill him, or to have him put to death by the hand of juſtice.

We ſhall not trouble the reader with the various reaſons which interpreters have conjectured concerning the time of a man's return being fixed to the death of the high-prieſt. Some of the Jews, who affirm, that the death of ſo great a perſon, which was univerſally lamented, was the moſt proper motive to make all reſentment on the part of the proſecutor to ceaſe, ſeem rather to triſle than to be in earneſt, and one would wonder, that they ſhould have been followed by any Chriſtians. But the far greater part of theſe look upon this circumſtance to have been typical of the reconciliation which Chriſt, our eternal high-prieſt, made of ſinners to God by his death. This is what the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſeems to intimate, Heb. ix. 15. However, it muſt be owned, that ſome men have given too great a ſcope to this way of allegorizing; and that where ſo little light is to be had from the ſacred writings, it would be more adviſeable to ſay nothing, than to ſay all that a pious fancy can ſuggeſt.

Theſe cities were not only for the Iſraelites, but for all ſtrangers, who either lived among them, or came thither occaſionally. The Jews, indeed, confine the benefit of them to their proſelytes, but this ſenſe ſeems to flow more from their narrowneſs of ſoul, than from the words of the text, ver. 15. Moſes ordered three of them to be aſſigned on either ſide Jordan, ver. 14. This partition ſeems indeed, ſomewhat unequal, becauſe one ſide had but two tribes and an half, and the other nine and a half; the reaſon of which ſome Jews tell us was, becauſe there were a great many more homicides committed in the former by way of ſelf-defence, than in the latter: But this is ridiculous, and the ſentiment of R. Nachman is much more probable and judicious, namely, that the extent of the country of the former was at leaſt as large as that of the latter, tho' not ſo populous; which made it neceſſary for them to have ſo many of thoſe cities. However, as to thoſe tribes on the other ſide, God permitted them to add three more to their number, when ever the extent of their conqueſts ſhould make that increaſe neceſſary, Deut. xix. 9. but as this depended upon their conſtant obedience, and they, on the contrary, proved continually ſtubborn and rebellious, they never found occaſion for this addition; but the modern Jews think it will be made in the days of the Meſſiah.

How, where, and by whom, the examination of the man-ſlayer was made, in order to his being admitted to, or excluded the benefit of the city of refuge; that is, whether by the next judges of the place where the fact was committed, or by thoſe of the city where the man fled for ſanctuary, is neither cleared from the text, nor agreed by interpreters. However, as a late author (Calm. ſub. voc. Refuge) juſtly obſerves, from an expreſſion in Deuteronomy, chap. xix. 11. 12. compared with Joſhua xx. 6, 9. there ſeems to have been a double trial, one before the judges of the city of refuge, and one before what the text calls there the congregation; by which is underſtood either thoſe of the place where the fact was committed, or perhaps the great council; and this ſeems to us to have been neceſſary, only when the avenger of blood appealed from thoſe of the place of refuge. Aſſoon therefore as a man had been unfortunately guilty of accidental homicide, his firſt buſineſs was to retire with all convenient expedition to the next city of that kind. The ways leading to it were, by God's own appointment, to be kept in good repair, that nothing might retard his ſpeed.

The text, Deut. xix. 3. Says only, Thou ſhalt prepare thee a way, and divide the coaſt of the land into three parts, that every ſlayer may flee thither.] But the Talmudiſts and Rabbies, add a great number of circumſtances for keeping thoſe roads in continual repair, that the perſon might meet with no obſtruction in his flight. Theſe roads, according to them, were to be 32 cubits in breadth, ſmooth, plain, and without any aſcent, deſcent, or ditches. At every place where the road parted, a poſt was to be ſet up to direct them, which had the word miklat, refuge, engraven upon it. Every brook or river was to have a good bridge; all watry places were to be drained, and the ſurface kept ſmooth and hard. To theſe precepts the words of the Baptiſt, prepare the way of the Lord, make his paths ſtrait, every valley ſhall be filled and every mountain levelled, &c. are thought to allude. Once a year at leaſt, in the month Adar, which anſwers in part to our February, the magiſtrates in every city were obliged to viſit them, and ſee they were kept in good order; otherwiſe, in caſe the avenger chanced to overtake and kill the ſlayer, the magiſtracy of the place were judged guilty of his death. As for the cities of refuge, they were to be of a moderate bigneſs, well furniſhed with water, proviſions, artiſts, and all manner of conveniencies, weapons excepted. The reaſon they give for excluding theſe laſt was, leſt the avenger ſhould, in a tranſport of anger, employ them againſt the ſlayer. Thus far they agree; in ſome other points they are divided. Some pretend, that the refugee was to be kept at the charge of the city; and others affirm, that he was obliged to follow ſome trade, if he could not maintain himſelf without it. Some ſay, that the houſes in the ſuburbs were to obſtruct the entrance of the proſecutor, till they had taken proper means to pacify him; and others, that they only ſent ſome grave and reverend deputies to meet him without the gates, to perſwade him to clemency and moderation. Some add that the tribe of Levi was excluded the benefit of theſe ſanctuaries; ſo that if any of them happened to kill a man, how accidentally ſoever, they were forced to wander from place to place. The modern Jews ſo far keep up this cuſtom, that a man-ſlayer is baniſhed for three years, into ſome city, in which they have a ſynagogue, where by way of pennance, he is forced to ſay aloud, I am a man-ſlayer, at his entering into the ſynagogue, and at every civility that is ſhewed to him.

Maimonides, and ſome other Rabbies inform us, from ancient tradition, that all the forty-two cities of the Levites were places of refuge, with this difference however, from the ſix properly ſo called, that the former might refuſe their protection to any man, how innocent ſoever, but the latter were obliged to receive him, and that in the former he lived at his own, and in the latter at the publick expence. The Miſhna, on the contrary declares, upon the authority of R. Eleazar, that the death either of the high-prieſt, or of him who was anointed for the war, reſtored the ſlayer to his freedom, and that the mothers of thoſe two great perſons ſupplied the refugees with food and raiment, that they might not by their prayers accelerate the death of their ſons, in order to their ſpeedy releaſe from their baniſhment.

Aſſoon as the man-ſlayer came to the place, he preſented himſelf to the judges of it, and declared the occaſion of his arrival there, and the manner in which he killed the perſon; and according as his account appeared true or falſe, he was admitted into their protection, or excluded from it. If the avenger of blood, who was always the neareſt relation to the deceaſed, came to demand juſtice, he and his evidence were heard, and the judges did either confirm their former ſentence in favour of the man-ſlayer, or delivered him up to be puniſhed, if the fact was proved to have been wilfully committed. If the former ſentence was confirmed, he was to be conducted to the place where the fact happen'd, and there tryed a ſecond time, and if he was found innocent, he was re-conducted to the place of refuge, with a ſufficient guard, and remained there free from all further proſecutions, and at the death of the high-prieſt, he was at liberty to return to his own home. This, at leaſt, is what the generality of interpreters ters conclude to have been their proceeding in ſuch caſes. However, as the account we have of it from Moſes is far from being clear in this point, and the cities of refuge were ſometimes at ſuch a diſtance from the place where the fact was committed, that the man-ſlayer might be eaſily overtaken by the proſecutor, before he could reach it: We think it at leaſt, as reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that he went and ſurrendered himſelf to the judges of the neareſt place, and having cleared himſelf before them from the guilt of wilful murther, was by their order conducted ſafely to the next city of refuge, where the magiſtrates had a further hearing of the cauſe, and either confirmed or revoked the ſentence of the former, according to the evidence for or againſt it. It is true that what we quoted out of the Rabbies, with reſpect to the conveniencies of the roads leading to ſuch places, would be needleſs in this caſe, but we look upon their teſtimony as very dubious, and in ſome caſes evidently wrong. Thus the Talmud tells us, that thoſe cities were to be ſituated by ſome rivers, in order to be well ſupplied with water and all kinds of proviſion; that the acceſs to them was to be eaſy and without aſcent; and yet it is plain, that the far greater part were built upon rocks. There are many other particulars, which they tell us there, and we purpoſely omit, becauſe they are ſtill more incredible.

Beſide theſe cities of refuge, the tabernacle, and afterward, the temple, had likewiſe the privilege of ſanctuaryſhip, eſpecially the altar of burnt offering. The Rabbies indeed tell us, the latter was only for the prieſts; but we have ſeen the contrary, in the inſtance of Joab mentioned above. Thoſe indeed who were guilty of wilful murder, ſheltered themſelves there in vain, and were, by God's expreſs command, to be dragged from the very altar, to condign puniſhment. To this end, proper judges were appointed there alſo, and authorized, to make a ſtrict examination of the caſe, after which they were either to deliver up the criminal into the hands of juſtice, or ſend the innocent under a proper guard to one of the cities of refuge. There are ſeveral other material circumſtances relating to thoſe kinds of caſes, which Moſes having left no particular directions about, may reaſonably be ſuppoſed to have been left to the direction of the judges. Such for inſtance, when the fact was committed juſt before, and the ſentence of the judges had not been obtained, in favour of the homicide, till after the death of the high-prieſt; or when it was done in the time of an interregnum; or in caſe the high-prieſt was killed by ſome friends of the exiled perſon; or laſtly, when the high-prieſt himſelf became a man-ſlayer, which was far from being impoſſible: Concerning which, and ſeveral others of the like nature, the Talmudiſts have made very judicious and equitable regulations, but which we ſhall not trouble our readers with, as not being comprehended in the Moſaic inſtitution.

CHAP. XXXVI.

1 The inconvenience of the inheritance of daughters, 5 Is remedied by marrying in their own tribes, 7 Leſt the inheritance ſhould be removed from the tribe. 10 The daughters of Zelophehad marry their fathers brothers ſons.

AND the chief fathers of the families of the children of Gilead, the ſon of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, of the families of the ſons of Joſeph, came near and ſpake before Moſes, and before the princes, the chief fathers of the children of Iſrael:

2 And they ſaid, the LORD commanded my lord to give the land for an inheritance by lot to the children of Iſrael: and my lord was commanded by the LORD to give the inheritance of Zelophehad our brother, unto his daughters.

3 And if they be married to any of the ſons of the other tribes of the children of Iſrael; then ſhall their inheritance be taken from the inheritance of our fathers, and ſhall be put to the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received: ſo ſhall it be taken from the lot of our inheritance.

4 And when the jubilee of the children of Iſrael ſhall be, then ſhall their inheritance be put unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received: ſo ſhall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of the tribe of our fathers.

5 And Moſes commanded the children of Iſrael, according to the word of the LORD, ſaying, the tribe of the ſons of Joſeph hath ſaid well.

6 This is the thing which the LORD doth command concerning the daughters of Zelophehad, ſaying, Let them marry to whom they think beſt; only to the family of the tribe of their father ſhall they marry:

7 So ſhall not the inheritance of the children of Iſrael remove from tribe to tribe: for every one of the children of Iſrael ſhall keep himſelf to the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers.

8 And every daughter that poſſeſſeth an inheritance in any tribe of the children of Iſrael, ſhall be wife unto one of the family of the tribe of her father, that the children of Iſrael may enjoy every man the inheritance of his fathers.

9 Neither ſhall the inheritance remove from one tribe to another tribe; but every one of the tribes of the children of Iſrael ſhall keep himſelf to his own inheritance.

10 Even as the LORD commanded Moſes, ſo did the daughters of Zelophehad.

11 For Mahlah, Tirzah, and Hoglah, and Milkah, and Noah, the daughters of Zelophehad, were married unto their fathers brothers ſons.

12 And they were married into the families of the ſons of Manaſſeh the ſon of Joſeph, and their inheritance remained in the tribe of the family of their father.

13 Theſe are the commandments and the judgments, which the LORD commanded by the hand of Moſes, unto the children of Iſrael in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho.

Ver. 1. And the chief fathers of the families of the children of Gilead, the ſon of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh.] Not the fathers of thoſe families, whoſe inheritance had been aſſigned them already on this ſide Jordan, in the land of Gilead; but the other half of the tribe of Manaſſeh who were to have their inheritance in Canaan, where where the daughters of Zelophehad alſo had their portion, as appears from Joſh. xvii. 3, 4, &c.

——— Came near and ſpake before Moſes, and before the princes, the chief fathers of the children of Iſrael.] Who were met together in a great aſſembly, as they uſed to do, about publick affairs. See xxvii. 2. xxxi. xxxii. 2.

Ver. 2. And they ſaid, the Lord commanded my Lord.] This ſhews, that one of them was the mouth of the reſt.

—— To give the Land for an inheritance by lot to the children of Iſrael.] See xxvi. 52, 53. for there the foundation of all theſe doubts was laid.

——— And my Lord was commanded by the Lord to give the inheritance of Zelophehad.] Which ſhould have fallen to Zelophehad had he been alive.

——— Our brother.] So they called their near relations.

—— Unto his daughters.] Who petitioned him for the poſſeſſion which ſhould have been their fathers, and it was granted them. See xxvii. 6, 7.

Ver. 3. And if they be married to any of the ſons of the other tribes of the children of Iſrael.] They being rich, many, it might be ſuppoſed, of the other tribes, as well as their own, would court them for their wives; and if they ſhould chooſe an husband who was not of their own tribe, the inconveniencies which that diſpoſal of themſelves would occaſion, are now repreſented to Moſes, in order for his aſſigning ſome method for their prevention.

——— Then ſhall their inheritance be taken from the inheritance of our fathers.] That is, it will go out of our tribe, to which it originally belonged.

——— And ſhall be put to the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received.] Become a part of the inheritance of that tribe into which they married.

—— So ſhall it be taken from the lot of our inheritance.] For it muſt have deſcended unto their children, who were of another tribe by the fathers ſide, which alone was conſidered, and not the mothers in this caſe.

Ver. 4. And when the jubilee of the children of Iſrael ſhall be.] Which was ordained for the preſerving eſtates in the tribes and families to which they originally appertained, Lev. xxv. 10, 13.

— Then ſhall their inheritance be put unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received.] The jubilee will not help us in this caſe, by making their inheritances return as other lands do; becauſe they are become the inheritance of another tribe, by the right of marriage.

—— So ſhall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of the tribe of our fathers.] So will their eſtate go out of our tribe without remedy, becauſe the jubilee itſelf will give us no relief.

Ver. 5. And Moſes commanded the children of Iſrael, according to the word of the Lord.] Whom, we ſuppoſe, he conſulted about this matter (as he did when the firſt doubt was moved about the inheritance of theſe women, xxvii. 5.) and received the anſwer by which he here directed the Iſraelites to govern themſelves, ——— The tribe of Joſeph.] In whoſe name the chief fathers of their ſeveral families made this repreſentation to Moſes; as became men who took care of the concerns of the whole tribe.

Hath ſaid well.] In deſiring the inheritance of theſe women might not go out of their tribe; which was prevented by the following law.

Ver. 6. This is the thing which the Lord doth command, concerning the daughters of Zelophehad, ſaying, Let them marry to whom they think beſt.] They were not confined to any particular perſons; but might have their choice among thoſe who were deſcended from the ſame ſtock, as it immediately follows.

——— Only to the family of the tribe of their father ſhall they marry.] Only with theſe two limitations, that they might not marry a man of another tribe, nor a man of another family in their own tribe. For it is very manifeſt, that they are confined to marry into the family of their father; and accordingly they eſpouſed their couſin-germans, as we now ſpeak, ver. 11. For this law was made for the preſervation of families (as well as of tribes) as the law for the redemption of lands was. And therefore theſe words, the family of the tribe of their father, are well tranſlated by Grotius, upon Matt. i. 16. familia ſtirpis paternæ, the family of the ſtock of their father, which was that they deſired might not periſh, xxvii. 4. and was the ground of the law, which commanded a man to marry the wife of his brother, who left no iſſue, Deut. xxv. 16. Therefore there being ſeveral families in the tribe of Manaſſeh, xxvi. 29, 30, 31, 32. Theſe women could marry only into the family of the Hepherites.

Ver. 7. So ſhall not the inheritance of the children of Iſrael remove from tribe to tribe.] For by preſerving it in the family to which it was given, it was neceſſarily preſerved in the tribe.

—— For every one of the children of Iſrael ſhall keep himſelf to the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers.] And not endeavour to obtain any part of the inheritance of another tribe, by marrying an heireſs in it. Plato himſelf took care of this, that when a man left only a daughter, his eſtate ſhould not be carried by her to a ſtranger, but ſhe ſhould be bound to marry, κατ' ἀγχιστείαν, one that was neareſt of kin to her. And if there was a want of near kindred μιχεὶ μὲν ἀδελφῶ υἱιδῶν, &c. it ſhould deſcend to the children of her father's brother, or the children of the grand-father, ſome of which he ordains ſhould marry her, lib. 2. de legibus, p. 924, 925. Edit. Sarrani.

Ver. 8. And every daughter that poſſeſſeth an inheritance in any tribe of the children of Iſrael.] Here this law is made general, that all women who were heireſſes, as the daughters of Zelophehad were, ſhould do as they are here commanded. And this was one of the Attic laws, which, as Grotius obſerves, were plainly borrowed from the law of Moſes Μὴ ἐξεῖναι τῇ ἐπικλήρῳ ἐξω τῆ ἀγχιστέας γαμεῖν, &c. That an heireſs ſhould not marry out of her kindred, but diſpoſe of herſelf and eſtate τῷ ἐγγύταω γένους, to one neareſt of kin to her; which was one of the laws of Solon, as Sam. Petitus obſerves out of Iſæus, Pollux, and others, in his comment, in leges Atticas, lib. 6. tit. 1. p. 441.

——— Shall be wife to one of the families of the tribe of her father.] Here ſhe is confined to her family, and not meerly to her tribe. But this concerned only ſuch as were heireſſes; all other women being allowed to marry into what tribe they pleaſed; as appears by thoſe very books, wherein we read that Aaron himſelf married the ſiſter of the prince of Judah, Exod. vi. 22. And if any object, that this was before the giving of the law, it is evident that Jehoida, a prieſt, and conſequently of the tribe of Levi, married king Jehoram's ſiſter, who was of the tribe of Judah, 2 Chron. xxii. 11. And long before this, all the tribes of Iſrael being in great ſollicitude how to find wives for their brethren of Benjamin, did not ſcruple their having them out of any tribe, if it had not been for their oath, Judges xxi. 18. And to add no more, David himſelf, of the tribe of Judah, married Michal, the daughter of Saul, who was of the tribe of Benjamin.

The Talmudiſts add, that even theſe heireſſes might marry into what tribe they pleaſed, after the firſt diviſion of the land by Joſhua; to which they imagine this law was reſtrained; it being a common ſaying among them, that it did not belong to any age, but that in which it was made. In the following ages they pretend, a man might purchaſe land in any tribe, and poſſeſs it always, or have the inheritance of it by marriage, tho' he were of another tribe, as Selden ſhews their opinion to be, lib. de ſucceſſionibus ad leges Hebr. cap. 18, and lib. iii. de Synedr. cap. 4. N. i. and Buxtorf de ſponſal. & divortiis, ſect. 44. But this is well confuted by Grotius, in his annotations upon Matt. i. 16.

Ver. 9. Neither ſhall the inheritance remove from one tribe to another tribe.] This eſtabliſhes in general, what he had ſaid before, ver. 7. with particular reſpect to the daughters of Zelophehad. But Moſes Ben Nachman, upon theſe very words, aſſerts the Talmudic opinion before mentioned, that this concerns only the preſent time, not future ages; and puts this caſe (which is the ſtrongeſt that can be thought of.) If a woman was married into another tribe, after which marriage, her father and all her brethren dying without children, the inheritance fell to her, and conſequently, ſaith he, the poſſeſſion muſt devolve from one tribe to another, into which ſhe had married. But, according to the letter of theſe words, the inheritance was rather to deſcend to the next of her kindred, than by her to be carried out of the tribe to which it belonged.

——— But

——— But every one of the tribes of the children of Iſrael ſhall keep himſelf to his own inheritance.] Shall cleave, or ſtick cloſe to his own inheritance, as the Hebrew word ſignifies; and as the Greek and Latin expreſſes it. The reaſon of the command was, as Procopius Gazæus obſerves, to prevent the confuſion of tribes. How the vulgar Latin came to deviate ſo much from the Hebrew text, and from the intention of this law (as it hath done in this and the two preceding verſes) we ſhall not here examine. It is ſufficient to obſerve, that Onkelos hath expreſſed the Hebrew text, word for word; and the LXX do not depart from the ſenſe of it.

Ver. 10. Even as the Lord commanded Moſes, ſo did the daughters of Zelophehad.] Accordingly they followed this direction when they came into the land of Canaan, and had received their portion there. Now there being no ſuch words added here, as there are in other caſes, this ſhall be unto the children of Iſrael a ſtatute of judgment throughout your generations, xxxv. 29. It led, as we conjecture, the Talmudic doctors into the forementioned opinion, that this law concerned only the preſent generation.

Ver. 11. For Mahlah, Tizzah, and Hoglah, and Milkah, and Noah, the daughters of Zelophehad.] Thus they are called both in the xxvi. 33, and xxvii. 1. Tho' they are not there mentioned in the ſame order; for Tizzah is there named laſt, who here is named in the ſecond place. Perhaps they are ſet down here in the order wherein they were diſpoſed in marriage; and Tizzah, who was the younger, was married in the ſecond place.

——— Were married unto their fathers brothers ſons.] For Hepher, no doubt, had other ſons beſide Zelophehad, who had iſſue male, tho' Zelophehad had not. What their names were, or how many of them, we do not know; but ſome ſuppoſe them to have been ſix; one of whom died in the wilderneſs without iſſue. See Selden de Succeſſionibus, cap. xxiii. where he diſcourſes at large of the portion which fell to them in the land of Canaan.

Ver. 12. And they were married into the families, &c.] In the margin, more exactly out of the Hebrew, to ſome that were of the families; that is, to one of the families of Manaſſeh, from whom ſeveral families deſcended, xxvi. 29, &c.

—— And their inheritance remained in the tribe of the family of their father.] The word for tribe, ſignifies ſometimes merely a family in a tribe. And ſo the LXX (as Grotius obſerves in the place before named) in this very affair, uſe ſometimes the word δῆμος, and ſometimes φυλή; the former of which ſignifies a part of a whole tribe. And thus Joſephus alſo uſes the word φυλή, to ſignify a family. Mr. Selden hath the ſame obſervation de Succeſſionibus, cap. 18. that the Hebrew word is ſometimes tranſlated φυλή; and then it ſignifies not a tribe, but πάτριαν, συγγένειαν, familiam, cognationem, ſeu genus ſanguine proximum; a family, a kindred, or thoſe that are next in blood. But there is no need of theſe obſervations, if the words be tranſlated, as they may, rightly; and their inheritance remained in the tribe, and the family of their father. See ver. 6.

Ver. 13. Theſe are the commandments and the judgments which the Lord commanded by the hand of Moſes, to the children of Iſrael in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho.] He began to deliver the precepts here intended at chap. xxvi. See ver. 3. and continues them to this place. By commandments, ſeem to be meant the precepts about the worſhip of God, chap. xxviii, xxix, xxx. and by judgments, the civil laws about dividing their inheritances, and regulating their deſcent to their poſterity, and eſtabliſhing cities of refuge for manſlayers, which are expreſly called a ſtatute of judgment, xxvii, 11. xxxv. 29. Some other things are interſperſed, as God's commandment to number the people (which was in order to the aſſigning them their inheritances proportionable to their families) to execute judgment on the Midianites; and to ſet down in writing their travels in the wilderneſs; of which we have given an account in their proper places.

The End of the Fourth Book of MOSES, called NUMBERS.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOATIONS

ON THE

FIFTH BOOK of MOSES,

CALLED

DEUTERONOMY.

The ARGUMENT.

This laſt Book of the Pentateuch derives its name Deuteronomy from a compound word in the Greek language, ſignifying a SECOND Law; or, a Repetition of the Law; becauſe Moſes, in this book, makes a ſummary repetition of the laws which God had given in the foregoing books, recommending and inculcating them to the people with extraordinary zeal, pious exhortations, and perſwaſive motives.

This book may properly be called, An abridgment of the law. Its Hebrew appellation, is Elle-haddebarim, which are the two firſt words of it in the Hebrew text, and they ſignify, Theſe are the words. Some Rabbins call it Miſhnah, that is to ſay, The ſecond Law; others, The book of reprehenſions, on account of the reproaches with which Moſes loaded the Iſraelites, in chap. i. viii, ix, xxiii, xxx, xxxii.

Moſes wrote this book during the two laſt months of the 40th year from the children of Iſrael's departure out of Egypt, in the plains of Moab, when he had brought them to the frontiers of Canaan, and after all the rebellious among them, had been conſumed in the wilderneſs, as the LORD himſelf had ſworn.

This faithful ſervant of God was willing to employ the ſmall remainder of his life, in repreſenting to the Iſraelites all the events which had happened to them in the deſert; for the more effectual inſtruction of the people, who were grown up there, in what related to their duty. Part of them were to ſettle on that ſide Jordan; but the majority were to paſs over that river under the conduct of Joſhua, and take poſſeſſion of their promiſed inheritance; God having aſſured Moſes, that he was to die there, without entering into the land of Canaan.

In the firſt place, this great legiſlator repreſents to the Iſraelites, the numerous and extraordinary bleſſings God had conferred upon them during the ſpace of forty years, together with the juſt puniſhments the rebellious murmurers among them had drawn down upon their own heads. The deſign of Moſes, in this enumeration, was to diſpoſe them to a careful conformity to the laws of God.

He then reiterates and explains to them, not only the moral law or decalogue, but alſo the ceremonial laws, reſpecting their religion, and the outward ſervice God required of them; together with the juſticiary or civil laws, and ſeveral military ordinances. He likewiſe takes occaſion to inſert ſome new laws, accompanied with various admonitions and vehement obteſtations, with a very remarkable prediction concerning the chief of all prophets.

Theſe

Theſe he ſtrengthens and confirms with excellent promiſes of great and wonderful bleſſings, in caſe of their obedience; and with terrible menaces and fatal curſes, if at any time they ſhould apoſtatize and break the covenant he had made with them.

And laſt of all, he appoints Joſhua to ſucceed him, and ſolemnly delivers the book of the law into the hands of the Prieſts and Levites, with orders to depoſite it in the ſanctuary, and read it at certain times before all the people.

He compoſed alſo, and taught the children of Iſrael, an excellent prophetical hymn, or ſong, wherein he foretels what ſhould happen to them till the coming of Chriſt, and the calling of the Gentiles.

He likewiſe bleſſed the twelve tribes, and having taken a view of the Holy Land, from the top of mount Nebo, he died, and was buried there by the LORD.

The children of Iſrael mourned for this great man, and Joſhua ſucceeded in his room; having been, by God's ſpecial appointment conſecrated before to that high charge and employment.

Some abſurd ſceptics have concluded, from the frequent repetitions which occur in this Book, that Moſes could not be its author; though it is demonſtrable that ſeveral paſſages in it were delivered to the Iſraelites at different times; which made it neceſſary for this great legiſlator to have recourſe to the repetitions objected to, in order to cauſe the ſubject of them to ſink deeper into the minds of the people, by being frequently inculcated. We may add too, that all wiſe men have ever judged it neceſſary to ſay, the very ſame things, concerning the ſame things; that they might be perfectly underſtood, and fixed in the memory of their auditors, as well as ſettled in their hearts and affections. Epictetus, in particular, delivered this, long ago, as an advantageous maxim in all ſtudies: "This muſt be known (ſays that philoſopher) as a certain "truth, that it is not eaſy for a man to attain the ſolid knowledge of any thing, un- "leſs he both read and hear the ſame things every day; and alſo apply himſelf to the "practiſe of them." Moſes took this wiſe method with the children of Iſrael, employing, in all probability, moſt of the latter part of his life, in repeating to that people the precepts he had formerly taught them, and in refreſhing their memories with the reaſons they had for a conſtant conformity to them.

CHAP. I.

1 Moſes ſpeech in the end of the fortieth year, briefly rehearſing the ſtory, 6 Of Gods promiſe, 9 Of giving them officers, 19 Of ſending the ſpies to ſearch the land, 34 Of Gods anger for their incredulity, 41 And diſobedience.

THESE be the words which Moſes ſpake unto all Iſrael, on this ſide Jordan, in the wilderneſs, in the plain over againſt the Red ſea, between Paran, and Tophel, and Laban, and Hazeroth, and Dizahab.

2 (There are eleven days journey from Horeb, by the way of mount Seir, unto Kadeſh-barnea)

3 And it came to paſs in the fortieth year, in the eleventh month, on the firſt day of the month, that Moſes ſpake unto the children of Iſrael, according unto all that the LORD had given him in commandment unto them;

4 After he had ſlain Sihon the king of the Amorites, which dwelt in Heſhbon, and Og the king of Baſhan, which dwelt at Aſtaroth in Edrei.

5 On this ſide Jordan in the land of Moab, began Moſes to declare this law, ſaying,

6 The LORD our God ſpake unto us in Horeb, ſaying, Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount:

7 Turn you, and take your journey, and go to the mount of the Amorites, and unto all the places nigh thereunto, in the plain, in the hills, and in the vale, and in the ſouth, and by the ſea-ſide, to the land of the Canaanites, and unto Lebanon, unto the great river the river Euphrates.

8 Behold, I have ſet the land before you: go in and poſſeſs the land which the LORD ſware unto your fathers, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, to give unto them, and to their ſeed after them.

9 ¶ And I ſpake unto you at that time, ſaying, I am not able to bear you my ſelf alone:

10 The LORD your God hath multiplied you, and behold, you are this day as the ſtars of heaven for multitude.

11 (The LORD God of your fathers make you a thouſand times ſo many more as ye are, and bleſs you as he hath promiſed you)

12 How can I myſelf alone bear your cumbrance, and your burden, and your ſtrife?

13 Take ye wiſe men, and underſtanding, and known among your tribes, and I will make them rulers over you.

14 And ye anſwered me, and ſaid, The thing which thou haſt ſpoken, is good for us to do.

15 So I took the chief of your tribes, wiſe men and known, and made them heads over you, captains over thouſands, and captains over hundreds, and captains over fifties, and captains over tens, and officers among your tribes.

16 And I charged your judges at that time, ſaying, Hear the cauſes between your brethren, and judge righteouſly between every man and his brother, and the ſtranger that is with him.

17 Ye ſhall not reſpect perſons in judgment, but you ſhall hear the ſmall as well as the great; you ſhall not be afraid of the face of man, for the judgment is Gods: and the cauſe that is too hard for you, bring it unto me, and I will hear it.

18 And I commanded you at that time all the things which ye ſhould do.

19 ¶ And when we departed from Horeb, we went through all that great and terrible wilderneſs, which you ſaw by the way of the mountain of the Amorites, as the LORD our God commanded us; and we came to Kadeſh-barnea.

20 And I ſaid unto you, Ye are come unto the mountain of the Amorites, which the LORD our God doth give unto us.

21 Behold, the LORD thy God hath ſet the land before thee: go up and poſſeſs it, as the LORD God of thy fathers hath ſaid unto thee; fear not, neither be diſcouraged.

22 ¶ And ye came near unto me every one of you, and ſaid, We will ſend men before us, and they ſhall ſearch us out the land, and bring us word again by what way we muſt go up, and into what cities we ſhall come.

23 And the ſaying pleaſed me well: and I took twelve men of you, one of a tribe.

24 And they turned and went up into the mountain, and came unto the valley of Eſhcol, and ſearched it out.

25 And they took of the fruit of the land in their hands, and brought it down unto us, and brought us word again, and ſaid, It is a good land, which the LORD our God doth give us.

26 Notwithſtanding, ye would not go up, but rebelled againſt the commandment of the LORD your God.

27 And ye murmured in your tents, and ſaid, Becauſe the LORD hated us, he hath brought us forth out of the land of Egypt, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to deſtroy us.

28 Whither ſhall we go up? our brethren have diſcouraged our heart, ſaying, The people is greater and taller than we, the cities are great and walled up to heaven, and moreover we have ſeen the ſons of the Anakims there.

29 Then I ſaid unto you, Dread not, neither be afraid of them.

30 The LORD your God which goeth before you, he ſhall fight for you, according to all that he did for you in Egypt, before your eyes:

31 And in the wilderneſs, where thou haſt ſeen how that the LORD thy God bare thee as a man doth bare his ſon, in all the way that ye went, until ye came into this place.

32 Yet in this thing ye did not believe the LORD your God.

33 Who went in the way before you, to ſearch you out a place to pitch your tents in, in fire by night to ſhew you by what way ye ſhould go, and in a cloud by day.

34 And the LORD heard the voice of your words, and was wroth, and ſware, ſaying,

35 Surely there ſhall not one of theſe men of this evil generation ſee that good land, which I ſware to give unto your fathers;

36 Save Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, he ſhall ſee it, and to him will I give the land that he hath trodden upon, and to his children, becauſe he hath wholly followed the LORD.

37 Alſo the LORD was angry with me for your ſakes, ſaying, Thou alſo ſhalt not go in thither.

38 But

38 But Joſhua the ſon of Nun, which ſtandeth before thee, he ſhall go in thither. Encourage him: for he ſhall cauſe Iſrael to inherit it.

39 Moreover, your little ones, which ye ſaid ſhould be a prey, and your children which in that day had no knowledge between good and evil, they ſhall go in thither, and unto them will I give it, and they ſhall poſſeſs it.

40 But as for you, turn ye, and take your journey into the wilderneſs, by the way of the Red-ſea.

41 Then ye anſwered and ſaid unto me, We have ſinned againſt the LORD, we will go up and fight, according to all that the LORD our God commanded us. And when ye had girded on every man his weapons of war, ye were ready to go up into the hill.

42 And the LORD ſaid unto me, Say unto them, Go not up, neither fight, for I am not among you; leſt ye be ſmitten before your enemies.

43 So I ſpake unto you, and ye would not hear, but rebelled againſt the commandment of the LORD, and went preſumptuouſly up into the hill.

44 And the Amorites which dwelt in that mountain, came out againſt you, and chaſed you as bees do, and deſtroyed you in Seir, even unto Hormah.

45 And ye returned and wept before the LORD; but the LORD would not hearken to your voice, nor give ear unto you.

46 So ye abode in Kadeſh many days, according unto the days that ye abode there.

Ver. 1. Theſe be the words which Moſes ſpake unto all Iſrael.] When Moſes perceived the time drew near in which he was to go the way of all the earth, Joſh. xxiii. 14. and to give an account of the moſt glorious adminiſtration that ever any mortal man was inveſted with, he made his laſt efforts to impreſs upon the minds of the children of Iſrael the laws which he had before preſcribed to them. The ſpeeches he addreſſed to them upon this occaſion, compoſe the matter and ſubſtance of this book. Moſes did not pronounce all theſe diſcourſes at one time, or in one day, but aſſembled the people ſeveral times upon this occaſion: The firſt was, on the firſt day of the eleventh month of the thirty ninth year after the departure of the Iſraelites out of Egypt. He did not die till the firſt day of the following month, according to ſome interpreters, or the ſeventh day, if we follow the Hebrew calendar.

——— On this ſide Jordan.] The Vulgar Latin having tranſlated the Hebrew word [beeber] on the other ſide Jordan, ſome ill-diſpoſed minds have thence deduced an argument, that Moſes was not the author of this book, becauſe the writer plainly declares, that he was in Canaan when he compiled it. But a very little conſideration would have prevented this frivolous objection; there being nothing more certain, than that the Hebrew word ſignifies indifferently; either one ſide or the other; and may be literally tranſlated, in the paſſage over Jordan, or, as they were about to paſs over it; as Huetius obſerves; and he likewiſe proves by plain examples, that the Hebrews have no other word to expreſs their mind, when they would ſay either on this ſide or beyond. See Demonſt. Evang. Propoſ. iv. cap. xiv. To which another learned writer ſince him (Hermannus Witſius, lib. 1. Miſcel. Sacr. cap. xiv.) hath added ſeveral other places, which evidently ſhew, that beeber is a word that indifferently belongs to either ſide of any place; ſee 1 Sam. xiv. 40. and muſt be determined by the circumſtances, to which it is to be applied. And here undoubtedly it is to be rendered, on this ſide Jordan. See chap. i i. 8.

——— In the wilderneſs in the plain.] In the plain of Moab, where they had remained a long time, as appears from the foregoing book, Numb. xxii, 1. xxvi. 3, 63. xxxi. 12. xxxiii. 48, 59. xxxv. 1. xxxvi. 13.

——— Over againſt the Red Sea.] There is no word in the Hebrew text for Sea; and therefore the marginal tranſlation is to be preferred, which is, over againſt Suph. This was a place in the country of Moab, (ſee Numb. xxi. 14.) oppoſite to which they now lay encamped; but were ſo far diſtant from the Red Sea, that there can be no reſpect to it here.

——— Between Paran.] He doth not mean the wilderneſs of Paran, frequently mentioned in the foregoing book (for that was as remote from hence as the Red Sea) but ſome place in the country of Moab, as Suph was, and the reſt of the places which here follow.

——— And Tophel, and Laban, and Hazeroth, and Dizahab.] There was a place called Hazeroth, where they had encamped a long time ago, Numb. xi. 35. xxxiii. 17. but it was in another wilderneſs far from this place, as appears by the account Moſes gives of their removals from that place to this where they now lay, Numb. xxxiii. 17, 48, 49. And therefore we take this, and the other three places here mentioned, to have been frontier towns in the country of Moab, which lay upon the borders of this plain. The laſt of which, Dizahab, is tranſlated by the LXX. and the Vulgar, as if it ſignified a place where mines of gold were.

Onkelos, and the Jeruſalem Targum, take Suph to ſignify the Red Sea, and Paran for the wilderneſs through which they had travelled many years ago, &c. but they are forced to add ſeveral words to make out the ſenſe of the verſe before us in this manner: "Theſe be the words "which Moſes ſpake unto all Iſrael on this ſide Jordan, "&c. reproving them becauſe they ſinned in the deſert, "and provoked God in the plain over againſt the Red "Sea; and murmured in Paran about manna; and at "Hazeroth for fleſh, &c." And ſo they proceed to mention other ſins committed in other places; but not in theſe here named; which they force from their natural ſenſe to comply with this conceit.

Ver. 2. There are eleven days journey from Horeb, &c.] Or eleven days (we were travelling) from Horeb, by the way of mount Seir, unto Kadeſh-barnea; which cannot be underſtood of the whole time they ſpent between thoſe two places, but only of that which they employed in their journey: for they ſtayed a month at Kibroth-hattaavah, and a week more at Hazeroth, Numb. xi. 21. xii. 15, 16. before they came to Kadeſh-barnea. This he repreſents to them, to make them ſenſible, they had been kept in the wilderneſs ſo many years, as had paſſed ſince they came out of Egypt; not becauſe it was a long way to Canaan, but for the reaſon mentioned in the xivth chapter of Numbers. For from Horeb, whither he ordered them to go, when they came out of Egypt, they came in eleven days, and took no long journies, to the borders of the land of Canaan, where Kadeſh-barnea lay. So Maimonides; the way was plain and known between Horeb (whither God brought them on purpoſe to ſerve him) and Kadeſh: which was the beginning of an habitable country; according to what he ſaith, Numb. xx. 16. See More Nevochim, P. 3. cap. 1. See Numb. xiii. 26.

Moſes then proceeds to recapitulate their ſeveral marches and encampments, with the particular circumſtances that attended them. But as moſt of theſe have been already rendered intelligible by our former annotations on thoſe paſſages, in the preceding books of Leviticus and Exodus, where they are related at large, we ſhall not ſwell this Comment with any needleſs repetitions, but think it will be more acceptable to our readers, if we confine our ſelves to thoſe particulars alone, which appear to be either curious or inſtructive.

Ver. 5. On this ſide Jordan in the land of Moab, began Moſes to declare this law, ſaying.] To call to remembrance that which any one had forgotten; and to explain that which any one did not underſtand. So Maimonides expounds theſe words, in Seder Zezarim: "In the end of "the fortieth year, in the beginning of the month She-"bat, Moſes called the people together, ſaying, The "time of my death draws near, if any one therefore hath "forgot any thing that I have delivered, let him come "and receive it; or if any thing ſeems dubious, let him "come that I may explain it." And ſo they ſay in Siphri, "If any one have forgotten any conſtitution, let him come "and hear it a ſecond time; if he need to have any thing "unfolded, let him come and hear the explication of it." For which he quotes this verſe; and ſays, that Moſes ſpent all his time in this, from the beginning of the month Shebat, to the ſeventh day of Adar. And what he now ſaid was like to be the more regarded, becauſe theſe were, in a manner, his dying expreſſions; for he lived but till the ſeventh day of the next month; and ſeems to have compoſed this book as a compendium of his whole law, for the familiar uſe of the children of Iſrael.

Ver. 7. Turn you, and take your journey, and go to the mount of the Amorites.] A mount on the ſouth part of Canaan, inhabited by the Amorites, together with ſome Canaanites and Amalekites, Numb. xiv. 25, 43, 45. But the principal poſſeſſors of it were Amorites, as is expreſſed more than once in this chapter, ver. 19, 20, 44. This is the mountain to which Moſes bid the ſpies go up, Numb. xiii. 17. and ſo they did, ver. 22.

——— And in the ſouth, and by the ſea ſide, to the land of the Canaanites, and unto Lebanon, and unto the great river, the river Euphrates.] And ſo go into all the reſt of the land of Canaan: The ſeveral quarters of which he here ſets forth: The ſouthern part lying toward this mountain; the weſtern upon the ſea, where the people properly called Canaanites dwelt; the northern toward Lebanon; and the eaſtern toward the river Euphrates. Which by other authors, as well as Moſes, is called the great river. So Callimachus, in his hymn to Apollo, ver. 103.

Ἀασυρίη πολαμοῖο μέγας ῥόος ———

The great flood of the Aſſyrian river; which the Scholiaſt obſerves is meant of Euphrates. And Lucan, l. 3. ver. 253.

——— cum Tigride magnus
Euphrates ——— ———

Ver. 9. And I ſpake unto you at that time, ſaying.] About the time of their coming to Horeb, or mount Sinai. For the hiſtorical account of Jethro, to which this relates, preceded that immediately, Exod. xviii. Many great men place it after the giving of the law: of which ſee Selden, lib. 2. de Syndr. cap. 2. n. 4.

——— I am not able to bear you alone.] We do not read, before now, that Moſes ſpake thus to the people. But Jethro expreſſed himſelf in this manner to him, Exod. xviii. 18. and gave him advice to take ſome others to his aſſiſtance, ver. 21. which advice he followed, ver. 24. and then ſpake to the people what Jethro had ſaid to him; and enlarged upon it in the words we read in the following verſes of this chapter; where he gives them the reaſon why he could not perform the office of a judge alone.

Ver. 19. And when we departed from Horeb, we went through all that great and terrible wilderneſs.] It may well be called great, becauſe it had a very large extent. For after three days journey, Numb. x. 12. they ſettled at Kibroth-hattaavah, which was in this wilderneſs of Paran; from whence they went to Hazeroth, which is ſtill ſaid to be in this wilderneſs, Numb. xi. 35. and when they went from thence, they were in the ſame wilderneſs, xii. 16. where Kadeſh was, xiii. 26. and ſee xxxiii. 19. And this wilderneſs was very terrible, or dreadful; becauſe there were no inhabitants in it, but wild beaſts.

Ver. 20. And I ſaid unto you, ye are come to the mountain of the Amorites, which the Lord our God doth give unto us.] For this was part of the country, which God beſtowed upon them for their poſſeſſion; as appears from Numb. xxxiv. 4. where Kadeſh-barnea is mentioned as a frontier place in their ſouth border. And indeed, the Amorites, whereſoever they found them, were to be expelled; as they had already diſpoſſeſſed them of the whole kingdom of Sihon, who was king of the Amorites, Numb. xxi. 21, 25, 26.

Ver. 27. And ye murmured in your tents.] Moſes addreſſes himſelf to the generation then preſent, as if they had been the generation that was already periſhed and conſumed in the wilderneſs; for he aſcribes the murmuring at Kadeſh, and the decree againſt entering into the land, to theſe men preſent, as if they had been the perſons; whereas thoſe, who were properly concerned in that criminal affair, were already dead and gone. But he uſeth this manner of ſtyle, 1. Becauſe there were abundance of them capable of murmuring then as well as their fathers, many thouſands of them being, indeed, under twenty years, and yet not ſo much under, but that they could be, and ſhew themſelves as untractable and querelous, as they who were above twenty years of age; and by this manner of expreſſion, Moſes would bring them to be humbled, ſome for their fathers guilt, ſome for their own, and ſome for both; and to acknowledge, that their being alive till now, and their liberty to enter into the land, was a free and a great mercy; for their own, and their fathers faults, might juſtly have cauſed it to have been otherwiſe with them. 2. They had imitated their fathers rebellion to the utmoſt, in their murmuring at Kadeſh, at their laſt coming up thither, and in the matter at Baal-peor; and therefore he might very well perſonate them by their fathers, when their fathers faults were ſo legible and eaſy to be ſeen in them.

Ver. 29. Then I ſaid unto you.] Moſes here at large relates what he ſaid unto their fathers upon this occaſion, which he doth not mention in the book of Numbers, (where we read only of his falling down before God) that he might awaken this generation to a greater confidence in God, and a dread of his judgment.

Ver. 37. Alſo the Lord was angry with me for your ſakes.] By occaſion of their freſh diſcontents and mutinous upbraidings of him, Numb. xx. 2, 3, 4. which provoked him ſo, that he ſpake unadviſedly with his lips, as the Pſalmiſt obſerves, Pſalm cvi. 31, 32. This was an high aggravation of their guilt; that they not only undid themſelves, but brought great diſpleaſure upon their worthy leader and governor, whom they wearied with their tumults and rebellions: Or, the meaning may be (which doth not much differ from the account now given) that they murmuring in a tumultuous manner, when they ſaw the water did not flow out of the rock at the firſt ſtroke, he himſelf alſo was put into ſuch a commotion, that he began to doubt, and ſay, God would do nothing for ſuch a rebellious people; tho' he had declared he would. If this be true, he ſoon recovered himſelf, and ſmote the rock again, in confidence God would be as good as his word. But God was ſo angry at the words he had ſpoken, that he ſo far puniſhed him for them, as to deny him entrance into Canaan.

Ver. 44. And the Amorites which dwelt in that mountain came out againſt you, and chaſed you as bees do.] Which purſue thoſe that diſturb their hives in great ſwarms, and with great fury, Pſalm cxviii. 12. for tho' bees have very ſmall bodies, yet they have great ſpirits, and a vaſt force, as Bochart obſerves in many inſtances, to make out the aptneſs of this compariſon, in his Hierozoicon, p. 11. lib. iv. cap. 10.

—— And deſtroyed you in Seir.] It ſeems they fled to that part of Idumæa, where mount Seir was; which they afterwards compaſſed many days, ch. ii. 1. when they removed from Kadeſh-barnea; and there ſome of them fell by the ſword of the Amorites, who were the fierceſt of all the people of Canaan; and might, on that account, be well compared to bees, who ceaſe not their purſuit, till they have fixed their ſtings.

Ver. 45. And ye returned, and wept before the Lord: But the Lord would not hearken to your voice, nor give ear unto you.] To conſent that they ſhould now go and poſſeſs the promiſed land, or continue near it; but remained fixed in his reſolution, that they ſhould go back again, and wander in the wilderneſs as long as they lived.

Ver.

Ver. 46. So ye abode in Kadeſh many days.] God had commanded Moſes to lead them into the wilderneſs, by the way of the Red-ſea, the very next morning after their mutiny upon the return of the ſpies, Numb. xiv. 25. But they prevented this, by their early riſing the next morning to aſſault the Amorites in the mountain, ver. 40. After which, they being diſcomfited, he permitted them to ſtay ſome time here, to bemoan themſelves, but how long is not certain; for ſome times the cloud ſtayed but two days, ſome times a month, ſome times a year, before it moved from the tabernacle, which was the ſign of their decampment, Numb. x. 22. And in ſome ſtations, it is likely, they ſtayed ſeveral years; for from the time of their removal from Kadeſh-barnea, till they came to mount Hor, which was thirty ſeven-years, we find but nineteen ſtations. See Numb. xxxiii. from ver. 18, to ver. 37.

——— According unto the days that ye abode there.] Some expound it, as long as they did in all the reſt of their ſtations, i. e. nineteen years, as the Jews compute in Seder Olam. But as the learned Dr. Lightfoot thinks, it ſignifies, as long as they did at mount Sinai; and ſo they ſtayed near a whole year, as they had done at Sinai. But the moſt ſimple explication ſeems to be, that they continued here ſo long after this, as they had done before it, at leaſt forty days: which was the time the ſpies ſpent in ſearching out the land; tho' there is no neceſſity to confine it to that number, but ſimply to interpret it, that as they ſtayed there many days before this mutiny, ſo they did as many after it.

CHAP. II.

1 The ſtory is continued, that they were not to meddle with the Edomites. 9 Nor with the Moabites. 17 Nor with the Ammonites. 24 But Sihon the Amorite was ſubdued by them.

THEN we turned, and took our journey into the wilderneſs, by the way of the Red-ſea, as the LORD ſpake unto me: and we compaſſed mount Seir many days.

2 And the LORD ſpake unto me, ſaying,

3 Ye have compaſſed this mountain long enough: turn you northward.

4 And command thou the people, ſaying, Ye are to paſs through the coaſt of your brethren the children of Eſau, which dwell in Seir, and they ſhall be afraid of you: take ye good heed unto yourſelves therefore.

5 Meddle not with them; for I will not give you of their land, no not ſo much as a foot-breadth, becauſe I have given mount Seir unto Eſau for a poſſeſſion.

6 Ye ſhall buy meat of them for money, that ye may eat; and ye ſhall alſo buy water of them for money, that ye may drink.

7 For the LORD thy God hath bleſſed thee in all the works of thy hand: he knoweth thy walking through this great wilderneſs: theſe forty years the LORD thy God hath been with thee, thou haſt lacked nothing.

8 And when we paſſed by from our brethren the children of Eſau, which dwelt in Seir, through the way of the plain from Elath, and from Ezion-gaber, we turned and paſſed by the way of the wilderneſs of Moab.

9 And the LORD ſaid unto me, Diſtreſs not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle: for I will not give thee of their land for a poſſeſſion, becauſe I have given Ar unto the children of Lot for a poſſeſſion.

10 The Emims dwelt therein in times paſt, a people great and many, and tall as the Anakims;

11 Which alſo were accounted giants, as the Anakims, but the Moabites call them Emims.

12 The Horims alſo dwelt in Seir before-time, but the children of Eſau ſucceeded them, when they had deſtroyed them from before them, and dwelt in their ſtead, as Iſrael did unto the land of his poſſeſſion, which the LORD gave unto them.

13 Now riſe up, ſaid I, and get you over the brook Zered: and we went over the brook Zered.

14 And the ſpace in which we came from Kadeſh-barnea, until we were come over the brook Zered, was thirty and eight years; until all the generation of the men of war were waſted out from among the hoſt, as the LORD ſware unto them.

15 For indeed the hand of the LORD was againſt them, to deſtroy them from among the hoſt, until they were conſumed.

16 ¶ So it came to paſs, when all the men of war were conſumed and dead from among the people,

17 That the LORD ſpake unto me, ſaying,

18 Thou art to paſs over through Ar, the coaſt of Moab, this day.

19 And when thou comeſt nigh over-againſt the children of Ammon, diſtreſs them not, nor meddle with them: for I will not give thee of the land of the children of Ammon any poſſeſſion, becauſe I have given it unto the children of Lot for a poſſeſſion.

20 (That alſo was accounted a land of giants, giants dwelt therein in old time, and the Ammonites call them Zamzummims,

21 A people great, and many, and tall as the Anakims; but the LORD deſtroyed them them before them, and they ſucceeded them, and dwelt in their ſtead:

22 As he did to the children of Eſau which dwelt in Seir, when he deſtroyed the Horims from before them, and they ſucceeded them, and dwelt in their ſtead even unto this day:

23 And the Avims which dwelt in Hazerim, even unto Azzah, the Caphtorims which came forth out of Caphtor, deſtroyed them, and dwelt in their ſtead.)

24 ¶ Riſe ye up, take your journey, and paſs over the river Arnon: behold, I have given into thy hand Sihon the Amorite king of Heſhbon, and his land: begin to poſſeſs it, and contend with him in battle.

25 This day will I begin to put the dread of thee, and the fear of thee upon the nations that are under the whole heaven, who ſhall hear report of thee, and ſhall tremble, and be in anguiſh becauſe of thee.

26 ¶ And I ſent meſſengers out of the wilderneſs of Kedemoth, unto Sihon king of Heſhbon, with words of peace, ſaying, 27 Let me paſs through thy land: I will go along by the high-way, I will neither turn unto the right hand, nor to the left.

28 Thou ſhalt ſell me meat for money, that I may eat; and give me water for money, that I may drink: only I will paſs through on my feet:

29 (As the children of Eſau which dwell in Seir, and the Moabites which dwell in Ar, did unto me) until I ſhall paſs over Jordan, into the land which the LORD our God giveth us.

30 But Sihon king of Heſhbon would not let us paſs by him: for the LORD thy God hardened his ſpirit, and made his heart obſtinate, that he might deliver him into thy hand, as appeareth this day.

31 And the LORD ſaid unto me, Behold, I have begun to give Sihon and his land before thee: begin to poſſeſs, that thou mayſt inherit his land.

32 Then Sihon came out againſt us, he and all his people, to fight at Jahaz.

33 And the LORD our God delivered him before us, and we ſmote him, and his ſons, and all his people.

34 And we took all his cities at that time, and utterly deſtroyed the men, and the women, and the little ones of every city, we left none to remain:

35 Only the cattle we took for a prey unto ourſelves, and the ſpoil of the cities which we took.

36 From Aroer, which is by the brink of the river of Arnon, and from the city that is by the river, even unto Gilead, there was not one city too ſtrong for us: the LORD our God delivered all unto us.

37 Only unto the land of the children of Ammon thou cameſt not, nor unto any place of the river Jabbok, nor unto the cities in the mountains, nor unto whatſoever the LORD our God forbad us.

Ver. 1. And we turned, &c.] From the borders of the land of Canaan to go ſouthward, till they came to the very ſhore of the Red-ſea; which, as David Chytræus computes it, was thirty German miles from Kadeſh-barnea.

——— And we compaſſed mount Seir.] The mountainous country of Edom; whereof mount Seir was but part: For when they came to Ezion-gaber, which was upon the Red-ſea, they were ſtill in the country of Edom, 1 Kings ix. 26. 2 Chron. viii. 17. for it ſtretched a long way; from the confines of Canaan, to Elate and Ezion-gaber, on the Red-ſea.

——— Many days.] Some think that they were marching to and fro along the borders of this country, all the time they ſpent from this removal, till they returned towards Canaan again: So that, by many days, they underſtand the whole thirty eight years, which paſſed between their departure from Kadeſh-barnea, till they came over the brook Zered, ver. 14. for when they were at Ezion-gaber (which was fartheſt from Canaan) they were upon the borders of Edom; and ſo they were when they came back again, ſeven and thirty years after, at mount Hor, Numb. xx. 23. xxi. 4. But this muſt not be underſtood, as if all the ſtations, mentioned, Numb. xxxiii. after they left Kadeſh-barnea, till they came hither again, were near to the country of Edom; ſome of them might be remote, tho' they all lay in that wilderneſs, which reached from one end of Idumæa to the other.

Ver. 2. And the Lord ſpake unto me, ſaying.] This was in the end of the thirty ninth year after their coming out of Egypt, when they had ſpent thirty ſeven years in wandering to and fro, ſince their departure from Kadeſh-barnea. In all which time, he gives us no account what paſſed, either in the foregoing book, or in this; but only ſets down the places of their abode, Numb. xxxiii.

Ver. 4. And command thou the people, ſaying, Ye are to paſs through the coaſt of your brethren the children of Eſau, which dwell in Seir.] For they went from Ezion-gaber to Kadeſh, Numb. xx. 1. and from thence to mount Hor, ver. 22. (which was on the edge of the land of Edom, Numb. xxxiii. 37.) and from thence they travelled to compaſs the land of Edom, xxi. 4. that is, the eaſtern quarter of it: So that tho' they did not paſs through the coaſt of Edom, as we tranſlate it, yet they paſſed by it, and very near it; as the particle beth frequently ſignifies, Gen. xxxvii. 13. Joſh. v. 13. 1 Sam. xxix. 1. Tho' they may be truly ſaid to paſs through their coaſt, if thereby we underſtand their border, or the confines of their country.

Ver. 6. Ye ſhall buy meat of them for money, that ye may eat, &c.] If ye have a mind to any proviſion that their country affords, ye ſhall not take, but purchaſe it; as they did their very water, ver. 29. which was very ſcarce in thoſe dry countries. And ſo the Iſraelites offered to do when they treated with them about a paſſage through their country, Numb. xx. 19.

Ver. 7. For the Lord thy God hath bleſſed thee in all the works of thy hand.] Or, though the Lord hath bleſſed thee, &c. That is, though there is no need of your purchaſing any accommodations from that people, God having abundantly provided you with all things neceſſary. But if we follow our tranſlation, the ſenſe is plain; Ye have wherewith to buy of them what you need or deſire; therefore do not take it away by force.

——— Theſe

——— Theſe forty years the Lord thy God hath been with thee; thou haſt lacked nothing.] He had mercifully provided for them ſo conſtantly, that he let them want nothing neceſſary for their ſupport. This was the ſum of the argument why they ſhould not moleſt the Edomites, nor take any thing by ſtealth from them; becauſe they were in no need; and God had given that country to the children of Eſau, as he intended to give Canaan to the Iſraelites.

Ver. 9. And the Lord ſaid unto me, diſtreſs not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle.] He would not have them force their way through his country, becauſe the king of Moab refuſed them a paſſage, as the king of Edom had done, Judg. xi. 17. for their country now was but ſmall, ſince Sihon, king of the Amorites, had taken from them all the beſt of it, which lay between Arnon and Jabbok; of which the Iſraelites had poſſeſſed themſelves by the conqueſt of Sihon; ſo that they had only that portion remaining, which lay upon the Dead Sea; which David in after-times ſubdued.

12. The Horims alſo dwelt in Seir before time. But the children of Eſau ſucceeded them, when they had deſtroyed them from before them, and dwelt in their land.] When the children of Eſau expelled the Horites, or the children of Lot the Emims, is no where recorded; nor who were their leaders in theſe expeditions. But they ſeem to be here remembred, as an encouragement to the Iſraelites to hope, that they might drive out the inhabitants of Canaan, (who were not ſtronger than theſe) as they had already driven the Amorites out of the country of Sihon, as it here follows.

——— As Iſrael did unto the land of his poſſeſſion, which the Lord gave unto them.] Some have argued from hence, that this book was not written by Moſes, but by ſome other author, after the Iſraelites had gained poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan. But it is manifeſt, this may relate to what they had done already in diſpoſſeſſing Sihon king of the Amorites, and Og king of Baſhan, of their country: Which it is expreſsly ſaid, Moſes had given for a poſſeſſion to the tribe of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh; and that by God's direction, Numb. xxxii. 33. xxxiv. 14, 15.

Ver. 14. And the ſpace in which we came from Kadeſh-barnea, until we came over the brook Zered, was thirty eight years.] For it is evident, by the hiſtory in Numbers, that they came to Kadeſh-barnea, about the fourth month of the ſecond year after their departure out of Egypt. See Numb. xii. 16. And if we ſuppoſe that they removed from hence in the ſeventh or eighth month of that year, it is certain that they could not come to this brook till the ſeventh or eighth month of the fortieth year. For Aaron died at mount Hor on the firſt day of the fifth month of this year; and we muſt allow two or three months time, for all that followed between that and this, viz. the conqueſt of the king of Arad, and of Sihon, and Og, &c.

Ver. 30. But Sihon king of Heſhbon would not let us paſs by him, for the Lord thy God hardned his Spirit, and made his heart obſtinate, &c.] Gave him up to his own inflexible humour, which was ſet upon violent courſes; and from which God did not divert him, (becauſe he intended to deſtroy him) but rather ordered circumſtances ſo, that his mind ſhould be enraged and diſturbed, and conſequently unable to conſider things prudently, and diſcern what belonged to his peace, which is the moſt that can be meant by hardning his ſpirit, and making his heart obſtinate. Which, as it is a ſin, cannot be aſcribed to God; but, as it is a puniſhment, might juſtly be inflicted by him upon Sihon, for his former ſins.

CHAP. III.

1 The ſtory of the conqueſt of Og king of Baſhan. 11 The bigneſs of his bed. 12 The diſtribution of thoſe lands to the two tribes and half. 23 Moſes prayer to enter into the land. 26 He is permitted to ſee it.

THen we turned, and went up the way to Baſhan: and Og the king of Baſhan came out againſt us, he and all his people, to battle at Edrei.

2 And the LORD ſaid unto me, Fear him not: for I will deliver him, and all his people, and his land into thy hand, and thou ſhalt do unto him as thou didſt unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heſhbon.

3 So the LORD our God delivered into our hands Og alſo the king of Baſhan, and all his people: and we ſmote him until none was left to him remaining.

4 And we took all his cities at that time, there was not a city which we took not from them, threeſcore cities, all the region of Argob, the kingdom of Og in Baſhan.

5 All theſe cities were fenced with high walls, gates, and bars, beſide unwalled towns a great many.

6 And we utterly deſtroyed them, as we did unto Sihon king of Heſhbon, utterly deſtroying the men, women, and children of every city.

7 But all the cattle, and the ſpoil of the cities we took for a prey to our ſelves.

8 And we took at that time out of the hand of the two kings of the Amorites, the land that was on this ſide Jordan, from the river of Arnon unto mount Hermont.

9 (Which Hermon the Sidonian and Sirion: and the Amorites call it Shenia.

10 All the cities of the plain, and all Gilead, and all Baſhan unto Salchab and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Baſhan.

11 For only Og king of Baſhan remained of the remnant of giants; behold his bedſtead was a bedſtead of iron: is it not in Rabbath of the children of Ammon? nine cubits was the length thereof, and four cubits the breadth of it, after the cubit of a man.

12 And this land which we poſſeſſed at that time, from Aroer, which is by the river Arnon, and half mount Gilead, and the cities thereof, gave I unto the Reubenites, and to the Gadites.

13 And the reſt of Gilead, and all Baſhan, being the kingdom of Og, gave I unto the half-tribe of Manaſſeh; all the region of Argob, with all Baſhan, which was called the land of giants.

14 Jair the ſon of Manaſſeh took all the county of Argob, unto the coaſts of Geſhuri, and Maachathi; and called them after his own name, Baſhan-havoth-jair, unto this day.

15 And I gave Gilead unto Machir.

16 And unto the Reubenites, and unto the Gadites, I gave from Gilead even unto the river Arnon, half the valley, and the border, even unto the river Jabbok, which is the border of the children of Ammon.

17 The plain alſo, and Jordan, and the coaſt thereof, from Chinnereth even unto the ſea of the plain, even the Salt-ſea, under Aſhdoth-piſgah eaſtward.

18 ¶ And I command you at that time, ſaying, The LORD your God hath given you this land to poſſeſs it: ye ſhall paſs over armed before your brethren the children of Iſrael, all that are meet for the war.

19 But your wives and your little ones, and your cattle (for I know that ye have much cattle) ſhall abide in your cities which I have given you.:

20 Until the LORD have given reſt unto your brethren, as well as unto you, and until they alſo poſſeſs the land which the LORD your God hath given them beyond Jordan: and then ſhall ye return every man unto his poſſeſſion which I have given you.

21 ¶ And I commanded Joſhua at that time, ſaying, Thine eyes have ſeen all that the LORD, your God hath done unto theſe two kings: ſo ſhall the LORD do unto all the kingdoms whither thou paſſeſt.

22 Ye ſhall not fear them: for the LORD your God he ſhall fight for you.

23 And I beſought the LORD at that time, ſaying,

24 O Lord GOD, thou haſt begun to ſhew thy ſervant thy greatneſs, and thy mighty hand: for what God is there in heaven or in earth, that can do according to thy works, and according to thy might?

25 I pray thee let me go over, and ſee the good land that is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain, and Lebanon.

26 But the LORD was wroth with me, for your ſakes, and would not hear me: and the LORD ſaid unto me, Let it ſuffice thee, ſpeak no more unto me of this matter.

27 Get thee up into the top of Piſgah, and lift up thine eyes weſt-ward, and north-ward, and ſouth-ward, and eaſt-ward, and behold it with thine eyes: for thou ſhalt not go over this Jordan.

28 But charge Joſhua, and encourage him, and ſtrengthen him: for he ſhall go over before this people, and he ſhall cauſe them to inherit the land, which thou ſhalt ſee.

29 So we abode in the valley over againſt Beth-peor.

Ver. 8, And we took at that time out of the hand of the two kings of the Amorites, the land which was on this ſide Jordan.] Which was given to the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and half the tribe of Manaſſeh, ver. 12, 13. If ſome men were not blinded with prejudice, they could not but ſee from hence, that the word beeber, in the firſt verſe of this book, is rightly tranſlated, on this ſide; for beyond Jordan (as they would have it ſignify) in the land of Canaan, theſe two kings had no poſſeſſions; nor did Moſes make any conqueſt there.

—— From the river of Arnon unto Hermon.] This river was the bound of their country on the ſouth; and Hermon, which was one of the mountains of Gilead, where it joins to Libanus, was their bound on the north.

Ver. 9. Which Hermon the Sidonians call Sirion.] And ſo it is called in Pſalm xxix. 6. and joined with Lebanon: for it was as much a part of Libanus as of Gilead, theſe two mountains there meeting together. Whence Jeremiah calls Gilead the head of Lebanon, xxii. 6. becauſe Libanus begins where Gilead ends.

—— And the Amorites call it Shenir.] And ſo it is called Ezek. xxvii. 5. and had this name, as Bochart conjectures, from the multitude of wild cats which were in this mountain: for the Arabians called that creature Sinaur, or Sinar. See Hierozoicon, P. 1. L. 3. cap. 14.

Ver. 10. All the cities of the plain.] All the flat country which the LXX. thought was called Miſor; for they retain here that Hebrew word.

—— And all Gilead, and all Baſhan, unto Salchah and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Baſhan.] The former of theſe is mentioned Joſh. xiii. 11. (juſt as it is here) as the bounds of Baſhan toward mount Hermon or Lebanon. So Chytræus, "a town in Baſhan in the mountains "of Libanus near to Machati." And Edrei was the place where they fought with Og, and overthrew him, Numb. xxi. 23.

Ver. 11. For only Og, king of Baſhan, remained of the remnant of the giants.] Or, of the Rephaim, a very ancient people in that country, Gen. xiv. 5. who were either deſcended from the Amorites, or intermixed with them: And Og was the very laſt of them; ſo that he and his people being deſtroyed, none of them remained.

—— Behold, his Bedſtead is a bedſtead of iron.] Which was no unuſual thing in ancient days; tho' far later than this. For Thucidides declares, that when the Thebans took Plateæ, they made beds of the braſs and iron they found there; and which they dedicated to Juno. And beds of ſilver and gold are mentioned by divers authors, as Huetius obſerves in his Demonſtr. Evangel. Propoſ. iv. cap. 14. n. 7.

—— Is it not in Rabbath of the children of Ammon?] This is thought by ſome to be a conſiderable objection againſt Moſes being the author of this book: for how ſhould this bedſtead, ſay they, come to the children of Ammon in his days? No doubt, they imagine, it would have remained in Baſhan whilſt Og lived; though in length of time, it might be carried into the country of the Ammonites: as if Og, fearing the Event of the war, might not ſend his bed and beſt furniture to the Ammonites, knowing they would be ſafe among them, becauſe the Iſraelites were prohibited from committing any hoſtilities againſt them. Or Moſes, having conquered the country, and kept all the ſpoil, ver. 7. might not ſell this, among other goods, to the children of Ammon, who preſerved it in their capital city. No caviller whatever can ſee any unreaſonableneſs in either of theſe ſuppoſitions; nor do we conceive how the conjecture of Andræus Maſius, upon the 12th of Joſhua, can be confuted; which is, that the Ammonites drove out that enormous race of people, mentioned ii. 21. Og might poſſibly eſcape, (and ſo is ſaid here to be left of the remnant of the giants) whoſe flying hither to the Amorites, was made their king, on account of his majeſtic and formidable preſence, and extraordinary valour. But the Ammonites kept his bedſtead, and ſhewed it as a monument of that illuſtrious victory, which they they obtained over the Rephaim, or as they called them, the Zamzummims in that country.

——— Nine cubits was the length thereof, and four cubits was the breadth thereof.] This is mentioned to ſhew of what a vaſt ſtature Og was; for bedſteads being, according to the common cuſtom, made a third part longer than the perſons who lie in them, he was ſix cubits high, as Maimonides computes, that is, as high again as any other man, More Nevochim, P. II. cap. 47. which is a moderate ſuppoſition, in compariſon of what other Jews ſay of him.

——— After the cubit of a man.] According to the cubit of ordinary men, ſays the ſame Maimonides, (which is a little more than half a yard) not of Og before mentioned. But what occaſion was there, ſay former objectors, to mention this? Since the Iſraelites ſaw Og lie dead before them on the ground, and needed not to be told by Moſes how tall he was? And therefore they conclude this was written by ſome other author, in after-times. As if Moſes did not write for the benefit of poſterity, as well as for the preſent generation. Who, that they might be ſatisfied what a ſtupendous man Og was, he left it upon record how large his bedſtead was, and where it might be ſeen; and this would give them an opportunity to judge of his ſtature. Beſide, there were in the preſent generation great numbers of children, old men, women, and ſervants, who could not go to ſee Og lie at length upon the field: but by this means were inſtructed, from what a terrible enemy God had delivered them.

They who queſtion the truth of this relation, if they be able, what the learned Huetius hath at large diſcourſed concerning men of a portentous ſize in all countries, (in his Queſtiones Alnetanæ, Lib. ii. cap. 12. n. 3.) of which no man can doubt, who is not reſolved to disbelieve all the world. In his Demonſtratio Evangelica, alſo he obſerves, that Homer makes Tityon, when he was dead, to have lain ſtretched out (not upon nine cubits, but) upon nine acres of ground:

——— ἐπ' ἐννέα κεῖτο πέλεθρα.

Which hyperbole may excuſe the Jewiſh Rabbins, when they ſay that Og was nine cubits long when he lay in his cradle. See Propoſ. iv. cap. 8. n. 4.

Ver. 14. Jair the ſon of Manaſſeh took all the country of Argob, unto the coaſts of Geſhuri and Maachathi.] We had no mention of theſe places before; which were in the northern part of this country, as appears from Joſh. xii. 4, 5. xiii. 11. But the people of theſe places they could not expel, Joſh. xiii. 13.

——— And called them after his own name unto this day.] From hence likewiſe cavils are raiſed againſt Moſes being the author of this book: when the moſt that can be concluded from hence is, that upon the reviſing theſe books by Ezra, he inſerted theſe words to certify the reader, that ſtill they retained this name; as ſome body, no doubt, added the hiſtory of Moſes's death at the end of this book. This the greateſt defenders of the authority of theſe books, as written by Moſes himſelf, make no ſcruple to allow; particularly Huetius, and ſince him, Hermannus Witzius, in his Miſcellania Sacra, Lib. i. cap. 14. ſect. 47. But there was no neceſſity either for them or us to make ſo large a conceſſion, for Moſes might ſay this himſelf, though it was not long before he wrote this book. And the ſacred writers ſometimes mention places, which had their name but newly given them, from a particular fact, that poſterity might know the original of it. See Acts i. 19.

Ver. 16. And unto the Reubenites, and unto the Gadites I gave from Gilead even unto the river Arnon, half the valley.] The ſame word, in the Hebrew language, ſignifies both a valley, and a brook or river: and being tranſlated in the foregoing words, the river, the expreſſion ſhould therefore have been rendered here, half the river; that is, to the middle of the river Arnon; by which the bounds of their country is moſt exactly adjuſted. And thus not only the LXX, and the Vulgar, but Onkelos alſo tranſlates it, The middle of the torrent. Our tranſlators alſo, in Joſhua xii. 2. where there are the ſame words, which in the Hebrew run thus, unto the river Arnon, render them in the ſame manner, namely, the midſt of the river; where the city of Aroar ſtood, encompaſſed by the ſtream, ——— And the border.] The Word extended is here underſtood, or ſome ſuch Word: Or the meaning muſt be, the country bordering upon that river.

Ver. 17. The plain alſo and Jordan.] The level country toward the river Jordan; which was the weſtern bounds of thoſe territories of Sihon; as the river Arnon was the ſouthern, and the river Jabbok the northern; the country of the children of Ammon being on the eaſt.

——— And the coaſt thereof from Chinnereth, even unto the ſea of the plain, even the Salt Sea.] The Dead Sea, as it is called in other places; which, before the conflagration of Sodom and Gomorrah, had been a moſt delicious and fertile plain.

Ver. 20. Until the Lord hath given reſt unto your brethren, as well as unto you, &c.] That is, until the Lord brought them to a ſettlement in the land of Canaan, and given them a peaceable poſſeſſion of it; after which, we read that Joſhua diſmiſſed theſe tribes, and ſent them to their wives and children, Joſh. xxii. 4.

Ver. 25. I pray thee let me go over, and ſee the good land which is beyond Jordan.] To ſee, is here to enjoy it, as was granted to the reſt of the Iſraelites; for God commanded him to aſcend to a mountain, and behold it, but threatened, he ſhould not enter into it. Which menace he might well think was reverſible, as others had been againſt the people of Iſrael, upon his prayer for them, tho' they had more highly offended the divine Majeſty than he had done. For though he doubted a few moments, eſpecially when he ſaw no water guſh from the rock at the firſt ſtroke; yet he preſently recovered himſelf, and ſmote it a ſecond time, in a full perſwaſion that God would relieve them.

——— That goodly mountain.] Moſt think that he deſired to go ſo far into it, as to ſee the place where God intended to ſettle his divine preſence; which proved to be mount Moriah But nothing was known of this, a long time after; unleſs we ſuppoſe it was revealed unto him, that where Abraham offered Iſaac, there the Lord would dwell. It ſeems to us, that he means that goodly country, full of noble mountains: for thus the word mountain is often uſed, particularly Numb. xxiii. 29. where the ſpies ſay the Amorites dwell in the mountain, i. e. in that mountainous part of Canaan.

——— And Lebanon.] He deſired to go through the whole country, as far as Lebanon; which was the moſt northerly part of it, famous for ſtately cedars, as the mountain before ſpoken of, was in the ſouth of Canaan.

Ver. 26. But the Lord was wroth with me for your ſakes, and would not hear me. And the Lord ſaid unto me let it ſuffice thee, ſpeak no more unto me of this matter.] This ſuggeſts that Moſes renewed his petition, after the firſt denial, and more earneſtly implored this favour of God; which he could not obtain, but was enjoined ſilence. This argues great diſpleaſure, and is mentioned by him, as an admonition to the Iſraelites, to be fearful of offending the divine Majeſty.

Ver. 28. But charge Joſhua, and encourage and ſtrengthen him, &c.] Command him not to doubt, that I will bring my people thither under his conduct, tho' I will not permit thee to enter into it.

Ver. 29. So we abode in the valley over againſt Beth-peor.] There was, probably, a temple erected in honour to Baal-peor, which fronted this valley; for ſo Beth ſignifies an houſe or temple of Peor. This temple gave the name to a city wherein it ſtood, which was part of the inheritance of the Rheubenites, Joſh. xiii. 20. Moſes was buried in this valley, chap. xxxiv. 6. where he made this moſt excellent exhortation to all the people.

CHAP. IV.

1 An exhortation to obedience. 41 Moſes appointeth the three cities of refuge on that ſide Jordan.

NOW therefore hearken, O Iſrael, unto the ſtatutes, and unto the judgments which I teach you, for to do them, that ye may live, and go in and poſſeſs the land land which the LORD God of your fathers giveth you.

2 Ye ſhall not add unto the word which I command you, neither ſhall you diminiſh ought from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the LORD your God which I command you.

3 Your eyes have ſeen what the LORD did becauſe of Baal-peor: for all the men that followed Baal-peor, the LORD thy God hath deſtroyed them from among you.

4 But ye that did cleave unto the LORD your God, are alive every one of you this day.

5 Behold, I have taught you ſtatutes and judgments, even as the LORD my God commanded me, that ye ſhould do ſo in the land whither ye go to poſſeſs it.

6 Keep therefore and do them, for this is your wiſdom and your underſtanding in the ſight of the nations, which ſhall hear all theſe ſtatutes, and ſay, Surely this great nation is a wiſe and underſtanding people.

7 For what nation is there ſo great, who hath God ſo nigh unto them, as the LORD our God is in all things that we call upon him for?

8 And what nation is there ſo great, that hath ſtatutes and judgments ſo righteous, as all this law which I ſet before you this day?

9 Only take heed to thy ſelf, and keep thy ſoul diligently, leſt thou forget the things which thy eyes have ſeen, and leſt they depart from thy heart all the days of thy life: but teach them thy ſons, and thy ſons ſons:

10 Specially the day that thou ſtoodſt before the LORD thy God in Horeb, when the LORD ſaid unto me, Gather me the people together, and I will make them hear my words, that they may learn to fear me all the days that they ſhall live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children.

11 And ye came near and ſtood under the mountain, and the mountain burnt with fire unto the midſt of heaven, with darkneſs, clouds, and thick darkneſs.

12 And the LORD ſpake unto you out of the midſt of the fire: ye heard the voice of the words, but ſaw no ſimilitude, only ye heard a voice.

13 And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments, and he wrote them upon two tables of ſtone.

14 ¶ And the LORD commanded me at that time, to teach you ſtatutes and judgments, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go over to poſſeſs it.

15 Take ye therefore good heed unto your ſelves (for ye ſaw no manner of ſimilitude on the day that the LORD ſpake unto you in Horeb, out of the midſt of the fire.)

16 Leſt ye corrupt your ſelves, and make you a graven image, the ſimilitude of any figure, the likeneſs of male or female.

17 The likeneſs of any beaſt that is on the earth, the likeneſs of any winged fowl that flieth in the air,

18 The likeneſs of any thing that creepeth on the ground, the likeneſs of any fiſh that is in the waters beneath the earth:

19 And leſt thou liſt up thine eyes unto heaven, and when thou ſeeſt the ſun, and the moon, and the ſtars, even all the hoſt of heaven, ſhouldſt be driven to worſhip them, and ſerve them, which the LORD thy God hath divided unto all nations under the whole heaven.

20 But the LORD hath taken you, and brought you forth out of the iron furnace, even out of Egypt, to be unto him a people of inheritance, as ye are this day.

21 Furthermore, the LORD was angry with me for your ſakes, and ſware that I ſhould not go over Jordan, and that I ſhould not go in unto that good land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

22 But I muſt die in this land, I muſt not go over to Jordan: but ye ſhall go over and poſſeſs that good land.

23 Take heed unto your ſelves, leſt ye forget the covenant of the LORD your God, which he made with you, and make you a graven image, or the likeneſs of any thing which the LORD thy God hath forbidden thee.

24 For the LORD thy God is a conſuming fire, even a jealous God.

25 ¶ When thou ſhalt beget children, and childrens children, and ſhalt have remained long in the land, and ſhall corrupt your ſelves, and make a graven image, or the likeneſs of any thing, and ſhall do evil in the ſight of the LORD thy God, to provoke him to anger:

26 I

26 I call heaven and earth to witneſs againſt you this day, that ye ſhall ſoon utterly periſh from off the land whereunto you go over Jordan to poſſeſs it: ye ſhall not prolong your days upon it, but ſhall utterly be deſtroyed.

27 And the LORD ſhall ſcatter you among the nations, and ye ſhall be left few in number among the heathen, whither the LORD ſhall lead you.

28 And there ye ſhall ſerve gods, the work of mens hands, wood and ſtone, which neither ſee, nor hear, nor eat, nor ſmell,

29 But if from thence thou ſhalt ſeek the LORD thy God, thou ſhalt find him, if thou ſeek him with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul.

30 When thou art in tribulation, and all theſe things are come upon thee, even in the latter days, if thou turn to the LORD thy God, and ſhalt be obedient unto his voice:

31 (For the LORD thy God is a merciful God) he will not forſake thee, neither deſtroy thee, nor forget the covenant of thy fathers which he ſware unto them.

32 For ask now of the days that are paſt, which were before thee, ſince the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from the one ſide of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any ſuch thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it?

33 Did ever people hear the voice of God ſpeaking out of the midſt of the fire, as thou haſt heard and live?

34 Or hath God aſſayed to go and take him a nation from the midſt of another nation, by temptations, by ſigns, and by wonders, and by war, and by a mighty hand, and by a ſtretched out arm, and by great terrors, according to all that the LORD your God did for you in Egypt before your eyes?

35 Unto thee it was ſhewed, that thou mighteſt know that the LORD he is God; there is none elſe beſides him.

36 Out of heaven he made thee to hear his voice, that he might inſtruct thee: and upon earth he ſhewed thee his great fire, and thou heardſt his words out of the midſt of the fire.

37 And becauſe he loved thy fathers, therefore he choſe their ſeed after them, and brought thee out in his ſight, with his mighty power out of Egypt.

38 To drive out nations from before thee, greater and mightier than thou art, to bring thee in to give thee their land for an inheritance, as it is this day.

39 Know therefore this day, and conſider it in thine heart, that the LORD he is God in heaven above, and upon the earth beneath: there is none elſe.

40 Thou ſhalt keep therefore his ſtatutes, and his commandments which I command thee this day, that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, and that thou mayſt prolong thy days upon the earth, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for ever.

41 ¶ Then Moſes ſevered three cities on this ſide Jordan, toward the ſun-riſing:

42 That the ſlayer might flee thither, which ſhould kill his neighbour unawares, and hated him not in times paſt; and that fleeing unto one of theſe cities, he might live:

43 Namely, Bezer in the wilderneſs, in the plain-country of the Reubenites; and Ramoth in Gilead, of the Gadites; and Golan in Baſhan, of the Manaſſites.

44 ¶ And this is the law which Moſes ſet before the children of Iſrael.

45 Theſe are the teſtimonies, and the ſtatutes, and the judgments, which Moſes ſpake unto the children of Iſrael, after they came forth out of Egypt.

46 On this ſide Jordan in the valley over againſt Beth-peor, in the land of Sihon king of the Amorites, who dwelt at Heſhbon, whom Moſes and the children of Iſrael ſmote, after they were come forth out of Egypt.

47 And they poſſeſſed his land, and the land of Og king of Baſhan, two kings of the Amorites, which were on this ſide Jordan, toward the ſun-riſing;

48 From Aroer, which is by the bank of the river Arnon, even unto mount Sion, which is Hermon.

49 And all the plain on this ſide Jordan eaſt-ward, even unto the ſea of the plain, under the ſprings of Piſgah.

Ver. 1. Now therefore hearken, O Iſrael.] Having commemorated ſeveral benefits which God had beſtowed upon them, ſince their coming out of Egypt, and ſince the promulgation of the law at mount Sinai, with ſeveral ſevere puniſhments which he had inflicted on them for their diſobedience to it, Moſes proceeds now to exhort them earneſtly to the obſervance of it.

—— That ye may live and go in, and poſſeſs the land which the Lord God of your fathers giveth you.] That ye may not periſh as their fore-fathers had done in their rebellion, but be happy, and enjoy what God had promiſed, and was ready now to confer upon them.

Ver. 2. Ye ſhall not add unto the word which I command you, neither ſhall you diminiſh ought from it.] This is thought by ſome to ſignify, that they ſhould not make the leaſt alteration in the laws he had given them, with relation to the rites of divine worſhip, and abſtinence from ſeveral meats, and ſuch like things; which were diſtinctive marks, whereby they were ſeparated from other nations to be a peculiar people to God. Thus Chiskuni interprets theſe words, Thou ſhalt not add fear, upon the fear of the bleſſed God. That is, any other worſhip to the divine worſhip preſcribed by theſe laws, nor diminiſh that worſhip. Which interpretation ſeems to be warranted, by what follows, "Thy eyes have ſeen what the Lord God "did, becauſe of Baal-peor". But in the preceding words, (which introduce theſe) judgments being mentioned as well as ſtatutes, there muſt be a larger ſenſe of this injunction, which relates to all the laws of God: and the meaning ſeems to be, Ye ſhall not tranſgreſs any of theſe precepts, either by doing any thing contrary to them, which was to add; or omitting any thing which they required, which was to diminiſh.

Thus Grotius interprets it, upon 2 Cor. xi. 24. Addere ad legem eſt facere quod lex vetat, diminuere eſt omittere, quod lex jubet. But which way ſoever we take it, nothing is more certain than that this prohibition preſerved theſe books from any alteration, ſince the time they were written: for the whole body of the people acknowledging their divine authority, none of them dared to change any thing, either by addition, or diminution. Of which there is a wonderful inſtance in the people that came out of Aſſyria, (in the room of the Iſraelites, who were tranſported thither) to inhabit the country of Samaria; who receiving this law, their poſterity have kept it all along to this day as uncorrupted, as the Jews themſelves have done; altho' they were their mortal enemies, and have been expoſed to all the changes and revolutions that can befall a nation during the interval of above two thouſand and four hundred years. Thus the moſt learned Dr. Alix obſerves, in his reflexions on the four laſt books of Moſes. And we do not ſee why the perfection of the Scripture, without the oral law of the Jews, ſhould not be thought to be eſtabliſhed by theſe words, as another perſon (Joſhua Wagenſeil) underſtands them in his Conſut. Carminis Lipmanni, p. 585. Yet, as the fore-named Chiskuni notes, it does not ſeem reaſonable to conclude from hence, that they were prohibited to add any conſtitutions, as a hedge and fence to the law; or as an explication of it, when the ſame was doubtful.

Ver. 4. But ye that did cleave unto the Lord, are alive every one of you this day.] A ſingular providence watched over them, to preſerve them in ſuch good health, that not one in the ſo many thouſands was dead ſince that time; nor in the war with the Midianites, wherein they ſlew all the males, did they loſe ſo much as one man. Numbers xxxi. 7. 49.

Ver. 6. Keep therefore and do them, for this is your wiſdom and underſtanding in the ſight of all the nations.] It is your intereſt to obſerve them, as you will ſoon find by experience, which will teach you that it is not only the wiſeſt courſe of it ſelf, but will procure you the reputation of being a wiſe people among your neighbours.

——— Which ſhall hear all theſe ſtatutes.] Judgments as well as ſtatutes having been mentioned before, ver. 1, 5. and here only the latter, Abarbinel thence infers, that even thoſe laws which depended wholly upon the will and pleaſure of God, and for which they could give no reaſon, (for ſuch they underſtood by Chukkim) would procure them very great honour, if they were carefully obſerved. For the nations ſeeing how wonderfully they proſpered, would be apt to impute it to theſe extraordinary preſcriptions which they followed. Juſt, ſays he, as a phyſician, who cures deſperate diſeaſes, by ſome ſmall trifling remedies, as they ſeem to others, is highly applauded for the profoundneſs of his knowledge and wiſdom. But Maimonides takes this word ſtatutes to comprehend all the laws of God; and undertakes to ſhew that all the ſix hundred and thirteen precepts have a wiſe end in them, for the profit and benefit of thoſe who obſerve them; either to create ſome uſeful and inſtructive opinion in their mind, or to eradicate ſome perverſe one; either to inſtitute ſome good order, or to take away iniquity, &c. See More Nevochim, P. iii. cap. 31.

——— And ſay, Surely this nation is a wiſe and underſtanding people.] Who continued in a ſtate of ſafety, and in the full fruition of all manner of bleſſings, while they all were careful to go up to worſhip one God ſincerely at one place, and at certain ſtated times, as if the whole nation was but one family. All the reſt of their laws, alſo, were admirably fitted to unite them to God, and one to another; and conſequently, to make them appear a wiſe people in the eyes of other nations; whoſe writers have not only magnified Moſes, but their law-givers have tranſcribed ſeveral of his precepts into their own conſtitutions. This appears by the old Attic laws, and thoſe of the twelve tables, as many learned men have obſerved; nay, the oracle, reported by Porphyry, in Euſebius's Præparatio Evangelica, lib. ix. cap. 10. thus extols this nation:

Μοῦνοι Χαλδαῖοι ζοφίαν λάχον ἠδ' ἀρ' Ἑβραῖοι,
Αὐτο γένεθλον Ἄνακλα ζεβαζομένοι Θεὸν ἀγνῶς.

The Chaldeans, and the Hebrews, who came from Chaldea, are the only wiſe people, who worſhip God, the eternal King, in a pure manner. And the oracle of Apollo Clarius, recorded by Macrobius, lib. 1. Saturnal. cap. 18. is no leſs remarkable.

Φράζεο πάντων ὕπατον Θεὸν ἔμμεν Ἰάω.

Acknowledge Jao (ſo they pronounced the name Jehovah) to be the higheſt God of all. For tho' Macrobius fancied the ſun to be here called Ἰάω, (no one can tell why) yet Diodorus Siculus acknowledges Ἰάω to be the God, from whom Moſes pretended to have his laws, i. e. Jehovah.

Ver. 7. For what nation is there ſo great, who hath God ſo nigh unto them, as the Lord our God is in all things that we call upon him for?] Both Onkelos, and the paraphraſe of Jonathan, and likewiſe the Jeruſalem Targum, are very ſignificant upon this place; "What people is there, who "have a God that approaches to them, ſo as the Lord "our God doth to us? At whatſoever hour we cry unto "him, he anſwers us. It is the manner of other people, "to carry their gods upon their ſhoulders, to ſhew that "they are near to them; when, alas! they are far off, "and cannot hear them. But the Lord our God ſits on "his throne on high, and hears our prayers, whenever we call upon him," &c. To which may be added, that they had a ſymbol of God's preſence continually among them, in the holy place, where he dwelt with them, and Moſes, whenſoever he pleaſed, conſulted him in all difficult affairs; as their high-prieſts might do, with the Urim and Thummim, in all times to come.

Ver. 8. And what nation is there ſo great, that hath ſtatutes and judgments ſo righteous, as all this law which I ſet before you this day?] The real greatneſs of a nation (as appears by this and the foregoing verſe) conſiſts in the true worſhip of God, and in the upright adminiſtration of juſtice. Both which were ſo provided for by the divine laws among the Jews, that no nation could compare with them, or was really ſo great as they: For tho' their country was but ſmall, and they were frequently oppreſſed by ſeveral cruel enemies, who deſired their extirpation, yet they recovered themſelves, and kept their laws in their worſt condition, (when commonly they beſt obſerved them) inſomuch that, as a very learned perſon of our own church long ago obſerved, after ſo many changes and alterations as there were in their ſtate, from better to worſe, and back again; after ſo many victories obtained by them over others, and ſo many captivities of their perſons, and deſolation of their country, as others had wrought, they continued ſtill one and the ſame people, governed by the ſame laws, under ſeveral great and potent monarchies. The ſucceſſive riſe and fall of three of which they were preſerved to behold; and in their declining ſtate, able to ſtand out a great while againſt the fourth, the mightieſt that ever was on earth, and that, when this monarchy was in its full ſtrength. This is a plain demonſtration of the truth of theſe words of Moſes, that no nation was ſo great as they. See Dr. Jackſon's firſt book upon the Creed, chap. xxi.

Maimonides obſerves, that the word zaddikim, which we tranſlate righteous, ſignifies as much as equal and proportionate; ſuch, ſaith he, were all theſe laws of God; in which there was no exceſs, by the preſcription of long pilgrimages, or ſevere faſtings; nor any defect, which might open open the window to any vice, or make them careleſs in the practice of virtue, More Nevochim, P. ii. c. 39.

Ver. 10. Eſpecially the day that thou ſtood'ſt before the Lord thy God in Horeb.] But above all, that memorable day, when the Lord delivered his law to them from mount Sinai; at which the oldeſt of them were preſent, and had ſeen and heard what he ſaid, and how it was deliver'd.

Ver. 12. And the Lord ſpake unto you out of the midſt of the fire, ye heard the voice of the words, but ſaw no ſimilitude.] Tho' ſometimes the Divine Majeſty ſeems to have appeared in a viſible ſhape, Dan. vii. 9, 10. yet when he came to give them his law, he would not appear in the figure of a man, or in any other form, that might ſeem to repreſent him to their outward ſenſes, or imagination: for it would have been dangerous then to manifeſt himſelf under any ſimilitude, when he commanded them not to make any reſemblance of him. They would have thought, he prohibited them from making any other repreſentation, but that wherein he manifeſted himſelf to them; in which they would have concluded it was lawful to exhibit him.

——— Only ye heard a voice.] From hence ſome of the Jews would infer, that the people only heard the ſound of God's words, when he utter'd the ten commandments; but not the diſtinct articulation, ſo as to underſtand the ſenſe of what was ſaid. Thus Maimonides, in his More Nevochim, P. ii. c. 32. which is manifeſtly falſe, as appears from ver. 10. and 13. and Exod. xx. 22. For therefore the day, wherein he ſpake to them in Horeb, was ſo remarkable, as never to be forgotten, becauſe "he made them "hear his words, ſo that they might learn to fear him," &c. For tho' he did not appear in any viſible form to them, yet he vouchſafed to ſpeak to them intelligibly in their own language, that they might be inſtructed in their duty; both which was to keep them from idolatry. He did not let them ſee any ſhape, that they might not make any image of him, to worſhip it, or him by it, after the manner of the Heathens; but he render'd his voice audible to them, that they might not go and worſhip any other gods, which the Pagans pretended ſpake to them.

Ver. 14. And the Lord commanded me, at that time, to teach you ſtatutes and judgments, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go over to poſſeſs it.] This doth not ſignify, that they themſelves did not hear the ten words from mount Sinai, but were taught them by Moſes, as Maimonides fancies; for it plainly relates to the reſt of the laws, which God immediately after gave them, Exod. xxi. xxii. xxiii. it being their own deſire, that God would ſpeak to them no more by himſelf, but communicate the reſt of his will by Moſes, Exod. xx. 19. and accordingly he told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments, which he delivered to him, Exod. xxiv. 3.

Ver. 16. Leſt ye corrupt yourſelves, and make you a graven image, the ſimilitude of any figure, the likeneſs of male or female.] The repreſentation of God in human ſhape is firſt forbidden, becauſe it was moſt common among the Heathens. Therefore we cannot think this relates to the Egyptian worſhip, who honoured oxen as ſacred to Oſiris, and cows as ſacred to Iſis. Unto which Mr. Selden thinks the LXX. had reſpect, when they tranſlated theſe words Ὁμοίωμα ἀρσενικὸν ἢ θηλυκόν. De Diis Syris, ſyntag. 1. cap. 4.

Ver. 17. The likeneſs of any beaſt that is on the earth, &c.] The word or is to be here ſupplied, and in all that follows, in this manner; "or the likeneſs of any beaſt "that is on the earth; or the likeneſs of any winged fowl "that flieth in the air; where col-tzippor canaph, which we tranſlate and winged fowl, ſignifies all birds and inſects that fly in the air; for in the ſhape of ſuch creatures alſo the Heathens repreſented their gods, or ſome of their qualities; for not only oxen were ſacred to Apis, and rams to Jupiter Ammon, but hawks and eagles, and even beetles, to other deities.

Ver. 18. The likeneſs of any thing that creepeth upon the ground.] Nothing was more common among the Heathens, than the worſhip of ſerpents.

——— The likeneſs of any fiſh that is in the waters.] The famous Dagon, whom the Philiſtines worſhipped, was a fiſh with an human face, hands and feet. Certain it is, the Syrians worſhipped a fiſh, as Cicero tells us, in his third book of the Nature of the gods, Syri piſcem venerantur: which, Mr. Selden thinks, relates to the famous goddeſs Atargatis; which is a word formed out of the Hebrew, addir-dag, which ſignifies, magnificent or potent fiſh. See De Diis Syris, ſyntag. ii. cap. 2. The Egyptians were famous in after-times for worſhipping all ſorts of animals; and if one could find they were ſo in the days of Moſes, it might be aſſigned as the moſt probable reaſon of his cautioning the Iſraelites againſt theſe idolatrous ſuperſtitions ſo particularly, they being lately come out of Egypt.

Ver. 19. And leſt thou lift up thine eyes upon heaven.] From hence that common ſpeech among the Arabians was probably derived, "Take heed how thou gazeſt on the ſplendour of the ſtars:" which is in the firſt century of Arabic Proverbs, ſet forth by Erpenius, Prov. xxviii. who ſaith, he knew not what to make of it: But we take it to be a caution againſt idolatry, to which the ancient Arabians were addicted.

——— And when thou ſeeſt the ſun, and the moon, and the ſtars, even all the hoſt of heaven.] The moſt ancient idolatry, of all others, ſeems to have been the worſhip of the ſun, and the reſt of the heavenly bodies, which began among the Chaldeans: for there is not any god, or goddeſs, among the ancient Gentiles, but hath a reſpect to the ſun or the moon, as Gisburtus Cuperus hath very plainly demonſtrated, in his Harpocrates, p. 87, &c. 108, &c.

——— Shouldeſt be driven to worſhip them, and ſerve them.] Drawn in, enticed, and deceived, (as Onkelos, and the LXX. tranſlate it) either by the inſtigation of ſome evil genius, or admiration of their ſplendour, or imitation of other nations, or a vain opinion that ſome divinity inhabits ſuch illuſtrious bodies, or out of a ſenſe of the benefits mankind receive by them: for the chief philoſophers themſelves were led by their weak reaſonings into this error, as appears even by Plato, who ſaith, it is moſt juſt that the heaven ſhould be worſhipped with all the gods and dæmons, and that we ſhould Τιμᾶν τε καὶ εὐχεσθαι ἀφαρεθήναι αὐτούς, &c. as he declares in his Epinomis. See Euſebius, in his Præpar. Evang. lib. xiii. cap. 18. where he ſhews, how much better the Hebrews expreſs themſelves in this matter; and quotes ſome words of Plato, out of a work of his, not now extant, for the explication of theſe words of Moſes. And to make this idolatry ſeem more reaſonable, ſome of the philoſophers aſſerted the ſun to be endued with underſtanding; and therefore is called by Proclus Πυρὸς νοητὸν βασιλέα, the king of intellectual fire, to diſtinguiſh it from other fires which are without underſtanding: And from thence, in one of the coins of Caracalla, there is over the ſun, ſurrounded with rays, the word Providentia. In ſhort, the world had been ſo long ſettled in this worſhip, that it was no eaſy matter, when the Son of God came, to root it out: for the Eſſenes (the beſt ſect among the Jews) ſeem to have had a tinge of this ſuperſtition, as Joſephus repreſents them, Lib. ii. de Bello Judaico, cap. 7. Some indeed excuſe them, as if they only admired the ſun, as the moſt excellent work of God, which they expreſſed by ſome kind of adoration: But Joſephus expreſly tells us, that early in the morning, they directed to him, Παλαιούς τινας εὐχὰς, as if they beſeeched him to riſe. And this ſtuck ſtill in the minds of ſome who profeſſed Chriſtianity, particularly the followers of Baſilides, and the Manichees, who called the ſun and moon by the name of gods; and ſometimes called the ſun Chriſt, as Theodoret tells us, lib. 1. cap. 26. And Epiphanius and St. Auſtin ſay the ſame in more places than one. No wonder, therefore, that Julian the apoſtate ſhould ſay, that God produced, Ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ Ἥλιον Θεὸν μέγιστον πάντα ὅμοιον ἑαυτῷ, out of himſelf the ſun, the greateſt God, in all things like unto himſelf: for which he quotes Plato, in his famous Oration in praiſe of the ſun; where he ſaith, the ſame ſun hath filled the heaven with innumerable other gods, p. 146. Ὁ οὐρανὸς θεῶν ἐστιν ἐκ ἡλίου πλήρης, the whole heaven is full of gods from the ſun.

——— Which the Lord thy God hath divided unto all nations under the whole heaven.] The ſenſe is very plain, that all nations under heaven have the benefit of the ſun, moon, and ſtars, as well as the Jews; who were, therefore, to worſhip him alone, who is the Lord of them all, and hath made them to miniſter unto us.

This R. Solomon ſaw, and yet could not adhere to it, but fell into the vain fancy of the generality of the Jews, that God hath diſtributed the nations of the world under the government of ſeveral ſtars, which ſtars are under the government of angels; but the Jews under the government of God alone, and not ſubject to any planet; which hath no foundation at all; much leſs can we think that God appointed the nations of the world to worſhip the heavenly hoſt, leſt they ſhould be Atheiſts, as Clemens Alexandrinus, and Juſtin Martyr, fancy from this place; unleſs they mean, that God for their ſins delivered them up to this impiety; which ſeveral great men ſince have thought to be the true meaning of theſe words: for there are no ſuch words found in the LXX, as they alledge, Τμῖν δ' ἐκ ἔδωκε Κύριος, ὁ Θεός σου.

There is one who takes the word Chalak, which we tranſlate divide, to ſignify blandiſh, and makes this the ſenſe, that God places theſe great luminaries in the heavens, to invite and allure all nations to admire and adore him, the Creator of them. And indeed in the conjugation which the Hebrews call Hiphil, this word ſignifies to ſoften and ſmooth, and conſequently to allure; but it never ſignifies ſo in that they call Kal.

Maimonides makes the ſenſe of Moſes's argument to be thus: God hath made the ſun and moon to be miniſters; not to be worſhipped, according to Gen. i. 18. which made the Pſalmiſt ſo particularly call upon all the heavenly bodies to praiſe the Lord, Pſal. cxlviii. More Nevochim, P. ii. cap. 5.

Ver. 20. But the Lord hath taken you, and brought you forth out of the iron furnace.] This is a phraſe alſo uſed by Solomon, 1 Kings vii. 51. and by Jeremiah xi. 4. to expreſs the moſt cruel ſervitude; wherein God ſuffered them to be tried, as metals are in a furnace of iron, red hot; for it doth not allude to their making of bricks, as ſome imagine, which were not wrought in an iron furnace.

——— To be unto him a people of inheritance, as ye are at this day.] Theſe were two powerful arguments to induce them to obedience: that they were not only delivered from the ſevereſt ſlavery, but were likewiſe treated as God's peculiar people, ſee Exod. xix. 5. whom he had purchaſed for his inheritance, that is, to be his people for ever.

From this verſe, Sir John Marſham infers, that Moſes had reſpect, in the foregoing verſes, to the Egyptian ſuperſtition; as if he had ſaid, Excuſſo ſervitutis jugo, etiam excutienda ſunt Egypti Βδελυγλαία, "Having ſhaken off "the Egyptian yoke, they were alſo to ſhake off their a-"bominable idols"; for the inviſible God is not to be worſhipped by images or ſymbols. So that when he forbids them, ver. 16. "To make a graven image, the ſimi-"litude of any figure, the likeneſs of male and female," he thinks Moſes hath reſpect to the Boves utriuſque ſexus ſacri, the ſacred beeves of both kinds; the males to Oſiris; the females to Iſis. And he mentions, "the likeneſs of any "beaſt that is in earth", ver. 17. becauſe all the Egyptians worſhipped not only the creatures before mentioned, but likewiſe a dog and a cat: The Thebans and Saitæ worſhipped ſheep; the Mendeſians, a goat; and others of them, wolves and lyons: And he adds, "the likeneſs of "any winged fowl that flieth in the air"; becauſe the Egyptians worſhipped a hawk, and the bird called Ibis; and the Thebans, an eagle. In ver. 18. he mentions "the "ſimilitude of any thing that creepeth upon the ground"; becauſe about Thebes, ſerpents were ſacred to Jupiter: "And the likeneſs of any fiſh that is in the waters"; becauſe all Egypt worſhipped certain fiſhes, and ſome of them the crocodile, and the Hippopotamus. And as for the ſun, moon, and ſtars, ver. 19. the worſhip of them was common to the Egyptians with all other nations. All this he juſtifies out of good authors; and it might paſs for truth, had we any certainty that the Egyptians, in the time of Moſes, were as ſottiſh as they were in the time of Herodotus.

Ver. 21. Furthermore the Lord was angry with me for your ſakes, and ſware that I ſhould not go over Jordan, &c.] God only told him ſo at firſt, Numb. xx. 12. but upon the importunate intreaty of Moſes, that he would revoke the ſentence, of which we read in the foregoing chapter of this book, the Deity ſilenced him, by confirming his threatning with an oath.

Ver. 24. For the Lord thy God is a conſuming fire.] So he appeared upon the mount, when he delivered his law from thence in flaming fire, Exod. xxiv. 17. The learned Huetius thinks, that from theſe words of Moſes, the ancient Perſians derived the worſhip of fire; at firſt, only as a reſemblance of God, or a ſymbol of him, as Maximus Tyrius declares, Diſſert. xviii. but afterward, as God himſelf, Demonſtr. Evangel. p. 94.

——— Even a jealous God.] Who cannot endure any rival in your affection: See Exod. xx. 5. Theſe were two awakening arguments to keep them from idolatry; that God cannot endure it, and will be very terrible in his puniſhment of it.

Ver. 33. Did ever people hear the voice of God ſpeaking out of the midſt of the fire, as thou haſt heard and live?] Here was a double, or rather a triple prodigy, never heard of before, that God ſhould ſpeak to them audibly and diſtinctly, ſo long as to inform them of their duty toward himſelf and one another; and this out of the midſt of devouring flames, and without the leaſt hurt to any one of them, Exod. xx. 18. xiv. 17.

Ver. 34. Or hath God aſſayed to go and take him a nation from the midſt of another nation?] Another wonder, never before heard of! that God, by two men alone, Moſes and Aaron, ſhould demand the delivery of one nation, under the power of another far greater and ſtronger than themſelves, and effect it alſo, by no other means but ſuch as here follow.

By temptations.] This word may be thought to ſignify the grievous trials of the Iſraelites, whoſe miſeries were increaſed after the firſt attempt for their deliverance; which ſeemed to them a ſtrange method of proceeding, Exod. v. 19, 22, 23. But by temptations, may in this place be, in general, meant miracles, as the Hebrews underſtand it, and the Chaldee word Teneſſin ſignifies. This and the two following words being of the very ſame import with the three words in the New Teſtament, which often occur, (and ſeem to be taken from hence) Δυνάμεσι, τέρασι, καὶ σημείοις, with miracles, wonders, and ſigns, Act 2. 22. 2 Cor. xii. Heb. xi. 4.

——— By ſigns.] Which are mentioned, Exod. iv. 9. vii. 9, 10.

——— And by wonders.] This ſignifies all the ten plagues of Egypt; for Pharaoh would not let the Iſraelites go, till God had multiplied his wonders on the land of Egypt, as we read, Exod. vii. 3. x. 1, 2. xi. 9, 10.

——— And by war.] This ſeems to relate to the overthrow of Pharaoh in the Red Sea; where the Lord is ſaid to fight for Iſrael, Exod. xiv. 14. xv. 3. while they, which is the greateſt wonder of all, were delivered without ſtriking a ſtroke.

——— And by a mighty hand, and a ſtretched out arm.] Theſe are phraſes which we often meet with, when Moſes ſpeaks of their deliverance out of Egypt, Exod. iii. 19. vi. 6. xv. 12. and many other places. And the Hebrews think, that his mighty hand particularly refers to the grievous murrain, and the peſtilence, which are called the hand of the Lord, Exod. x. 3, 15. and his ſtretched out arm, to have a particular reſpect to the killing of the firſt-born; the angel who was going to ſmite Jeruſalem, appearing with a drawn ſword, and his hand ſtretched out, 1 Chron. xxi. 16.

——— And by great terrors.] Wherewith the minds of thoſe were ſtruck who heard of theſe things, Exod. xv. 14, 15, 16. Or elſe he means the conſternation which ſeized the Egyptians, while they remained three days in diſmal darkneſs, Exod. x. 23. for the concluſion of this verſe ſignifies, that he ſpeaks of all that the Lord their God did for them in Egypt before their eyes.

Ver. 37. And becauſe he loved thy fathers, therefore he choſe their ſeed after them, and brought them out in his ſight, with a mighty power, out of Egypt.] This is mentioned in Scripture as the higheſt benefit, never to be forgotten by them. So G. Schickard obſerves, in his Miſchpat Hammelech, cap. 3. Theorem x. that they are put in mind of this, in the frontiſpiece of the decalogue, Exod. xx. 2. in the inſtitutions of ſacrifices, Lev. xxii. 33. in the promiſe of a bleſſing, xxvi. 13. And here, in the enumeration of God's wonderful works; and afterward, in the commendation of his love, Deut. vii. 8. in his dehortation from ingratitude, viii. 14 in his inſtitution of the paſſover, xvi. 6. in the ſpeech which the reproving angel made to them, Judges ii. 1. in the hope he gave them of victory over the Midianites, vi. 9. in his anſwer to their petition for a king, 1 Sam. x. 18. and on a great many other occaſions: For this was, velut fundamentum & initium reipublicæ, &c. as another learned German ſpeaks, (Gierus on Dan. ix. 15.) the foundation as we call it, and the beginning ning of their commonwealth founded by God; which comprehended in it abundance of miracles, far exceeding all the power of nature.

. Moses explains, promulgates the Law.

Ver. 40. Thou ſhalt therefore keep his ſtatutes and his commandments which I commanded thee this day, &c.] That is, they were to worſhip and obey God, as the only way to make them and their poſterity live happily in the land, which God was preparing to give them.

——— That it may be well with thee, and with thy children after thee, and that thou mayeſt prolong thy days upon the earth, &c.] Though Moſes mentions their long life upon earth, yet the better ſort of Jews did not ſet up their reſt here; but from this word prolong, extended their hope as far as the other world. For thus Maimonides declares, (in his preface to Pereck Chelek,) they were taught by tradition to expound theſe words, that it may be well with thee in the world, which is all good; and mayeſt prolong thy days in the world, which is all long, that is, never ends.

Ver. 41. Then Moſes ſevered three cities.] Moſes did not deliver all that is contained in this book, in one continued ſpeech; but at ſeveral times, as appears even by the beginning of the next chapter; where it is ſaid, He called all Iſrael, and ſaid unto them, &c. which ſuppoſes, that after this preface in theſe four chapters, he diſmiſſed them, to conſider what he had ſaid; and aſſembled the people again, at ſome diſtance of time, to remind them of the laws, which he ſo earneſtly preſſed them to obſerve. But between theſe two times, after he had ſpoken all that is contained in theſe four chapters, and before he rehearſed the decalogue, he put in execution the command of God lately given, to ſet apart three cities of refuge on this ſide Jordan; which he here relates in the order we ſuppoſe it to have been accompliſhed.

CHAP. V.

1 The covenant in Horeb. 6 The ten commandments. 22 At the peoples requeſt Moſes receiveth the law from God.

AND Moſes called all Iſrael, and ſaid, unto them, Hear, O Iſrael, the ſtatutes and judgments which I ſpeak in your ears this day, that ye may learn them, and keep and do them.

2 The LORD our God made a covenant with us in Horeb.

3 The LORD made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day.

4 The LORD talked with you face to face in the mount, out of the midſt of the fire,

5 (I ſtood between the LORD and you at that time, to ſhew you the word of the LORD: for ye were afraid by reaſon of the fire, and went not up into the mount) ſaying,

6 ¶ I am the LORD thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage.

7 Thou ſhalt have none other gods before me.

8 Thou ſhalt not make thee any graven image, or any likeneſs of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the waters beneath the earth.

9 Thou ſhalt not bow down thy ſelf unto them, nor ſerve them: for I the LORD thy God am a jealous God, viſiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me,

10 And ſhewing mercy unto thouſands, of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

11 Thou ſhalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain: for the LORD will not hold him guiltleſs that taketh his name in vain.

12 Keep the ſabbath-day to ſanctify it, as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee.

13 Six days ſhalt thou labour, and do all thy work:

14 But the ſeventh day is the ſabbath of the LORD thy God: in it thou ſhalt not do any work, thou, nor thy ſon, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-ſervant, nor thy maid-ſervant, nor thine ox, nor thine aſs, nor any of that cattle, nor thy ſtranger that is within thy gates; that thy man-ſervant and thy maid-ſervant may reſt as well as thou.

15 And remember that thou waſt a ſervant in the land of Egypt, and that the LORD thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand, and by a ſtretched out arm: therefore the LORD thy God commanded thee to keep the ſabbath-day.

16 ¶ Honour thy father and thy mother, as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee: that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee, in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

17 Thou ſhalt not kill.

18 Neither ſhalt thou commit adultery.

19 Neither ſhalt thou ſteal.

20 Neither ſhalt thou bear falſe witneſs againſt thy neighbour.

21 Neither ſhalt thou deſire thy neighbours wife, neither ſhalt thou covet thy neighbours houſe, his field, or his man-ſervant, or his maid-ſervant, his ox, or his aſs, or any thing that is thy neighbours.

22 ¶ Theſe words the LORD ſpake unto all your aſſembly in the mount out of the midſt of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkneſs, with a great voice, and he added no more; and he wrote them in two tables of ſtone, and delivered them unto me.

23 And it came to paſs when ye heard the voice out of the midſt of the darkneſs (for the mountain did burn with fire) that ye came near unto me, even all the heads of your tribes, and your elders.

24 And ye ſaid, Behold, the LORD our God hath ſhewed us his glory, and his greatneſs and we have heard his voice out of the midſt of the fire: we have ſeen this day that God doth talk with man, and he liveth.

25 Now therefore why ſhould we die? for this great fire will conſume us. If we hear the voice of the LORD our God any more, then we ſhall die.

26 For who is there of all fleſh that hath heard the voice of the living God, ſpeaking out of the midſt of the fire (as we have) and lived?

27 Go thou near, and hear all that the LORD our God ſhall ſay; and ſpeak thou unto us all that the LORD our God ſhall ſpeak unto thee, and we will hear it, and do it.

28 And the LORD heard the voice of your words, when ye ſpake unto me; and the LORD ſaid unto me, I have heard the voice of the words of this people, which they have ſpoken unto thee: they have well ſaid all that they have ſpoken.

29 O that there were ſuch an heart in them that they would fear me, and keep all my commandments always, that it might be well with them, and with their children for ever!

30 Go ſay to them, Get you into your tents again.

31 But as for thee, ſtand thou here by me, and I will ſpeak unto thee all the commandments, and the ſtatutes, and the judgments which thou ſhalt teach them, that they may do them in the land which I give them to poſſeſs it.

32 Ye ſhall obſerve to do therefore as the LORD your God hath commanded you: you ſhall not turn aſide to the right hand or to the left.

33 You ſhall walk in all the ways which the LORD your God hath commanded you, that ye may live, and that it may be well with you, and that ye may prolong your days in the land which ye ſhall poſſeſs.

Ver. 1. And Moſes called all Iſrael, and ſaid unto them.] That is, ſummoned all the elders, and heads of their tribes, who were to communicate what he ſaid to the reſt. Thus it is commonly expounded. But that which he ſaith, chap. xxix. 10, 11. ſeems to direct us to another interpretation; that he himſelf went from tribe to tribe, and repeated theſe ten words, as they are called, placing himſelf in ſeveral parts of their camp, that every one might hear what he ſaid. And this was ſome time after he had, in like manner, exhorted them to obedience in the foregoing preface. See chap. iv. 41.

—— Hear, O Iſrael, the ſtatutes and judgments, which I ſpeak in your ears this day] Be attentive to what I now ſay.

—— That ye may learn them, and keep and do them.] That ye may not be ignorant of ſuch important truths, nor negligent in the practice of them; which is the end of knowledge.

Ver. 2. The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb.] See Exod. xxiv. 3, 5, 6, 7, 8.

Ver. 3. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers.] viz. Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; with whom he covenanted to give their poſterity the land of Canaan; but did not make to them this diſcovery of his will, which was the matter of the covenant at Horeb.

—— But with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day.] A great part of thoſe, who were then at Horeb, were now alive, namely, all under twenty years of age. And if they had been all dead, Moſes might have ſaid, he made it with us; becauſe they were ſtill the ſame people, tho' the particular perſons were dead, with whom the covenant was made, not only for themſelves, but for their poſterity.

Ver. 4. The Lord talked with you face to face in the mount.] Openly, clearly, and diſtinctly; or by himſelf, without the mediation of Moſes; but in no viſible ſhape; for that is expreſly denied in the foregoing chapter, ver. 12, 15.

Ver. 5. I ſtood between the Lord and you at that time, to ſhew you the word of the Lord.] As a mediator, whom God employed to prepare them to meet him, Exod. xix. 10, 11, &c. and to preſcribe them the bounds, at what diſtance they ſhould keep, ver. 12. and to bring them forth to meet with him, ver. 17. and to charge them to keep within their bounds, ver. 21. and on the other ſide to repreſent their deſires to God, after he had ſpoken unto them, Exod. xx. 19. ſo that he was truly a Mediator between God and them; and ſtood alſo in a middle place, at the foot of the mount, while they ſtood farther off.

Ver. 6. I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, &c.] This preface to the Ten Commandments, with the ſucceeding precepts therein contained, have already been ſufficiently explained in our annotations on the twentieth chapter of Exodus, to which we therefore refer our readers, and ſhall only confine ourſelves at preſent to ſuch obſervations as relate to any additional directions given to the Iſraelites by their great legiſlator.

Ver. 15. And remember that thou waſt a ſervant in the land of Egypt; and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence, &c.— therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the ſabbath day.] This is a new ground for the obſervation of the Sabbath; becauſe God had given them reſt from their hard labour in Egypt. Which obliged them to keep that ſeventh day, which God appointed at the giving of manna, being the day on which he overthrew Pharaoh in the Red Sea, as the memory of the creation of the world obliged them to keep one day in ſeven.

Ver. 16. Honour thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee; that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee, &c.] Theſe laſt words are added to what God ſpake, Exod. xx. 12. as an explication of the foregoing. Whereby they are excited to obedience, by the promiſe not only of a long, but likewiſe of a happy life. We ſay obedience; for that's included in honour, as the Apoſtle explains it, Coloſſ. iii. 20. Children obey your parents in all things; that is, where God hath not commanded the contrary, and where it is not inconſiſtent with the publick good, which is always to be preferred, even before the duty that is owing to natural parents. Inſomuch, that common reaſon taught the heathens, that for the good of the ſociety, the ſon is to lay aſide the reverence he ſhould pay to his father, and the father to pay it unto the ſon, that is, when he is in publick office. Thus the famous Fabius Cunctator, commended mended his ſon, for making him light off from his horſe, when he met him in his conſulſhip, as Plutarch tells us.

Ver. 22. Theſe words the Lord ſpake unto all your aſſembly in the mount; out of the midſt of the fire, of the clouds, and of the thick darkneſs,] Exod. xix. 16. xx. 18. This confutes the fooliſh fancy of the Jewiſh doctors, that the people heard only the firſt words of God, I am the Lord, &c. thou ſhalt have no other Gods but me, that is, they heard him declare his exiſtence, and his unity; but all the reſt was reported to them by Moſes. Nothing can be more contrary to what Moſes here declares, namely, that all theſe words, (that is, the ten words before mentioned) were ſpoken to their whole aſſembly. See More Nevochim, p. ii. cap. 33.

——— With a great voice.] That is, ſo loud, that it might be heard by the whole camp.

——— And he added no more.] All the reſt of the commandments, which follow in Exod. xxi, xxii. were delivered to Moſes alone, and by him to the people, according to their own deſire, Exod. xx. 19. xxi. 1. xxiv. 3.

Ver. 28. And the Lord heard the voice of your words when ye ſpake unto me, and the Lord ſaid unto me, I have heard the voice of the words of this people, &c.] As Moſes here reports more largely what they ſaid to him, than he did in Exodus, ſo likewiſe he gives a larger account of what God commanded him to declare to them, in anſwer to their deſire.

——— They have well ſaid, all that they have ſpoken.] It very much becomes them, out of a ſenſe of their meanneſs and unworthineſs, and of the inconceivable majeſty of God, to deſire he would ſpeak to them by a mediator.

Ver. 29. O that there were ſuch an heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep all my commandments always.] The words are wonderfully emphatical in the Hebrew, Who will give, that there may be ſuch an heart in them! Which is an expreſſion of the moſt earneſt deſire; but it ſignifies, at the ſame time, that if what he had done for them would not move them to fear and obey him, it was impoſſible to perſwade them to it. Not but that he could miraculouſly work upon them, and change their hearts, ſaith Maimonides, if he pleaſed, as he miraculouſly changed the nature of other things; but if God had intended to deal with them after ſuch a manner, there would have been no need to have ſent a prophet among them, or to publiſh laws full of precepts and promiſes, rewards and puniſhments; by which, ſaith he, God wrought upon their hearts, and not by his abſolute omnipotence. More Nevochim, P. iii. cap. 32.

——— That it might be well with them, and with their children for ever.] For God deſired nothing more than this, which they themſelves promiſed, ver. 27. and this inclined him to vouchſafe ſuch a ſpecial privilege to them, as firſt to ſpeak to them himſelf, and, at their deſire, conſent to ſpeak to them by his prophet.

Ver. 30. Go, ſay to them, Get ye into your tents again.] All this ſhews, that Moſes was a mediator between God and them, and between them and God.

Ver. 31. But as for thee, ſtand thou here by me.] God invites Moſes unto the neareſt approaches to his Majeſty; and the moſt familiar converſe with him, Exod. xx. 21. xxiv. 2, 18. for this was the higheſt degree of prophecy, as Maimonides calls it, in his More Nevochim, P. iii. c. 51. And in his preface to that book, he declares, this is the greateſt degree of illumination of a prophet, concerning whom it is ſaid, ſtand thou here with me: And again, the skin of his face ſhone; which he ſuppoſes ſignified, that his mind was always full of light; whereas other prophets were ſome time in darkneſs, and ſaw nothing.

Ver. 33. Ye ſhall walk in all the ways which the Lord your God hath commanded you, that ye may live, and that it may be well with you, and that ye may prolong your days in the land which ye ſhall poſſeſs.] Univerſal obedience, he would have them ſenſible, was the only way to make 'em live happy and long in that good land, which he was about to beſtow upon them. This he inculcates again in the next chapter, ver. 3. for all mankind thought long life a very great bleſſing, as appears by Callimachus's hymn to Diana, ver. 132, 133. when he promiſes to thoſe whom ſhe favours, that is, they ſhall not come into their grave, till they have attained a great age.

——— ——— δόξ' ἐπὶ σῆμα
Ἔρχευ, ὡς μή σε πολιχρονίου τι φέρωσιν.

CHAP. VI.

1 The end of the law is obedience. 3 An exhortation thereto.

NOW theſe are the commandments, the ſtatutes, and the judgments, which the LORD your God commanded to teach you, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go to poſſeſs it:

2 That thou mighteſt fear the LORD thy God, to keep all his ſtatutes, and his commandments which I command thee: thou, and thy ſon, and thy ſons ſon, all the days of thy life, and that thy days may be prolonged.

3 ¶ Hear therefore, O Iſrael, and obſerve to do it, that it may be well with thee, and that ye may increaſe mightily, as the LORD God of thy fathers hath promiſed thee, in the land that floweth with milk and honey.

4 Hear, O Iſrael, the LORD our God is one LORD.

5 And thou ſhalt love the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy might.

6 And theſe words which I command thee this day, ſhall be in thine heart.

7 And thou ſhalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and ſhalt talk of them when thou ſitteſt in thine houſe, and when thou walkeſt by the way, and when thou lieſt down, and when thou riſeſt up.

8 And thou ſhalt bind them for a ſign upon thine hand, and they ſhall be as frontlets between thine eyes.

9 And thou ſhalt write them upon the poſts of thy houſe, and on thy gates.

10 And it ſhall be when the LORD thy God ſhall have brought thee into the land which he ſware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Iſaac, and to Jacob, to give thee, great and goodly cities which thou buildedſt not.

11 And houſes full of all good things which thou filledſt not, and wells digged which thou diggedſt not, vineyards, and olive trees which thou plantedſt not, when thou ſhalt have eaten and be full;

12 Then beware leſt thou forget the LORD which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage.

13 Thou

13 Thou ſhalt fear the LORD thy God, and ſerve him, and ſhalt ſware by his name.

14 Ye ſhall not go after other gods, of the gods of the people which are round about you:

15 (For the LORD thy God is a jealous God among you) leſt the anger of the LORD thy God be kindled againſt thee, and deſtroy thee from off the face of the earth.

16 ¶ Ye ſhall not tempt the LORD your God, as ye tempted him in Maſſah.

17 You ſhall diligently keep the commandments of the LORD your God, and his teſtimonies, and his ſtatutes which he hath commanded thee.

18 And thou ſhalt do that which is right and good in the ſight of the LORD: that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayſt go in and poſſeſs the good land which the LORD ſware unto thy fathers;

19 To caſt out all thine enemies from before thee, as the LORD hath ſpoken.

20 And when thy ſon asketh thee in time to come, ſaying, What mean the teſtimonies, and the ſtatutes, and the judgments which the LORD our God hath commanded you?

21 Then thou ſhalt ſay unto thy ſon, we were Pharaohs bond-men in Egypt, and the LORD brought us out of Egypt with a mighty hand.

22 And the LORD ſhewed ſigns and wonders, great and ſore, upon Egypt, upon Pharaoh, and upon all his houſhold, before our eyes:

23 And he brought us out from thence, that he might bring us in, to give us the land which he ſware unto our fathers.

24 And the LORD commanded us to do all theſe ſtatutes, to fear the LORD our God, for our good always, that he might preſerve us alive, as it is at this day.

25 And it ſhall be our righteouſneſs, if we obſerve to do all theſe commandments before the LORD our God, as he hath commanded us.

Ver. 1. Now theſe are the commandments, the ſtatutes, and the judgments.] Which God promiſed to deliver to Moſes, in the foregoing chapter, ver. 31. and commandments are thought commonly to relate to the moral laws; ſtatutes to rites and ceremonies, which have no natural reaſon for them; and judgments, to civil government.

——— Which the Lord your God commanded to teach you, that ye may do them in the land whither ye go to poſſeſs it.] This, we ſuppoſe, was ſpoken by Moſes to them, a little time after he had delivered what is contained in the foregoing chapter; being a preface to the reſt of the laws which he received from God in mount Sinai, as they deſired.

Ver. 4. Hear, O Iſrael.] He repeats it again, becauſe what he is going to ſay is of the higheſt importance.

——— The Lord our God is one Lord] Being to remind them of all the laws which God delivered to them by him, and to endeavour to create an holy fear of him in their minds, as the principle of obedience, he moſt earneſtly preſſes upon them, before he proceeds further, the firſt of the ten commandments, which is, that there is but one God, who alone is to be worſhipped; and that he is their God: whoſe laws therefore could not be controuled by the authority of any pretended god.

Many of the ancient fathers, particularly Theodoret, and Greg. Nyſſen, think there is a plain intimation of the bleſſed Trinity in theſe words, the Lord our God is one Lord. And ſome of the Jews themſelves have thought, there was ſomething extraordinary in it, that the name of God ſhould be thrice mentioned, as it is in this ſentence; which ſignifies three midyth, or properties, they confeſs; which they ſometimes call, three faces, or emanations, or ſanctifications, or numerations; tho' they will not call them three perſons, as Joſeph de Voyſin obſerves, in his book againſt an anonymous anti-trinitarian, p. 58, 63, 71, 72. And the Cabbaliſts ſay as much, who aſſerting ten ſephiroth in God, which they take to be ſomething different from the eſſence of God, and yet not creatures, but emanations from it, as Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael explains their words, they make the three firſt of them to be more than the other ſeven, and call them primordial. The firſt of which they call, the wonderful intelligence, and the firſt intellectual light, (as St. James calls God, the father of lights) and the firſt glory. The ſecond they call, among other names, the illuminating intelligence, (juſt as St. John ſaith, The Eternal Word enlightens every one that cometh into the world) and the ſecond glory. And the third they call, the ſanctified intelligence; ſo the Hebrew word, which is in the conjugation pual, muſt be tranſlated, not ſanctifying, as Rittangelius takes it; or they may mean no more than, the holy intelligence; which is the very ſame with the Holy Spirit. All this we find in the book of Jetzira, which they fancy was compiled by Abraham. From whence we cannot but learn, that they had an obſcure notion of the bleſſed Trinity; and that the apoſtles uſed no other language about it, than what was among the Jews. The beſt of whom are ſo ſenſible of ſuch things, as we have mentioned, that they think we Chriſtians are not idolaters, tho' we believe three perſons in the Godhead, (which they fancy inclines to polytheiſm,) becauſe we believe the unity of God; and therefore may be ſaved as well as they.

Ver. 5. And thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy might.] For there being no other God but him alone, none elſe could have any right to their love and ſervice, but he only whoſe nature is ſo excellent, that it requires the utmoſt we can do, to teſtify our regard to him. This one of the Jewiſh writers hath admirably expreſſed in this manner; "Whoſoever ſerves God out of love, gives himſelf to "the ſtudy of his laws, and good works, &c. which ex- "cite him to love God with the moſt flagrant affection; "not for the ſake of any thing in this world, nor for the "fear of any evil; but he ſerves God truly, becauſe he is "truth, and the chiefeſt good, that he may be admitted "to communion with him. And a man ought to love him "with the moſt vehement and intenſe affection; ſo as to "languiſh with love to him, juſt as a man who is in love "with one he deſires to eſpouſe: Whereſoever he is, at "home or abroad, when he eats and drinks, when he lies "down, and riſes up, he thinks of her. To which Solo- "mon compares the love of the ſpouſe, who ſaith, I am "ſick of love," Cant. ii. 5. To this purpoſe, Baal-Chaſidim, mentioned by Wagenſeil, upon Sota, cap. 5. p. 611.

By the heart, may be here meant the will, which is the original of all that a man doth, (as the Jews ſpeak) whether good or evil: By the ſoul, the affections, to which St. Mark adds the mind, that is, the underſtanding, or rational faculty; and by might or ſtrength, is meant the power of the body for action; which four altogether make up the whole man. And the word all added to each of theſe, theſe, doth not exclude all other things from any ſhare in our thoughts and affections, but only from an equal intereſt in them. The love of God ought to be ſuperiour, and direct all our other motions to ſerve him, as Maimonides expreſſes it, in his preface to Pirke Avoth.

Ver. 7. And thou ſhalt teach them diligently unto thy children.] In the Hebrew the words are, as our margin obſerves, ſhall whet or ſharpen them; ſignifying, as ſome think, that they ſhould endeavour to make them pierce their hearts. But De Dieu rather thinks, it ſignifies beat them into their minds, as things are hammer'd on an anvil with repeated ſtrokes. Which the famous Bochart doth not ſo well approve; but obſerves, that the word ſanan, which in Arabic ſignifies in the firſt place, to ſharpen or whet, ſignifies alſo exquiſite docere, &c. to teach exquiſitely; ſo that he who is taught be render'd thereby more acute: which is the intention he thinks of the Hebrew word here, Lib. ii. Canaan, cap. 17. However it be expounded, it imports the diligence they ſhould uſe, as we tranſlate it, to inſtill this principle into their childrens minds, that there is but one God; and to work in them a fear and love of his Divine Majeſty. To that which goes before, ver. 4, 5, 6. theſe words have a particular reſpect. By which it appears, that Moſes thought his law was ſo plain, that every father might be able to inſtruct his ſons in it, and every mother her daughters.

——— And ſhalt talk of them when thou ſitteſt in thine houſe, &c.] As much as to ſay, they ſhould take all occaſions to inculcate this great principle, at home and abroad, night and day; never ceaſing their moſt earneſt endeavours, to perſuade their children, not to worſhip any other God; nor to fail to worſhip the Lord their God with ſincere affection.

The Jews have derived, from hence, one of their affirmative precepts, that twice a day, at leaſt, they ſhould recite theſe words, Hear, O Iſrael, &c. which is a very dilute ſenſe of this precept: Wherein Moſes requires, not merely their ſaying theſe words, in which there might be a great deal of ſuperſtition, but taking all opportunities to imprint them upon the minds and hearts of their children.

Ver. 8. And thou ſhalt bind them for a ſign upon thine hand, and they ſhall be as frontlets between thine eyes] Juſt thus he commands them to preſerve the memory of their deliverance out of the land of Egypt, almoſt in the ſame words. See Exod. xiii. 9, 16. And it appears to be a proverbial ſpeech from Iſaiah, xlix. 16. There are ſome learned men, indeed, who take theſe words literally, notwithſtanding St. Jerom hath delivered his opinion to the contrary, that there is no command for Phylacteries, which are grounded upon theſe words; particularly Joſ. Scaliger, in his Elench. Trihæreſ. Nic. Serarii, cap. 7, 8. where he thinks God gave this command to the Iſraelites, to prevent their following the rites of other nations, who armed themſelves againſt dangers with ſuperſtitious amulets in their foreheads; which the Egyptians, he thinks, called Totaphot. But ſince neither here, nor in Exodus, there are any ſuch words, as thou ſhalt make thee frontlets, but Moſes only declares the precepts he is mentioning, ſhall be for frontlets between their eyes; we take it not to be meant literally; tho' it's likely they intended well who ſo underſtood it: for our bleſſed Saviour doth not ſeem to reprove the Jews for wearing phylacteries, but for their oſtentation, in making them broader than ordinary.

Ver. 9. And thou ſhalt write them upon the poſts of thy houſe, and on thy gates.] This looks more like a literal command than the former; and it might have been very uſeful to them, when they went in and out of their houſes to read theſe words, Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord thy God is one Lord, &c. But the Jews are too ſcrupulous about the words they ſhould write, and upon what part of the poſts and gates they were to inſcribe them, &c. as Mr. Selden obſerves, lib. iii. de Synedr. cap. 13. n. 2. Though after all it may be, this was not intended, but only that they ſhould never let this principle ſlip out of their mind, but think of it when they went out and came in, as well as when they were in their houſes, and by the way; when they roſe up, and when they lay down. Yet it muſt be obſerved, that other nations uſed to write their laws upon their gates, as Huetius obſerves in his Demonſtratio Evangelica, p. 58. which it is likely they did in imitation of the Jews, who, to this day, have written in a parchment theſe words from ver. 4. to the end of this verſe, (with that other paſſage, chap. xi. from ver. 13. to ver. 20.) which they roll up, and writing on it the name of Shaddai, put it into a piece of cane, or other hollow wood, and faſten it to the doors of their houſes, and of each particular room in them; and as often as they go in and out, they make it a part of their devotion to touch this parchment, and kiſs it; as Leo Modena tells us, in his hiſtory of the Jews, P. 1. cap. 2.

Ver. 13. Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, and ſerve him.] Preſerve an awful ſenſe of him in thy mind, and be conſtant in his worſhip and ſervice; which was never more neceſſary, than when they enjoyed ſo many bleſſings from him.

——— And ſhalt ſware by his name.] When there was any need for it; as in making covenants with their neighbours, or in bearing their teſtimony before a judge, they were to ſware only by the name of God, not by any idol, nor by the heaven, or the earth, or any thing therein; for they can bear witneſs to nothing. See Joſh. xxiii. 7, 8. Nor was it lawful, as Maimonides obſerves, in his treatiſe called Shebuoth, to join any other thing to the name of God. But it was all one, whether a man ſware by the proper name of God, or by any of his attributes, as by the name of him who is merciful, or gracious, or long-ſuffering, &c. for this is a perfect oath.

Ver. 20. And when thy ſon asketh thee in time to come, ſaying, what mean the teſtimonies, and the ſtatutes, and the judgments, which the Lord our God hath commanded you?] Abarbinel thinks that their poſterity, in future ages, might obſerve three ſorts of precepts in the law, viz. teſtimonies which in the Hebrew are called Eduth, and where ſuch conſtitutions as bear witneſs to ſome great thing God had done for them, and preſerve the memory thereof; ſuch was the paſſover, and then, ſecondly, there were chukkim, [ſtatutes] which are ſuch precepts, the reaſon of which is unknown. And thirdly, Miſchpatim [judgments] which are ſuch, whoſe reaſon is evident, Now they might deſire to know the reaſon why ſuch ſeveral laws were given; and he thinks Moſes teaches them to give a diſtinct anſwer to their children with reſpect to each of theſe.

Ver. 21. Then thou ſhalt ſay unto thy ſon, we were Pharaoh's bondmen in Egypt, and the Lord brought us out of Egypt with a mighty hand.] As if he had ſaid, tell them the reaſon why God gave us the firſt ſort of precepts, particularly that about the paſſover, was, becauſe we were ſlaves, and God brought us to a ſtate of liberty; which he would have always thankfully remember'd, by the obſervation of that feaſt which teſtified what he wrought for us by his power alone. The ſame may be ſaid of the other two great feſtivals, which were to preſerve the memory of ſuch like benefits.

Ver. 22. And the Lord ſhewed ſigns and wonders great and ſore upon Egypt, upon Pharaoh, and upon all his houſhold, &c.] Particularly ſlew all the firſt-born, and ſpared thoſe of the Iſraelites: the memory of which he ordered to be preſerved, by giving their firſt-born nnto him, Exod. xiii.

Ver. 23. And he brought us out from thence, that he might bring us in, to give us the land which he ſware to our forefathers. This is the reaſon Abarbinel fancies of giving them the judgments before mentioned: God brought us out, ſaith he, to place us in this good land, and ſettle us here under a government of our own. Now civil ſociety cannot be preſerved, without juſt judgment: and therefore, that we might live in good order, God gave us theſe political laws.

Ver. 24. And the Lord commanded us to do all theſe ſtatutes, to fear the Lord our God.] As for the third ſort, which are ſtatutes, give your children this anſwer: That tho' we do not know the reaſon of them, yet the benefit of them is manifeſt; for they lead us to the fear of God. And nothing is ſo much for our good as that, both for the eternal welfare of our ſouls, and likewiſe for the long life of our bodies. So he interprets the laſt words of this verſe; and ſo doth Maimonides.

——— For our good always, that he may preſerve us alive, as it is at this day.] The firſt words in the Hebrew are, that it may be well with us all our days; or more literally, for good to us all our days; that is, ſay our Rabbins, (they are the words of Maimonides, P. iii. More Nevochim, cap. 27.) "That it may be well with us in "that world which is wholly good; and our days may "be prolonged in that world which is wholly long"; or, in a word, that thou mayeſt come into the world which is good and long; which is a perpetual ſubſiſtence. As for the laſt words, they belong, he thinks, to their corporal ſubſiſtence here, which endures but for a time; and therefore he ſaith, as at this day; to ſhew he ſpeaks of the preſent world, wherein they ſhould live happily by obſerving his laws.

Ver. 25. And it ſhall be our righteouſneſs, if we obſerve to do all theſe commandments.] Their children might ſay, if there be ſuch benefits in obſerving the ſtatutes, which lead to the fear of God, and to happineſs hereafter, what need we trouble our ſelves about the other two? To which Abarbinel imagines, they are taught to give this anſwer: "It is our righteouſneſs, if we obſerve to do all theſe "commandments", that is, we cannot be righteous before God, if they have not reſpect to all his precepts, whether, teſtimonies, ſtatutes, or judgments, which are all comprehended in this word Mitzvoth, or commandments. This is ſomething nice and curious, but there is a great deal of truth in it.

The word Righteouſneſs alſo, it muſt be acknowledged, often comprehends mercy in it: And thus the LXX, and the Vulgar Latin, here underſtand it. And to take in this ſenſe, theſe words may be thus expounded: If we obſerve to do all theſe commandments, "God will account "us a righteous people, and be kind to us."

CHAP. VII.

1 All communion with the nations is forbidden, 4 For fear of idolatry, 6 For the holineſs of the people, 9 For the nature of God in his mercy and juſtice, 17 For the aſſuredneſs of victory which God will give over them.

WHEN the LORD thy God ſhall bring thee into the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it, and hath caſt out many nations before thee, the Hittites, and the Girgaſhites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebuſites, ſeven nations greater and mightier than thou;

2 And when the LORD thy God ſhall deliver them before thee: thou ſhalt ſmite them, and utterly deſtroy them, thou ſhalt make no covenant with them, nor ſhew mercy unto them:

3 Neither ſhalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou ſhalt not give unto his ſon, nor his daughter ſhalt thou take unto thy ſon.

4 For they will turn away thy ſon from following me, that they may ſerve other gods: ſo will the anger of the LORD be kindled againſt you, and deſtroy thee ſuddenly.

5 But thus ſhall ye deal with them; ye ſhall deſtroy their altars, and break down their images, and cut down their groves, and burn their graven images with fire.

6 For thou art a holy people unto the LORD thy God the LORD thy God hath choſen thee to be a ſpecial people unto himſelf above all people that are upon the face of the earth.

7 The LORD did not ſet his love upon you, nor chooſe you, becauſe ye were more in number than any people (for ye were the feweſt of all people.)

8 But becauſe the LORD loved you, and becauſe he would keep the oath which he had ſworn unto your fathers, hath the LORD brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the houſe of bond-men, from the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt.

9 Know therefore that the LORD thy God, he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him, and keep his commandments, to a thouſand generations;

10 And repayeth them that hate him, to their face, to deſtroy them: he will not be ſlack to him that hateth him, he will repay him to his face.

11 Thou ſhalt therefore keep the commandments, and the ſtatutes, and the judgments, which I command thee this day, to do them.

12 ¶ Wherefore it ſhall come to paſs, if ye hearken to theſe judgments, and keep and do them; that the LORD thy God ſhall keep unto thee the covenant and the mercy which he ſware unto thy fathers.

13 And he will love thee, and bleſs thee, and multiply thee: he will alſo bleſs the fruit of thy womb, and the fruit of thy land, thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil, the increaſe of thy kine, and the flocks of thy ſheep, in the land which he ſware unto thy fathers to give thee.

14 Thou ſhalt be bleſſed above all people: there ſhall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle.

15 And the LORD will take away from thee all ſickneſs, and will put none of the evil diſeaſes of Egypt (which thou knoweſt) upon thee; but will lay them upon all them that hate thee.

16 And thou ſhalt conſume all the people which the LORD thy God ſhall deliver thee, thine eye ſhall have no pity upon them: neither ſhalt thou ſerve their gods, for that will be a ſnare unto thee.

17 If thou ſhalt ſay in thine heart, Theſe nations are more than I, how can I diſpoſſeſs them?

18 Thou ſhalt not be afraid of them: but ſhalt well remember what the LORD thy God did unto Pharaoh, and unto all Egypt;

19 The great temptations which thine eyes ſaw, and the ſigns, and the wonders, and the mighty hand, and the ſtretched out arm, whereby the LORD thy God brought thee out: ſo ſhall the LORD thy God do unto all the people of whom thou art afraid.

20 Moreover, the LORD thy God will ſend the hornet among them, until they that are left, and hide themſelves from thee, be deſtroyed.

21 Thou ſhalt not be affrighted at them: for the LORD thy God is among you, a mighty God and terrible.

22 And the LORD thy God will put out thoſe nations before thee, by little and little: thou mayeſt not conſume them at once, leſt the beaſts of the field increaſe upon thee.

23 But the LORD thy God ſhall deliver them unto thee, and ſhall deſtroy them with a mighty deſtruction, until they be deſtroyed.

24 And he ſhall deliver their kings into thine hand, and thou ſhalt deſtroy their name from under heaven: there ſhall no man be able to ſtand before thee, until thou have deſtroyed them.

25 The graven images of their gods ſhall ye burn with fire: thou ſhalt not deſire the ſilver or gold that is on them, nor take it unto thee, leſt thou be ſnared therein: for it is an abomination to the LORD thy God.

26 Neither ſhalt thou bring an abomination into thy houſe, leſt thou be a curſed thing like it: but thou ſhalt utterly deteſt it, and thou ſhalt utterly abhor it, for it is a curſed thing.

Ver. 1. When the Lord thy God ſhall bring thee into the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it, and hath caſt out many nations before thee, the Hittites, and the Girgaſhites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebuſites, &c.] There were ten nations who inhabited this country in the days of Abraham: but three of them were either worn out ſince that time, or being but a ſmall people, were incorporated with the reſt: for the Kenites and the Kenezites (ſee Gen. xv. 19.) are not mentioned after that time; and the Rephaim poſſeſſed but a little part of Canaan, the great body of them being in Baſhan, on this ſide Jordan where Moſes now was; ſee Gen. xv. 19.

——— Seven nations greater and mightier than thou.] The Amorites alone ſeem to have been mightier than the Iſraelites, for there were no leſs than five kings of them, who dwelt in the mountains, Joſh. x. 5, 6. beſide thoſe in other parts; and therefore all the ſeven nations were much ſuperiour to them in ſtrength.

Ver. 2. And when the Lord thy God ſhall deliver them before thee, thou ſhalt ſmite them, and utterly deſtroy them, &c.] Moſes ſtill purſues his intention, to preſerve in them a due care to obſerve the firſt commandment, of which he began to treat in the foregoing chapter; for that is the reaſon why they were to deſtroy theſe ſeven nations, that they might not be in danger of being ſeduced by them to ſerve other gods, ver. 1. But whether they were not firſt to offer them terms of peace, according to the directions of the xxth chapter of this book, is a queſtion which we have endeavoured to reſolve in another place. Certain it is, that if they refuſed their offers, there was the greater reaſon to be ſevere to them: And without offering them any terms, God might in juſtice order the Iſraelites to deſtroy them: for every king hath power in his dominions to cut off evil doers, and therefore much more the King of kings; who might order whom he pleaſed, as other kings do, to be the executioners of his vengeance upon theſe ſeven nations, for their abominable idolatries, beſtial impurities, and horrid cruelties, and other ſuch like ſins, of which they were guilty.

Ver. 6. For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God.] This is an argument frequently uſed, particularly in the book of Leviticus, why they ſhould cleave to God alone, becauſe he had ſeparated them to himſelf by many peculiar laws, with which no other people had been favour'd, Lev. xi. 44, 45. xix. 2. xx. 7, 26.

——— The Lord thy God hath choſen thee to be a ſpecial people unto himſelf, above all people that are upon the face of the earth.] As God had diſtinguiſhed them, from all other people, by peculiar laws, ſo by ſpecial favours and ſingular privileges, which no other nation whatſoever enjoyed; ſee Exod. xix. 56. Some interpret the words [ſpecial people] to ſignify, that they belonged to none but God; and he had no other people but they, whom he had eſpouſed to himſelf. From whence it is, that as the Iſraelites are called God's people, ſo that country is called his land, Pſalm lxxxv. 1. for there he dwelt by his ſpecial preſence; and the king of that country is called God's king, Pſalm xviii. 50. and is ſaid to ſit on God's throne; and to be melech le Jehovah, king for the Lord, 2 Chron. ix. 8. and the kingdom is called the kingdom of the Lord, chap. xiii. 8. and therefore with this argument Aſa addreſſes himſelf to God in the next chapter, chap. xiv. 11. for help in time of diſtreſs, becauſe he was their God, and would not, he hoped, let their enemies prevail againſt himſelf. And accordingly theſe enemies are ſaid to be deſtroyed before the Lord, and before his hoſt, ver. 13. Jehoſhaphat alſo exhorts the judges in that book to great caution, 2 Chron. xix. 6. becauſe they judged not for man, but for the Lord. And the prophet exhorts him in the following chapter, xx. 15. not to be afraid of a mighty hoſt which came againſt him, becauſe the battle is not your's, but God's; the cauſe in which they fought being his, more than their own.

Ver. 7. The Lord did not ſet his love upon you, nor chuſe you, becauſe ye were more in number, &c.] When God declared his love firſt to Abraham, and his poſterity, that patriarch had no child, Gen. xii. 1,2,3. xv. 1,2. and when he had, his family continued ſo ſmall, after there were twelve heirs of the promiſe, that in the ſpace of two hundred years, they were but ſeventy perſons, Gen. xlvi. 27. nor do we read of any great increaſe of them, till after the death of Joſeph, which was near fourſcore years more, Exod. i. 7, 8, &c. So St. Stephen obſerves, Acts vii. 17 "When "the time of the promiſe drew nigh, which God had "ſworn to Abraham, the people grew and multiplied in "Egypt."

Ver. 8. But becauſe the Lord loved you.] Becauſe it was his good pleaſure to ſingle them out from all other people, to receive ſpecial tokens of his favour to them.

——— And becauſe he would keep the oath, which he had ſworn unto your fathers, hath the Lord brought you out with a mighty hand, &c.] Not for any deſert of theirs, but to make good his promiſe, confirmed with an oath, did he work their wonderful deliverance out of Egypt, Gen. xv. 13, 14. xxii. 16, &c.

Ver. 15. And the Lord will take away from thee all ſickneſs.] Or remove from them the common diſeaſes and infirmities of mankind; ſo that they ſhould die in a good old age, (as the Scripture ſpeaks) which tended manifeſtly to their increaſe and multiplication.

——— And will put none of the evil diſeaſes of Egypt (which thou knoweſt) upon thee.] Neither thoſe blotches or boils with which God, by an immediate hand, ſmote them, Exod. ix. 9. xv. 26. Nor any other which they in that country were ſubject unto, peculiarly their ulcers, called, Ægyptiaca, and Siriaca, as Caſaubon obſerves upon Perſius, Sat. 5. p. 467. with which it was cuſtomary for the prieſts of Iſis to threaten and terrify poor people, if they did not worſhip her. In oppoſition to which, our very learned learned Dr. Spencer thinks God made this ſpecial promiſe to his people, to preſerve them from all ſuch evil diſeaſes, if they kept themſelves pure from that Egyptian idolatry. Which is very ingenious, if the worſhip of Iſis was ſo ancient as the days of Moſes. See lib. 1. de legibus Hebr. Ritual. cap. 3.

Ver. 25. The graven images of their gods ſhall ye burn with fire.] This had been required before, ver. 5. but Moſes mentions it again, to let them know, that if they did not perform their part of the covenant, of which this was the chief, God would not deſtroy the inhabitants of Canaan totally, as we find he did not, Judg. ii. 2, 3. and for this very reaſon, as Joſhua had told them, xxiii 12, 13.

——— Thou ſhalt not deſire the ſilver and gold that is upon them.] The Jews are too nice and curious in expounding this only of the gold and ſilver cloaths, or the chains, or other jewels of gold and ſilver, with which their images were decorated; becauſe he ſaith, upon them. There is no reaſon to doubt, but he means, that they ſhould be deſtroyed, if they were entirely made of maſſy gold and ſilver; which they were not to convert to their own uſe: for thus Moſes did with the golden calf, Exod. xxxii. 20. and Jacob in ancienter times buried all the ſtrange gods, as well as the ear-rings that were in their ears, Gen. xxxv. 4. And Joſiah, in future ages, burnt every thing that had been employed to idolatry, even the veſſels which were made for Baal, as well as the images, &c. and ſtamped them to powder, 2 Kings xxiii. 4, 6, 14. 15.

Ver. 26. Neither ſhalt thou bring an abomination into thy houſe.] And therefore he requires them not to bring any of that ſilver and gold which had belonged to thoſe idols (which he calls an abomination) into their houſes, to be employed in any private uſe whatſoever. So the Jews underſtand theſe words, having made from hence one of their affirmative precepts: "That no man ſhould ſeek the leaſt "profit or benefit from any thing appertaining to an idol."

——— Leſt thou be a curſed thing, like it.] Every thing that was idolatrous was a Cherem, devoted to deſtruction, as Moſes declares in the laſt words, It is a curſed thing, which no man might meddle with, xiii. 17. If he did, he became an accurſed thing, that is, was devoted to deſtruction, as the thing it ſelf was. This was apparent afterwards in the example of Achan, Joſh. vii. who took a wedge of gold, and a Babiloniſh garment, for his own private uſe, when it had been made a Cherem by God's expreſs command, Joſh. vi. 17. and therefore was ſtoned to death.

——— And thou ſhalt utterly deteſt it, and thou ſhalt utterly abhor it.] Not only look upon it as uſeleſs and unprofitable, but as hateful and execrable in the higheſt degree; and therefore to be entirely deſtroyed. All this tended to their preſervation in the true religion; which taught them to have every thing contrary to it in the utmoſt deteſtation: Inſomuch (as Maimonides interprets this precept in his More Nevochim, P. iii. cap. 37.) that if any man broke ſuch images, or melted them down, and then ſold the ſilver and gold, he committed an abomination; and the price of this being mingled with his other riches, proved the ruſt of them all. This he thinks is the meaning of bringing an abomination into his houſe. Which was ſo far from procuring a bleſſing, as the heathens imagined, that it brought a curſe upon all that they had.

The Jews were ſo ſenſible of all this, after they had ſeverely ſmarted for their idolatry, that they thought it unlawful to uſe any veſſel that had been employed in ſacrificing to a falſe God; nay, to warm themſelves with the wood of a grove that was cut down; or to ſit under the ſhadow of it, for the ſake of coolneſs, while it was ſtanding; or ſo much as uſe the aſhes of the wood that were leſt after the grove was burnt. See Selden, lib. 2. De Jure Nat & Gent. Juxta Diſcipl. Heb. cap. 7. pag. 215, 216, &c.

Moſes gave ſeveral other directions in this chapter, to the children of Iſrael, but as they are only a recapitulation in a ſummary manner of what he had formerly declared more at large, and which have been already explained in the places where they firſt occurred, we thought it proper to paſs them over in ſilence, ſince we have frequently declared that we have no intention to enlarge this commentary with unneceſſary repetitions.

CHAP. VIII.

An exhortation to obedience in regard of Gods dealing with them.

ALL the commandments which I command thee this day, ſhall ye obſerve to do, that ye may live, and multiply, and go in and poſſeſs the land which the LORD ſware unto your fathers.

2 And thou ſhalt remember all the way which the LORD thy God led thee theſe forty years in the wilderneſs, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldſt keep his commandments or no.

3 And he humbled thee, and ſuffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with manna (which thou kneweſt not, neither did thy fathers know) that he might make thee know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the LORD doth man live.

4 Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot ſwell theſe forty years.

5 Thou ſhalt alſo conſider in thine heart, that as a man chaſtneth his ſon, ſo the LORD thy God chaſtneth thee.

6 Therefore thou ſhalt keep the commandments of the LORD thy God, to walk in his ways, and to fear him.

7 For the LORD thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that ſpring out of valleys and hills.

8 A land of wheat, and barley, and vines, and fig-trees, and pomegranates, a land of oil-olive and honey.

9 A land wherein thou ſhalt eat bread without ſcarceneſs, thou ſhalt not lack any thing in it, a land whoſe ſtones are iron, and out of whoſe hills thou mayſt dig braſs.

10 When thou haſt eaten and art full, then thou ſhalt bleſs the LORD thy God, for the good land which he hath given thee.

11 Beware that thou forget not the LORD thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his ſtatutes, which I command thee this day:

12 Leſt when thou haſt eaten, and art full, and haſt built goodly houſes, and dwelt therein;

13 And when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy ſilver and thy gold is mul-multiplied, and all that thou haſt is multiplied:

14 Then thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the LORD thy God (which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage;

15 Who led thee through that great and terrible wilderneſs, wherein were fiery ſerpents, and ſcorpions, and drought, where there was no water; who brought thee forth water out of the rock of flint;

16 Who fed thee in the wilderneſs with manna, which thy fathers knew not, that he might humble thee, and that he might prove thee, to do thee good at thy latter end.)

17 And thou ſay in thine heart, My power and the might of my hand hath gotten me this wealth.

18 But thou ſhalt remember the LORD thy God: for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth, that he may eſtabliſh his covenant which he ſware unto the fathers, as it is this day.

19 And it ſhall be, if thou do at all forget the LORD thy God, and walk after other gods, and ſerve them, and worſhip them, I teſtify againſt you this day, that ye ſhall ſurely periſh.

20 As the nations which the LORD deſtroyeth before your face, ſo ſhall ye periſh: becauſe ye would not be obedient unto the voice of the LORD your God.

Ver. 2. And thou ſhalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee theſe forty years, &c.] Whereby they were puniſhed ſeverely for the rebellion of their forefathers againſt him; which ſhould be an admonition to them to be more dutiful. Others expound it, of the care of God over them, in providing for them, as well as leading them by a glorious cloud all that time; which agrees well enough with what follows. See chap. ii. 7.

——— To humble thee.] Or to afflict thee with tedious wanderings up and down, backward and forward, without any certain dwelling-place.

——— And prove thee.] To try whether they would be better, by being kept ſo long out of the good land promiſed unto them.

——— To know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldſt keep his commandments, or no.] God knew perfectly how they were diſpoſed toward him; but it was fit, that they ſhould know themſelves better, and poſterity be inſtructed by their behaviour.

Ver. 3. And he humbled thee, and ſuffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with manna.] But it was, that he might have an opportunity to make a bountiful proviſion for ſuch a vaſt multitude of people, as were fed by him every day from heaven, and teach them to depend on his good providence.

——— That he might make thee know, that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, &c.] But by any thing whatſoever, for ſo word often ſignifies, which God ſhall pleaſe to command to give us nouriſhment. This was a wonderful encouragement to obedience, that God would rather work a miracle, than ſuffer them to want neceſſaries; and by a light aerial ſort of bread, give them as great ſtrength and vigour, as the moſt ſolid nouriſhment was wont to afford them. The remembrance of which could not but excite their poſterity to love God, and ſerve him, if they often and ſeriouſly reflected on it.

Ver. 4. Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot ſwell theſe forty years.] Theſe were two other wonderful benefits, which, if well conſidered, could not but incline them to be obedient to him, who multiplied miracles to nouriſh and ſtrengthen their faith and hope in him. The Jews, to increaſe the miracle, ſay, their cloaths enlarged as they grew bigger, from children to men; and ſo did their ſhoes alſo: But there was no need of this; for the cloaths and ſhoes of thoſe men who died, might ſerve their children when they grew up to their ſtature. And it was ſufficiently amazing, without ſuch additions, that their cloaths ſhould not ſo much as decay, nor their feet, by ſuch a length of travel in hot and ſtony places, have the leaſt ſwelling in them, or, as ſome tranſlate it, grow callous. There are thoſe who refer this laſt clauſe not to their feet, but to their ſhoes; according to what we read, xxix. 5.

Ver. 5. Thou ſhalt alſo conſider in thine heart, that as a man chaſteneth his ſon, ſo the Lord thy God chaſteneth thee.] All the afflictions God had ſent upon them, he would have them think, were not for their deſtruction, but amendment, and for correcting what was amiſs in them; and therefore ought to be thankfully acknowledged as well as his benefits.

Ver. 7. For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land, &c.] The Hebrew word tehom, which we tranſlate deep, and, in the plural number, depths, ſignifies, ſometimes, thoſe great caverns of water that are within the ground, which were made by the plentiful rains, which God ſent upon this country, while they were obedient to him: Which rendered it fruitful, (tho' now barren) and abounding alſo with water for their cattle, Pſal. lxxviii. 15. Ezek. xxxi. 4. but it is here commonly interpreted, lakes, or wells of water.

Ver. 8. ——— A land of oil-olive, and honey.] The ſame word debas, which ſignifies honey, ſignifies, alſo, dates; and ſo De Dieu thinks it moſt reaſonable to tranſlate it here, being joined with four other ſorts of fruits: And ſo Kimchi declares, the ancient Jews expounded it in this place; and in 2 Chron. xxxi. 5. where it is ſaid, that "Iſrael brought in abundance the firſt-fruits of corn, "wine, oil, and honey, or dates;" as we tranſlate it in the margin.

Ver. 9. A land wherein thou ſhalt eat bread without ſcarceneſs,——a land whoſe ſtones are iron, and out of whoſe hills thou mayeſt dig braſs.] Where there are uſeful minerals, as plentiful as ſtones are in other places. Theſe are the rather mentioned, becauſe there were no ſuch mines in Egypt, where they had long dwelt, and were ſtored with plenty of other things, Numb. xi. 5.

Ver. 11. Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his ſtatutes, which I command thee this day.] Moſes acquaints them, that God would have their thankſgiving for his benefits leave ſuch a ſenſe of his goodneſs upon their minds, as ſhould make them careful to yield him an entire obedience.

Ver. 12. Leſt when thou haſt eaten, and art full, and haſt built goodly houſes, and dwelt therein.] Feaſted in ſtately habitations, wherein they enjoyed their eaſe.

Ver. 14. Then thine heart be lifted up.] Which is the uſual effect of great riches; as Euripides obſerves in that known ſaying of his, Τέρψιν δὲ τίκτει πλοῦτος; Wealth breeds pride, ſcorn, and contempt of others. This, Moſes Kotzenſis thought ſo great a ſin, that he ranks it among the negative precepts; and pretends he was warned in a dream ſo to do, tho' Maimonides, and others, had omitted it. And when he awaked, he was confirmed in it, by reading a place in the Gemara upon Sota, cap. i. which declares, that wherever we find theſe words in Scripture, "take heed leſt," there is a prohibition; as in ver. 11. and here, to take heed of pride: "For whoſoever is proud, "he ſhall be brought low," as the Gemara there adds: Which are, in a manner, the words of our bleſſed Saviour, Luke xviii. 14.

——And thou forget the Lord thy God.] This is another common effect of large poſſeſſions, which betray the owners of them into indolence and luxury, and ſuch a perfect oblivion of the gracious donor of all bleſſings, that they truſt in uncertain riches, (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks,) and not in the living God, imagining now they can never want; not becauſe God is ſo good, but becauſe they have ſuch a ſtore of good things laid up for many years.

——Which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage.] No wonder if they forgot all his former benefits, when they were unthankful for the preſent.

Ver. 15. Who led thee through that great and terrible wilderneſs, wherein were fiery ſerpents, and ſcorpions, and drought.] The Hebrew word tſimmaon ſignifies a dry place, as we tranſlate it, Pſa. cvii. 33. Iſa. xxxv. 7. And that beſt agrees with what here follows, where there was no water.

Ver. 16. Who fed thee in the wilderneſs with manna, which thy fathers knew not, that he might humble thee.] This word is commonly underſtood of humbling by affliction; which may ſeem not to belong to manna; for that was a ſingular benefit, being an excellent nouriſhment, and of a delicious taſte: But they having nothing elſe to live upon, were ſoon ſatiated with it, (as we find Numb. xi. 6.) and much more did it ſeem an affliction to them, to confine themſelves to one particular food, alone, for forty years: And God intended by it to humble them, at the ſame time that he was much more merciful to them than they had deſerved.

——To do thee good at thy latter end.] That in concluſion his kindneſs to them might be more thankfully received, and more ſafely enjoyed. So Maimonides expounds this paſſage in his More Nevochim, p. 3. c. xxiv. "God was pleaſed to accuſtom them to labour in the "wilderneſs, that he might increaſe their happineſs, when "they came into the land of Canaan. For this is cer"tain, a tranſition from labour to reſt is far ſweeter than "continual reſt. Nor could they ſo eaſily have ſubdued "the land, and overcome the inhabitants of it, unleſs "they had ſuſtained ſome hardſhips in the wilderneſs. "For reſt and idleneſs enervate mens courage; but labour "and hard fare augments it. And this is the good, ſaith "he, which was, in the iſſue, to redound to them by this "wiſe diſpenſation of God's providence."

CHAP. IX.

1 Moſes diſſuadeth them from the opinion of their own righteouſneſs, by rehearſing their ſeveral rebellions.

HEAR, O Iſrael: Thou art to paſs over Jordan this day, to go in to poſſeſs nations greater and mightier than thy ſelf, cities great and fenced up to heaven.

2 A people great and tall, the children of the Anakims, whom thou knoweſt, and of whom thou haſt heard ſay, Who can ſtand before the children of Anak?

3 Underſtand therefore this day, that the LORD thy God is he which goeth over before thee as a conſuming fire: he ſhall deſtroy them, and he ſhall bring them down before thy face: ſo ſhalt thou drive them out, and deſtroy them quickly, as the LORD hath ſaid unto thee.

4 Speak not thou in thine heart, after that the LORD thy God hath caſt them out from before thee, ſaying, For my righteouſneſs the LORD hath brought me in to poſſeſs this land: but for the wickedneſs of theſe nations the LORD doth drive them out from before thee.

5 Not for thy righteouſneſs, or for the uprightneſs of thine heart, doſt thou go to poſſeſs their land: but for the wickedneſs of theſe nations the LORD thy God doth drive them out from before thee, and that he may perform the word which the LORD ſware unto thy fathers, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob.

6 Underſtand therefore, that the LORD thy God giveth thee not this good land to poſſeſs it, for thy righteouſneſs; for thou art a ſtiff-necked people.

7 ¶ Remember, and forget not how thou provokedſt the LORD thy God to wrath in the wilderneſs: from the day that thou didſt depart out of the land of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious againſt the LORD.

8 Alſo in Horeb ye provoked the LORD to wrath, ſo that the LORD was angry with you, to have deſtroyed you.

9 When I was gone up into the mount, to receive the tables of ſtone, even the tables of the covenant which the LORD made with you, then I abode in the mount forty days and forty nights, I neither did eat bread, nor drink water:

10 And the LORD delivered unto me two tables of ſtone written with the finger of God, and on them was written according to all the words which the LORD ſpake with you in the mount, out of the midſt of fire, in the day of the aſſembly.

11 And it came to paſs at the end of forty days and forty nights, that the LORD gave me the two tables of ſtone, even the tables of the covenant.

12 And the LORD ſaid unto me, Ariſe, get thee down quickly from hence, for thy people, which thou haſt brought forth out of Egypt, have corrupted themſelves: they are quickly turned aſide out of the way which I commanded them; they have made them a molten image.

13 Furthermore, the LORD ſpake unto me, ſaying, I have ſeen this people, and behold, it is a ſtiff-necked people.

14 Let me alone, that I may deſtroy them, and blot out their name from under heaven: and I will make of thee a nation mightier and greater than they.

15 So I turned and came down from the mount, and the mount burned with fire: and the two tables of the covenant were in my two hands.

16 And I looked, and behold, ye had ſinned againſt the LORD your God, and had made you a molten calf: ye had turned aſide aſide quickly out of the way which the LORD had commanded you.

17 And I took the two tables, and caſt them out of my two hands, and brake them before your eyes.

18 And I fell down before the LORD, as at the firſt, forty days and forty nights; I did neither eat bread nor drink water, becauſe of all your ſins which ye ſinned, in doing wickedly in the ſight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

19 (For I was afraid of the anger, and hot diſpleaſure wherewith the LORD was wroth againſt you to deſtroy you.) But the LORD hearkned unto me at that time alſo.

20 And the LORD was very angry with Aaron to have deſtroyed him: and I prayed for Aaron alſo the ſame time.

21 And I took your ſin, the calf which ye had made, and burnt it with fire, and ſtamped it, and ground it very ſmall, even until it was as ſmall as duſt: and I caſt the duſt thereof into the brook that deſcended out of the mount.

22 And at Taberah, and at Maſſah, and at Kibroth-hattaavah, ye provoked the LORD to wrath.

23 Likewiſe when the LORD ſent you from Kadeſh-barnea, ſaying, Go up and poſſeſs the land which I have given you; then you rebelled againſt the commandment of the LORD your God, and ye believed him not, nor hearkened to his voice.

24 You have been rebellious againſt the LORD from the day that I knew you.

25 Thus I fell down before the LORD forty days and forty nights, as I fell down at the firſt; becauſe the LORD had ſaid he would deſtroy you.

26 I prayed therefore unto the LORD, and ſaid, O Lord GOD, deſtroy not thy people, and thine inheritance, which thou haſt redeemed through thy greatneſs, which thou haſt brought forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand.

27 Remember thy ſervants Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; look not unto the ſtubbornneſs of this people, nor to their wickedneſs, nor to their ſin:

28 Leſt the land whence thou broughteſt us out, ſay, Becauſe the LORD was not able to bring them into the land which he promiſed them, and becauſe he hated them, he hath brought them out to ſlay them in the wilderneſs.

29 Yet they are thy people, and thine inheritance, which thou broughteſt out by thy mighty power, and by thy ſtretched out arm.

Ver. 1. Hear, O Iſrael.] Moſes now begins a new exhortation to them, at ſome diſtance of time from the former, but ſtill with the ſame view, namely, to repreſent to them the danger of idolatry.

——— Thou art to paſs over Jordan this day.] That is, ſhortly; for it cannot be meant preciſely that day; all theſe precepts and exhortations being delivered in the eleventh month of the laſt year of their travels, and they paſſed not over Jordan, till the firſt month of the next year. Between which and this time Moſes died, and they mourned a whole month for him.

——— To go in to poſſeſs nations.] A country inhabited by nations; for the people themſelves they were to deſtroy.

——— Greater and mightier than thyſelf.] Whom notwithſtanding God would deliver up into their hands.

——— Cities great, and fenced up to heaven.] As the ſpies had repreſented them, ch. i. 28. and they were indeed very ſtrong cities, whoſe walls could not eaſily be ſcaled.

Ver. 2. A people great and tall, the children of the Anakims, whom thou knoweſt.] Who ſeem to have been the chief of thoſe Nephilim, or Rephaim (which we ſometimes tranſlate giants) in thoſe parts, Numb. xiii. 22, 28, 33.

——— Of whom thou haſt heard ſay, Who can ſtand before the children of Anak?] A common proverb in thoſe days; the children of Anak being ſo famous, that the whole nation, as Bochart conjectures, derived its name from them. For Bene-Anak (i. e. children of Anak) or Pheneanak, is eaſily changed into Phœnicia. Theſe Anakims were vanquiſhed by Joſhua, who drove them out of the cities where they dwelt, and made them flee to the Philiſtines, where a remnant of them ſeemed to have liv'd till the days of David. For Goliah, and his brethren Lahmi, Sippai, and Iſhbibanob, 1 Chron. xx. 4, &c. were Anakims; and ſo was that man with ſix toes on each foot, and ſix fingers on each hand, 2 Sam. xxi. 16. for they were all born at Gath, which was one of the cities to which the Anakims fled, Joſh. xi. 22. Some think, that from hence kings, among the Greeks, were called Ἄνακτες, becauſe commonly they choſe thoſe to rule over them, who were perſons of great ſtature, and carried majeſty in their aſpect. But it is not improbable, that ſome of the Anakims fled into Greece, and ſettled there, when they were driven out of Canaan.

Ver. 3. Underſtand therefore this day.] Settle this therefore in your minds, before ye go over Jordan, as an undoubted truth.

——That the Lord thy God is he which goeth over before thee as a conſuming fire: he ſhall deſtroy them, and he ſhall bring them down before thy face.] See Joſh. iii. 10, 11. The Hebrews have a conceit, that the fire which burnt upon the altar appeared in the form of a lion; to ſhew what God would be to their enemies, if the Iſraelites obeyed him; otherwiſe, what he would do to them.

—— So ſhalt thou drive them out, and deſtroy them quickly, as the Lord hath ſaid unto thee.] Not the whole ſeven nations intirely; whom Moſes ſaid God would drive out by little and little, chap. vii. 22. but ſo many, as would leave them in a condition to make a ſettlement for themſelves in Canaan without much difficulty.

Ver. 4. Speak not in thine heart, after that the Lord thy God hath caſt them out from before thee, ſaying, For my righteouſneſs the Lord hath brought me in to poſſeſs this land.] Nothing is more dangerous than pride and ſelf-conceit; and therefore, as Moſes taught them before, ch. viii. 7. to have an humble opinion of their own power, ſo now he inſtructs them not to arrogate any thing to themſelves, on the account of their own righteouſneſs.

Ver. 5. Not for thy righteouſneſs, or for the uprightneſs of thine heart, &c.] It was of great moment, (which makes him repeat it again) that they ſhould underſtand the true cauſes, why God expelled theſe nations, and gave their land to the Iſraelites; which were theſe two: firſt, the abominable wickedneſs of the Canaanites; for which they

deſerved to be eradicated: ſecondly, God's gracious promiſes to the pious anceſtors of the Iſraelites, with whom he made a covenant, and confirmed it with an oath, to plant them there, in the room of the former inhabitants.

Ver. 6. Underſtand therefore that the Lord thy God giveth thee not this good land to poſſeſs it, for thy righteouſneſs.] He repeats it a third time, that, if it were poſſible, he might root out of the Iſraelites the opinion of their own deſerts, before he rooted the Canaanites out of their country.

——For thou art a ſtiff-necked people.] So far from being righteous, that they were very refractory. Of which God often complained, Exod. xxxii. 9. xxxiii. 3, 5. And Moſes acknowledges it in his prayer to God for them, xxxiv. 9.

Ver. 7. Remember, and forget not, how thou provokedſt the Lord thy God to wrath in the wilderneſs.] In order to deſtroy the opinion of their own righteouſneſs, it was neceſſary to repeat ſome of their moſt notorious provocations; which he exhorts them carefully to preſerve in their mind, as a means to keep them humble.

——From the day that thou didſt depart out of the land of Egypt, until ye came to this place, ye have been rebellious againſt the Lord.] This appears, by the many murmurings we read of in the two firſt years after their departure from Egypt; and likewiſe in the laſt, of which only we have a particular account: But their behaviour, all the reſt of the time they ſpent in the wilderneſs, was altogether of the ſame caſt.

Ver. 8. Alſo in Horeb ye provoked the Lord to wrath.] Or rather, even in Horeb, (for there is an emphaſis in this, and Moſes utters it with ſome indignation;) when they had newly received the law, and had a viſible appearance of God in awful glory on mount Sinai, and had entered into covenant with him, they ſo ſhamefully revolted from him, that he ſeemed determined to deſtroy them at that time, Exod. xxxii. 7, 8, &c.

CHAP. X.

1 Gods mercy in reſtoring the two tables, 6 in continuing the prieſthood, 8 in ſeparating the tribe of Levi, 10 in hearkening unto Moſes his ſuit for the people. 12 An exhortation unto obedience.

AT that time the LORD ſaid unto me, Hew thee two tables of ſtone like unto the firſt, and come up unto me into the mount, and make thee an ark of wood.

2 And I will write on the tables the words that were in the firſt tables which thou brakeſt, and thou ſhalt put them in the ark.

3 And I made an ark of ſhittim-wood, and hewed two tables of ſtone like unto the firſt, and went up into the mount, having the two tables in mine hand.

4 And he wrote on the tables, according to the firſt writing, the ten commandments, which the LORD ſpake unto you in the mount, out of the midſt of the fire, in the day of the aſſembly: and the LORD gave them unto me.

5 And I turned my ſelf and came down from the mount, and put the tables in the ark which I had made, and there they be, as the LORD commanded me.

6 ¶ And the children of Iſrael took their journey from Beeroth of the children of Jaakan, to Moſera: there Aaron died, and there he was buried: and Eleazar his ſon miniſtred in the prieſts office in his ſtead.

7 From thence they journied unto Gudgodah: and from Gudgodah to Jotbath, a land of rivers of waters.

8 ¶ At that time the LORD ſeparated the tribe of Levi, to bear the ark of the covenant of the LORD, to ſtand before the LORD to miniſter unto him, and to bleſs in his name, unto this day.

9 Wherefore Levi hath no part nor inheritance with his brethren: the LORD is his inheritance, according as the LORD thy God promiſed him.

10 And I ſtayed in the mount, according to the firſt time, forty days and forty nights, and the LORD hearkened unto me at that time alſo, and the LORD would not deſtroy thee.

11 And the LORD ſaid unto me, Ariſe, take thy journey before the people, that they may go in and poſſeſs the land which I ſware unto their fathers, to give unto them.

12 ¶ And now Iſrael, what doth the LORD thy God require of thee, but to fear the LORD thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to ſerve the LORD thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, 13 To keep the commandments of the LORD, and his ſtatutes which I command thee this day for thy good?

14 Behold, the heaven, and the heaven of heavens is the LORDs thy God, the earth alſo with all that therein is.

15 Only the LORD had a delight in thy fathers to love them, and he choſe their ſeed after them, even you above all people, as it is this day.

16 Circumciſe therefore the foreskin of your heart, and be no more ſtiff-necked.

17 For the LORD your God is God of gods, and Lord of lords, a great God, a mighty and a terrible, which regardeth not perſons, nor taketh reward.

18 He doth execute the judgment of the fatherleſs and widow, and loveth the ſtranger, in giving him food and raiment.

19 Love ye therefore the ſtranger: for ye were ſtrangers in the land of Egypt.

20 Thou ſhalt fear the LORD thy God; him ſhalt thou ſerve, and to him ſhalt thou cleave, and ſwear by his name.

21 He

21 He is thy praiſe, and he is thy God, that hath done for thee theſe great and terrible things which thine eyes have ſeen.

22 Thy fathers went down into Egypt with threeſcore and ten perſons; and now the LORD thy God hath made thee as the ſtars of heaven for multitude.

Ver. 1. At that time the Lord ſaid unto me; Hew thee two tables of ſtone like unto the firſt, and come up unto me into the mount.] After the anger of the Almighty was in ſome meaſure appeaſed, he ordered Moſes to come up to him where he had been before, and bring with him two tables of ſtone like thoſe he had broken, that God might renew his covenant with the Iſraelites.

——— And make thee an ark of wood.] This command was given when Moſes firſt aſcended the mount, Exod. xxv. 10. and perhaps was renewed again now, upon the occaſion of making theſe new tables which were to be depoſited in it.

Ver. 3. And I made an ark of ſhittim wood,] It ſhould ſeem from hence, that Moſes prepared an ark before he formed the tables; that when he brought them down, it might be ready to receive them. And it hath given ſome ground to the Jewiſh doctors, to ſay that there were two arks; one made by Moſes, wherein he placed the tables of ſtone that were broken, and thoſe that were renewed, until the other was made by Bezaleel; for we read expreſly, that Bezaleel made the ark, Exod. xxxvii, 1. And here it is ſaid that Moſes made it. So that they conclude there were two; and this made by Moſes they fancy was the ark that went before them in their marches and battles; which the other never did by God's order, but only when they entered into Canaan, Joſh. iii. for, when of their own ſelves they carried it forth in the days of Eli, God was angry with them, and delivered it into the enemies hand, 1 Sam. iv. 3, 4, 11. But Aben Ezra, Nachmanides, and Abarbinel, have confuted this by ſtrong reaſons to the contrary, as may be ſeen in Buxtorf, Hiſtor. Arcæ, p. 35, 36, &c. And as to this place, they are of opinion that Moſes ſpeaks of the ark made afterward by Bezaleel, which Moſes is ſaid to have made becauſe he commanded him to make it. Juſt as Solomon is ſaid to have built the temple, becauſe he cauſed it to be built; or if it be granted that Moſes made an ark before he went the ſecond time into the mount (which this verſe ſeems to countenance) it will not follow that there were two arks in uſe among the Iſraelites; for this ark now made was of meer wood, not overlaid with gold, and was deſigned only as a cheſt wherein to keep the tables, in a commodious manner, till the ark could be made by Bezaleel, and then the tables were tranſlated into that, and this cheſt of Moſes laid aſide.

Ver. 5. And I turned myſelf and came down from the mount, and put the tables in the ark which I had made, and there they be, as the Lord commanded me.] Though Moſes mentions his making the ark before his hewing the tables, and going up into the mount, ver. 3. Yet theſe words ſeem to determine, that he ſpeaks of the ark made by Bezaleel, according to his directions. For now that they were going over Jordan, the tables were in the ark, which he is ſaid here to have made; which was certainly the ark of the covenant, not that cheſt, which ſome ſuppoſe Moſes to have made to keep the tables in till the other could be fitted for their reception.

Ver. 6. And the children of Iſrael took their journey from Beeroth of the children of Jaakan to Moſera.] Not immediately, but after they had paſſed through ſeveral other places, and continued in them for ſometime; for they went from Bene-Jaakan to Gudgodah, or Hor-hagidgad, and ſo to Jotbath, and the reſt of the manſions mentioned Numb. xxxiii. 32, 33, &c. until they came to mount Hor.

——— There Aaron died, and there he was buried.] At Moſera, or the top of mount Hor; which was another part of the ſame mountain, as Horeb was of Sinai.

——— And Eleazar his ſon miniſtred in the prieſts office in his ſtead.] The greateſt difficulty is to give an account how this comes in here, and what connexion this and the following verſe have with what went before. All the ſolution we can offer is this that Moſes having told them, that he depoſited the tables of the teſtimony or covenant in the ark, as an indication that God was reconciled to them, and that there they ſtill were as the Lord commanded, he puts them out of all doubt of it, by telling them, that though Aaron (who had the ſpecial care of the holy place, and all things in it committed to him) was dead; yet Eleazar his ſon was ſtill alive, who could teſtify thoſe holy things remained, as when Moſes firſt placed them there, he being conſecrated to the prieſts office inſtead of Aaron, and in this very mount, Numb. xx. 25, 26, &c. which is the occaſion of mentioning this ſtation here, when moſt of the reſt are omitted.

Ver. 7. And from thence.] Not from Moſera, but from Bene-Jaakan, as appears from Numb. xxxiii. 32. where a full account of their removals is given, which are but juſt hinted here.

——— They journied to Gudgodah.] Called in the book of Numbers by the name of Hor-hagidgad. And none will think it ſtrange that there ſhould be ſuch variations in the proper names of places and of men, in prophane writers, as well as the ſcriptures, who conſiders how differently the names of places are pronounced now, from what they were in former ages; and how much one nation differs from another, when they ſpeak of them; and what alterations are made, from the firſt founders of nations and cities by thoſe that conquer them, and change all names to their own glory. See how names were changed among the Iſraelites in no long time, Numb. xxvi. 15, 16, 17, 23, 24, 35, 38, 39, &c.

——— And from Gudgodah to Jotbath.] And ſo to the reſt of the places, mentioned Numb. xxxiii. 34, 35, 36. till they came to mount Hor.

——— A land of rivers of waters.] A place where there was plenty of water; which he mentions, we may ſuppoſe, that they might reflect upon their impious diſtruſt of God's providence ſoon after, when they murmured for want of water at Kadeſh, Numb. xx. 3, 4, &c.

Ver. 8. At that time.] Not long after Moſes came down from the mount the ſecond time, of which he had been ſpeaking, ver. 5.

——— The Lord ſeparated the tribe of Levi.] To his own ſpecial ſervice, as we read, Numb. iii. Some think that God renewed his choice of them to the employment here mentioned, after Aaron's death, when he confirmed them in their office. But we read of no ſuch tranſaction; and it cannot be inferred meerly from theſe words, at that time, which may well relate to the time mentioned, ver. 5.

——— To bear the ark of the covenant of the Lord.] Here are three parts of their office mentioned in theſe and the following words. The firſt of which, was to carry the ark; which peculiarly belonged to the Kohathites, Numb. iii. 27, 31. when the camp removed from one place to another; who were good witneſſes that the ſame ark wherein Moſes firſt placed the tables of the covenant, was ſtill remaining among them; for it never moved but by their means.

——— To ſtand before the Lord.] This is a phraſe uſed of ſervants that wait upon their maſters, before whom they are ſaid to ſtand. Thus Gehazi attended the prophet Eliſha, 2 Kings, v. 25. and the prophets themſelves are thus ſaid to ſtand before the Lord, 1 Kings xvii. 1. xviii. 15. Therefore it here ſignifies, that the Levites were ſeparated to be God's miniſters, as it follows.

——— To miniſter unto him.] As aſſiſtance to the prieſts in the tabernacle, Numb. iii. 6. and as a guard to that ſtructure, ver. 7. 8. which was the ſecond part of their office.

——— And to bleſs in his name unto this day.] This was the greateſt function of all, and was peculiar to the prieſts, who were part of the tribe of Levi, but had the ſole privilege among them to bleſs in the name of the Lord, as we read expreſly, Numb. vi. 23, 24. If indeed it could be made out, that by bleſſing in the name of the Lord, is meant only to bleſs the name of the Lord, that was common to all the Levites, who ſang praiſes and gave thanks continually to him in the temple, as we ſuppoſe they did in the tabernacle: But we find no example ample of the uſe of this expreſſion in ſuch a ſenſe; and therefore it muſt be reſtrained to the prieſts, who were ſons of Levi, as well as the reſt, and are ſo called when Moſes mentions this part of their office, Deut. xxi. ver. 5.

Ver. 9. Wherefore Levi hath no part nor inheritance with his brethren.] Becauſe God would have them only attend to his ſervice, and not employ themſelves in other affairs,

Ver. 11. And the Lord ſaid unto me, ariſe, take thy journey before the people, that they may go in, and poſſeſs the land, &c.] This cannot refer to what God ſaid to Moſes after the making the golden calf (as we find ſome take it from Exod. xxxiii. 1.) for that was before he aſcended the mount again; but to what he ſaid at the concluſion of their removals from place to place (ſome of which he mentions here, ver. 6, 7.) for then he orders them what to do when they entered into Canaan, which, he ſaith, I have given you to poſſeſs it, Numb. xxxii. 51, 52, 53.

CHAP. XI.

1 An exhortation to obedience. 2 By their own experience of God's great works. 8 By promiſe of God's great bleſſings. 16 And by threatnings. 18. A careful ſtudy is required in God's words. 26 The bleſſing and curſe is ſet before them.

THerefore thou ſhalt love the LORD thy God, and keep his charge, and his ſtatutes, and his judgments, and his commandments alway.

2 And know you this day: for I ſpeak not with your children which have not known, and which have not ſeen the chaſtiſement of the LORD your God, his greatneſs, his mighty hand, and his ſtretched out arm.

3 And his miracles, and his acts which he did in the midſt of Egypt, unto Pharaoh the king of Egypt, and unto all his land,

4 And what he did unto the army of Egypt, unto their horſes, and to their chariots, how he made the water of the Red-ſea to overflow them as they purſued after you, and how the LORD hath deſtroyed them unto this day,

5 And what he did unto you in the wilderneſs, until ye came into this place,

6 And what he did unto Dathan and Abiram, the ſons of Eliab, the ſon of Reuben: how the earth opened her mouth, and ſwallowed them up, and their houſholds, and their tents, and all the ſubſtance that was in their poſſeſſion in the midſt of all Iſrael.

7 But your eyes have ſeen all the great acts of the LORD, which he did.

8 Therefore ſhall ye keep all the commandments which I command you this day, that ye may be ſtrong, and go in and poſſeſs the land whither you go to poſſeſs it:

9 And that ye may prolong your days in the land which the LORD ſware unto your fathers to give unto them, and to their ſeed, a land that floweth with milk and hony.

10 ¶ For the land whither thou goeſt in to poſſeſs it, is not as the land of Egypt, from whence ye came out, where thou ſowedſt thy ſeed, and wateredſt it with thy foot, as a garden of herbs:

11 But the land whither ye go to poſſeſs it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water of the rain of heaven:

12 A land which the LORD thy God careth for: the eyes of the LORD thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year, even unto the end of the year.

13 ¶ And it ſhall come to paſs, if you ſhall hearken diligently unto my commandments which I command you this day, to love the LORD your God, and to ſerve him with all your heart, and with all your ſoul;

14 That I will give you the rain of your land in his due ſeaſon, the firſt rain and the latter rain, that thou mayſt gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oyl.

15 And I will ſend graſs in thy fields, for thy cattle, that thou mayſt eat and be full.

16 Take heed to your ſelves, that your heart be not deceived, and ye turn aſide, and ſerve other gods, and worſhip them:

17 ¶ And then the LORDS wrath be kindled againſt you, and he ſhut up the heaven that there be no rain, and that the land yield not her fruit, and leſt ye periſh quickly from off the good land which the LORD giveth you.

18 ¶ Therefore ſhall ye lay up theſe my words in your heart and in your ſoul, and bind them for a ſign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes.

19 And ye ſhall teach them your children, ſpeaking of them when thou ſitteſt in thine houſe, and when thou walkeſt by the way, when thou lieſt down, and when thou riſeſt up.

20 And thou ſhalt write them upon the door-poſts of thine houſe, and upon thy gates:

21 That your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the land which the LORD ſware unto your fathers to give them, as the days of heaven upon the earth.

22 ¶ For if ye ſhall diligently keep all theſe commandments which I command you, to do them, to love the LORD your God, to walk in all his ways, and to cleave unto him;

23 Then

23 Then will the LORD drive out all theſe nations from before you, and ye ſhall poſſeſs greater nations, and mightier than your ſelves.

24 Every place whereon the ſoles of your feet ſhall tread, ſhall be yours: from the wilderneſs, and Lebanon, from the river, the river Euphrates, even unto the utmoſt ſea, ſhall your coaſt be.

25 There ſhall no man be able to ſtand before you: for the LORD your God ſhall lay the fear of you, and the dread of you upon all the land that ye ſhall tread upon, as he hath ſaid unto you.

26 ¶ Behold, I ſet before you this day a bleſſing and a curſe.

27 A bleſſing, if ye obey the commandments of the LORD your God which I command you this day:

28 And a curſe, if ye will not obey the commandments of the LORD your God, but turn aſide out of the way which I command you this day, to go after other gods which ye have not known.

29 And it ſhall come to paſs, when the LORD thy God hath brought thee in unto the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it, that thou ſhalt put the bleſſing upon mount Gerizim, and the curſe upon mount Ebal.

30 Are they not on the otherſide Jordan, by the way where the ſun goeth down, in the land of the Canaanites, which dwell in the champian over againſt Gilgal, beſide the plains of Moreth?

31 For ye ſhall paſs over Jordan to go in to poſſeſs the land which the LORD your God giveth you, and ye ſhall poſſeſs it, and dwell therein.

32 And ye ſhall obſerve to do all the ſtatutes and judgments which I ſet before you this day.

Ver. 10. For the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it, is not as the land of Egypt, from whence ye came out.] Moſes employs all manner of arguments, to perſwade the Iſraelites to obedience; from a grateful remembrance of God's former mercies, ver. 2, 3, &c. from the terrible puniſhment of the diſobedient, ver. 6. from the benefits that would redound to themſelves, by their conformity to his precepts, ver. 9. and now he repreſents to them, what a noble country he was preparing to beſtow upon them; but on ſuch a condition, as would keep them in a conſtant dependance upon his favour, for the bleſſing of it.

——— Where thou ſowedſt thy ſeed, and wateredſt it with thy foot, as a garden of herbs.] This doth not ſignify, that the land of Egypt was not ſo fruitful as the land of Canaan, (for their fertility is not to be compared) but that they reaped the fruits of their labours with more pains in Egypt. Diodorus Siculus, indeed, and Herodotus, ſay, that the Egyptians take the leaſt pains, of all other men, about their corn, inſomuch that it may be affirmed, καπνιτὰλα κομίζειν, they bring-in the fruits of the earth without labour, being at no ſuch trouble in ploughing as other men are, &c. See in his Euterpe, cap. xiv. Yet it muſt be conſidered, that as the Nile, which occaſioned this fertility, failed them ſometimes, and did not overflow all the flat countries, ſo the upper parts of Egypt had not the benefit of it, nor all the lower neither, without many preparatory labours, in cutting rivers, to convey the water to them: which Pliny calls rigua Nili; for the word rigua properly ſignifies, the little rivers, and διώρυγες, channels, which were made to drive water from the Nile into places at a diſtance from it, as Salmaſius obſerves, p. 588. in Solinum. Heſychius calls them ὀχὰς ὑδάτων, receptacles of water, ditches, or dikes, which we now call canals, as the ſame author obſerves, p. 908.

As the plenty of Egypt is taken notice of by the ſacred hiſtorian in this verſe, we hope it will not be diſagreeable to our readers, if we preſent them with ſome account of the famous river Nile, to which this country has been conſtantly indebted for all its fertility and happineſs. The ſources or ſprings of this river were ſo abſolutely unknown to the ancients, that they thought it even impoſſible to diſcover them; but they are now well known to be in Ethiopia, tho' modern travellers differ in their accounts of them. The Nile enters Egypt almoſt under the tropic of Cancer, violently pouring itſelf, as it paſſes, down no leſs than ſeven cataracts or falls, from a very conſiderable height, between ragged rocks and precipices, and with ſo great a noiſe, that it may be heard ſeveral miles off. The people of thoſe parts uſed formerly to entertain ſtrangers with a ſurpriſing ſpectacle, which ſome modern travellers ſay is ſtill continued: Two of them enter a ſmall boat, one to guide it, and the other to keep it clear of water; after having ſuſtained the violence of the agitated waves for ſome time, they dexterouſly ſteer their boat through the narrow channels, thereby avoiding the rocks, and letting themſelves be carried down by the falling river, direct their little veſſel with their hands; and ruſhing headlong, to the great terror of the ſpectators, who think them utterly loſt and ſwallowed up, they appear again on the water, far from the place from which they fell, as if they had been ſhot out of an engine. Senec. Nat. Quæſt. l. 4. c. 2. The Nile, having paſſed through the upper and middle Egypt, a little below the ancient Memphis, divided itſelf into two large arms, which afterward forming ſeven channels, emptied themſelves into the ſea by as many mouths. Theſe ſeven mouths of the Nile, much ſpoken of by the ancient writers, were, to begin from the weſt, the Canopic, the Heracleotic, the Bolbitic, the Sebennytic, the Pharnic, or Pathmetic, the Mendeſian, the Tanitic, or Saitic, and the Peluſian; which had their names from ſo many cities ſtanding on their ſeveral branches. Beſide theſe, there were the two Pſeudoſtomata, or falſe mouths, as they called them, of Pineptimi and Diolcos, which were too ſmall to carry larger veſſels. But the greater part of theſe mouths have been ſince ſtopped up, and others formed, ſo that there are now reckoned to be above thirty channels which carry the waters of the Nile into the ſea, eſpecially at the time of its overflowing, the greater part of them becoming dry when the waters retire; the two chief, and indeed only conſiderable arms of that river at preſent, being that of Roſetta or Raſhîd to the weſt, and that of Damietta, or Dimyât, to the eaſt.

The annual inundation of the Nile, on which the fertility of Egypt depends, is one of the greateſt wonders of that country. The ancient writers tell us, that it begins to riſe in Egypt about the ſummer ſolſtice, and continues ſo to do till after the autumnal equinox, for about the ſpace of one hundred days; and then it gradually decreaſes for as many days, till it retires within its banks, and overflows no more till the next year. If the river did not riſe to the height of ſixteen cubits, or fifteen at leaſt, the country was not covered with water, and a dearth enſued: This account comes very near to thoſe given by modern travellers. Tho' the river begins to ſwell in May, yet no public notice is taken of it, till the 28th or 29th of June, by which time it is uſually riſen to the height of ſix or eight pikes (a Turkiſh meaſure of about twenty-ſix inches) and then the public criers proclaim it through the capital and other cities, and continue in the ſame manner to publiſh how much the river increaſes every day, till it riſes to ſixteen pikes, and then they cut down the dam of the Khalîj, or great canal at Bulâk, which paſſes through the midſt of al Kâhira, commonly called Grand Cairo, and let in the water on their lands, by an artifice we ſhall mention tion by-and-by. If the river want but an inch of this height, they will not cut the dam, becauſe in ſuch caſe no tribute is due to the prince, for the lands which ſhould be watered by them, the produce being then ſcarce ſufficient to maintain the tillers. And therefore at preſent, if the Baſha or governor of Egypt cut this dam, before the river riſe to that determinate height, he is anſwerable for the conſequence, and muſt pay the Turkiſh emperor his tribute, whether the year be plentiful or no. If the water increaſe to the height of twenty-three or twenty-four pikes, it is judged moſt favourable; but if it exceed that, it does a great deal of miſchief, not only by overthrowing houſes, and drowning cattle, but alſo by engendering a great number of inſects, which deſtroy the fruits of the earth.

The Khalij above-mentioned is always opened with great ſolemnity, in the preſence of the Baſha, accompanied by all his great officers, and attended by an innumerable multitude of people, this being one of the greateſt feſtivals in Egypt; and in former times, we are told, the Egyptians uſed annually at this ceremony to ſacrifice a girl, or, as others ſay, a boy and a girl, to the Nile, as a tribute paid to that river for all the benefits received from it. And this inhuman cuſtom continued, it is ſaid, till the Turks made themſelves maſters of Egypt; the firſt governor of which reſolved to aboliſh it, and by his prudent remonſtrances prevailed on the Egyptians to omit it. But the river unfortunately did not riſe that year to the accuſtomed height. The year following it was ſtill worſe, ſo that the people apprehending a famine, began to murmur: Whereupon the governor led all the inhabitants of the city, Turks, Jews, and Chriſtians, to a mountain on the eaſt of al Kâhira, and after a pathetic exhortation, obliged all who were preſent to offer up their prayers to God, for the obtaining his mercy; in which exerciſe they paſſed all the reſt of that day, and the following night. The next morning, before day, ſome women came, with great joy, to acquaint the governor, that the Nile had riſen in the night no leſs than twelve pikes; whereupon nothing was heard but the praiſes of God, and acclamations of the people. Coming down from the mountain, they erected an altar at the mouth of the canal, ten feet high, whereon they threw a great quantity of flowers, and a branch of olive, which laſt, as they ſay, took root there, as a more agreeable offering to God, than the former innocent victim; and they continue ſtill to erect ſuch an altar every year; and when they break down the dam, and the water enters the Khalij, it carries down the altar and flowers with it. The year when this event happened, the Nile roſe two pikes higher than it uſed to do, and there was very great plenty; ſince which time, a final ſtop being put to the above-mentioned ſuperſtitious practice, whenever the waters fail of their accuſtomed height, they have recourſe to prayers on the ſame mountain.

That they may the better judge of the daily increaſe of the water, and the conſequent plenty or ſcarcity of the enſuing year, the gradual riſe of the river is very exactly meaſured, either by wells ſunk, or pillars erected and divided for that purpoſe. There was one of the former, we are told, on the bank of the Nile, in the upper Egypt, near Syene; and one of the latter was ſet up in Memphis. A very ancient column, which ſerved for the ſame uſe, is alſo yet to be ſeen in the caſtle of old Kahira, ſaid to be erected in the time of the emperor Heraclius. The preſent Nilometer, or Mikyâs, as the Arabs calls it, is in the ſame caſtle; it is a large ſquare reſervoir, round which runs a handſome gallery, ſuſtained by twelve marble pillars, which form arches, with a baluſtrade to lean on by thoſe who look into the water.

This Nilometer is different from that built in an iſland of the Nile, between Jizah and al Foſtât (which from its pleaſant ſituation, and being planted with ſeveral ſorts of fruit trees, is much celebrated by the oriental writers, and called al Rawdat, or the Garden) by Aſâmah ebn Yazid, collector of the tribute in Egypt, in the reign of the Khalifah Soleymân ebn Abd'ilmalek. Some years after the Khalifah al Mamun ordered it to be pulled down, on account of ſome defect therein, and a new one to be built in its room, which was at laſt finiſhed in a magnificent manner by al Motawakkel. The eaſtern hiſtories mention ſeveral other ſtructures of this ſort, built or repaired by the Khalifahs, while maſters of Egypt.

In the midſt of the baſon, where the preſent Nilometer is erected, and through which paſſes a canal drawn from the Nile, is an oſtogonal pillar of white marble, divided into twenty two equal parts; the firſt is again divided into twenty four inches, but the ſecond is not; however, the others are all marked to the top of the column. They are very careful, during the time of the inundation, to obſerve the height of the water by the meaſure, and every day proclaim it in the city. This work is ſo exactly finiſhed and nicely levelled, that the water in the reſervoir is neither higher nor lower than that in the river.

As theſe Nilometers ſerved to meaſure the overflowing of the river, the Sphinxes, of which there were alſo a great many in ſeveral places, ſhewed the beginning of the waters riſing; being a ſymbolic repreſentation or figure, with the head of a woman and the body of a lion, ſignifying that the Nile began to ſwell in the months of July and Auguſt, when the ſun paſſes through the ſigns of Leo and Virgo. There are ſeveral of theſe Sphinxes ſtill to be ſeen; one in particular near the pyramids much ſpoken of by the ancients, being of a prodigious ſize, and cut out of the rock itſelf; the head and neck only appear at preſent, the reſt of the body being hid in the ſand. It is, according to Thevenot, twenty-ſix feet high, and fifteen-feet from the ear to the chin; but Pliny aſſures us, the head was no leſs than one hundred and two feet in circumference, and ſixty two feet high from the belly, and that the body was one hundred and forty three feet long, and was thought to be the ſepulchre of King Amaſis. There is another alſo at the end of the lake of al Matariya, which lies on its ſide, the head being ſeparated from the body.

As it may eaſily be conceived this river could not of itſelf overflow the lands every where in the neceſſary proportion, the inhabitants have been obliged, with infinite labour, to cut a vaſt number of canals or trenches from one end of Egypt to the other, to convey the water to every part; ſo that each town and village has its canal, which is opened at the proper time, and the water ſucceſſively conducted to the moſt diſtant places. Theſe canals, or trenches, are not permitted to be opened till the river has roſe to a certain height, nor yet all at once, becauſe in ſuch caſe, ſome lands would have too much water, and others too little; but they begin to open them firſt in upper Egypt, and then gradually lower, according to a public regulation of the meaſures made for that purpoſe. By theſe means the water is ſo carefully huſbanded, that if it riſes to twenty-four pikes, it ſuffices the whole country; which is ſo large, and the canals ſo numerous, that it is thought ſcarce a tenth part of the waters of the Nile enter the ſea for the firſt three months of its overflowing. However, as ſome places lie too high to be watered by the canal, they are obliged to raiſe the water to cover them by engines. Formerly, they made uſe of Archimedes's ſcrew, thence named the Egpytian pump, but they now generally uſe wheels, which carry a rope or chain of earthen pots, holding about ſeven or eight quarts a-piece, and draw the water from the canals. There are beſide a vaſt number of wells in Egypt, from which the water is drawn in the ſame manner, to water the gardens and fruit-trees; ſo that it is no exaggeration of the matter to ſay, that there are in Egypt above two hundred thouſand oxen daily employed in this labour, without reckoning the men who draw water in wicker baſkets, ſo cloſe and well made, that not a drop runs through. As the land lies perfectly even, they cut their gardens into little ſquare beds, which are all ſurrounded with trenches, which lying higher than the level of the gardens, immediately furniſh as much water as is neceſſary; after which they ſtop them up again, and thus they manage the reſt; by which means they have the fineſt and moſt fertile gardens in the world. Pomegrantes, oranges, lemons, and ſeveral other ſort of trees afford a ſhade and coolneſs, which, notwithſtanding the heat of the climate, make it delightful walking. When a tree is wanting in any place, they only cut down a branch, which they plant by the ſide of a little trench, and in two or three years it grows to be a tree big enough to tranſplant.

The Nile, differing in this from other rivers, which generally carry off the heart of the land they overflow, by the mud or ſlime it brings down with it fattens the earth, and makes it exceeding fruitful, without any other manure. The Egyptians have not the laborious taſk of plouging, ploughing, digging, or breaking the clods, but when the river is retired, they have no more to do, then to mingle a little ſand with the earth to abate its ſtrength; after which, they ſow with little pains, and almoſt without charge. Anciently, we are told, they uſed to put in their hogs to tread the ſeed into the ground, expecting the harveſt without any further care; and when that ſeaſon came, they let in the hogs again to ſhake the grain out of the ear, and had no other trouble than to gather and lay up their corn. They uſually ſow in October and November, as the waters fall; within two months the ground is covered with all ſorts of grain and pulſe; and their harveſt is in March and April. The ſame piece of ground produces the ſame year, three or four different ſorts of fruits and garden ſtuff: Firſt, they ſow lettice and cucumbers, then corn; and after harveſt, melons, and thoſe ſort of pulſe which are peculiar to Egypt.

What is moſt extraordinary is, that this ſurprizing fecundity, cauſed by the inundation of the Nile, extends not only to the earth, but alſo to mankind and animals. It is found by conſtant experience, that the new waters render the women fruitful, whether they bath in them or only drink them; they uſually conceive in July and Auguſt, and are delivered in April and May. As to the cattle, the cows generally bring two calves at a time; the ſheep yean twice a year, having two lambs the firſt time, and but one the ſecond; and a goat is often ſeen followed by four kids which ſhe hath brought in ſix months: The paſtures of Egypt are moſt excellent, the graſs generally growing to the height of the cattle; on this they feed in winter, during which ſeaſon great numbers are driven thither from about Euphrates; in ſummer, the grounds either being burnt up by the ſun, or overflowed by the Nile, they are taken up and fed with hay, beans and barley.

There is not a more pleaſant ſight in the world, than Egypt in two ſeaſons in the year; for if you aſcend ſome mountains, or one of the great pyramids of al Kahira, about the months of July and Auguſt, you ſee a wide ſea, out of which there ariſe a vaſt number of villages, turrets and ſpires, appearing like the iſles in the Ægean ſea, with ſome cauſeways for communication, intermixed with groves and a great number of fruit trees, whoſe tops only are ſeen; all which afford a moſt enchanting proſpect. This view is terminated by mountains and woods, which at a diſtance form the moſt agreeable perſpective in the world. On the other hand, in the winter, that is, about January or February, all the country is like a fine meadow, whoſe verdure, enamelled with flowers, charms the ſight. You ſee on every ſide, herds and flocks of cattle ſcattered over the plain, with an infinite number of husbandmen and gardiners. The air is then inbalmed by the prodigious quantity of flowers, furniſhed by the oranges, lemons, and other trees; and is ſo pure, that a man cannot breathe one more wholeſome or agreeable; ſo that nature, which is then as it were dead in ſo many other climates, ſeem to revive only for the ſake of ſo delightful an abode. If there be any places left which are not quite dried, they are covered with water fowl in great plenty, which afford diverſion to the ſportſmen, who kill as many of them as they pleaſe.

The cities, towns, and villages, in Egypt, to ſecure them from the inundation of the Nile, are all built either on ſome riſing ground formed by nature, or elſe, which is generally the caſe, on mounds raiſed by infinite labour; the communication between one town and another, while the country is under water, being carried on either by the cauſeways above-mentioned, or boats. When the river is retired within its banks, the canals ſerve for the ſame purpoſe, and to furniſh the inhabitants and cattle with water, which the maidens are continually to be ſeen fetching thence, according to the ancient cuſtom ſo often taken notice of in Scripture.

As the ancients were ignorant of the true cauſe of the inundation of the Nile, which ſeemed the more unaccountable to them, becauſe, contrary to other rivers, it overflowed in the ſummer, and was loweſt in winter; they made ſeveral ſubtil conjectures to explain this phænomenon: But it has been long ſince well known to be occaſioned by the great rains which fall in Ethiopia, about the ſprings of the Nile, and ſwell that river into the ſea, which firſt lays Ethiopia almoſt entirely under water, as it afterwards does Egypt. Agatharchides, of Gnidos, and ſome others, gueſs'd this to be the cauſe, tho' they were not certain of it; but it was afterward confirm'd by eye-witneſſes: Ptolemy Philadelphus, a very inquiſitive prince, having ſent ſome perſons on purpoſe to examine into the matter. It has been thought that this piece of natural hiſtory was not unknown to Homer himſelf, and that he alludes to it, when he ſays, that the Nile came down from heaven, Odyſſ. 4. ver. 581. tho' we think no great ſtreſs can be laid on this conjecture, ſince that great poet gives other rivers the ſame original, as may be ſeen in his Odyſſey. Theſe rains conſtantly fall in Ethiopia, during the months of April and May; at which time, it alſo rains with the ſame regularity in the Indies, cauſing the Indus, and the Ganges, to overflow their banks in the ſame manner as the Nile does.

The Divine Providence has been juſtly admired, in ſending the rains in Ethiopia ſo very punctually for the ſupply of Egypt, where it rains ſo ſeldom, and thereby rendering a moſt dry and ſandy ſoil one of the moſt fruitful in the univerſe. Nor is it to be omitted, that, in the beginning of June, and the four following months, the Eteſian winds (which ſome formerly imagined to be the great cauſe of the inundation) conſtantly blow from the north-eaſt, and keep back the water from flowing down and emptying it ſelf into the ſea too faſt. As the fertility of the land of Canaan was owing to a very different method of Providence, that is, to the former and latter rains, which regularly fell at two appointed ſeaſons of the year, while the children of Iſrael continued in their duty, Moſes thought proper to acquaint them before-hand with ſo material a difference between the promiſed land, and that they had lately left; "The land whither thou goeſt in to poſſeſs it, ſays that "lawgiver, is not as the land of Egypt, from whence ye "came out, where thou ſowedſt thy ſeed, and wateredſt it "with thy foot, as a garden of herbs; but the land whi-"ther ye go to poſſeſs it, is a land of hills and valleys, "and drinketh water of the rain of heaven; a land "which the Lord thy God careth for; the eyes of the "Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning "of the year even unto the end of the year," ver. 10, 11, 12.

Ver. 16. Take heed to your ſelves, that your heart be not deceived.] By the ſpecious colours that other nations put upon their idolatry, (as the antiquity of it, univerſal conſent, &c. there being no part of the world at that time, as Maimonides obſerves, where all were not accuſtomed to worſhip images,) whereby the Iſraelites were in danger to be ſeduced into an imitation of their neighbours.

Ver. 17. And then the Lord's wrath be kindled againſt you.] For their being deceived into idolatry by falſe reaſonings, which perſwaded them what they did was lawful, did not excuſe them before God, who expected they ſhould have uſed greater caution, and governed themſelves by his plain and expreſs commands.

——And he ſhut up the heavens that there be no rain.] The contrary to this, is called "opening his good trea-"ſure," Deut. xxviii. 12. ſignifying that they lived upon the royal bounty of the king of heaven, which their ſins would prevent from flowing to them.

Ver. 18. Therefore ſhall ye lay up theſe my words in your heart, and in your ſoul, and bind them for a ſign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes.] Always in ſight; as the rule whereby they ſhould order their ſteps, leſt they trod amiſs. This is one of the portions of Scripture (from ver. 13. to the end of ver. 21.) which the Jews write in their Tephilim, as they call them, which they uſe when they ſay their prayers, and they fancy are thereby made more acceptable unto God. This conceit began, not long before our Saviour's time, in the ſchool of Hillel and Schammai, and took ſuch root in the minds of the moſt religious, that it hath grown to a great ſuperſtition ever ſince. See chap. vi. 8, 9. which is another portion of Scripture, that they wrote in theſe parchments; tho' at firſt, St. Jerom ſaith, upon Matth. xxiii. 5. they wrote only the ten commandments.

Ver. 19. And ye ſhall teach them your children.] This is repeated very often, chap. iv 10. vi. 7. and out of this place, and v. 1. the Jews have framed this as one of the affirmative precepts, "that they ought themſelves to learn "the law of God, and teach it unto others." And this they do ſo diligently, that as ſoon as their children are capable of underſtanding any thing, they make them carefully read the holy books, and inſtruct them ſo, that before they can be called youths, they are acquainted with the whole law of God. In which, we muſt confeſs, they ſhame a great many Chriſtians, who ſcarce underſtand ſo much of our religion when they are men and women, as the Jews do of theirs when they are mere children.

From the Hebrew word limmalethtem, in this verſe, (ye ſhall teach them,) the Jews have framed a conceit that their Talmud hath its name; ſignifying teaching and inſtruction, as R. Jechiel ſaith in his diſputation with Nicolaus, p. 9.

Ver. 20. And thou ſhalt write them upon the door-poſts of thine houſe, and upon thy gates.] See chap. vi. 9. By theſe means God's word being ſo rooted in the hearts of the parents, (to uſe the words of Dr. Jackſon,) as to bring forth this good fruit in their practice, the ſeed of it might be ſown in the tender hearts of their children, and be propagated from one generation to another.

Ver. 21. That your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the land which the Lord ſware unto your fathers to give them.] Nothing is wont to move men more, than love to themſelves, and love to their children, whom they love next to themſelves.

———As the days of heaven upon the earth.] As long as this world ſhall laſt. Which the Pſalmiſt, ſpeaking of David, expreſſes in this manner, "His ſeed ſhall endure "for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven," Pſal. lxxxix. 29. which doth not ſignify abſolutely for ever, but a long time. For thus Baruch ſays, "the Jews in Babylon "were commanded to pray for the life of Nebuchad-"nezzar, and the life of Baltazar his ſon ἵνα ὦσιν αἱ ἡμέραι αὐτῶν ὡς αἱ ἡμέραι τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, "that their days "might be as the days of heaven upon earth." Which is the very phraſe of Moſes here in this place, importing a very long life. And ſuch hyperbolical expreſſions, every one knows, are uſed by the Heathens.

Ver. 24. Every place whereon the ſoles of your feet ſhall tread, ſhall be yours.] That is, every place of the promiſed land; as it is explained in the next words.

———From the wilderneſs.] Viz. Of Sin, which was on the ſouth of Canaan.

———And Lebanon.] Which was its bounds on the north.

———From the river, the river Euphrates.] Which was the eaſtern limits, when, in the days of Solomon, their empire reached hither; according to the promiſe unto Abraham in Gen. xv. 18.

———Even unto the uttermoſt ſea, ſhall your coaſt be.] Which is called the Mediterranean, or the mid-land ſea, which bounded it on the weſt. See Numb. xxxiv. 6. where it is called the Great-ſea; and in that chapter the bounds of their country round about are deſcribed.

Ver. 26. Behold, I ſet before you this day, a bleſſing and a curſe.] That is, he propoſed them to their choice.

Ver. 27. A bleſſing, if ye obey the commandments of the Lord your God, which I command you this day.] Which he more largely explains chap. xxviii. 2, 3, 4, &c.

Ver. 28. And a curſe, if ye will not obey the commandment of the Lord your God.] Which is alſo more particularly laid before them, chap. xxviii. 15, 16, 17, &c. The whole hiſtorical part of the Old Teſtament witneſſes the truth of this, that God bleſſed or curſed them, according as they obſerved or broke his laws; and if the people of Iſrael had diligently marked, and conſidered, and laid to heart, that their happineſs or miſery were always correſpondent to their good and bad behaviour towards God, it would have confirmed their belief of their law, as much as if they had ſeen all the miracles wrought in the preſence of their anceſtors, and ſupplied the want or the rarity of them in after-ages; nay, this would have done more than all the miracles did, which were forgotten in a ſhort time; whereas their own daily experience of the happy fruits of obedience, and the miſchief of diſobedience, would have ſealed theſe truths unto their conſciences.

———But turn aſide out of the way which I command you this day, to go after other gods which ye have not known.] It was not every ſin that turned God's favour from them, but their idolatry and apoſtacy from him; againſt which he principally warns them, throughout all theſe chapters, iv. 3, 4, 15, 16, 23. v. 32. vi. 4, 14. vii. 4, 5, 25. viii. 19. ix. 12. x. 20.

Ver. 29. And it ſhall come to paſs, when the Lord thy God hath brought thee in unto the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it, that thou ſhalt put the bleſſing upon mount Gerizim, and the curſe upon mount Ebal.] To quicken them unto a ſtrict care in their obedience, bleſſings and curſings were to be pronounced with great ſolemnity, at their firſt entrance into the land of Canaan; as is more fully ordered chap. xxvii. 11, 12, &c. and performed by Joſhua, chap. viii. 33, 34, 35. and Moſes ſeems to enjoin them the like ſolemnity, every ſeventh year, chap. xxxi. 10, 11, 12, 13.

Ver. 30. Are they not on the other ſide Jordan.] With reſpect to the place where Moſes was now, the mountains he mentions were on the other ſide Jordan, in the land of Canaan; in which they had no ſooner got footing, but Joſhua took care to execute this command, that their hearts might be poſſeſſed with a ſenſe upon what terms they were to enjoy it. And he deſcribes the places ſo particularly, that they might be ſure to know them.

———By the way where the ſun goeth down.] On that ſide which inclined to the weſt.

———In the land of the Canaanites.] The people particularly ſo called, who were one of the ſeven nations; ſome of which lived here in the eaſt, and others near the mid-land ſea.

———Which dwell in the champian over-againſt Gilgal.] Some think theſe mountains were at ſuch a conſiderable diſtance from Gilgal, that they cannot be ſaid to be over-againſt Gilgal; becauſe this phraſe ſignifies them not to be far off one from the other. And therefore they tranſlate theſe words, looking towards Gilgal. But it is not ſaid, that the mountains were over-againſt Gilgal, but the dwelling of the Canaanites (in whoſe country theſe mountains were) was over-againſt it.

———Beſide the plains of Moreh.] Of which mention is made, Gen. xii. 6. where the Canaanites are alſo mentioned as in that land, when Abraham came into it. Which ſuggeſts to us, that theſe bleſſings were pronounced in that very place where Abraham anciently dwelt, and where he worſhipped God, who there appeared to him.

CHAP. XII.

1 Monuments of idolatry are to be deſtroyed. 5 The place of Gods ſervice is to be kept, 16 23 Blood is forbidden. 17 20 26 Holy things muſt be eaten in the Holy place. 19 The Levite is not to be forſaken. 29 Idolatry is not to be enquired after.

THESE are the ſtatutes and judgments which ye ſhall obſerve to do in the land which the LORD God of thy fathers giveth thee to poſſeſs it, all the days that ye live upon the earth.

2 Ye ſhall utterly deſtroy all the places wherein the nations which ye ſhall poſſeſs ſerved their gods, upon the high mountains, and upon the hills, and under every green tree.

3 And you ſhall overthrow their altars, and break their pillars, and burn their groves with fire, and you ſhall hew down the graven images of their gods, and deſtroy the names of them out of that place.

4 Ye ſhall not do ſo unto the LORD your God.

5 But unto the place which the LORD your God ſhall chooſe out of all your tribes, to put his name there, even unto his habitation ſhall ye ſeek, and thither thou ſhalt come:

6 And

6 And thither ye ſhall bring your burnt-offerings, and your ſacrifices, and your tithes, and heave-offerings of your hand, and your vows, and your free-will offerings, and the firſtlings of your herds, and of your flocks.

7 And there ye ſhall eat before the LORD your God, and ye ſhall rejoice in all that you put your hand unto, ye and your houſholds, wherein the LORD thy God hath bleſſed thee.

8 Ye ſhall not do after all the things that we do here this day, every man whatſoever is right in his own eyes.

9 For ye are not as yet come to the reſt, and to the inheritance which the LORD your God giveth you.

10 But when ye go over Jordan, and dwell in the land which the LORD your God giveth you to inherit, and when he giveth you reſt from all your enemies round about, ſo that ye dwell in ſafety:

11 Then there ſhall be a place which the LORD your God ſhall chooſe to cauſe his name to dwell there, thither ſhall ye bring all that I command you; your burnt-offerings, and your ſacrifices, your tithes, and the heave-offering of your hand, and all your choice vows which ye vow unto the LORD.

12 And ye ſhall rejoice before the LORD your God, ye, and your ſons, and your daughters, and your men-ſervants, and your maid-ſervants, and the Levite that is within your gates; foraſmuch as he hath no part nor inheritance with you.

13 Take heed to thy ſelf that thou offer not thy burnt-offerings in every place that thou ſeeſt.

14 But in the place which the LORD ſhall chooſe in one of thy tribes, there thou ſhalt offer thy burnt-offerings, and there thou ſhalt do all that I command thee.

15 Notwithſtanding, thou mayſt kill and eat fleſh in all thy gates, whatſoever thy ſoul luſteth after, according to the bleſſing of the LORD thy God which he hath given thee: the unclean and the clean may eat thereof, as of the roe-buck, and as of the hart.

16 Only ye ſhall not eat the blood; ye ſhall pour it upon the earth as water.

17 ¶ Thou mayſt not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thy oyl, or the firſtlings of thy herds, or of thy flock, nor any of thy vows which thou voweſt, nor thy free-will-offerings, or heave-offering of thine hand:

18 But thou muſt eat them before the LORD thy God, in the place which the LORD thy God ſhall chooſe, thou, and thy ſon, and thy daughter, and thy man-ſervant, and thy maid-ſervant, and the Levite that is within thy gates: and thou ſhalt rejoyce before the LORD thy God in all that thou putteſt thine hands unto.

19 Take heed to thy ſelf that thou forſake not the Levite as long as thou liveſt upon thy earth.

20 ¶ When the LORD thy God ſhall enlarge thy border, as he hath promiſed thee, and thou ſhalt ſay, I will eat fleſh (becauſe thy ſoul longeth to eat fleſh) thou mayſt eat fleſh whatſoever thy ſoul luſteth after.

21 If the place which the LORD thy God hath choſen to put his name there, be too far from thee; then thou ſhalt kill of thy herd, and of thy flock, which the LORD hath given thee, as I have commanded thee, and thou ſhalt eat in thy gates whatſoever thy ſoul luſteth after.

22 Even as the roe-buck and the hart is eaten, ſo thou ſhalt eat them: the unclean and the clean ſhall eat of them alike.

23 Only be ſure that thou eat not the blood: for the blood is the life, and thou mayſt not eat the life with the fleſh.

24 Thou ſhalt not eat it: thou ſhalt pour it upon the earth as water.

25 Thou ſhalt not eat it, that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, when thou ſhalt do that which is right in the ſight of the LORD.

26 Only thy holy things which thou haſt, and thy vows thou ſhalt take, and go unto the place which the LORD ſhall chooſe:

27 And thou ſhalt offer thy burnt-offerings, the fleſh and the blood, upon the altar of the LORD thy God: and the blood of thy ſacrifices ſhall be poured out upon the altar of the LORD thy God, and thou ſhalt eat the fleſh.

28 Obſerve and hear all theſe words which I command thee, that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee for ever, when thou doſt that which is good and right in the ſight of the LORD thy God.

29 ¶ When the LORD thy God ſhall cut off the nations from before thee, whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs them, and thou ſucceedeſt them, and dwelleſt in their land:

30 Take

30 Take heed to thy ſelf that thou be not ſnared by following them, after that they be deſtroyed from before thee, and that thou enquire not after their gods, ſaying, How did theſe nations ſerve their gods? even ſo will I do likewiſe.

31 Thou ſhalt not do ſo unto the LORD thy God: for every abomination to the LORD which he hateth, have they done unto their gods: for even their ſons and their daughters they have burnt in the fire to their gods.

32 What thing ſoever I command you, obſerve to do it: thou ſhalt not add thereto, nor diminiſh from it.

Ver. 1. Theſe are the ſtatutes and judgments which ye ſhall obſerve to do, in the land which the Lord God of thy fathers giveth thee to poſſeſs, &c.] Now, we ſuppoſe, he begins a new exhortation; which he made to them, at ſome ſmall diſtance from the former. And he enters upon it with the ſame words, which he uſed before, vi. 1. ix. 1. which could not be too often repeated, conſidering the great proneneſs of the people to neglect their duty.

Ver. 2. Ye ſhall utterly deſtroy all the places, wherein the nations which ye ſhall poſſeſs ſerved their gods.] So that no opinion ſhould be left of their being ſacred places, by any relick or memorial of the old idolatry remaining there. It was not ſufficient that the gods which the ſeven nations worſhipped were aboliſhed, but the very places, alſo where they were worſhipped, were to be made common, and employed to other uſes.

——— Upon the mountains, and upon the hills, and under every green tree.] Theſe were the places where the ancient heathens choſe to worſhip their gods, imagining their ſacrifices were more acceptable upon mountains than in vallies. Lucian himſelf gives this reaſon for it, becauſe men were then nearer to the gods, and ſo more eaſily obtained audience. And Tacitus ſaith the ſame in the laſt of his annals. Dæmons alſo were wont, as ſome think, to haunt woody and ſhady places, and there appear to men; and were thought alſo to be the preſidents of mountains; others of woods and foreſts. And accordingly the heathens erected altars to them in theſe and ſuch like places; particularly under great oaks, which were held ſacred places, where their gods were thought to have a peculiar power. By this law therefore God intended to root out this ſuperſtition, and commanded his tabernacle to be built low and humble. And though afterward the temple was ſet upon an hill, there was only one, and no more: and therefore it could not be thought to be out of any opinion, that an hill was more ſacred than another place.

——— And under every green tree.] Nothing can illuſtrate theſe words more, that what Pliny ſaith, in the twelfth book of his Natural Hiſtory, concerning trees; which thus begins, Hæc fuere numinum templa, &c. "Theſe were the temples of the gods; and even now "the ſimple people, after the ancient rites, dedicate to "God ſuch trees as excel the reſt. Nor do we more "adore the images glittering with gold and ivory, quam "lucos, & in iis ſilentia ipſa, than we do the groves, and "the ſolemn ſilence therein." And then he reckons what trees were peculiarly ſacred to Jupiter, Apollo, Minerva, &c. concluding that ſeveral of their gods, ſuch as the Sylvani, Fauni, and ſome of their nymphs, had their names from woods. This was a thing ſo notorious, that in their moſt ſacred ſolemnities it was cuſtomary for them to preſent the gods whom they worſhipped with a crown or garland made of boughs and leaves of ſuch trees in which they were thought to delight; as to Jupiter, a crown of oak; to Apollo, of Laurel; to Minerva, of olive; to Venus, of myrtle; to Bacchus, of ivy; to Rhea, Pan, Neptune, and Vulcan, of pine, &c.

Ver. 3. And ye ſhall overthrow their altars, and break their pillars, and burn their groves with fire, and ye ſhall hew down the graven images of their gods.] See vii. 5. and Lev. xxvi. 1. He mentions all theſe ſo particularly, becauſe this is the very foundation and hinge of the law, (as Maimonides ſpeaks) that all opinion of the ſanctity of ſuch things ſhould be blotted out of mens hearts, and the memory of them extinguiſhed, More Nevochim, P. iii. cap. 29. where he reckons abundance of things of this kind, which were among the old idolators, called Zabii.

——— And deſtroy the names of them out of that place.] From this, and ſuch like paſſages, the Jews have framed this affirmative precept, that "the Gentile idolatry is by "all means to be deſtroyed." For theſe nations having forfeited their land by their abominable wickedneſs, and God having beſtowed it upon the Iſraelites, whom he took for his peculiar people, and among whom he dwelt, and therefore calls this his land, ſee vii. 6. he, as the king of the country, might enjoyn what orders he pleaſed to have obſerved. And it was of the higheſt concernment, that there ſhould not be the leaſt footſtep of the old idolatry left in the country; but that he who was the Lord of it, and the Lord of heaven and earth, ſhould be alone acknowledged and worſhipped. And there was a greater reaſon for this, than at firſt ſight may be imagined: for as the hoſt of heaven was worſhipped, as the glorious bodies wherein their gods inhabited, which was the reaſon of the beſt of the heathens for this worſhip, ſo their dæmons were ſuppoſed to dwell in the images and pillars which for that end were erected to them; the ſovereign celeſtial gods being worſhipped in the ſun, moon, and ſtars, wherein they were thought to reſide, and theſe petty deities, the dæmons were worſhipped in images and columns, which were made for them, and for no other deities; as Mr. Mede obſerves, P. 1. pag. 778.

Ver. 4. Ye ſhall not do ſo unto the Lord your God.] That is, not ſerve him upon the mountains, nor in groves, nor under green trees; which appears to be the ſenſe, both from the foregoing words, ver. 2, 3. and from the following oppoſition in the next verſe. And it is very probable, that during their continuance in the wilderneſs, none ſacrificed in high places, but offered all at the door of the tabernacle, which was not far from them. When they came into Canaan, and were many of them at a diſtance from the tabernacle, they did ſacrifice in high places; and we do not find them reproved for it while they worſhipped the Lord alone, and had prieſts who officiated there, and in other places, according to the precepts of the law: but when the temple was built, and the ark of God's preſence no longer removed from place to place, the prophets required them not to ſacrifice any longer in high places, nor any where elſe, but only at the temple. And they blamed even good kings for not taking away the high places, though no ſacrifices were offered upon them to any ſtrange god, but to the true God alone. Which connivance proved in time a great miſchief; for here at firſt they began to worſhip ſtrange gods, the Iſraelites being very prone to chuſe mountains, and ſuch ſhady places, (as the reſt of the world did) wherein to ſet up their images, 2 Kings xvii. 10, 11. Ezek. xx. 28. Hoſea iv. 13.

Ver. 5 But unto the place which the Lord your God ſhall chuſe out of all your tribes.] Unto one certain place which God intended to ſet apart; unto which all the tribes ſhould reſort, as the only place where they might ſacrifice. By which means the notion of the unity of God was preſerved, and his worſhip retained pure and ſincere, as long as they kept to this one place, where the prieſts of God conſtantly attended, to ſee his ſervice rightly performed.

———To put his name there.] By the name of God is meant God himſelf, (as to call upon his name, is to call upon him,) and therefore the ſenſe is, where he would make his dwelling-place, by ſettling the ark, and the cloud of glory there, which was the token of his preſence. This place, at firſt, ſeems to have been Miſpeh, and afterward Shiloh; and when that was deſtroyed, the ark removed to ſeveral places, Kirjath-jearim, Miſpeh, Gilgal, Nob, Gibeon, the houſe of Obed-Edom, till at laſt it ſettled at Jeruſalem: Where, when the temple was built, God ſaid to Solomon, I have choſen this place to my ſelf, for an houſe of ſacrifice, 2 Chron. vii. 12. Which is the plain plain ſenſe of theſe words, Chuſe a place to put his name there.

——Even unto his habitation ſhall ye ſeek, and thither thou ſhalt come.] This explains what he means by the place where he would put his name, viz. the place where the ſanctuary was ſettled, which was his habitation; where he placed his majeſty, as Onkelos paraphraſes, that all might repair thither to ſeek his grace and favour.

Ver. 7. And there ye ſhall eat.] Their part of the things before-mentioned; it being cuſtomary for the people in ancient time, before the law of Moſes, to feaſt upon part of the ſacrifices of peace-offerings; as appears from Exod. xviii. 12. xxxiv. 13, 14.

——Before the Lord your God.] Not in the tabernacle, or temple, where only the prieſts might eat the moſt holy things, which were peculiarly theirs, Numb. xviii. 10. but in ſome place very near to the ſanctuary; it being the cuſtom of other people, (and perhaps before the time of Moſes) to feaſt with their gods in their very temples, or near their altars, according to that of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. viii. 10. Therefore God entertained his people, alſo, at his own houſe, commanding them here, and in other places, to eat their ſacrifices before him, at his ſanctuary, and no where elſe; that is, in ſome place adjacent to the ſanctuary. Whereby they declared, that they had communion with him, and not with idols, by partaking with him at his table; that is, his altar: For there could be no need of their eating there, but only to ſignify this, and to ſecure them in his religion by feaſting in his preſence, and thereby owning themſelves to belong to him. This is repeated very often in this book; as ver. 18. of this chapter, chap. xiv. 23, 26. xv. 20. xvi. 5. but eſpecially xxvii. 6, 7. where they are required, before the temple was built, to eat their ſacrifices near the altar which was erected after they came over Jordan; this being a profeſſion of the true religion, to eat at God's altar, as to eat of things ſacrificed to idols, was to profeſs the Heatheniſh religion.

——And ye ſhall rejoice in all that you put your hand unto, ye and your houſholds, wherein the Lord thy God hath bleſſed thee.] This ſignifies, either that they ſhould rejoice at theſe feaſts in the goodneſs of God, who had bleſſed the labour of their hands, (of which the tithe they brought thither was a fruit,) or that, doing thus, God would bleſs all their future labours, and make them and their families proſper, and take-comfort in all their enjoyments.

Ver. 8. Ye ſhall not do after all the things that we do here this day.] This doth not ſignify, as if there was no civil government, or that the courts of juſtice did not ſit and execute judgment between man and man, but relates to the place of offering ſacrifice, as Mr. Selden obſerves, lib. ii. De Synedr. cap. 15. n. 4. which, in their wandering condition, they did not ſo ſtrictly obſerve, as God expected when they came to be ſettled. Our learned Dr. Spencer thinks it relates, alſo, to other old cuſtoms, which were rather childiſh than profane; and therefore tolerated by God for the preſent. To which, he thinks, thoſe words of St. Paul have reſpect, Acts xiii. 18. Many things, alſo, perhaps, they omitted, which they could not, or did not obſerve, in the wilderneſs; as their new moons, and other ſolemn days; with ſeveral rites of purification, and cleanſing, preſcribed by the law of Moſes.

——Every man whatſoever is right in his own eyes.] This doth not import that there was no good order kept among them, or that they were left at liberty to ſacrifice where they pleaſed; but that in ſuch an uncertain ſtate, when they were removing from place to place, many took the liberty, in ſuch matters, to do as they thought good.

Ver. 13. Take heed to thy ſelf, that thou offer not thy burnt-offerings.] Under burnt-offerings are comprehended all the other offerings before-mentioned; for theſe were the chief, and the moſt uſual: And if they might not be offered but at a certain place, much leſs might any other, as every body could underſtand, without repeating them all again, ——In every place that thou ſeeſt.] To be beautiful, lovely, and inviting, by its ſituation, and ſhady trees, fountains, &c. ſuch as are mentioned ver. 2. which the Gentiles choſe, perhaps, wherein to ſacrifice, becauſe they were more delightful or ſolemn than others. Whence Ezek. vi. 3. mentions rivers and vallies, together with mountains, where there were fine paſtures, and ſprings of water, which were ſo pleaſant and refreſhing in thoſe countries, that they fancied the gods delighted in them. So St. Jerome obſerves upon Jer. vii. that this Pagan error, omnes provincias occupavit, &c. ſpread it ſelf in all parts of the world, that they ſhould offer their ſacrifices at the heads of fountains, and delightful groves.

Ver. 14. But in the place which the Lord ſhall chuſe in one of thy tribes, there thou ſhalt offer thy burnt-offerings.] This he had ſaid before, ver. 5, 6, 11. but repeats it again, becauſe of the great importance of it, to prevent all ſtrange worſhip. Elijah, indeed, offered upon mount Carmel, after the temple was built, but it was by a prophetical inſpiration; and if any one at that time had asked him if they might take that liberty, he would have anſwered, By no means; but he that offers out of Jeruſalem, ſhall be cut off, Lev. xvii. 4. "As for what I do "now, it is an extraordinary caſe, to convince the lying "prophets of Baal," &c. Thus Maimonides in Seder Zeraim.

Ver. 17. Thou mayſt not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thy oyl.] This cannot be meant of the tithe paid to the Levites, which the people might not eat any where, being appropriated to the Levites alone. He ſpeaking, therefore, of a tithe which the people might eat, tho' not at home, yet in the place where the ſanctuary was; it muſt be meant of that which the Hebrews call the ſecond tithe, which was ſet out after that to the Levites was paid; concerning which, he ſpeaks, chap. xiv. 22, 23, &c.

——Or the firſtlings of the herds, or of thy flock.] Theſe were entirely the prieſt's portion, by an expreſs law, Numb. xviii. 15, 17, 18. and therefore could not lawfully be eaten by the people, either at home, or at the ſanctuary. Which makes it neceſſary to underſtand this of ſome other firſtlings, and it is not improbable that it is meant of the females, for the males only were the Lord's, (as appears from Exod. xiii. and other places,) who gave them to his prieſts; but he would have the firſt-born females, alſo, to be, in ſome ſort, ſacred, by requiring them to be eaten at his ſanctuary, where his prieſts had their ſhare of them. For we ſee no ground to think that as there was a ſecondary tithe, ſo there was a ſecondary firſtling ſet a-part by every man to this uſe.

——Nor any of thy vows which thou voweſt, &c.] All ſuch things were, alſo, wholly the Lord's, Lev. xxvii. 28. and given by him to his prieſts, Numb. xviii. 14. But that is only to be underſtood of what was vowed to God abſolutely, without mentioning any particular uſe to which it was deſigned. Beſide which, they might vow what they pleaſed to be ſpent in ſolemn feaſts with the Levites, the widows, the fatherleſs, and other poor people; and of ſuch Moſes here ſpeaks.

Ver. 19. Take heed to thy ſelf, that thou forſake not the Levite as long as thou liveſt upon the earth.] He gives this caution, leſt covetouſneſs ſhould make them defraud the Levites of their tithes, and not let them have convenient habitations, or profaneneſs make them not invite them to the ſacred feaſts before ſpoken of. This is repeated xiv. 27. And in this the Jews were ſo careful, that when there was ſuch increaſe of the Levites that their cities could not contain them, they aſſigned them more than was given at firſt; for Joſhua gave them only forty eight, but before the captivity of Babylon they had twenty more added to them, as appears from 1 Chron. vi. 65, 66, &c. where, after the mention of the old number, there is an account given of twenty more added to them out of ſeveral tribes; for tho' they could not enlarge the bounds preſcribed to their cities, yet as the number of Levites increaſed, they might give them new cities; and ſo they did, that they might not be ſtraitned in their dwellings among them.

Ver. 32. Whatſoever thing I command you, obſerve to do it.] Keep cloſe to the precepts I have given you about my worſhip, ver. 28. and ſee iv. 2.

——Thou ſhalt not add thereto, nor diminiſh from it.] They were not to add any other rites of worſhip of their own deviſing, or from the idolatrous cuſtoms of thoſe countries, nor omit any of thoſe which God had commanded them to uſe; for if they had uſed any of the Gentile ceremonies, whereby they honoured their gods, it would eaſily have introduced the worſhip of the gods themſelves; ſelves, and, if they had omitted any of the rites which God had ordained, ſome other would have eaſily ſtepped into their room, which were uſed by Idolaters.

Maimonides, from theſe words, labours to prove the eternity of the law of Moſes. But it is very ſtrange, that ſo great a man ſhould be ſo blind as not to ſee what ſome of his brethren could diſcern, that God did not bind up himſelf neither to change nor alter theſe laws, tho' he did not permit the Iſraelites to do it. So the author of Sephr. Ikkarim wiſely gloſſes upon theſe words, Lib. iii. cap. 14. The ſcripture prohibits us to add unto, or detract from theſe precepts, according to our will and pleaſure; but what hinders the great God, either to add or detract, when his bleſſed wiſdom ſhall think fit? which he illuſtrates by this example among others; a phyſician preſcribes a diet to his patient, for ſuch a time as he judges convenient, which he doth not declare to the ſick man. Now when the time comes that the phyſician hath obtained his end, he changes the diet, and permits his patient what he formerly forbad, and prohibits that which he formerly permitted; which exactly agrees to what our bleſſed Saviour had done.

CHAP. XIII.

1 Inticers to idolatry. 6 How near ſoever unto thee. 9 Are to be ſtoned to death. 12 Idolatrous cities are not to be ſpared.

IF there ariſe among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a ſign or a wonder,

2 And the ſign or the wonder come to paſs, whereof he ſpake unto thee, ſaying, Let us go after other gods (which thou haſt not known) and let us ſerve them;

3 Thou ſhalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams: for the LORD your God proveth you, to know whether you love the LORD your God with all your heart and with all your ſoul.

4 Ye ſhall walk after the LORD your God, and fear him, and keep his commandments, and obey his voice, and you ſhall ſerve him, and cleave unto him.

5 And that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams ſhall be put to death (becauſe he hath ſpoken to turn you away from the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed you ought of the houſe of bondage, to thruſt thee out of the way which the LORD thy God commanded thee to walk in) ſo ſhalt thou put the evil away from the midſt of thee.

6 ¶ If thy brother the ſon of thy mother, or thy ſon, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy boſom, or thy friend, which is as thine own ſoul, entice thee ſecretly, ſaying, Let us go and ſerve other gods (which thou haſt not known, thou nor thy fathers;

7 Namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, nigh unto thee, or far off from thee, from the one end of the earth, even unto the other end of the earth)

8 Thou ſhalt not conſent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither ſhall thine eye pity him, neither ſhalt thou ſpare, neither ſhalt thou conceal him.

9 But thou ſhalt ſurely kill him; thine hand ſhall be firſt upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people.

10 And thou ſhalt ſtone him with ſtones, that he die: becauſe he hath ſought to thruſt thee away from the LORD thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage.

11 And all Iſrael ſhall hear and fear, and ſhall do no more any ſuch wickedneſs, as this, among you.

12 ¶ If thou ſhalt hear ſay in one of thy cities, which the LORD thy God hath given thee to dwell there, ſaying,

13 Certain men, the children of Belial, are gone out from among you, and have withdrawn the inhabitants of their city, ſaying, Let us go and ſerve other Gods (which ye have not known)

14 Then ſhalt thou enquire and make ſearch, and ask diligently: and behold, if it be truth, and the thing certain, that ſuch abomination is wrought among you:

15 Thou ſhalt ſurely ſmite the inhabitants of that city with the edge of the ſword, deſtroying it utterly, and all that is therein, and the cattle thereof, with the edge of the ſword.

16 And thou ſhalt gather all the ſpoil of it into the midſt of the ſtreet thereof, and ſhalt burn with fire the city, and all the ſpoil thereof, every whit, for the LORD thy God: and it ſhall be an heap for ever, it ſhalt not be built again.

17 And there ſhall cleave nought of the curſed thing to thine hand: that the LORD may turn from the fierceneſs of his anger, and ſhew thee mercy, and have compaſſion upon thee, and multiply thee, as he hath ſworn unto thy fathers;

18 When thou ſhalt hearken to the voice of the LORD thy God, to keep all his commandments, which I command thee this day, to do that which is right in the eyes of the LORD thy God.

Ver. 1. If there ariſe among you a prophet.] One that pretends to have a meſſage from God delivered to him in a viſion, or by the word of the Lord; for there was a conſtant ſucceſſion of prophets, (to whom God revealed his will ſeveral ways) among the Jews, to preſerve them in

in the true worſhip of God, and inſtruct them in their law, and admoniſh them on ſome occaſions of things to come, which was the more neceſſary, becauſe there were ſuch kind of perſons among the Gentiles.

——— Or a dreamer of dreams.] Who pretended God had appeared to him in a dream, as he did unto Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 11. and revealed his mind to him; ſuch there were in Jeremiah's time, Jerem. xxix. 8.

——— And giveth thee a ſign or a wonder.] By what follows, one would think this belongs to the foregoing words, which are to be underſtood as if he had ſaid, if he foretell ſome wonderful thing, which ſhall ſhortly come to paſs. Or, it may be interpreted, ſhall work a miracle; unto which the heathens did not ſo much pretend, as they did to predictions, which were common among them.

Ver. 2. And the ſign or the wonder come to paſs whereof he ſpake unto thee.] That is, if the event confirms the prediction; ſo that he ſeem a true prophet.

——— Saying, Let us go after other gods which thou haſt not known, and let us ſerve them.] And conſequently he perſuade you to worſhip other gods, which he pretends is demonſtrated to be lawful, by the fulfilling of his ſign and wonder.

Ver. 3. Thou ſhalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or dreamer of dreams.] Notwithſtanding, look upon him as a liar, and not as a true prophet; for God cannot contradict himſelf, nor do any thing to perſuade men to forſake him, and give his worſhip to another. This ſhews, that he ſtill purſues his intention (in this chapter, as well as in all the foregoing) to eſtabliſh them in the belief and worſhip of one God, according to the firſt commandment, from which nothing was more likely to ſeduce them, than falſe prophets, who were the great inſtruments of eſtabliſhing the fouleſt idolatry in Iſrael, as appears from 1 Kings xviii. 19. where we read of no leſs than four hundred prophets of Baal, and four hundred and fifty prophets of the groves, that is, of other falſe gods, particularly Aſtarte; as Mr. Selden conjectures in his Syntagma, 2. de Diis Syris, cap. 2. And there could not be a greater demonſtration that a man was a falſe prophet, than if he endeavoured to draw them to the worſhip of other gods, or if he pretended to ſpeak in the name of any other God, Deut. xviii. 20. or if he commanded them to offer ſuch ſacrifices as God abhorred. Thus Ariſtander (as David Chytræus obſerves) diſcovered himſelf to be a falſe prophet, tho' he foretold the deſtruction of Babylon; for he required human ſacrifices to be offered; as Tireſias alſo predicted victory to the Thebans, provided Creon's daughter was offered up in ſacrifice; and Chalcas at the time of the ſiege of Troy, but together therewith commanded the ſacrifice of Iphigenia. Theſe, and ſuch like things, plainly diſcovered they were not inſpired by God, who is the lover of mankind, and cannot delight in their blood.

——— For the Lord God proveth you, to know whether you love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your ſoul.] That there might be an open and public diſcovery made, whether they ſincerely loved God, or no, or were ſtedfaſt in their religion. So Maimonides in his More Nevochim, P. iii. cap. 24. God would make known to the nations of the world the meaſure of your faith, in the truth of his law, and of the approbation wherewith you apprehend it, &c. For it had been a great weakneſs to ſuffer even a miracle to ſhake their faith, after this had been confirmed by ſo many miracles.

Ver. 5. And that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, ſhall be put to death.] This the Jews interpret to ſignify ſtrangulation, unto which, upon good proof of the fact, he was to be ſentenced by the great Sanhedrim: For it was a received maxim among them, that a lying prophet was to be judged no where but by the council of LXX.

Ver. 6. If thy brother, the ſon of thy mother, or thy ſon, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy boſom, or thy friend, which is as thine own ſoul.] That is, whom thou loveſt as thou doſt thy life. He ranks a friend in the chief place (as the ſon of Sirach alſo doth, Ecclus. xxxii. 19.) which their wives by the ill choice they made of them, had not always in their affection.

Here is no mention of father or mother, becauſe a child, as the Hebrews fancy, was to have more reverence for them, than to accuſe them of any crime whatſoever. As if a greater regard was to be paid to them, than to God himſelf. The true reaſon is, becauſe there was no need to name them; for if their piety to God was to overcome their love to all thoſe relations before mentioned, it could not be ſuppoſed that reſpect to parents was to have any competition with it.

——— Entice thee ſecretly, ſaying, let us go and ſerve other gods, which thou haſt not known, thou nor thy fathers.] This aggravates the crime, to entice them to forſake God, who was known to have performed ſuch wonders for their fathers, and was ſo good to them, and go to ſerve gods with whom they had no acquaintance.

Ver. 8. Thou ſhalt not conſent unto him, nor hearken unto him, neither ſhall thine eye pity him, neither ſhalt thou ſpare, neither ſhalt thou conceal him.] That is, thou ſhalt not diſſemble any thing that might make againſt him. And no doubt, God intended by all theſe words to ſignify, that he ought to be looked upon as his greateſt enemy; upon whom therefore they were to have no mercy, but to proſecute him to death, as guilty of the higheſt treaſon againſt the Divine Majeſty.

Ver. 9. But thou ſhalt ſurely kill him, thine hand ſhall be firſt upon him to put him to death. He was to be ſtoned to death, and the accuſer was to throw the firſt ſtone at him, together with the witneſſes, xvii. 7. For it would have weakened the credit of his accuſation, if he had not been the foremoſt in the execution. See xvii. 7.

——— And afterward the hand of all the people.] Who were to aſſiſt in the execution of this ſentence.

Ver. 10. And thou ſhalt ſtone him with ſtones that he die.] But if upon admonition he deſiſted from his enticement, and repented of what he had ſaid to his neighbour, and reſolved of himſelf not to worſhip other gods, the other was not bound to inform againſt him.

Ver. 11. And all Iſrael ſhall hear and fear, and ſhall do no more any ſuch wickedneſs as this among you.] The end of this ſeverity was to preſerve the body of the people from the contagion of the idolatry; nothing being more apt to deter men from crimes, than ſuch exemplary puniſhments of them. So Callimachus, in his hymn to Ceres, ver. 23. makes this the deſign of the puniſhment ſhe inflicted on Eryſichthon, that others might ſhun the like tranſgreſſion.

———Ἵνα καὶ τις ὑπερβασίας ἀλεγύνῃ·

Ver. 12. And if thou ſhalt hear ſay in one of thy cities, which the Lord thy God hath given thee to dwell in, ſaying.] If the infection was ſpread into a city, or a conſiderable part of it, there was ſtill more danger, and greater ſeverity was to be uſed, to prevent the whole country about it from being drawn away from their allegiance to the Divine Majeſty. And therefore upon ſuch an information, as follows in the next verſe (which is here meant by thou ſhalt hear ſay) given to the great Sanhedrim, they were to do as is directed ver. 14.

Ver. 13. Certain men, the children of Belial.] So the moſt profligate wretches are called in ſcripture, Judges xix. 22. 1 Sam. i. 16. x. 27. xxv. 17, 25. ſignifying lawleſs perſons, who had no regard either to God or men.

——— Are gone out from among you.] That is, have left the worſhip of God, at the tabernacle; for it doth not ſignify their forſaking the city, (in which they continued to ſeduce men from their religion) but forſaking their communion in divine ſervice. By which, many have well obſerved, that paſſage in St. John may be interpreted, 1 John xi. 19.

——— And have withdrawn the inhabitants of their city.] The Hebrew word, which here we tranſlate withdraw, is twice before, ver. 5, 10. render'd thruſt away; ſignifying only earneſt endeavours to ſeduce men from their religion. But here it ſeems to ſignify alſo the effect of thoſe endeavours, whereby they had prevailed with men to forſake the God of Iſrael, or to worſhip other gods with him.

——— Saying, Let us go and ſerve other gods, which ye have not known.] Strange gods, as they are often called in ſcripture, which the nations round about them worſhipped, ver. 7. but were always abhor'd by true Iſraelites.

Ver.

Ver. 14. Then ſhalt thou enquire, and make ſearch, and ask diligently.] The great Sanhedrim, who only could take cognizance of this crime, were, upon this information, to ſend ſome, on whoſe fidelity they could rely, to examine the truth of the report which was ſpread abroad, concerning the deſection of a city to the worſhip of other gods. Theſe perſons, ſo deligated, were to uſe their utmoſt care and diligence in this inquiſition, and by all poſſible means endeavour to find, whether or no the information was true. For it was a matter of great importance, that neither the innocent ſhould ſuffer, nor apoſtates live with impunity. But the puniſhment being ſo dreadful, the greater exactneſs was uſed to be certain of the crime; and there were likewiſe a great many temperaments, (as Mr. Selden calls them) found by the Jewiſh lawyers, partly from the niceſt interpretation of every ſyllable in theſe two verſes, and partly from the pretended tradition of their elders, whereby they mitigated the ſeverity of this law. For they would not proceed upon it to deſtroy a city, tho' they found the inhabitants to be idolaters, unleſs the ſeducers were two or more; and thoſe alſo men, not women; becauſe the law here ſpeaks, in the plural number, of certain men, children of Belial. As if their forſaking God was not a crime, whether they were perſuaded to it, or no, by others. They ſay alſo, it was not to be a mere town or village, but a city; becauſe the words here are, in one of thy cities, in which there were more than an hundred houſes: If there were fewer, it was no city in their account, and ſo eſcaped. They who ſeduced a city were alſo to be of the ſame city; becauſe it is ſaid here, Theſe men of Belial are gone out from among you. All which are mere quibbles, which have no ſolid reaſon in them. They are all mentioned together in the title Sanhedrim, ſet forth by J. Coch. cap. xi. ſec. 4. and by Maimonides more largely, in his Avoda Zara, and our Selden, lib. iii. de Synedr. cap. 5. n. 2.

But there are other temperaments of this law, which have better foundation in reaſon. As, firſt, that a city was not to be deſtroyed, unleſs the major part of the inhabitants had apoſtatiſed to the ſervice of other gods. And, ſecondly, that the law mentions only leſſer cities, not thoſe which were ſo large, that the greateſt part of a tribe lived in it; for God would not have a whole tribe cut off by the ſenate. Thirdly, they might not deſtroy any of the ſix cities of refuge, becauſe theſe did not belong to them, but to God. And the words of the law are, in one of thy cities which the Lord hath given thee to dwell in; whereas theſe were given for another purpoſe. And, fourthly, ſome add, not a frontier town; becauſe it is ſaid, in the midſt of thee, (ſo the words are in the Hebrew, which we tranſlate among you) to which they ſubjoin a better reaſon, becauſe the whole country might have been expoſed to be over-run with the Gentiles. And, laſtly, they except Jeruſalem from this law, becauſe it was the ſeat of God; and (as Maimonides will have it) it was not diſtributed to any particular tribe. But if Jeruſalem was to be excepted from the judgment of men, God took care to have this ſentence executed upon it by his own judgment; for he ſent Nebuchadnezzar againſt it, whoſe ſoldiers burnt with fire, both the houſe of the Lord, and the houſe of the king, and all the houſes of Jeruſalem, Jer. lii. 13.

— And behold if it be truth, and the thing be certain, that ſuch an abomination is wrought among you.] If the inquiſitors found, upon due examination, that there was a plain and evident proof of their guilt, they were to make their report to the great Sanhedrim; who, being ſatisfied that either the whole city, or the greater part of the inhabitants, were fallen to idolatry, ſent to them two men of extraordinary wiſdom, who were candidates for the ſenatorial dignity, to admoniſh them, and, by arguments and perſuaſions, to endeavour to reduce them to the worſhip of the Lord God of Iſrael: And if they prevailed, they were pardoned, and no further proceedings were carried on againſt them; but if they continued obſtinate, then the Sanhedrim commanded the people of Iſrael to raiſe an army, and beſiege the place, and enter it by force, if they could not otherwiſe. And when the city was taken, ſeveral courts were appointed to try and condemn all who were guilty.

Ver. 15. Thou ſhalt ſurely ſmite the inhabitants of that city with the edge of the ſword.] Maimonides declares, that, in the hearing of their cauſe, every one who was found guilty of idolatry, after admonition, by two witneſſes, was ſet aſide; and if they proved to be the leſſer part of the city, they were ſtoned, according to the law (with relation to ſingle apoſtates,) the reſt being freed from puniſhment: But if they were the greater part of it, they were ſent to the great Sanhedrim, who adjudged them to be cut off by the ſword, together with their wives and children. And thus the whole city was to be puniſhed, if there was an univerſal deſection.

——Deſtroying it utterly, and all that is therein, and the cattle thereof, with the edge of the ſword.] In the Hebrew the word is, thou ſhalt make it a cherem, or an accurſed thing. And ſo the LXX, Ἀναθέματι ἀναθεματιεῖτε αὐτὴν, where the Vulgar tranſlate it as we do, thou ſhalt utterly deſtroy it; which is conſonant to the notion of the Hebrew word. See Selden, lib. i. De Synedr. cap. 7. p. 131. So that if any righteous man had any thing therein at that time, it was to be deſtroyed, as the very words are in the title Sanhedrim, cap. 11. ſect. 5. But it is to be ſuppoſed, that all who feared God would remove their effects, together with themſelves, from ſo wicked a place before ſentence was pronounced againſt them. On the contrary, they ſay, the goods of the idolaters, whereſoever they were found, whether within the city, or without, were to be burnt.

Ver. 16. And thou ſhalt gather all the ſpoil of it, into the midſt of the ſtreet thereof.] Into the market-place, as the Jews interpret it; or, if it had none, they were to make a ſpacious place, into which, all the ſpoil, and the houſhold-ſtuff, was to be brought, and fire ſet to it, to conſume it, as an anathema, or curſed thing.

——— And ſhalt burn with fire the city, and all the ſpoil thereof, every whit, for the Lord thy God.] For the vindication of God's honour, and preſerving men in their allegiance to him. R. Simeon, in the title Sanhedrim, interprets it in this manner, Sect. 6. Thus ſaith the Lord, "If you do juſtice upon a city full of idolatry, I will account it, as if you had offered an whole burnt-offering "unto me."

——— And it ſhall be an heap for ever; it ſhall not be built again.] The Hebrew doctors are not intirely agreed in the interpretation of theſe words. For ſome of them ſay that they were not ſo much as to make a garden or orchard in that place. Others of them affirm, that though it might not be reſtored into the form of a city, yet they might employ the ground in plantations of trees. But there are thoſe who interpret the words ſo rigidly, that they think it was not lawful to erect any building there, not ſo much as a dove-houſe, but that it was to lie waſte. See Selden, Sect. 8. If any man attempted to build ſuch a city, he was to be beaten, as the ſame great man obſerves, Lib. 1. de Synedriis, cap. 13. p. 558.

Ver. 17. And there ſhall cleave nought of the curſed thing to thine hand.] They were not to take the ſmalleſt part of the ſpoil to their own uſe. For as long as the wicked are in the world, ſay the Jews, the fierce anger of God will remain in the world; but when they are removed, the wrath of God will alſo ceaſe. Now the wickedneſs of purloining any thing that was a cherem, as the Hebrews call it, or an accurſed thing, appears in the ſtory of Achan, who brought all Iſrael into danger by it, as we read in the ſeventh of Joſhua; and Saul is an eminent example of it alſo, for he loſt his kingdom for this ſin, 1 Sam. xv. 3, 9, 19, 26, &c.

CHAP. XIV.

1 Gods children are not to diſfigure themſelves in mourning. 3 What may, and what may not be eaten, 4 Of beaſts. 9 Of fiſhes, 11 Of fowls. 21 That which dieth of it ſelf, may not be eaten. 22 Tithes of divine ſervice. 23 Tithes and firſtlings of rejoycing before the Lord. 28 The third years tithe of alms and charity.

YE are the children of the LORD your God: ye ſhall not cut your ſelves, nor make any baldneſs between your eyes for the dead.

2 For

2 For thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God, and the LORD hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto himself, above all the nations that are upon the earth.

3 ¶ Thou shalt not eat any abominable thing.

4 These are the beasts which ye shall eat: the ox, the sheep, and the goat,

5 The hart, and the roe-buck, and the fallow-deer, and the wild goat, and the pygarg, and the wild ox, and the chamois.

6 And every beast that parteth the hoof, and cleaveth the cleft into two claws, and cheweth the cud amongst the beasts; that ye shall eat.

7 Nevertheless, these ye shall not eat, of them that chew the cud, or of them that divide the cloven hoof; as the camel, and the hare, and the coney: for they chew the cud, but divide not the hoof; therefore they are unclean unto you.

8 And the swine, because it divideth the hoof, yet cheweth not the cud, it is unclean unto you: ye shall not eat of their flesh, nor touch their dead carcase.

9 ¶ These ye shall eat of all that are in the waters: all that have fins and scales shall ye eat:

10 And whatsoever hath not fins and scales ye may not eat: it is unclean unto you.

11 ¶ Of all clean birds ye shall eat.

12 But these are they of which ye shall not eat: the eagle, and the ossifrage, and the ospray,

13 And the glede, and the kite, and the vulture after his kind,

14 And every raven after his kind,

15 And the owl, and the night hawk, and the cuckow, and the hawk after his kind,

16 The little owl, and the great owl, and the swan,

17 And the pelican, and the gier-eagle, and the cormorant,

18 And the stork, and the heron after her kind, and the lapwing, and the bat.

19 And every creeping thing that flieth, is unclean unto you: they shall not be eaten.

20 But of all clean fowls ye may eat.

21 ¶ Ye shall not eat of any thing that dieth of it self: thou shalt give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it, or thou mayst sell it unto an alien: for thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God. Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mothers milk.

22 Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year.

23 And thou shalt eat before the LORD thy God, in the place which he shall choose, to place his name there, the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oyl, and the firstlings of thy herds, and of thy flocks: that thou mayst learn to fear the LORD thy God always.

24 And if the way be too long for thee, so that thou art not able to carry it, or if the place be too far from thee, which the LORD thy God shall choose to set his name there, when the LORD thy God hath blessed thee:

25 Then shalt thou turn it into money, and bind up the money in thine hand, and shalt go unto the place which the LORD thy God shall choose.

26 And thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink, or for whatsoever thy soul desireth: and thou shalt eat there before the LORD thy God, and thou shalt rejoice, thou and thine household.

27 And the Levite that is within thy gates, thou shalt not forsake him: for he hath no part nor inheritance with thee.

28 ¶ At the end of three years thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increase the same year, and shalt lay it up within thy gates.

29 And the Levite (because he hath no part nor inheritance with thee) and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow which are within thy gates, shall come, and shall eat, and be satisfied; that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hand which thou dost.

Ver. 1. Ye are the children of the Lord your God.] So the Lord had owned them to be, when he sent Moses unto Pharaoh, to command him to dismiss Israel; telling him Israel was his son, even his first-born, Exod. iv. 22, 23. This was a good reason therefore why they should own no other God but him; and consequently follow none of the customs of idolatrous people, but be wholly governed by his laws.

——— Ye shall not cut your selves.] This might seem to forbid the making any incisions in their bodies, as was practised by the heathens, (at least in future times) who marked themselves thereby to belong to such and such gods, (for the Israelites had received the mark of God in their flesh, by circumcision, which obliged them to receive no other) if the following words did not plainly determine this to their cutting themselves for the dead, yet it is proper to observe, that the Jerusalem Targum expounds this, of incisions, for idolatry. And it may be farther obſerved, that it was cuſtomary for the heathens to cut themſelves in pangs of devotion, (as appears by the prieſts of Baal, 1 Kings xviii. 21.) as well as when they were full of ſorrow and grief for the dead, Jerem. xvi. 6. and in all publick calamities, Jerem. xli. 5. xlvii. 5. All which aroſe from an opinion they had, that the more they afflicted themſelves, the leſs they ſhould be afflicted by God.

——— Nor make any baldneſs between your eyes for the dead.] Some of the heathens, ſaith Theodoret, (Queſt. 13. upon this book) cut off all their hair, and offered it to the dead; others ſhaved their beards; and others their eye-brows and eye-lids, or, which ſome think is the meaning of the words, between their eyes, the hair in the fore part of their head, or near their temples, as R. Solomon interprets it: And this ſeems to be the meaning of the Jeruſalem Targum, which tranſlates it, "Ye ſhall not "make any baldneſs in the houſe of your countenance." And whether it was done with a razor, or they uſed any art, by plaiſters or ointments, to make the hair fall off, it was the ſame crime, as Maimonides declares, that is a piece of idolatry. For this was practiſed, not meerly to give themſelves a diſmal appearance, but there was ſome reſpect to their gods in it; which is the reaſon it is here prohibited. Certain it is, that in after times the Gentiles pulled off their hair, or cut it off, and laid it upon the face or breaſt of the dead, or in their ſepulchres, to pacify the infernal gods. We find inſtances of it in Homer: And likewiſe they made inciſions in their fleſh, and ſpilt their blood at funerals, with the ſame intention, to appeaſe the gods below, and render them propitious to the dead.

All which ſhews that Moſes ſtill purſues the argument which he begins at the ſixth chapter, and continued ever ſince, to preſs upon them, the ſtrict obſervance of the firſt commandment; inſomuch that he would not have them uſe any of the rites which were practiſed at funerals, by thoſe that worſhipped other gods.

Ver. 2. For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God, and the Lord hath choſen thee to be a peculiar people unto himſelf, above all the nations that are on the earth.] The very ſame words, in a manner, we had before, vii. 6. as a reaſon why they ſhould deſtroy the images of the heathens, &c. Which ſhews he is ſtill ſpeaking of the idolatrous cuſtoms which they ſhould avoid, becauſe they were ſeparated to God as a peculiar people by laws different from thoſe of all other nations. The author of Sepher Coſri ſpeaks not amiſs; that the people of Iſrael were called God's Segullah, becauſe they were elected by him to enjoy ſpecial privileges above other people; and brought by him for that end out of the land of Egypt in a wonderful manner, and then had his glory dwelling among them. From whence it is, that he doth not ſay in the preface to the Ten Commandments, I am the Lord of heaven and earth, or thy creator, and therefore thou ſhalt have no other Gods but me; but I am the Lord thy God that brought thee out of the land of Egypt, &c. to ſhew that this law was given peculiarly to them, and that they were obliged to obſerve it, by virtue of their deliverance out of Egypt, and God's placing his glory among them. Whereas, if they had been bound to it by virtue of their creation, it would have belonged to other nations as well as to them.

Ver. 3. Thou ſhalt not eat any abominable thing.] All the meats forbidden by God to be eaten, are called abominable, not merely becauſe his prohibition rendered them ſuch, but becauſe the Pagan ſuperſtition had conſecrated moſt of them to their gods. However, after this law was given, the Jews were to look upon them as abominable; by which means, they were kept from having ſuch free converſation, as, otherwiſe, they would have indulged, with their idolatrous neighbours. So that this law, alſo, was intended to preſerve them in the true religion.

Ver. 4. Theſe are the beaſts which ye ſhall eat.] The original of the difference of meats, ſee in the learned J. Wagenſeil, Tela ignea, p. 553, &c. where he ſhews it was not to continue for ever. And it is a rational account of this, which we gave juſt now, that hereby they were preſerved from common converſation with other nations, and, conſequently, from their idolatries. But it is a mere fancy, and, indeed, a proud imagination, which ſome of the Jews have, particularly the author of Schebet Judah, that as men are more excellent than beaſts, becauſe they have better food, ſo Jews are more excellent than all other men, becauſe they do not feed upon all ſorts of animals, but only on ſome certain kinds; and that after much preparation, by rejecting the blood and the fat, &c. whereby they fancy the fleſh is ſo greatly altered, that it is not ſo much fleſh, as ſome other food.

——— The ox, the ſheep, and the goat.] Theſe were the only beaſts that were offered in ſacrifice to God, and therefore are the firſt that are mentioned as clean for their uſe.

Ver. 5. The hart, and the roe-buck.] Theſe, and the reſt that follow in this verſe, tho' they might not be offered in ſacrifice, were allowed to be eaten, and ſeem to be mentioned as the principal food in the land of Canaan, chap. xii. 15, 22.

——And the fallow deer.] It is not very material what the word jachmur ſignifies, becauſe we are not now concerned in this law about difference of meats: Therefore we may follow our tranſlation, as well as any other. And the famous Bochart hath rendered it probable, that it ſignifies either a kind of deer, or goat, pag. 1. Hierozoic. lib. iii. cap. 22.

———And the wild goat.] So the Hebrew word akko ſignifies, (which is no where elſe to be found,) as the ſame author proves, in the ſame book, cap. xix.

———And the pygarg.] This is, alſo, a kind of doe, or goat, which the Hebrews call diſon. We find mention of pygargus in Juvenal's eleventh Satyr, where the old Scholiaſt gives this account of it; that it is a kind of deer, quæ retrieres partes albas habet, whoſe hinder parts are white: From whence it had its name among the Greeks, who call thoſe parts of the body by the name of πυγή.

———And the wild ox.] So we tranſlate the Hebrew word theo, or tho. But Bochart diſſents from this interpretation, becauſe there were no ſuch creatures in Judæa, which are bred in colder countries. And therefore he reckons this, alſo, among his deer, or goats, cap. xxviii.

———And the chamois.] The Hebrew word zemer he alſo thinks ſignifies, as the former, a kind of goat, or hart; of which there were great variety in thoſe countries. And this he ſuppoſes, of all others, was maxime ἀλτικὸν, remarkable for leaping; which is the ſignification of the word zemara in the Arabic language.

Ver. 6. And every beaſt that parteth the hoof, and cleaveth the cleft into two claws, and cheweth the cud, &c.] Moſes forbears to enumerate any more particulars, and only deſcribes the general marks whereby they might be known; and which he had delivered in Lev. xi. 3.

Ver. 21. Ye ſhall not eat of any thing that dieth of it ſelf.] To this diſcourſe about food, it was very proper to add a caution, (which he had given before, Lev. xi. 39, 40.) that tho' they might kill and eat any clean creature, yet, if it died of it ſelf, it was unlawful to eat it, becauſe the blood was in it.

Some verſes, aſcribed to Phocylides, contain this ſenſe ſo fully, that one would think he had read Moſes.

———Thou ſhalt give it unto the ſtranger that is in thy gates.] The proſelytes of the gates (as they called them) who had not embraced their religion, but were not idolaters, and therefore had a permiſſion to dwell among them, might eat ſuch meat, having no obligation upon them to obſerve theſe laws; for they were not circumciſed.

———Or thou mayſt ſell it unto an alien.] To a meer Gentile, who might happen then to be in their country. For there were three ſorts of people called by the name of ſtrangers, who were not of the Jewiſh nation: Firſt, Such as had received circumciſion, and, conſequently, had embraced the Jewiſh religion, who were called gere-tzedek, ſtrangers, or proſelytes of juſtice. Others were not circumciſed, but yet worſhipped the God of Iſrael: theſe were called ſtrangers of the gate, or gere-toſhba, ſtrangers dwelling among them; becauſe they were to abide in their country conſtantly. But there were a third ſort, called nocherim, which we here tranſlate aliens, who were mere Gentiles, and not ſuffered to have any habitation among them; but only to come and go in their traffick with them.

———Thou ſhalt not ſeeth a kid in his mother's milk.] Moſes now plainly returns to caution them againſt idolatrous cuſtoms; for this was practiſed among the Heathens in the end of harveſt, when they ſprinkled their fields fields and gardens with this broth, to make them fruitful.

Ver. 22. Thou ſhalt truly tithe all the increaſe of thy ſeed, that the field bringeth forth year by year.] This doth not ſeem to extend to herbs, as the Phariſees interpreted it; of which, ſee Grotius on Matth. xxiii. 4. But tho' Caſaubon, Druſius, and other great men, are of this opinion, yet the contrary is maintained, by perſons of no ſmall learning; becauſe our bleſſed Saviour, when he determines this caſe, ſaith, "Theſe things ye ought to have "done, and not left the other undone."

As for the tithe here mentioned, it was the manner of the eaſtern princes, to receive the tenth of the fruits of their country, for the maintenance of their miniſters and officers; as we read 1 Sam. viii. 15. In like manner, God, the great king of all the earth, and the peculiar ſovereign of this country, required a tenth of their whole increaſe, for the maintenance of his Prieſts and Levites, in his ſervice. After which, he ordered, alſo, an additional tithe to be taken out of the nine parts remaining, (which was called the ſecond tithe) to be employed in feaſts, at his tabernacle. And this is, with great reaſon, thought to be particularly enjoined in theſe words; for ſuch tithes are mentioned by Moſes in the next verſe. It might ſeem, indeed, a little hard, to give another tenth part, after they had paid one already, which they might be tempted not to perform exactly; and therefore he ſaith, "Thou ſhalt "truly, that is, faithfully, without any deceit, or fraud, "tithe all the increaſe of thy ſeed." And when this was done, God required, alſo, once in three years, a third tithe, for the uſe of the poor; ſee ver. 28. that they might alſo be entertained at his coſt, tho' not, at that time, at his houſe: For it was ſuitable to his royal greatneſs, that all his ſubjects ſhould be feaſted, by his order, at his palace, and that the pooreſt of them ſhould not be neglected, but, ſome time or other, partake of his bounty; as they did at thoſe feaſts we mentioned, where their men and maid-ſervants were to be entertained, as well as the Levites, chap. xii. 12, 18.

Ver. 23. And thou ſhalt eat before the Lord thy God, in the place which he ſhall chuſe to place his name there, the tithe of thy corn, and of thy wine, and of thine oyl.] This cannot be meant of the tithe paid to the Levites, of which the people were not to partake, but only the prieſts, to whom the Levites were to give a tithe. Therefore it muſt be underſtood of the ſecond tithe, ſeparated (after the other was paid) for this holy uſe. The deſign of which was, that they might be ſecured in his religion, by eating and drinking in his preſence; and thereby profeſſing that they belonged to him, and were his grateful ſervants.

The obſervation of R. Bechai upon theſe words, "thy "corn, thy wine, and thine oyl," is ſomething curious. "If thou pay the tithe, ſaith he, then it is thy corn; if "thou do not, it is my corn, and not thine (in like man-"ner, if they paid the tithe of wine and oil;)" for it is ſaid, Hoſea ii. 9. "Therefore I will return, and take away my "corn in the time thereof, and my wine in the ſeaſon "thereof." For they forfeited the whole, when they did not pay the tenth, which was the rent God reſerved to himſelf. And the ſame R. Bechai repreſents this as a very merciful law; "For it is the faſhion of the world, ſaith he, "if a man have ground of his own, to let it out to tenants "at what rate he pleaſes, for an half, or third part, to be "paid to him: But it is not ſo with the Almighty, whoſe "the earth is, and who raiſes clouds, and waters it with "rain, and ſends down drops of dew, and makes fat the "fruits of the earth; and yet requires but one part of ten, "for his own uſe" This made it highly reaſonable that Moſes ſhould admoniſh the Iſraelites, ſo often, diligently to pay their tithe.

Ver. 28. At the end of three years thou ſhalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increaſe.] The opinion of the Hebrew Doctors is, that this was not a diſtinct tithe from that which they call the ſecond tithe, paid every year, but the very ſame which, every third year, was not to be carried to the ſanctuary, but to be employed to the comfort of the poor, in their own cities and houſes. For thus they explain it; That, in the third year after the year of releaſe, and in the ſixth year, the tithe that was wont to be carried to the place where the ſanctuary was, and there ſpent in feaſts before God, was to be beſtowed on the poor in every town where they, who paid the tithe, lived; but every firſt, ſecond, fourth, and fifth year, from the year of releaſe, it was employed in ſacred entertainments at the houſe of God. In the year of releaſe it ſelf, which was every ſeventh year, no tithes at all were paid, of any kind, becauſe all lay common: So that every year the owner of the ground ſet out a ſecond tithe; but he was not bound to carry it every year to Jeruſalem; for in the compaſs of ſeven years, four of thoſe years only were appointed for their journey thither, and two they ſtayed at home. But this is contradicted by other great men, particularly by Biſhop Mountagu, who aſſerts theſe to be two diſtinct tithes; and Joſephus ſeems plainly to be of the ſame opinion, p. 349. Old Tobit calls it τρίτην δεκάτην, the third tithe, Tobit i. 8.

Ver. 29. And the Levite, becauſe he hath no part nor inheritance with thee, and the ſtranger, and the fatherleſs, and the widow which are within thy gates, ſhall come, and ſhall eat, and be ſatisfied.] This tithe was not ſpent in joy and gladneſs, as the ſecond tithe was, ver. 26. when they went to God's dwelling place, but meerly in the relief and comfort of the poorer ſort of people, who otherwiſe might have been forced to beg, or to ſerve ſtrangers, and thereby be in danger of being perverted from their religion.

——— That the Lord thy God may bleſs thee, in all the work of thine hand which thou doeſt.] This tithe, the Jews ſay, was called the conſummation of tithes; becauſe herein the love of their neighbours was moſt eminently apparent. For it is likely, they themſelves had no ſhare in this, as they had at the feaſts upon the ſecond tithe, but is wholly ſpent upon the perſons here named. Whoſe hearts could not but be moved to pray to God for his bleſſing upon them in all their labours, which here promiſes to beſtow.

CHAP. XV.

1 The ſeventh year a year of releaſe for the poor. 7 It muſt be no let of lending or giving. 12 An Hebrew ſervant, 16 Except he will not depart, muſt in the ſeventh year go forth free and well furniſhed. 19 All firſtling males of the cattle, are to be ſanctified unto the Lord.

AT the end of every ſeven years thou ſhalt make a releaſe.

2 And this is the manner of the releaſe: Every creditor that lendeth ought unto his neighbour, ſhall releaſe it, he ſhall not exact it of his neighbour, or of his brother, becauſe it is called the LORDs releaſe.

3 Of a foreigner thou mayſt exact it again: but that which is thine with thy brother, thine hand ſhall releaſe:

4 Save when there ſhall be no poor among you: for the LORD ſhall greatly bleſs thee in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to poſſeſs it:

5 Only if thou carefully hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to obſerve to do all theſe commandments which I command thee this day.

6 For the LORD thy God bleſſeth thee, as he promiſed thee, and thou ſhalt lend unto many nations, but thou ſhalt not borrow; and thou ſhalt reign over many nations, but they ſhall not reign over thee.

7 ¶ If

7 ¶ If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren, within any of thy gates, in thy land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, thou ſhalt not harden thy heart, nor ſhut thine hand from thy poor brother:

8 But thou ſhalt open thine hand wide unto him, and ſhalt ſurely lend him ſufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth.

9 Beware that there be not a thought in thy wicked heart, ſaying, The ſeventh year, the year of releaſe is at hand: and thine eye be evil againſt thy poor brother, and thou giveſt him nought, and he cry unto the LORD againſt thee, and it be ſin unto thee.

10 Thou ſhalt ſurely give him, and thine heart ſhall not be grieved when thou giveſt unto him: becauſe that for this thing the LORD thy God ſhall bleſs thee in all thy works, and in all that thou putteſt thine hand unto.

11 For the poor ſhall never ceaſe out of the land: therefore I command thee, ſaying, Thou ſhalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land.

12 ¶ And if thy brother an Hebrew man or an Hebrew woman, be ſold unto thee, and ſerve thee ſix years; then in the ſeventh year thou ſhalt let him go free from thee.

13 And when thou ſendeſt him out free from thee, thou ſhalt not let him go away empty:

14 Thou ſhalt furniſh him liberally out of thy flock, and out of thy flour, and out of thy wine-preſs: of that wherewith the LORD thy God hath bleſſed thee, thou ſhalt give unto him.

15 And thou ſhalt remember that thou waſt a bond-man in the land of Egypt, and the LORD thy God redeemed thee, therefore I command thee this thing to day.

16 And it ſhall be if he ſay unto thee, I will not go away from thee (becauſe he loveth thee and thine houſe, becauſe he is well with thee)

17 Then thou ſhalt take an aul, and thruſt it through his ear unto the door, and he ſhall be thy ſervant for ever: and alſo unto thy maid-ſervant thou ſhalt do likewiſe.

18 It ſhall not ſeem hard unto thee, when thou ſendeſt him away free from thee; for he hath been worth a double hired ſervant to thee, in ſerving thee ſix years: and the LORD thy God ſhall bleſs thee in all that thou doeſt.

19 ¶ All the firſtling males that come of thy herd and of thy flock, thou ſhalt ſanctify unto the LORD thy God: thou ſhalt do no work with the firſtling of thy bullock, nor ſhear the firſtling of thy ſheep.

20 Thou ſhalt eat it before the LORD thy God year by year, in the place which the LORD ſhall chooſe, thou and thy houſhold.

21 And if there be any blemiſh therein, as if it be lame, or blind, or have any ill blemiſh, thou ſhalt not ſacrifice it unto the LORD thy God.

22 Thou ſhalt eat it within thy gates: the unclean and the clean perſon ſhall eat it alike, as the roe-buck, and as the hart.

23 Only thou ſhalt not eat the blood thereof: thou ſhalt pour it upon the ground as water.

Ver. 1. At the end of every ſeven years thou ſhalt make a releaſe.] That is, thou ſhalt perfectly free thy brethren from all their debts which they owe to their creditors. This year was famous not only for this, but for giving liberty to their ſervants, (as ſome think) Exod. xxi. 2. and for ſuffering their ground to reſt, Lev. xxv. 34. and for reading this law publickly to all the people, Deut. xxxi. 10.

Ver. 2. And this is the manner of the releaſe, every creditor that lendeth ought unto his neighbour, ſhall releaſe it.] It was an entire acquittance, not of debts contracted by ſale of lands or goods, to thoſe who were able to pay, but of money lent to a neighbour or friend, meerly to relieve his poverty, not to carry on trade, or to make a purchaſe. For nothing could have been more abſurd, than to have extinguiſh'd ſuch debts, whereby the borrower was inriched.

—— He ſhall not exact it of his neighbour, or of his brother.] Here the word brother is added, to explain what is meant by a neighbour, namely, an Iſraelite, or a Proſelyte entirely of their religion, who had all the privileges of an Iſraelite. Some think, that by not exacting money lent to ſuch a man, is meant no more but only forbearing to demand it in this year, becauſe there was no ſowing or reaping in it; or if he did, that he ſhould not have power to recover it by law this year, though afterward he might. But the plain meaning ſeems to be, that he ſhould be perfectly free from his debt, as a ſervant, after ſix years was from his ſervice: Though if afterwards he grew rich, in good conſcience, he was bound to pay it.

—Becauſe it is called the Lord's releaſe.] In the Hebrew, the words, ſchemitta laihovah, ſignify, that this year was a releaſe to the Lord, or for the Lord. In honour, that is, of him, who made this a year of great charity; and in obedience to whom they were bound, to be very kind to their poor brethren. But the Jews fancy, they were not bound to be ſo charitable as to make this releaſe, till the very laſt day of the year. So that if a man had borrowed money in the beginning of it, he was not acquitted till the year was expired.

Ver. 3. Of a foreigner thou mayſt exact it again.] Of an alien, as we tranſlate the word nocri, in the foregoing chapter, ver. 21. that is, of one who was neither an Iſraelite, nor proſelyted to their religion, but a meer Gentile. The only queſtion is, whether they were not to remit the debts of a Proſelyte of the gate, who, we think, is no where called their brother in the law; and therefore they were not obliged to diſcharge them from what they owed.

—— But

——— But that which is thine with thy brother, thine hand ſhall releaſe.] This ſeems to reſtrain it wholly to thoſe who were Jews, or had all the privileges of Jews.

Ver. 4. Save when there ſhall be no poor among you.] Whether we follow this tranſlation, or that, in the margin of our Bibles, it appears that they were obliged to acquit only their poor brethren; of whom they were not to exact their debts, leaſt they ſhould be tempted to flee to the Gentiles, and forſake their religion; ſo this was a proviſion ſtill againſt idolatry: Or if we underſtand it, as it is in the margin, "to the end that there be no poor among you," the ſenſe is the ſame; that they were by this charity to keep men from extreme neceſſity, which might compel them to go to beg, or ſeek for relief in ſtrange countries.

——— For the Lord ſhall greatly bleſs thee in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to poſſeſs it.] Moſes would not have them think, that they might become poor themſelves by this means; for he aſſures them, God would prevent that, by ſending his extraordinary bleſſing upon them. Cardinal Cajetan, and ſome others, underſtand this verſe as if it were a promiſe, and contained no precept in it; namely, that God would take care they ſhould not be burdened by this law, for he would ſo bleſs them, that they ſhould have no poor among them, and then they were not obliged to acquit thoſe of their debts, who were able to pay them.

Ver. 6. For the Lord thy God bleſſeth thee as he promiſed thee, and thou ſhalt lend unto many nations, but thou ſhalt not borrow.] That is they ſhould grow ſo very rich, that other nations ſhould come to borrow of them; but they be beholden to none.

——— And thou ſhalt reign over many nations, &c.] We ſuppoſe he means no more than Solomon doth, when he ſaith, "The borrower is ſervant to the lender," Prov. xxii. 7. but it may extend to their dominion over many nations, whom they conquered, till they enlarged their bounds as far as Euphrates.

Ver. 7. If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren, in any of thy gates, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou ſhalt not harden thy heart, nor ſhut thine hand from thy poor brother.] As they might be inclined to do, after the paſſing of this law; thinking with themſelves, that what they lent to ſuch a man, they ſhould never have again, but muſt loſe it, if he were not able to repay it before the year of releaſe. This ſeems to be the meaning of this verſe, which the Jews interpret not of lending, but of giving alms. It is not very material which way we take it: For he that lent a poor man, was willing to give what he lent, if he could not pay him before the year of releaſe, after which he could not demand it.

——— Thou ſhalt not harden thy heart, nor ſhut thine hand againſt thy poor brother.] Covetouſneſs proceeds from want of tenderneſs and compaſſion towards others in their miſeries; unto which nature itſelf inclines us, eſpecially to members of the ſame ſociety. And the Jews had ſeveral particular obligations to be tender-hearted, as they were all children of God after a peculiar manner, who had been wonderful kind and merciful to them, chap. xiv. 2.

Ver. 8. But thou ſhalt open thine hand wide unto him, and ſhalt ſurely lend him ſufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth.] The Jews underſtand this not merely of affording him food ſufficient to ſatisfy his hunger, and cloaths to cover his nakedneſs, and keep him warm, but furniſhing him with houſhold-goods, (if he had been forced to ſell all he had) that he might live comfortably. They even proceed ſo far as to determine, that the neighbourhood ſhould join together, and make a purſe for him, to put him in as good a condition, as he was before he fell into this want. They determine alſo the quantity that every man ſhould give; a very liberal perſon, the fifth part of what he had, if need required; a man of moderate bounty, a tenth part. If any man gave leſs when the caſe required more, he was accounted, as they phraſe it, a man of an evil eye. But notwithſtanding all theſe precepts, and their interpretations, the Jews ſo little minded their poor, that their governors were at laſt forced to lay a rate upon the rich for the maintenance of the poor, which they enabled their officers to exact.

Ver. 11. For the poor ſhall never ceaſe out of the land.] There would be always ſome or other among them, who ſtood in need of the fore-named charitable relief, by which they might be preſerved from extreme poverty; which God intended to prevent, as is plain from ver. 4. The Jeruſalem Targum underſtand this, as if there ſhould have been no poor amongſt them, if they had been obedient to God's precepts.

——— Therefore I command thee, ſaying, thou ſhalt open thine hand wide, unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy in thy land.] Here are evidently three different ſorts of perſons mentioned as objects of their charity, which may be looked upon as directing the excellent order of it. For, firſt, they were to relieve thoſe who were neareſt to them in blood, called here their brethren. Secondly, ſuch as were in great miſery. And, thirdly, ſuch as were low in the world, and required ſome aſſiſtance, but not ſo much as the former ſort. Some indeed will not admit ſuch a difference between the words poor and needy, but think the laſt ſignifies ſuch whoſe condition was calamitous; about which we think it is not worth while to diſpute: We ſhall rather obſerve, that they took exceeding great care, that none ſhould come to very great want, by the large proviſion he made for the poorer ſort of people, who had the benefit of the third tithe, mentioned in the foregoing chapter, which was wholly given to them every third year; and of the ſabbatical year, when all that grew of itſelf was common to every body; and of this releaſe of debts in the ſame year, and of the large quantity of corn, which they were bound to leave every year in the corners of their fields, with the ears that fell, and the ſheaf that was left, &c.

Ver. 12. If thy brother, an Hebrew man, or an Hebrew woman, be ſold unto thee.] Whether ſold by themſelves, or by the court of judgment for theft; but there was ſome difference between the caſe of a man and a woman. See Exod. xxi. 2, 3, &c. And the ſame law, they ſay, was to be obſerved about thoſe who were ſold by their father, or were born of Hebrew ſlaves.

——— And ſerve thee ſix years, then in the ſeventh year thou ſhalt let him go free.] Moſes doth not ſpeak of the year of releaſe, as if the perſon were then to be ſet free, tho' he had ſerved but one year, or perhaps no more than half a year before that came, but of the ſeventh year, from the time of his ſale; for he was to ſerve ſix compleat years, unleſs the Jubilee happened to intervene, when every one was ſet free, tho' he had not ſerved ſo long; but ſuch ſervants as were taken in the wars, or were ſold by Canaanites, or born of them, might be kept perpetual ſlaves, unleſs they were maimed by their maſters, with the loſs of ſome member of their body.

Ver. 13. And when thou ſendeſt him out free from thee, thou ſhalt not let him go away empty.] But beſtow ſomething upon him, for his more comfortable ſubſiſtence, when he was a freeman; and this comprehends women as well as men, as appears by the foregoing verſe. But then it is to be underſtood of ſuch as went out free by virtue of this law, after they had ſerved ſix years, not of ſuch as were redeemed by their friends, or redeemed themſelves with their own money, Lev. xxv. 18. for ſuch might be ſuppoſed not to need their maſter's kindneſs, as they did who had nothing to help them out of their ſlavery.

Ver. 14. Thou ſhalt furniſh him liberally out of thy flock, and out of thy flour, and out of thy wine-preſs.] That they might put themſelves in a way of living well in the world, which they were not able to do without this aſſiſtance, becauſe what they got in their ſix years ſervice, was wholly for their maſter, and not for themſelves. Moſes doth not preſcribe a certain meaſure to their bounty, but leaves every man to expreſs his affection freely towards God, and towards his neighbour. But the Hebrews ſay, they were bound to give them at leaſt thirty ſhekels of ſilver.

Ver. 15. And thou ſhalt remember that thou waſt a bond-man in the land of Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee.] And did not bring them empty out of their ſlavery, but loaded with ſilver, and gold, and raiment, Exod. xii. 35. by which bounty of God to themſelves, they might take the beſt meaſure of their duty to their poor brethren, when they were diſmiſſed from ſervitude.

Ver. 16. And it ſhall be if he ſay unto thee, I will not go away from thee, becauſe he loveth thee and thine houſe, becauſe he is well with thee.] Maimonides infers from theſe words, that there was to be reciprocal love between the ſervant and his maſter; for if the ſervant loved his maſter, yet if his maſter did not love him, his ear was not bored, for he could not take content in his ſtaying with him. But theſe words ſuppoſe his maſter's kindneſs to him by his good uſage of him.

Ver. 17. Then thou ſhalt take an awl, and thruſt it through his ear unto the door, &c.] But firſt he was to bring him before the judges, that he might there in open court profeſs the ſame that he had done to his maſter, and thereby make it appear, there was no fraud or deceit in the buſineſs, and that his maſter did not keep him againſt his will, contrary to this law, Exod. xxi. 6.

—— And alſo unto thy maid-ſervant thou ſhalt do likewiſe.] This relates only to the not ſending maid ſervants away empty; not to the boring their ears, if they had no mind to be freed, for that was not uſed, if we may believe the Hebrew doctors, to maid ſervants. It was ſufficient, if they had a mind to ſtay with their maſters, that they addicted themſelves, in ſolemn words, to their ſervice for ever. But there were many differences between a man ſervant and a maid ſervant, at leaſt in ſome caſes. See Exod. xxi. 7. which are explained with great nicety by the Hebrew doctors; but with which we need not trouble the reader, becauſe there is no ſuch ſlavery among us in theſe days.

Ver. 18. It ſhall not ſeem hard unto thee when thou ſendeſt him away free from thee.] It is plain by this, that Moſes returns to what he was ſpeaking of, ver. 12, 13, &c. concerning their not letting their ſervants go away empty, when they had their freedom; for this was the chief thing that could ſeem hard to them.

——— For he hath been worth a double hired ſervant to thee, in ſerving thee ſix years.] Twice as long as an hired ſervant, and for nothing. So that conſidering what wages he gave the other, and how ſmall a price, perhaps, they paid for him, they would find themſelves gainers by ſuch ſlaves, and therefore ſhould not think much to give them a gratuity when they ſent them away.

—— Thou ſhalt do no work with the firſtling of thy bullock, nor ſhear the firſtling of thy ſheep.] Beſide the firſtling males, which alone were ſeparated to the Lord, there were alſo firſtling females; which, tho' they were not ſanctified to him as the males were, yet were not to be employed by the owners, as the reſt of their cattle, but offered as peace-offerings to God, of which they themſelves had a good ſhare, tho' ſome part of them was given to the prieſts.

CHAP. XVI.

1 The feaſt of the paſſover. 9 Of weeks. 13 Of tabernacles. 16 Every male muſt offer, as he is able, at theſe three feaſts. 18 Of judges and juſtice. 21 Groves and images are forbidden.

OBSERVE the month of Abib, and keep the paſſover unto the LORD thy God: for in the month of Abib the LORD thy God brought thee forth out of Egypt by night.

2 Thou ſhalt therefore ſacrifice the paſſover unto the LORD thy God, of the flock, and the herd, in the place which the LORD ſhall chooſe to place his name there.

3 Thou ſhalt eat no leavened bread with it: ſeven days ſhalt thou eat unleavened bread therewith, even the bread of affliction (for thou cameſt forth out of the land of Egypt in haſte) that thou mayſt remember the day when thou cameſt forth out of the land of Egypt, all the days of thy life.

4 And there ſhall be no leavened bread ſeen with thee in all thy coaſts ſeven days, neither ſhall there any thing of the fleſh which thou ſacrificedſt the firſt day at even remain all night until the morning.

5 Thou mayſt not ſacrifice the paſſover within any of thy gates, which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

6 But at the place which the LORD thy God ſhall chooſe to place his name in, there thou ſhalt ſacrifice the paſſover at even, at the going down of the ſun, at the ſeaſon that thou cameſt forth out of Egypt.

7 And thou ſhalt roaſt and eat it in the place which the LORD thy God ſhall chooſe: and thou ſhalt turn in the morning, and go unto thy tents.

8 Six days thou ſhalt eat unleavened bread, and on the ſeventh day ſhall be a ſolemn aſſembly to the LORD thy God: thou ſhalt do no work therein.

9 ¶ Seven weeks ſhalt thou number unto thee: begin to number the ſeven weeks from ſuch time as thou beginneſt to put the ſickle to the corn.

10 And thou ſhalt keep the feaſt of weeks unto the LORD thy God with a tribute of a free-will-offering of thine hand, which thou ſhalt give unto the LORD thy God, according as the LORD thy God hath bleſſed thee.

11 And thou ſhalt rejoice before the LORD thy God, thou, and thy ſon, and thy daughter, and thy man-ſervant, and thy maid-ſervant, and the Levite that is within thy gates, and the ſtranger, and the fatherleſs, and the widow, that are among you in the place which the LORD thy God hath choſen to place his name there.

12 And thou ſhalt remember that thou waſt a bond-man in Egypt: and thou ſhalt obſerve and do theſe ſtatutes.

13 ¶ Thou ſhalt obſerve the feaſt of tabernacles ſeven days, after that thou haſt gathered in thy corn, and thy wine.

14 And thou ſhalt rejoice in thy feaſt, thou, and thy ſon, and thy daughter, and thy man-ſervant, and thy maid-ſervant, and the Levite, the ſtranger, and the fatherleſs, and the widow, that are within thy gates.

15 Seven days ſhalt thou keep a ſolemn feaſt unto the LORD thy God, in the place which the LORD ſhall chooſe: becauſe the LORD thy God ſhall bleſs thee in in all thy increaſe, and in all the works of thine hands, therefore thou ſhalt ſurely rejoice.

16 ¶ Three times in a year ſhall all thy males appear before the LORD thy God, in the place which he ſhall chooſe: in the feaſt of unleavened bread, and in the feaſt of weeks, and in the feaſt of tabernacles: and they ſhall not appear before the LORD empty.

17 Every man ſhall give as he is able, according to the bleſſing of the LORD thy God which he hath given thee.

18 ¶ Judges and officers ſhalt thou make thee in all thy gates which the LORD thy God giveth thee throughout thy tribes: and they ſhall judge the people with juſt judgment.

19 Thou ſhalt not wreſt judgment, thou ſhalt not reſpect perſons, neither take a gift: for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wiſe, and pervert the words of the righteous.

20 That which is altogether juſt ſhalt thou follow, that thou mayſt live, and inherit the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

21 ¶ Thou ſhalt not plant thee a grove of any trees near unto the altar of the LORD thy God, which thou ſhalt make thee.

22 Neither ſhalt thou ſet thee up any image, which the LORD thy God hateth.

Ver. 18. Judges and officers ſhalt thou make thee.] To ſee that theſe, and all other laws, were duly obſerved. Moſes de Cotzi, upon theſe words, makes this difference between Schofetim and Schoterim, that the former, (viz. judges) were the ſenators in the ſeveral courts, who decided cauſes; and the other (officers) were no more than miniſters attending the court, to keep the people in order, with a ſtaff and a whip, and to execute the decrees and orders of the judges; whom they appointed not only in the court, but in the ſtreets, looking after weights and meaſures in the market, and correcting offenders. Maimonides alſo makes them the ſame with our apparitors; or thoſe who, in the Roman law, are called officiales, as Conſtantine l'Empereur obſerves, p. 362. upon Cornelius Bertram, (who miſtook them for a ſort of judges) and in the Digeſts, executores; and in the New Teſtament, πράκτορας, exactors, Luke xii. 58. Joſephus makes them to have been publick criers; and ſo we find them employed, ch. xx. 8. Joſh. i. 11. But then ſome of them, at leaſt, ſeem to have been an honourable ſort, like our heralds, Joſhua xxiii. 2. and all of them were men of authority, though but young men, as Maimonides deſcribes them, who had not attained the years and knowledge of the doctors of the law, and therefore were unfit to be judges. But the Jews place them next under their wiſe men, or doctors, and above their ſcribes and clerks, as Mr. Thorndike obſerves, in his Review of the Rites of the Church, p. 94. But that they were certainly only under-officers, and not judges, there is another argument; which is, that Solomon, upon this account, commends the ants that they carefully do their buſineſs, though they have no Schoter ſet over them, Prov. vi. 7. to force or affright them to it.

——— In all thy gates.] That is, in every city, as Mr. Selden obſerves out of the Jewiſh writers, Lib. 7. de Jure Nat. & Gent. cap. 5. ſect. 1. where he ſhews they interpret it, "in all the cities of Iſrael, both within the "land and without," where Iſrael had any juriſdiction. Which is ſo true, that they had conſiſtories whereſoever they were diſperſed, for the determining all differences ariſing out of the law, though not as to the power of life and death, which was ſeldom granted them by their ſovereigns. Thus we learn from Philo, that there was ſuch a conſiſtory at Alexandria; and the little chronicle, called Sedar Olam Zuta, tells us of the like in Babylonia. And after the deſtruction of the temple, it is manifeſt, not only by the Jewiſh writings, but by Epiphanius, and others, that there continued a conſiſtory at Tiberias for many ages.

But tho' this be granted, yet theſe words, in all thy gates, may ſuggeſt alſo the part of the city where they kept their court, which was in the gate: for there all publick buſineſs was tranſacted in the time of Abraham and Jacob, and continued ſo afterward. Inſomuch that the higheſt court in the time of Moſes aſſembled at the door of the tabernacle, Numb. xi. 24. the gate among the Hebrews being the ſame with the forum among the Romans; as we ſee by 1 Kings vii. 1. where Eliſha foretells, at what low rates proviſion ſhould be ſold on the morrow in the gate of Samaria. Where, it is evident, there was a place ſo ſpacious, that Ahab aſſembled four hundred prophets there, before him and king Jehoſhaphat, who had, no doubt, both of them numerous attendants, 2 Kings xxii. 10. And before this time David, it is ſaid, upon the news of Abſalom's death, went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept; which we may well think was the council chamber, 2 Sam. xxiii. 33. And when Joab adviſed him to come down, and ſhew himſelf publickly, it is ſaid, he roſe and ſat in the gate, and all the people came before him, chap. xix. 6. and therefore in theſe cities, which were ſo large, there was ſome place, we make no queſtion, where there were ſeats for the judges.

——— Which the Lord thy God giveth thee throughout thy tribes.] In the cities of every tribe, there was to be ſuch a court erected, that people might have juſtice eaſily and ſpeedily done them. And the Talmudiſts unanimouſly agree, that the number of judges was proportionable to the greatneſs of the city wherein they were placed, and of the cauſes which they decided. Where there were leſs than one hundred and twenty families, in any town or city, there was ſeated the loweſt court of all, conſiſting of three judges, which tried only actions of debt, or damages done by man or beaſt, or defamation, &c. But in cities where there were above an hundred and twenty families, there was placed an higher court, conſiſting of twenty-three judges, who tryed capital cauſes. Joſephus indeed differs from the Talmudiſts, about the number, for he ſaith they were but ſeven. Both of them, it is likely, may ſay true, with reſpect to different times and places; for it cannot but be preſumed that both he and they underſtood the ſtate of their country in ſuch public matters. But at the place where God choſe to ſettle his ſanctuary, unto which all the country reſorted at certain times, there was a ſupreme court over all, conſiſting, as the Talmudiſts ſay, of ſeventy perſons, beſide their preſident; who judged all manner of cauſes; and none but they could judge a falſe prophet, or a city fallen to idolatry. All appeals were made to them; but from them there was none, their ſentence being final.

Such a court, it is certain, there was in future ages, whoſe number was according to that of the LXX. elders choſen by God himſelf, to aſſiſt Moſes in the government, and endued with the ſpirit of judgment, to qualify them for that office, Numb. xi. 25. In the time of Moſes, they ſat at the door of the tabernacle, as we obſerved before; and afterward at Shiloh, or whereſoever the ſanctuary was. Tho' it may be doubted, whether after Moſes's death, and the death of the elders, there was a court conſiſting of ſo many judges. Nay, it is highly probable, that this conſiſtory it ſelf was not conſtantly ſettled there, according to law, till the time of Jehoſhaphat, at leaſt not the inferior conſiſtories before-mentioned, which were to be ſettled in every city; for if they were, what reaſon can be given, why the judges (Judges v. 10. x. 4. xii. 14.) and Samuel ſhould ride circuits up and down the country, to miniſter juſtice according to the law, when the people might have had it every day in their ſeveral cities? and for this reaſon, it is likely, Jehoſhaphat himſelf, deſiring to put this law in force, firſt ſent ſome great men, who went about through all the cities of Judah, 2 Chron. xvii. 8, 9. and then ſettled judges according to this law throughout all the fenced cities of Judah, city by city, as well as in Jeruſalem, 2 Chron. xix. 5, 8. See Mr. Thorndike, in his Rites of the Church in a Chriſtian ſtate, cap. iv. p. 226. where he obſerves, that Joſephus, in expreſs terms, rendering a reaſon of the great lewdneſs, upon which the war againſt Benjamin followed, attributes it to this, that theſe courts of judgment were not eſtabliſhed according to this law, Lib. v. Antiq. cap. 2. But tho' this, we think, be very evident, yet it is ſcarce credible, that David, after he was ſet upon the throne of God in peace, did not take care to ſettle theſe courts, as he did to regulate a great many other things. And indeed we find a plain intimation of it, in 1 Chron. xxvi. 29. but ſucceeding kings, it is probable, were negligent in keeping up this conſtitution, till the time of Jehoſhaphat, who exerciſed his authority to inforce the exact practice of this law.

Ver. 20. That which is altogether juſt, ſhalt thou follow, &c.] The words in the Hebrew are far more emphatical as they are in the margin, juſtice, juſtice, ſhalt thou follow.. Be attentive to nothing but the juſtice of the cauſe, and do it to all perſons equally.

Ver. 21. Thou ſhalt not plant thee a grove of any trees near unto the altar of the Lord thy God, which thou ſhalt make thee.] It is evident, from this, that the great aim of Moſes was to preſerve the Iſraelites from idolatry; and their hiſtory informs us, that it was very needful to inculcate this precaution ſo frequently: For, notwithſtanding all that Moſes could ſay, they degenerated immediately after the death of Joſhua, into the idolatrous cuſtoms of Canaan, and could never be entirely brought off from their idolatry, till the Babyloniſh captivity. And theſe words may be tranſlated, Thou ſhalt not plant thee a grove, nor make any wood, (i. e. a wooden image) near to the altar of the Lord thy God. For the very word we tranſlate grove, ſometimes imports the idol in the grove, as well as the grove it ſelf. See 2 Kings xxiii. 6. and Selden De Diis Syr's, ſyntagma 11. cap. 2. Certain it is, that nothing was more ancient in the eaſt, than altars with groves of trees about them; which rendered the place very ſhady and delightful in thoſe hot countries. They are ſo often joined in Scripture, that it would be tedious to enumerate all the places, Exod. xxxi. 13. Deut. xii. 3. Judges vi. 25, &c. Cadmus is thought by ſome to have brought this cuſtom into Greece, out of the eaſt; and they planted the trees ſo thick, and theſe were ſo large and ſhady, as to give the place a very dark and ſolemn air; which infuſed a kind of horror into thoſe who entered them. And they became hereby the better accommodated to the practice of thoſe obſcene rites, by which the malignant dæmon of the place was worſhipped. For the Gentile cuſtom had devoted theſe ſituations to the infernal gods, and anciently conſecrated them as ſepulchres or temples for their heroes. That the Iſraelites, therefore, might be preſerved from ſacrificing to the dead, and from all impurities, (by both which they afterwards polluted themſelves,) they are prohibited from planting a grove, or even a ſingle tree, near the altar of God; for the Heathens thought there was a ſacredneſs in trees themſelves, which they dedicated to their gods, and honoured in various manners. See chap. xii. 2, 3. And therefore the Jews ſay, they might not plant trees in the court of the temple, or in the mountain of the houſe, as they call it, for the ornament or beauty of God's houſe. And they aſſigned this reaſon for it, becauſe it was an idolatrous rite to plant trees near their altars, that the people might there meet together. See Selden, lib. ii. De Jure Nat. & Gent cap. 6. p. 116. and Dr. Spencer, lib. ii. cap. 16. ſect. 1, 2. Ezekiel Spanhemius, in his moſt learned obſervations upon Callimachus, hath ſhewn, that they planted odoriferous trees in ſome groves, to render them more inviting. Whence the grove, dedicated to Pallas, is called, by that poet, τεθυωμένος ἄλσος, tho' that may ſignify only a grove conſecrated by many ſacrifices. And the vulgar groves were planted with pines, fir, cypreſs, laurel, olives, vines, and other lovely trees, eſpecially oaks, which grew to a great height, and in which both altars and temples were erected. See the hymn, in Dianam, ver. 38. p. 146. and in Palladem, ver. 61. p. 595. and in Cererem, ver. 38, 39. p. 689. where he mentions the black poplar, as a tree of which her grove conſiſted, under the ſhade of which the nymphs delighted to dance at noon. And thence theſe ſhady places, conſecrated to their gods, were called ψυκτῆρες, becauſe of their refreſhing coolneſs, as he obſerves out of Athenæus, ver. 47. p. 695. And, indeed, nothing is plainer in the holy ſcriptures, than that theſe groves related to idolatry.

Ver. 22. Neither ſhalt thou ſet thee up any image.] The Hebrew word Matzebah is commonly tranſlated by the LXX. στήλην, a pillar, and ſo we tranſlate it in the margin. For as it was unlawful to ſet up the ſtatue of a man, or any other creature, ſo it was as contrary to religion to ſet up a pillar, or an altar, or any ſuch like ſtructure, for publick aſſemblies to be held about them, tho' they worſhipped there the true God. So Maimonides reports the ſenſe of their doctors: A ſtatue or pillar ſignifies any work raiſed up, that religious aſſemblies may be made there, tho' they be for the worſhip of the Divine Majeſty; for this is a practice among idolaters. And ſo Pauſanius confeſſes, (in Achaicis) that in the moſt ancient times, among all the Grecians, τιμὰς Θεῶν ἀντὶ ἀγαλμάτων εἶχον ἄργοὶ λίθοι, rude ſtones had divine honours rendered to them, inſtead of ſtatues or images.

— Which the Lord thy God hateth.] Hence it ſufficiently appears, that this was an idolatrous practice, which is more odious to God than any thing elſe. And thus the Iſraelites, we ſee, underſtood it, being ready to take arms againſt their brethren on the other ſide Jordan, when they heard they had erected an altar there (taking it to be ſuch a ſtructure as is here forbdiden) but were appeaſed when they underſtood, that it was not intended for religious worſhip, Joſh. xxii. 18.

CHAP. XVII.

1 The things ſacrificed muſt be ſound. 2 Idolaters muſt be ſlain. 8 Hard controverſies are to be determined by the prieſts and judges. 12 The contemner of that determination muſt die. 14 The election, 16 And duty of a king.

THOU ſhalt not ſacrifice unto the LORD thy God any bullock or ſheep, wherein is blemiſh, or any evil-favouredneſs: for that is an abomination unto the LORD thy God.

2 ¶ If there be found among you within any of thy gates which the LORD thy God giveth thee, man or woman that hath wrought wickedneſs in the ſight of the LORD thy God, in tranſgreſſing his covenant,

3 And hath gone and ſerved other gods, and worſhipped them, either the ſun, or moon, or any of the hoſt of heaven, which I have not commanded;

4 And it be told thee, and thou haſt heard of it, and inquired diligently, and behold, it be true, and the thing certain, that ſuch abomination is wrought in Iſrael:

5 Then ſhalt thou bring forth that man or that woman (which have committed that wicked thing) unto thy gates, even that man or that woman, and ſhalt ſtone them with ſtones, till they die.

6 At

6 At the mouth of two witneſſes, or three witneſſes, ſhall he that is worthy of death be put to death; but at the mouth of one witneſs he ſhall not be put to death.

7 The hands of the witneſſes ſhall be firſt upon him to put him to death, and afterward the hands of all the people: ſo thou ſhalt put the evil away from among you.

8 ¶ If there ariſe a matter too hard for thee in judgment, between blood and blood, between plea and plea, and between ſtroke and ſtroke, being matters of controverſy within thy gates: then ſhalt thou ariſe, and get thee up into the place which the LORD thy God ſhall chuſe;

9 And thou ſhalt come unto the prieſts the Levites, and unto the judge that ſhall be in thoſe days, and inquire; and they ſhall ſhew thee the ſentence of judgment.

10 And thou ſhalt do according to the ſentence which they of that place (which the LORD ſhall chuſe) ſhall ſhew thee, and thou ſhalt obſerve to do according to all that they inform thee:

11 According to the ſentence of the law which they ſhall teach thee, and according to the judgment which they ſhall tell thee thou ſhalt do: thou ſhalt not decline from the ſentence which they ſhall ſhew thee, to the right hand nor to the left.

12 And the man that will do ſo preſumptuouſly, and will not hearken unto the prieſt (that ſtandeth to miniſter there before the LORD thy God) or unto the judge, even that man ſhall die: and thou ſhalt put away the evil from Iſrael.

13 And all the people ſhall hear, and fear, and do no more preſumptuouſly.

14 ¶ When thou art come unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, and ſhalt poſſeſs it, and ſhalt dwell therein, and ſhalt ſay, I will ſet a king over me, like as all the nations that are about me:

15 Thou ſhalt in any wiſe ſet him king over thee, whom the LORD thy God ſhall chuſe: one from among thy brethren ſhalt thou ſet king over thee: thou mayeſt not ſet a ſtranger over thee, which is not thy brother.

16 But he ſhall not multiply horſes to himſelf, nor cauſe the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he ſhould multiply horſes: foraſmuch as the LORD hath ſaid unto you, Ye ſhall henceforth return no more that way.

17 Neither ſhall he multiply wives to himſelf, that his heart turn not away: neither ſhall he greatly multiply to himſelf ſilver and gold.

18 And it ſhall be when he ſitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, that he ſhall write him a copy of this law in a book, out of that which is before the prieſts the Levites.

19 And it ſhall be with him, and he ſhall read therein all the days of his life: that he may learn to fear the LORD his God, to keep all the words of this law, and theſe ſtatutes, to do them:

20 That his heart be not lifted up above his brethren, and that he turn not aſide from the commandment, to the right hand or to the left: to the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom; he, and his children in the midſt of Iſrael.

Ver. 8. If there ariſe a matter too hard for thee in judgment.] Moſes now ſpeaks again of the courts of judgment, which he had ordered to be erected in all their cities, when they came into the land of Canaan, chap. xvi. 18. and who might find ſome cauſes to be ſo difficult that they could not determine them.

——— Between blood and blood.] The plain and obvious meaning of theſe words is, that there might be a doubt whether a man had committed wilful murder, or only caſual, and conſequently, whether he ſhould have the benefit of the city of refuge, or be taken from it.

——— Between plea and plea.] As the former words belong to criminal cauſes, ſo theſe relate to civil; ſuch as ſuits about debts, or purchaſes of lands or houſes, &c.

——— And between ſtroke and ſtroke.] It doth not ſeem reaſonable to us, that this ſhould be interpreted of the leproſy, (which is often called a plague or ſtroke) tho' the Jews ſo underſtand it, for that was to be judged ſolely by the prieſts; whereas he ſpeaks alſo of other judges: therefore the meaning is, concerning any wound or hurt which a man had ſuſtained in his body, from the injurious treatment of another perſon, with reſpect to which, if the judges could not agree, but were divided in their opinions, either about the fact it ſelf, or the puniſhment to be inflicted, an appeal was to be made to a higher court.

——— Being matters of controverſy.] Or contention and ſtrife, that is, diſputes ariſing about them, which could not be determined by the judges in theſe courts below.

——— Within thy gates.] Where God commanded judges and officers to be ſettled, chap. xvi. 18. and therefore here he ſpeaks of the inferior courts of judgment, that were in the leſſer cities of their ſeveral tribes.

——— Then ſhalt thou ariſe, and get thee up unto the place which the Lord thy God ſhall chuſe.] Where the ſupreme court was ſettled in the chief city of the kingdom. While they continued in the wilderneſs, the captains of thouſands, and hundreds, and fifties, and tens, whom Moſes conſtituted by the advice of Jethro) judged the cauſes of the people under Moſes himſelf, to whom God joyned ſeventy perſons for his aſſiſtance; all hard cauſes being brought before him. But this authority of the captains laſted no longer than during their pilgrimage in the wilderneſs; for when they came to Canaan, the law required judges and officers to be ordained in every city; who, if there aroſe any difference about the law, are here ordered to repair to the place where the ſanctuary was, for there the higheſt court ſat, as the ſucceſſors of Moſes, and his conſiſtory of ſeventy elders, mentioned Numb. xi. 16, 24, &c. who judged all different cauſes while he lived.

Ver. 9. And thou ſhalt come unto the prieſts the Levites, and unto the judge.] Who muſt be ſuppoſed to be reſident in this place, where the ſanctuary was. And by theſe words, the prieſts the Levites, the Jews underſtand as if he had ſaid, the prieſts of the tribe of Levi, or the ſons of Levi; for ſo he ſpeaks in chap. xxi. 5. And Mr. Selden produces many other inſtances of the like phraſe, lib. 2. de Synedr. cap. 8. n. 2, 3. and ſhews they are ſo deſcribed, as the Jews think, to exclude all others that had been prieſts, before God took the ſons of Aaron peculiarly to ſerve him in this office. But the Levites, as well as prieſts, they unanimouſly agree, were capable to be members of this great Sanhedrim; which, they all likewiſe ſay, did not conſiſt only of prieſts and Levites, but of any perſons of other tribes, who were fit to be promoted to this dignity. Nay, they ſay, if there was not one prieſt or Levite in the court, it was a lawful judicature; for neither the high-prieſt himſelf, nor any other perſon, had a place here merely for his birth, unleſs his learning in the law was anſwerable: So Maimonides, and others. And thoſe other members, who were not prieſts, nor Levites, they think are comprehended under the word judge, which, though it be in the ſingular number, may be thought to ſignify more than one, as appears from chap. xix. 17. where it is ſaid expreſsly, they ſhall bring the controverſy there mentioned, before the prieſts and the judges. And farther, that judge, after the manner of this language, may ſignify judges, Conſtantine l'Empereur gathers from ver. 12. where prieſt in the ſingular number is uſed for thoſe who are here called prieſts in the plural, Annot. in Corn. Bertram, p. 389.

But howſoever this be, it ſeems to us, that though the prieſts and Levites were not the only perſons of whom this high court conſiſted, (the members of which might be choſen out of any tribe, where they could find men qualified) yet they are here firſt mentioned, becauſe they were likely to be the moſt capable perſons to exerciſe this authority, eſpecially in the firſt conſtitution of this commonwealth, when they were newly enter'd into Canaan. For all other perſons were then buſily employed in looking after the inheritance that was fallen to them, and ſettling the affairs of their ſeveral families; whereby they were rendered leſs able to attend unto this weighty office. But the tribe of Levi having no inheritance among them, as is often repeated in theſe books, and no care about husbandry, and ſuch like affairs, had a full leiſure both to ſtudy the laws of God, and to judge according to them; eſpecially being appointed by God to teach Jacob his judgments, and Iſrael his law, chap. xxxiii. 10. Beſide, this court being ſettled at the place of God's worſhip, where many prieſts and Levites always neceſſarily attended, they were moſt ready, without any inconvenience to themſelves, to execute this office of judges, having their maintenance from the publick, which no other perſons had. But otherwiſe, they had no more right than other men, to be members of this court, which we cannot certainly ſay conſiſted of ſeventy judges, together with their Naſi, that is, their prince, or preſident; nor that they always ſat at the place here appointed; for there were ſometimes great troubles in the land, and they were under the power of their enemies, which extremely diſturbed their government, and made it neceſſary for God to raiſe them up extraordinary judges, becauſe the power of this court was broken in pieces. So Mr. Selden himſelf acknowledges, that there were great intermiſſions of their ſitting in the times of Antiochus, Epiphanes, and of Herod the great, Lib. 11. de Synedriis, cap. xiv. n. 3. And therefore, why not in the times, when they were oppreſſed by the Moabites, Ammonites, Philiſtines, and other cruel neighbours in the days of the judges? And thus Grotius, Hermannus, Conringius, (to name no more) here underſtand the word judge, who is joined with the prieſt and Levites.

——— And unto the judge.] The fore-named authors thus tranſlate this verſe, "Thou ſhalt come unto "the prieſt, the Levites, or unto the judge that ſhall be "in thoſe days." Where by judge they underſtand ſuch as Othniel, Ehud, Gideon, Jepthah, Sampſon, Samuel, and others, whom God raiſed up, when they were oppreſſed by their enemies, and in great confuſions, to govern his people; which they did with the higheſt authority, being equal to kings, except only that they kept not royal ſtate or equipage, but are plainly called by that, Judg. xvii. 6. xix. 1. xxi. 25. Now though the prieſts and Levites (i. e. that court, of which they made a conſiderable part) were the uſual ſupreme judges of controverſies, yet the judge, when God raiſed one up, was endued with an extraordinary power above theirs; to whom the people therefore reſorted for his deciſion. For juſt as all ordinary magiſtrates among the Romans gave place to a dictator, when they had one, ſo all the Hebrew magiſtrates did to ſuch a judge, when God appointed him, who determined all manner of controverſies; as, at other times, the other judges, whether prieſts or others, were wont to do.

We know but one objection againſt this, which is, that thoſe extraordinary judges were not fixed, as far as we can find, in the place where the ſanctuary was; unleſs we may judge of all the reſt by Eli and Samuel, who ſeem to have been ſettled there. But we muſt conſider, that they were not confined by their commiſſion, which was not grounded on this law, to any one certain place, but left at liberty to live where they thought moſt convenient, for the diſcharge of their truſt, in the reformation of the people. And the truth of what we ſaid concerning their ſupreme power, plainly appears in Samuel, who went up and down the country executing judgment, when Shilch was deſtroyed, and had no court, like that which the Jews ſpeak of, to aſſiſt him. But when he needed aſſiſtance, he appointed his ſons to be judges, 1 Sam. viii. 1. of whom when the elders complained, ver. 4. becauſe they did not perform their duty well, it was to himſelf, and not to any other perſon; and they deſire not a Sanhedrim, but a king to judge them, ver. 5. which petition we do not find that he communicated to the Sanhedrim, but only unto God; nor is any mention made of them in the choice of a king, or after he was choſen, in the hiſtory of their kings, till Jehoſaphat's time, no more than there is in the book of Joſhua and Judges; where we read, that when there was no king, (that is, judge) in Iſrael, every man did what was right in his own eyes; which is a ſign that there wanted ſuch a court to keep them in order. After the time of Jehoſaphat, who ſettled judges in every city, (as we obſerved, chap. xvi. 18.) they continued, it is plain, till the captivity; but what number there was of them, we do not know. After the captivity, Ezra and Nehemiah ſeem to have done all themſelves; ſee Neh. ix, x. which makes it very probable, that though there were judges appointed according to the direction of this law, yet the exerciſe of their power was often interrupted by the great changes which were in that nation; and there was no ſuch Sanhedrim, as the Talmudiſts deſcribe, till the time of the Maccabees. For the very name of Sanhedrim plainly ſhews its original to have been, when the Greek tongue was common among the Jews; and that was, when the kings of Syria and Egypt (who were of the Macedonian race) had the chief power in Paleſtine.

——— And enquire; and they ſhall ſhew thee the ſentence of judgment.] They were bound to determine the controverſy; and whatſoever ſentence they gave, it was to ſtand good till it was reverſed by other judges of the ſame authority: For the Jews, who underſtand all this of the great Sanhedrim, and ſcan every ſyllable with great nicety, will have the words juſt before (that ſhall be in thoſe days) to ſignify, that every ſentence muſt hold in the time when it is given: ſo that if this court determined a matter, which in after-times, by other judges of the ſame court, ſhould be decided in a different manner, that ſecond ſentence was to ſtand, as being the opinion of thoſe days. For this ſentence was, in their judgment, the meaning of the law, by which they were all to be governed; and, if there was no tradition in the caſe, they judged themſelves as well as they could.

Ver. 10. And thou ſhalt do according to the ſentence which they of that place] That is, the high court which ſits there, or the judge who preſides in thoſe days.

——— Which the Lord ſhall chuſe.] The Jews, who underſtand this only of the Sanhedrim, ſay it was not lawful for them to judge cauſes, at leaſt, not thoſe which were capital, in any other place. See Selden, lib. 11. de Synedriis, cap. xv. n. 6, 7, 10.

——— And thou ſhalt obſerve to do according to all that they inform thee.] Some fancy he ſpeaks to the inferior judges, who brought the cauſe thither, to have the opinion of this higheſt court, who were then to pronounce ſentence according according to it; but whoever brought the controverſy before this court, when the inferior could not determine it, they gave the ſentence, in which he requires the contending parties to acquieſce, and to do according to their determination; which did not concern queſtions of faith, as if men were to believe whatſoever they ſhould teach them, but ſuch controverſies as are mentioned, ver. 8. about civil or criminal matters, which they were finally to determine; ſo that men ſhould not farther controvert the matter, but reſt in their deciſions. For in all governments there muſt be an end of ſuits ſome where or other; and God required all his people to ſubmit to the ſentence of this court: for ſo the words run in the Hebrew, "And "thou ſhalt do according to the ſentence which they ſhall "ſhew thee, from the place which the Lord thy God "ſhall chuſe;" that is, from the ſupreme court of judicature, which reſided where God himſelf did. For if men had been permitted to diſagree to their ſentence, the very end and uſe of this court had been taken away, as Maimonides ſpeaks, in his More Nevochim, P. iii. cap. 41.

Ver. 11. According to the ſentence of the law which they ſhall teach thee.] In the Hebrew, according to the mouth, or the word of the law, which they ſhall teach there; that is, according to the interpretation which they gave of the law.

——— And according to the judgment which they ſhall teach thee, ſhalt thou do.] Pay, for inſtance, the money, which they ſhall judge to be due to another man: For he doth not ſpeak of their doing whatſoever they ordered them, (as if they could controul the commands of God,) but of obeying the ſentence of this court, about thoſe matters which were in queſtion between one man and another, ver. 8. who were not to be judges in their own cauſe, but reſt in the judgment of thoſe whom God had made the ſupreme interpreters of his law.

——— Thou ſhalt not decline from the ſentence which they ſhall ſhew thee, &c.] They were not to make the leaſt alteration in their ſentence: for tho' they might think it was wrong, and the ſenate perhaps did really err, and might be better informed afterwards, which the law ſuppoſes, and in that caſe orders an expiatory ſacrifice, Lev. iv. 13. yet it was not lawful for any man to act contrary to their preſent decree, nor to teach the contrary, whatſoever his private opinion might be.

Ver. 12. And the man that will do ſo preſumptuouſly, and will not hearken.] This they underſtand not barely of a private man, that would not ſtand to their ſentence, but of an elder, or inferior judge, who preſumed to contradict it; as Mr. Selden ſhews, lib 3. de Synedr. cap. 3.

——— Unto the prieſt.] It is commonly thought, as we obſerved, ver. 8. that the ſingular number is here put for the plural; and that the meaning is, if any man would not hearken to the higheſt court of judgment, which conſiſted commonly of many prieſts, he ſhould die for his contempt: But they have a great deal of reaſon on their ſide, who inſiſt upon the letter of this word prieſt, and of that which follows, or the judge, (underſtanding both of ſingle perſons) and take the high prieſt only to be here meant; who ſeems to be deſcribed in the next words, that ſtands to miniſter there before the Lord thy God. For when God did not raiſe up a judge to govern his people, the high prieſt was the ſupreme governor under God until the days of David; and ſo they were after the captivity. Hence it is, as Grotius obſerves, (Lib. de Imperio Summarum Poteſtatum circa ſacra, cap. 9. ſect. 4) that Cohen is a name common to prieſts and princes: for among a great many nations antiently, he ſhews, the prieſts had the higheſt power; particularly among the Cappadocians, (Strabo, who was of that country, ſaith) the ſacerdotal dignity was next to the regal; but howſoever this word be interpreted, the crime, here mentioned, was contumacy, in not ſubmitting to the ſentence of the higheſt authority, whether it was veſted in one perſon, or more; whereby the government was in danger to be broken; and therefore God orders ſuch a perſon to be put to death.

——— Even that man ſhall die.] The Jews, who interpret this of a judge in inferior courts, who preſumed to contradict the judgment of the ſupreme court, have tempered the ſeverity of this law, by ſeveral explications and exceptions; which have regard either to the manner of paſſing this decree by the higheſt court, which an inferior diſobeyed; and that was, when a cauſe came before them upon an appeal, (for it was not ſo criminal to diſobey every ſentence of the ſupreme court, but only ſuch as theſe) or to the place where it was made, which was to be no where elſe, but at God's dwelling-place, or to the things about which the decree was made; which ſome will have to be only weighty matters: And the act of contumacy alſo was conſidered; for he was not put to death, they ſay, unleſs in open court he declared a contrary ſentence. The death he ſuffered was ſtrangling, and he could ſuffer in no other place but where this high court ſat. And it may be farther obſerved, that the prophets themſelves were ſubject to the power and juriſdiction of this high court, by whom they might be ſentenced to capital puniſhment, if they taught contrary to the law of God. But Mr Thorndike makes a doubt, whether the conſtitution, which the Jewiſh writers mention about a rebellious elder, as they call him who taught any thing contrary to the determination of this ſupreme court) was ever in force, or no? for it was made, becauſe of the difference between the ſchools of Hillel and Sammai, who lived not long before our Saviour's time; when it appears by the Goſpel, that nation had loſt the power of life and death. See Rites of the Church, cap. 5. p. 256.

——— And thou ſhalt put away the evil from Iſrael.] This may refer either to the evil perſon, or to the great ſcandal and dangerous example he gave, by reſiſting the higheſt authority, and thereby breaking the bond of unity and peace.

Ver. 13. And all the people ſhall hear and fear, and do no more preſumptuouſly.] This puniſhment was intended to ſtrike a terror into all the people, that they ſhould not adventure to oppoſe the ſupreme authority. And for this end the offender was to be kept in cuſtody, as R Aquiba underſtood this, till the next great feaſt, (either of the paſſover, or pentecoſt, or tabernacles) and then executed, when the whole nation, that is, all the males, were preſent. This, Mr. Selden obſerves, is the moſt received opinion; tho' R. Jehudah ſaith, they did not make the ſentence ſharper by a long delay, but executed it preſently: and for the farther publication of it, they ſent letters to all the tribes and cities of Iſrael, to give notice that ſuch a man was executed at ſuch a time for this crime.

Ver. 14. When thou art come unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, and ſhalt poſſeſs it, and ſhalt dwell therein, and ſhalt ſay, I will ſet a king over me.] The Jews commonly, from this and the next verſe, fancy that God commanded them to make a king, when they came to the land of Canaan, and had a quiet poſſeſſion of it; following herein the Gemara of the Sanhedrim, cap. ii. inſomuch that they have preſumed to make this an affirmative precept, A king of the people ſhould be choſen; and quote this place for it. To which ſome learned men among Chriſtians have ſeemed to incline; particularly, Petrus Cunæus, lib. 11. de Republ. Hebr. cap. 14. and Guil. Schickardus, in his Jus Regium, cap. 1. theor. 1. But Abarbinel himſelf contradicts this; and ſo doth Joſephus, who obſerves, that God intended they ſhould keep their preſent government; but if they would have a king, he ſhould be one of their brethren. For thus he interprets this place, Lib. 1. Antiq. cap. 8. That they ſhould not affect any other government, but love the preſent, having the law for their maſter, and living according to them; ἀρκεῖ γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς ἡγεμὼν εἶναι, for it is ſufficient that God is your ruler. And then he adds, but if ye deſire to have a king, ἔστω μὲν ὅτῳ ὁμόφυλῳ, let him be one of your own nation, as it here follows in the next verſe.

———— Like as all the nations that are about me.] Such as the Edomites, who had been governed by kings before the days of Moſes. See Gen. xxxvi. 31.

Ver. 15. Thou ſhalt in any wiſe ſet him king over thee, whom the Lord thy God ſhall chooſe.] They could not elect whom they pleaſed, but the firſt king, at leaſt, was to be appointed by God himſelf, who was their ſupreme governour. So the people underſtood it, when they deſired Samuel, who was their chief ruler under God, to make them a king, 1 Sam. viii. 5. but durſt not preſume to ſet one up of themſelves. And to confirm them in this opinion, Samuel ſaith to Saul, 1 Sam. x. 1. The Lord hath anointed thee to be captain over his inheritance; and ſaith to all the people, ver. 24. See ye him whom the Lord hath choſen. And accordingly, when the lot was to be caſt, to ſhew who was to be their king, Samuel orders all the tribes to preſent themſelves before the Lord, ver. 19. And when it fell upon Saul, and they could not find him, they enquired of the Lord, who then declared where he was, ver. 22. In like manner, when Saul was rejected, the Lord himſelf appointed David to be anointed their king; and ſettled that authority in his family. And to determine which of his ſons ſhould have it, God himſelf appointed his immediate ſucceſſor, namely, Solomon. For ſo David declares to all the princes and the great men, whom he aſſembled before his death; Of all my ſons, the Lord hath choſen Solomon to ſit upon the throne of the kingdom of the Lord God of Iſrael, 1 Chron, xxviii. 5. and again, chap. xxix. 1. David ſaid unto all the congregation, Solomon my ſon, whom alone God hath choſen, is yet young, &c. But tho' it was thus in the beginning of this kingdom, yet God intended at length to make it hereditary, as appears from ver. 20. of this chapter.

——— One from among thy brethren ſhalt thou ſet king over thee.] That is, according to the tradition mentioned by the Jews out of Toſiphta, the moſt ſelect and choice perſon that could be found, not one of mean extraction or employment. This, they fancy, is meant by from among thy brethren.

——— Thou mayſt not ſet a ſtranger over thee, which is not thy brother.] This the Jews extend to all officers whatſoever, as Maimonides reports their ſenſe. And by thy brother, ſome of them underſtand one that was an Iſraelite, both by father and mother; though others think it ſufficient, if a king was an Iſraelite by the mother's ſide. Which in his book de Succeſſion. ad Pontificat. lib. 2. he ſhews was ſufficient for any dignity among the Iſraelites, but only the prieſthood. See alſo lib. 3. de Synedr. cap. 9. n. 6. where he obſerves the Talmudiſts ſay, the great Sanhedrim was to ſee that no king but one thus qualified was ſet over the people; which when there was ſuch a court, may be allowed to be true; though all the power which they aſcribe to their Sanhedrim over their kings, is not to be admitted, for it is evident from the ſacred Scripture, that their kings had the very power they aſcribe to the Sanhedrim; particularly, it is notorious that Solomon, by his own power, put Abiathar out of the office of high prieſt, 1 Kings ii. 6, 26. Which judgment, the Talmudiſts ſay, belonged only to the great Sanhedrim. In like manner other kings judged prophets; which they appropriate to the ſame court.

Ver. 16. But he ſhall not multiply horſes to himſelf.] There is no certain number determined; but the Jews well reſolve, that he was not to keep them for meer pomp and ſtate, but only ſo many as were for uſe and ſervice; to draw his chariot, for inſtance, and for the guard of his perſon; but he was to take care that he did not burden his people by too many, under this, or any other pretence; and therefore not to keep up a body of horſe for war. For among the Jews their armies conſiſted altogether of foot; there being no breed of horſes in that country; and their people, who were all husbandmen and ſhepherds, being accuſtomed to labour, and to run as ſwiftly as a horſe, 2 Sam. ii. 18. xviii. 19, 22, &c. Certain it is, that in the days of David they had no cavalry in their army; for when Abſalom loſt the battle and fled, it was upon a mule that he endeavoured to make his eſcape. And tho' Solomon was ſo prodigiouſly rich, that he was able to maintain forty thouſand ſtalls of horſes for his chariots, and twelve thouſand horſemen, 1 Kings iv. 26. yet ſucceeding kings could not keep up ſuch an expence; but when they had occaſion, ſent for ſuccours from Egypt, which commonly conſiſted of horſemen. Now one of the reaſons the Jews give why their king was not to multiply horſes, is, leſt he ſhould be elated with pride; for an horſe being a ſtately creature, his rider is often tempted to indulge a vain conceit of himſelf, as more than one of the heathens have obſerved. See Bochart, in his Hierozoicon, lib. 2. cap. 9. Nachmanides gives another good reaſon, leſt he ſhould confide and truſt in the power of his horſemen more than in God. See Schickard, in his Miſchpat Hammelech, cap. 3. theorem 10. But the chief reaſon is given by Moſes himſelf in the next words, leſt they ſhould be tempted to go to Egypt; with which country it was dangerous to have familiarity.

——— Nor cauſe the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he ſhould multiply horſes.] Send his people thither to buy horſes for him; it being a country that abounded with them, as Judæa did with aſſes. For when Sheskak, king of Egypt, (whom the Greek writers call Seſoſtris) came againſt Jeruſalem, there were threeſcore thouſand horſemen in his army, 2 Chron. xii. 3. which ſhews how they abounded with horſes in that country in thoſe days, though in after-times, they did not care to breed them. They might indeed have horſes out of other countries, as well as Egypt, but not eaſily, nor ſo good: Which made Solomon ſend thither, and Pharaoh ſet a great price upon them; becauſe he knew their value, and that they could not furniſh themſelves ſo eaſily with them elſewhere, 1 Kings x. 28, 29.

——— Foraſmuch as the Lord hath ſaid unto you, Ye ſhall henceforth return no more that way.] Or the firſt words may be rendered, "Foraſmuch as the Lord ſaith "unto you," &c. as he did now by Moſes, that they ſhould not maintain traffick with the Egyptians, at leaſt while they continued idolaters. We read, indeed, that many Jews went thither, and Uriah the prophet fled thither, Jerem. xxvi. 21. of which the Jews give this account: Firſt, Some ſay this was but a temporary conſtitution, which was not to laſt always. Secondly, They diſtinguiſh about the way of returning thither; conceiving that they might not go thither out of the land of Iſrael, but they might out of another country whither they were driven. Maimonides thinks, they might go thither as merchants, but not fix their dwelling there. But the true meaning is, that they might not voluntary go thither upon any account; at leaſt, while they remained ſo corrupted in their religion and manners, as they were at this preſent: For there is an expreſs law, Lev. xviii. 3. "Ac- "cording to the works of the Egyptians ye ſhall not do." When the prophet Iſaiah therefore ſaith, the land of Iſrael was full of horſes, he adds, their land alſo is full of idols, Iſaiah ii. 7, 8. For by multiplying the one, they multiplied the other. And therefore tho' David did reſerve ſome chariots and horſemen, which he took in his conqueſts, for his own uſe, yet no extraordinary number, 2 Sam. viii. 4. But ſtill, great men rode on mules (2 Sam. xviii. 9. 1 Kings xxxiii. 38, 41.) as they had done in the days of the judges, v. 10. x. 4. xii. 14.

Ver. 17. Neither ſhall he multiply wives to himſelf.] This is not a prohibition to take more wives than one, but not to have an exceſſive number, after the manner of the eaſtern kings, whom Solomon ſeems to have imitated: We ſee no ground for what the Jews ſay, namely, that he might have eighteen. For the proof which R. Solomon, and Bechin aſſigns for it, is very weak; which is that David having already ſix wives, (2 Sam. v. 13.) the prophet tells him, if he had not offended God, he would, "more- "over have given him ſuch and ſuch things," i. e. ſay they, twice as many wives, 2 Sam. xii. 8. Much leſs is there any ground for what they ſay, that if he took more than his number, he was to be ſcourged by the authority of the Sanhedrim, as he was, they pretend, for the breach of any of theſe precepts here mentioned. See Selden lib. ii. de Synedr. cap. 9. n. 5. which Grotius indeed endeavours to ſoften, by affirming that theſe ſtripes were no diſgrace to him, becauſe he received them voluntarily, in token of his repentance; and therefore was not ſcourged by the common executioner, but by ſuch a perſon as he himſelf choſe to give this correction; and he received alſo ſuch a number of ſtripes as he himſelf pleaſed, and no more, lib. i. De Jure Belli & Pacis, cap. iii. ſect. 20. But this is directly againſt Maimonides, who ſaith in expreſs terms, that the Sanhedrim appointed this chaſtiſement as Selden obſerves in another place, lib. iii. De Synedr. cap. 9. n. 5. And there is no example in the whole book of God of any ſuch juriſdiction which the Sanhedrim had over their kings: All this therefore may well be looked upon as a mere invention of the Jewiſh Doctors, to magnify the power of their great council.

——— That his heart turn not away.] From all ſerious buſineſs and employment, whilſt he was ſtudying to pleaſe a multitude of women: Some underſtand it, leſt they turned his heart away from God, and the duties of piety, of which there was great danger, if he married worſhippers of ſtrange gods as Solomon did. Otherwiſe, we ſhould think it might be interpreted, of turning his thoughts from attending to the welfare of his people.

——— Neither

——Neither ſhall he greatly multiply to himſelf ſilver and gold.] She ſhould amaſs no more, ſaith the Sanhedrim (cap. ii.) than would be ſufficient to pay ſtipends to his ſervants, &c. Others of them ſcan the words more nicely, and obſerve, That firſt, he is forbidden to multiply ſilver and gold greatly, but to content himſelf with moderate riches, and not ſet himſelf to heap up treaſure, which could not be done commonly without great oppreſſion of his ſubjects. And ſecondly, He is forbidden to multiply them to himſelf: But for the publick benefit he might lay up money in the treaſury of the temple, though in his own coffers, for his private intereſt, he might not. See Schickhard in his Miſchpat Hammelech, cap. iii. Theorem 11. where he produces their anſwer to this queſtion, how ſhould the king be able to manage a war, or do any other great thing, if he did not furniſh himſelf with good ſtore of gold and ſilver? He might, ſay they, fill the publick exchequer, tho' not his own private bags: And that for two reaſons; Firſt, leſt he ſhould wax proud and haughty, when his purſe ſwelled: And ſecondly, leſt he ſhould be tempted to ſqueeze his ſubjects, and exact more from them than they were able to bare; as Solomon ſeems to have done, whoſe treaſurer the people ſtoned, 1 Kings xii. 18.

Ver. 18. And it ſhall be when he ſitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, that he ſhall write him a copy of this law in a book.] Not only of this book of Deuteronomy, but of the whole law, and that with his own hand, as a means to fix it more in his mind: Inſomuch, that tho' a copy was left him by his father, he was notwithſtanding to tranſcribe one himſelf, as the Jews ſay, in the Gemara Sanhedrim, cap. ii. ſect. 13. All this is very agreeable to theſe words; but whether he was obliged, if he had not written a copy before he was king, (as every private Iſraelite, they ſay, was bound to do,) to write two when he ſat on the throne, may be doubted; for it cannot, without violence, be drawn from theſe words; and their authority is not ſufficient to warrant it: They give, indeed, a plauſible reaſon for it, that the one he was to carry about with him whitherſoever he went, and to read the other at home; but why one copy might not ſerve for both theſe purpoſes, we do not ſee.

——Out of that which is before the prieſts the Levites.] He was not to write one word of it from his memory merely, or any private man's copy, but out of the book which was in the ſanctuary, where the original and uncorrupted copy was in the cuſtody of God's miniſters: There are a great many rules the Jews give, about the true writing of this copy, which may be ſeen in Guil. Schickardi Mi chpat Hammelech, cap. 2. Theorem 5.

Ver. 19. And it ſhall be with him, and he ſhall read therein all the days of his life.] Deligently ſtudy it, not ſpending his time, as Maimonides gloſſes, in drinking and making merry, but in learning the law of God. See there, p. 53. From the neglect of this precept, their king became ſo ignorant of the laws of God, and of their obligation to obſerve them, that in the days of good king Joſiah, he was ſtrangely ſurprized at what he heard read out of the book of the law, when it was found in the temple, where it had lain long without any knowledge of it.

Ver. 20. That his heart be not lifted up above his brethren.] That he may not imagine himſelf to be above the laws, nor ſlight his ſubjects, as unworthy of his notice, but take a due care to promote their happineſs. For as the ſcriptures, ſaith Maimonides, ordained the king that ſhould have a great honour done him, obliging all to reverence him, ſo it commands him to be lowly in heart, and not carry himſelf inſolently: Let him be gracious, and full of clemency to little and great, ſo ſhall he go out and come in, with the love and good wiſhes of them all. Unto which Nachmanides adds this pious reflection. If the ſcripture deters kings from pride and haughtineſs of heart, how unbecoming is it in other men, who are far inferior to them? &c.

——And that he turn not aſide from the commandment to the right hand or to the left.] Neither by changing the laws, on pretence of making better; nor by abrogating them, on pretence of their inconveniency; but where the divine law was not clear, or where nothing was there defined, he might by his authority make new conſtitutions, as David and Solomon did, as well in ſacred, as in civil matters.

——To the end that he may prolong his Days in his kingdom; he, and his children in the midſt of Iſrael.] This ſhews that God intended to eſtabliſh a ſucceſſive right in that family to which he choſe to give the kingdom, if they continued in a conſtant obſervation of his laws. And indeed, there is no way to eſtabliſh and perpetuate a family on the throne, like the due obſervation of laws, tho' they be but human, not divine laws: For, as Ariſtotle truly ſaid, he by whoſe commands the law governs all, ὁκεῖ κελεύειν ἄρχειν ὁ Θεὸν ἢ τὸν νόμον, ſeems to command that God ſhould rule, and the laws; but he who orders a man to rule without laws, according to his own will, πρόσθησι θηρίον ſets up a beaſt to govern. And above all things, he ought to endeavour to win the love of his ſubjects by humility and clemency; as the ſame Ariſtotle taught Alexander, if we may belive R. Jedaja, in his book called Mibchar Happeninim, where he reports a letter of his to that great prince, adviſing him to gain the affection of his people by a gentle government, which is far better than to rule tyrannically by force and violence; for to what purpoſe is it to have poſſeſſion of their bodies, when the true poſſeſſion is to be maſter of their hearts? Get poſſeſſion of their hearts by clemency, and that will draw their bodies along with them.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 The Lord is the prieſts and Levites inheritance. 3 The prieſts due. 6 The Levites portion. 9 The abominations of the nations are to be avoided. 15 Chriſt the prophet is to be heard. 20 The preſumptuous prophet is to die.

THE prieſts the Levites, and all the tribe of Levi, ſhall have no part nor inheritance with Iſrael: they ſhall eat the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and his inheritance.

2 Therefore ſhall they have no inheritance among their brethren: the LORD is their inheritance, as he hath ſaid unto them.

3 ¶ And this ſhall be the prieſts due from the people, from them that offer a ſacrifice, whether it be ox or ſheep; and they ſhall give unto the prieſt the ſhoulder, and the two cheeks, and the maw.

4 The firſt-fruit alſo of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thy oyl, and the firſt of the fleece of thy ſheep ſhalt thou give him.

5 For the LORD thy God hath choſen him out of all thy tribes, to ſtand to miniſter in the name of the LORD, him and his ſons for ever.

6 ¶ And if a Levite come from any of thy gates out of all Iſrael, where he ſojourned, and come with all the deſire of his mind unto the place which the LORD ſhall chuſe;

7 Then he ſhall miniſter in the name of the LORD his God, as all his brethren the Levites do, which ſtand there before the LORD.

8 They ſhall have like portions to eat, beſide that which cometh of the ſale of his patrimony.

9 ¶ When thou art come into the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, thou ſhalt not learn to do after the abominations of thoſe nations.

10 There ſhall not be found among you any one that maketh his ſon, or his daughter to paſs through the fire, or that uſeth divination, or an obſerver of times, or an enchanter, or a witch.

11 Or a charmer, or a conſulter with familiar ſpirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer.

12 For all that do theſe things are an abomination unto the LORD: and becauſe of theſe abominations, the LORD thy God doth drive them out from before thee.

13 Thou ſhalt be perfect with the LORD thy God.

14 For theſe nations which thou ſhalt poſſeſs, hearkened unto obſervers of times, and unto diviners: but as for thee, the LORD thy God hath not ſuffered thee ſo to do.

15 ¶ The LORD thy God will raiſe up unto thee a Prophet from the midſt of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye ſhall hearken.

16 According to all that thou deſiredſt of the LORD thy God in Horeb, in the day of the aſſembly, ſaying, Let me not hear again the voice of the LORD my God; neither let me ſee this great fire any more, that I die not.

17 And the LORD ſaid unto me, They have well ſpoken that which they have ſpoken.

18 I will raiſe them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth, and he ſhall ſpeak unto them all that I ſhall command him.

19 And it ſhall come to paſs, that whoſoever will not hearken unto my words which he ſhall ſpeak in my name, I will require it of him.

20 But the prophet which ſhall preſume to ſpeak a word in my name, which I have not commanded him to ſpeak, or that ſhall ſpeak in the name of other gods, even that prophet ſhall die.

21 And if thou ſay in thine heart, How ſhall we know the word which the LORD hath not ſpoken?

22 When a prophet ſpeaketh in the name of the LORD, if the thing follow not nor come to paſs, that is the thing which the LORD hath not ſpoken, but the prophet hath ſpoken it preſumptuouſly: thou ſhalt not be afraid of him.

Ver. 3. And this ſhall be the prieſts due from the people.] Beſide thoſe things which God gave them, and which peculiarly belonged to him.

—— And they ſhall give unto the prieſt the ſhoulder.] Together with the breaſt. See Lev. vii. 32, &c.

—— And the two cheeks and the maw. Theſe were not given to the prieſts before, but were now added to their portion, being accounted the beſt part of the beaſts; for as the cheeks were the beſt part of the head, and the ſhoulder and breaſt the beſt of the other members of the body, ſo the maw was the principal part of the entrails, as Maimonides obſerves, p. 111. More Nevochim, cap. 39.

By the maw is meant the ſtomach; and in beaſts that chew the cud, who have four ſtomachs, that which is called by the Greeks ἔντερον, viz. the loweſt of them, which had this name, becauſe the digeſtion which is begun in the other, is here perfected and compleated; and it appears, that this part of the entrails was accounted by the ancients a great dainty, as Bochart proves out of Ariſtophanes, Hierozoicon, p. 1. Lib. 11. cap. 45. p. 505.

Ver. 4. —— And the firſt of the fleece of the ſheep ſhalt thou give him.] This is comprehended under firſt fruits, but never particularly mentioned before now; and tho' the quantity is not expreſſed, yet the Jews have ventured to determine, that leſs than one fleece in ſixty was not accepted. For ſo they ſay of all other firſt fruits, that a ſixtieth part of the whole, was the leaſt that any man gave; and he was accounted a covetous perſon, if he gave no more; they who were indifferently good, giving a fiftieth part, and liberal perſons a fortieth. By theſe means the prieſts were provided with cloaths, as by other offerings, with food. And the wool alſo, as they call it, of goats (which were ſhorn in theſe countries) is comprehended under the fleece of ſheep.

Ver. 6. And if a Levite come from any of thy gates out of all Iſrael, where he ſojourned.] With a ſincere affection to devote himſelf to the perpetual ſervice of God at the ſanctuary, ſo that inſtead of coming in his courſe, he would always wait there, and never remove from that place.

Ver. 7. Then he ſhall miniſter in the name of the Lord his God.] Attend continually at the altar, to do all the ſervice of the ſanctuary. The LXX tranſlate it, he ſhall miniſter to the name of the Lord, that is, to the Divine Majeſty, who dwells there.

—— As his brethren the Levites do, which ſtand there before the Lord.] To miniſter unto him: This was the caſe of Samuel.

Ver. 8. They ſhall have like portion to eat.] This ſhews that Moſes is ſpeaking of the prieſts; for the Levites did not eat of the holy things offered at the altar; and the meaning is, that the reſt of the prieſts who waited there, ſhould allow him the ſame portion which they themſelves had in the ſacrifices.

—— Beſide that which cometh of the ſale of his patrimony.] Which was to remain proper to himſelf, and not be divided with other prieſts at Jeruſalem (ſuppoſe) where he miniſtred. The Hebrew words are ſomething obſcure, being beſide his ſales by, or unto the fathers, that is ſuch poſſeſſions as their fathers purchaſed, and left to them; for tho' the prieſts had no ſhare in the land of Canaan given them at the diviſion of it, yet they might purchaſe houſes, and goods, and cattle: and ſometimes they purchaſed fields, as we read Abiathar had fields of his own at Anathoth, 1 Kings ii. 26. and the prophet Jeremiah, who was a prieſt alſo, purchaſed a field of his uncle's ſon in his own town, Jeremiah xxxii. 7, 8. &c.

But the Jews form a quite different conſtruction of theſe three verſes, which they underſtand in this manner, That if any Levite (i. e. prieſt, for they only miniſtered before God) came up out of the city where he commonly reſided, out of pure devotion to attend at the three ſolemn feaſts, (which were held at the place where the ſanctuary was, where they were bound to wait, only when their courſe came, but at theſe feaſts might all come and miniſter in the ſanctuary) his brethren, whoſe week it was then to attend attend, ſhould both admit him to miniſter before God with them, and alſo give him an equal portion with themſelves in the extraordinary ſacrifices which were then offered at thoſe feſtivals, except only thoſe which were peculiarly aſſigned to them whoſe week of waiting at the altar it then was; who by the ordinance of God, delivered to Moſes and Aaron (who, they ſuppoſe, are here called the fathers) were to have the right ſhoulder of the peace-offerings. See Lev. vii. 33. where it is ſaid, He, among the ſons of Aaron that offereth the peace-offerings and the fat, ſhall have the right ſhoulder for his part; in which none other was to participate. But why this ſhould be called the ſales, we do not underſtand, unleſs we interpret it as Feſtus doth, venditiones, i. e. res venditas a patribus, things ſold by the fathers, that is appropriated by them (to the particular prieſt who offered the ſacrifice) as things ſold are to them who buy them.

Ver. 10. There ſhall not be found among you any one that maketh his ſon or his daughter to paſs through the fire.] This was the moſt abominable idolatry practiſed in that country whither they were going, the inhabitants of which conſecrated their children in this manner to Moloch, or the Sun. This wicked cuſtom ſeems to have flowed from this country of the Phœnicians and Tyrians unto the Carthaginians, who were guilty of the impiety of ſacrificing their children, as they did alſo here unto Moloch. Lev. xx. 2, 3. which ſpread itſelf, in a manner, over all the world, as many have ſhewn; particularly John Genſius, in his treatiſe De victimis Humanis, part 1. p. 11. cap. 5. and it was found among the Americans, when that very world was diſcovered.

——— Or that uſeth divination.] Of which there were many ſorts; and one was, by raking into the bowels of their ſacrifices, particularly of human ſacrifices; by the obſervation of which they pretended to foretell things, as many authors teſtify. They even offered little children on purpoſe, that thereby they might make their auguries, unto which, perhaps, there is a peculiar reſpect in this place; for we find moſt of the things here mentioned, joined in other places with making their children paſs through the fire, particularly 2 Kings xxi. 6. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 6. and the prophet Ezekiel ſeems to intimate, that hereby they divined, when he charged the Iſraelites with this crime, xx. 26, 31. for he adds, ſhall I be enquired by you, O houſe of Iſrael, who have enquired, that is, by making your children paſs through the fire.

But it muſt be confeſſed, that the Hebrew words Koſem Koſemim (which we tranſlate uſeth divination) are by many thought to have a peculiar reſpect unto ſuch as uſed to divine by caſting or drawing of lots. And the word, as our learned Dr. Caſtel obſerves, is ſo uſed in the Arabian language for diſtribution of lots; which ſort of divination was much practiſed by the Greeks and Romans; and had been ſo, it is very likely, in more ancient times by the eaſtern nations: For nothing is more known than the Sortes Prænestinæ, and Pativinæ, among the Romans; and the Dodonæ, and Dindymenæ, and many others among the Greeks, particularly that at Bura in Achaia, where there was a cave wherein was the image of Hercules; before which, they who reſorted thither to enquire directions in any caſe, or the ſucceſs of any affair, uſed to fall down, and ſay their prayers, and after that to throw four dice upon the table, and by the letters or marks upon which they fell, the divination was made; as Pauſanius deſcribes it in his Achaica. In other places they uſed them in a different manner, and the ancient Arabians divined by arrows, as our famous Dr. Pocock hath ſhewn in his notes upon Gregor. Abulfarajus, concerning the original and manners of the Arabians, p. 327, 328, &c. where he deſcribes the manner of it, and ſhews that it was performed before ſome idol, and therefore was ſtrictly forbidden by Mohammed, in his Koran, as a diabolical invention. In which prohibition he ſeems to have imitated Moſes, who may be thought here to forbid ſuch kind of divination; which was in uſe among the eaſtern people, in the days of the prophet Ezekiel, xxi. 21. where we find the ſame word koſem, which, that learned author thinks, is illuſtrated by that Arabian cuſtom.

It is to be noted alſo, that they uſed to divine by a dead man's ſkull, as our Dr. Windet hath obſerved out of the Sanhedrim, cap. 7. and Maimonides. Which cuſtom the Greeks likewiſe followed; for Palladius relates how Macarius enquired, πρὸς τ ξηρὸν κεφάλιον, at a dry ſcull, &c.

Several ſorts of ſuch kind of perſons there were among the Edomites, Moabites, and other nations near Judæa, who in the days of Jeremiah deceived the people with their divinations, prophecies, dreams, enchantments, and ſorceries, as we learn from Jer. xxvii. 3, 9.

——— Or a witch.] This word ſignifies worſe than any of the former, namely, one that doeth miſchief unto men or beaſts by evil arts: concerning which ſee the annotations on Lev. xxii. 18. unto which we ſhall here add, that the Jewiſh nation have been extremely addicted to witchcraft, and ſome of their famous Rabbins have been ſuſpected of it. See J. Wagenſeil upon Sota, p. 529.

Ver. 11. Or a charmer.] There are various conjectures about the meaning of the Hebrew words chober chaber, which importing ſomething of ſociety, or conjunction, ſome tranſlate fortune-teller, who by the conjunction of the planets pretends to predict future things; others, one that hath ſociety with evil ſpirits, which is mentioned afterward in another word.

Job. Ludolphus ſeems to us to have given the plaineſt account of the words, which he tranſlates congregans congregationem, gathering together a company; for it was an ancient way of enchantment, to bring various kind of beaſts into one place, which the Rabbins diſtinguiſh into the great congregation, and the little congregation: The great one was, when they aſſembled together a great company of the larger ſort of beaſts; and the leſs, when they gathered together as great a company of the ſmaller, ſuch as ſerpents, ſcorpions, and the like: But we cannot be certain of this; tho' Telezius tells us, it is in uſe at this day in the eaſtern countries. For ſo he deſcribes the election of the king of Ginger, that he ſtood compaſſed about with lions, tygres, leopards, and dragons, which by magical arts were gathered together as his guard and courtiers. See Ludolphi Comment. in Hiſtor. Æthiop. cap. 16, numb. 116.

But the common interpretation which the Jews give of chober chaber is, that he is one who uſeth ſtrange words, which have no ſignification; but he pretends are powerful to charm a ſerpent, (for inſtance) that it ſhall not ſting, or to preſerve from any other harm. So Maimonides, in Avoda Zara, cap. 11. And to this ſort of ſuperſtition the world was ſo addicted, that this precept of Moſes could not bring the Jews quite off from it; but when they threw away other charms, they uſed the words of Scripture inſtead of them; pretending, for inſtance, to cure wounds by reading that verſe in the law, Exod. xv. 26. I will put none of theſe diſeaſes upon thee, &c. So we find they themſelves acknowledge in Sanhedrim, cap. 2. ſect. 1. And Maimonides ſaith, this is forbidden by Moſes in this place, as much as any other charm; for the words of the law are turned hereby to another uſe than God intended in them; which was not for healing the body, but curing the ſoul. And we ſee no reaſon, why it ſhould not be thought as great a crime to uſe the Schem Hamphoraſh, as they call the name of Jehovah, to ſuch purpoſes; and yet the Jews are ſo ſtupid, as to imagine Moſes wrought all his miracles by virtue of it. Maimonides, indeed, was ſo ſober, as to reject this common conceit, condemning thoſe who think there was a power in the very letters and pronunciation of the word, Lib. 1. More Nevochim, cap. 62.

——— Or a conſulter with familiar ſpirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer.] In the Hebrew, the word necromancer ſignifies, one who ſeeks to, or enquires of the dead; but it is not eaſy to tell, wherein this differs from one that had a familiar ſpirit, as we tranſlate it. For the woman whom Saul conſulted, who had a ſpirit called Oboth, enquired alſo after this manner; their ſpirit, it ſeems, teaching ſuch perſons to call for the dead to appear to them: But ſome, perhaps, had not ſuch a ſpirit, who notwithſtanding conſulted the dead, by going to their graves in the night, and there lying down, and muttering certain words with a low voice, that they might have communion with them by dreams, or by their appearing to them: Unto which the prophet Iſaiah is thought to allude, chap. viii. 19. xxix. 4. Maimonides, in Avoda Zara, c. 11. ſect. 15. thus deſcribes a necromancer: He is one, who having afflicted himſelf with faſting, goes to the burying-place, and there lies down, and falls aſleep; and then the dead appear to him, and tell him what he deſires. Such are they they alſo, who put on a certain kind of garment, ſpeak ſome uncouth words, and make a fume, and then lie down alone, that the dead, whom they deſire, may come to them, and diſcourſe with them in their ſleep. To the ſame purpoſe Aben Ezra. To this the Gentiles were very prone; and it was thought ſo high an attainment to come to this knowledge, that Julian the apoſtate, who was ambitious to be acquainted with all the heathen myſteries, ſecretly practiſed this Νεκυομαντεία, in the moſt retired part of his palace, cutting up the bodies of virgins and boys, to bring up the dead to him; which was far more impious than what the Talmudiſts ſay, (in the title Beracoth) that ſuch kind of people were wont to burn the ſecundine of a black cat, when ſhe had her firſt young; and beating it very ſmall, put ſome of the powder upon their eye, whereupon dæmons appeared to them. See Greg. Nazianz. in his invectives againſt Julian, p. 91. and St. Chryſoſtom, in his oration upon St. Babylas. We ſhall only add, that this was not only privately practiſed among the Gentiles, but there were alſo publick places to which men reſorted to conſult the dead, particularly at Theſprotis, near the river Acheron, where Herodotus, lib. 5. mentions a Νεκυομαντήιον; and Plutarch, to name no more, mentions another at Heraclea; which Pauſanius, in his diſtreſs, went to conſult, as he relates in the life of Cimon.

Ver. 12. For all that do theſe things are an abomination to the Lord; and becauſe of theſe abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee.] That is, God hath expelled the Amorites, and other wicked inhabitants of the country, where they practiſed theſe abominations; which, no doubt, had ſome relation to idolatry, and therefore were forbidden to the Iſraelites.

Ver. 13. Thou ſhalt be perfect with the Lord thy God.] This ſhews there was ſomething of idolatrous worſhip in all the fore-named practices; which, if they followed, it was, in ſome degree, to forſake God, on whom they were wholly to depend, and ſeek to him alone in the ways which he had preſcribed in his laws. For this was to be perfect with the Lord; to have nothing to do with any other God, nor with the rites and ceremonies uſed in their worſhip: And therefore the LXX. tranſlate this word ſometimes by ἄμωμος, Job xxii. 3. as well as by τέλειος; for then they were perfect with God, when they kept his worſhip ſimple and pure, without the mixture of any foreign religion: Which the whole context ſhews to be the ſenſe, both in the words foregoing and following.

Ver. 14. For thoſe nations, which thou ſhalt poſſeſs, hearken'd unto obſervers of times, and unto diviners] The ancient Heathens, as Strabo tells us, lib vi. had theſe diviners in ſuch eſteem, ὥστε καὶ βασιλέας ἔδιζε, that they thought them worthy of the higheſt authority. But God would not have his people ſo much as to conſult ſuch perſons: For it appears by theſe words, that not only they who were diviners, (for inſtance) but they who hearkned to them, were odious to God. For that even the art of divination depended upon ſome idolatrous opinions and practices, appears evidently, even from the moſt refined account we have of it in ancient authors: For inſtance, Ammianus Marcellinus, who, to acquit his maſter Julian from the ſuſpicion of ſorcery, which ſome ſaid he uſed, to get the foreknowledge of things future, makes it a principal point of wiſdom, not unworthy ſuch a prince, who was a profeſſed lover of all ſciences, to offer placatory ſacrifices to draw in the ſpirit of all the elements, to endue him with a ſpirit of divination: For ſo his words are, in the beginning of his twenty firſt book; "The ſpirit of all the "elements, being alway and every way invigorated with "the fore-perceiving motion of the everlaſting (i. e. heavenly) bodies, make us partakers of the gifts of divining: and the ſubſtantial powers, ritu diverſo placatæ, "being render'd favourable by reſpective rites, (that is, "ſuch as were proper and ſuitable to each of them) convey predictions to mortality, as from ſo many perpetual "ſprings or fountains, over which (ſubſtantial powers) the "goddeſs Themis is ſaid to preſide," &c. which ſhews, that Julian, who called Jupiter the moſt high god, the king of all, yet courted other inferiour powers, by ſuch rites as he imagined would win their favour; which was rank idolatry.

—— But as for thee, the Lord thy God hath not ſuffered thee ſo to do.] But abſolutely forbid it, Lev. xix. 31. xx. 6. where he warns them to have nothing to do with ſome of the perſons here mentioned; and not only inſtructed them in the way to live happily, but eſtabliſhed an oracle among them, to be conſulted on all weighty occaſions, and governed them by men, whom he had endued with his ſpirit, Numb. xi. 16, 17, 25. Therefore if any Iſraelite practiſed any of the things here forbidden, tho' he did not worſhip any idol, he was ſcourged by the ſentence of the court of judgment. See Selden, lib. 11. de Jure Nat. & Gent. cap. 7.

Ver. 15. The Lord thy God will raiſe up unto thee a prophet.] Since the Jews, as all other nations, were extremely deſirous to know things to come, Moſes reveals unto them from God a thing future of the higheſt importance, viz. the coming of Chriſt, and the greatneſs of his authority; and, in after-times, God revealed to them, by degrees, the time of his birth, his death, reſurrection, &c. The Jews, indeed, commonly take theſe words to be a promiſe of a conſtant ſucceſſion of prophets, that ſhould be among them, to preſerve them from going to ſuch diviners as were famous among their heathen neighbours: And thus many chriſtian interpreters make out the connection of theſe words with the foregoing. But tho' this may be allowed to be intimated, and this promiſe be acknowledged to be partly verified in thoſe prophets whom God raiſed up from age to age after Moſes, for further knowledge of his will, (as the promiſe of a Saviour was in part verified in thoſe judges and kings by whom God delivered his people from their enemies) yet it is very evident that he ſpeaks of a ſingle prophet more eminent than all the reſt; and that theſe words, in their moſt literal ſenſe, cannot belong to any other perſon than the Meſſiah. Tho' the continuance therefore of prophets among this people, was a means to prevent all occaſions of conſulting ſorcerers or witches, yet the chief ground upon which Moſes diſſuades them from ſuch practices, according to the literal connection of theſe words with the foregoing, "The Lord "thy God hath not ſuffered thee to do ſo;" that is, to hearken to obſervers of times and diviners, was the conſideration of their late mighty deliverance by Moſes; the excellency of their preſent law, which God had given them for their direction; and their expectation of a greater law-giver in future times, when the firſt covenant ſhall wax old, and the propheſy it ſelf for a long time fail, as it did before the coming of this great prophet, the Lord Chriſt. To this purpoſe Dr. Jackſon, in his third book upon the Creed, cap. 21. paragraph 19.

—— From the midſt of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me.] It was a great honour to them, to have ſuch a prophet, as is here ſpoken of, ariſe out of their nation; but as he was after a peculiar ſort raiſed up by Jehovah, not meerly by the external aſſiſtances or impulſion of his Spirit, (to uſe the words of the ſame excellent perſon, paragraph 9.) but by intrinſic aſſumption into the unity of his perſon; ſo likewiſe he was raiſed up in a ſtrict and proper ſenſe from the midſt of them, being as it were extracted out of a pure virgin, as the firſt woman was out of the man, by the Almighty's own immediate hand.

The words, like unto me, make it evident that Moſes here means a ſingle prophet, and not a conſtant ſucceſſion of thoſe inſpired perſons, there being none of them like to Moſes, whom God himſelf diſtinguiſhed from them all, Numb. xii. 6, 7, 8. And accordingly that divine writer, who added thoſe verſes which are at the end of this book, (concerning the death of Moſes,) teſtifies that there never roſe in Iſrael a prophet like to Moſes. See chap. xxxiv. 10. This addition is commonly thought to have been inſerted by Ezra, and it hath effectually confuted all the conceits of R. Eechai, Aben-Ezra, Abarbinel, and other Jewiſh doctors, who take either Joſhua, or Jeremiah, to have been this prophet. If Joſhua, as ſome fancy, added theſe words, then he excluded himſelf from being the perſon; nor did Joſhua act as a prophet, but as a judge or governor: and Jeremiah is acknowledged by Abarbinel himſelf to be inferior to Iſaiah: For tho' in his preface to his commentary upon Jeremiah, he mentions fourteen particulars wherein he was like unto Moſes, and ſaith he propheſied juſt forty years, as Moſes did; yet, in his commentary upon the leſſer prophets, he prefers Iſaiah before them all, and cenſures the rudeneſs of Jeremiah's language, in many things preferring Ezekiel to him. So little do theſe doctors agree in their interpretation of this propheſy, which can belong to none of their prophets who ſucceed-

ed Moſes, and were all much inferior to him, until he came who perfectly reſembled him, but was much ſuperior to him. See ver. 18. And thus the ancient Jews underſtood this propheſy; for tho' Maimonides only ſaith, the Meſſiah ſhould be endued with wiſdom greater than that of Solomon, and ſhould equal their maſter Moſes, yet thoſe before him proceeded a great deal further. This being a common ſaying among them, which Abarbinel himſelf remembers, in his commentary upon the ſmall prophets, "He ſhall be exalted above Abraham, lifted up above "Moſes, and higher than the angels of the miniſtry." Nor is the cabbaliſtical obſervation, mentioned in Baalhatturim, to be quite neglected; which is, that this verſe begins and ends with the letter nun, which is the numeral letter for fifty, importing, that to the prophet here promiſed, ſhould be opened the fifty gates of knowledge, forty-nine of which only were opened to Moſes. And that this verſe alſo conſiſts of ten words, to ſignify, that they were to obey this prophet no leſs than the ten commandments: Which obſervation, it muſt be confeſſed, is weakly grounded, but contains a moſt illuſtrious truth, and ſhews that they believed, Moſes here ſpeaks of the Meſſiah.

——— Unto him ſhall ye hearken.] As they had engaged themſelves to do; it will appear from the following words.

Ver. 16. According to all that thou deſiredſt of the Lord thy God in Horeb, in the day of the aſſembly, ſaying, Let me not hear again the voice of the Lord, &c.] So we read, Exod. xx. 19. where they made this requeſt unto Moſes, ſaying, "Speak thou with us, and we will hear; but let "not God ſpeak with us, leſt we die." In which words, the whole multitude bound themſelves ſolemnly to hear the words of the Lord, being delivered not immediately from his own mouth, but by Moſes, as is more fully expreſſed in this book, Deut. v. 27, 28, 29. where God highly commends this good reſolution in them, as Moſes here obſerves again in the next verſe.

Ver. 17. And the Lord ſaid unto me, they have well ſpoken that which they have ſpoken.] God approved their deſire, and reſolved not to ſpeak to them any more, as he did from mount Sinai, with a voice out of the fire and cloud; but by Moſes himſelf, while he lived; and afterward by one like to Moſes, as it here follows.

Ver. 18. I will raiſe them up a prophet from among their brethren.] Theſe words ſeem to have been ſpoken to Moſes by God, when they deſired God would not ſpeak to them any more immediately by himſelf, but by a mediator. Then God was pleaſed to promiſe them a great deal more than they deſired, which was to raiſe up another prophet like to Moſes, who ſhould acquaint them more fully with his mind and will, in as familiar a manner as Moſes did, without ſtriking any ſuch terror into them, as they were in at the giving of the law, tho' the words of this prophet came from the mouth of God himſelf: In which two things the Iſraelites excelled all other nations; namely, in that they had ſuch an excellent law delivered by Moſes, which was to be bettered by an everlaſting covenant, made by this prince of the prophets. In reſpect of both, (as Dr. Jackſon expreſſes it) the name of ſoothſayer, or ſorcerer, was not to be named in Iſrael, as they were in the nations who knew not God, much leſs expected ſuch a mediator, in whom the Spirit of life ſhould dwell as plentifully, as ſplendor doth in the body of the ſun; from whoſe fullneſs, e'er he viſibly appeared in the world, all other prophets were illuminated. So that Moſes himſelf, and all the prophets that followed him, were but as meſſengers ſent from God, to ſollicit his people to preſerve their allegiance free from all commerce or compact with familiar ſpirits, until the Prince of glory came in perſon to viſit them, and dwell among them.

—Like unto thee] This is well explained by Euſebius, ὁμοίως καὶ Μωσέα νομοθέτης, a ſecond law-giver, as Moſes was: For in ſaying, not ſimply, he would raiſe them up a prophet, but, like unto thee, it muſt ſignify, ſaith he, that this prophet ſhould be a law-giver as well as Moſes, which none of the prophets were, till our Saviour came. Neither Iſaiah, nor Jeremiah, were the makers of laws, but only called upon the people to obſerve the laws of Moſes; whereas, when the Lord Jeſus came, he gave laws to all the world, and thoſe far ſuperior to the laws of Moſes, who only ſaid, thou ſhalt not commit adultery; but our Lord declares, I ſay unto you, ye ſhall not luſt; and inſtead of, thou ſhalt not kill, He ſaith, be not angry with thy brother, &c. Whence it was, that they who heard him were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine, and ſaid, that he ſpake not as the ſcribes, who were expounders of the law, but as one that had authority, that is, power to ordain and enact laws, and not only to explain thoſe that were already written.

——— And will put my words in his mouth, and he ſhall ſpeak unto them all that I ſhall command him.] That is, he ſhall reveal the whole mind and will of God, John xii. 49, 50. For he was herein like to Moſes, (tho' far ſuperior to him) that he was intimately acquainted with God's counſels, being in the boſom of the Father, 1 John xviii. and confirmed all that he ſaid to be from God by miracles, and wonders, and ſigns, far more mighty than thoſe of Moſes, and more in number than had been wrought by all the prophets, from the beginning of the world: Particularly, He fed multitudes with a little food, (which made the people cry out, "This is of a "truth that Prophet which ſhould come into the world," John vi. 14.) but above all this, gave them that bread from heaven, of which the manna given them by Moſes was a ſhadow, as he took occaſion to ſhew the people, upon their admiration of that miraculous feaſt he had made for them, with five barley loaves, and two ſmall fiſhes: For He himſelf was that bread of life, who nouriſhed mens ſouls with the word of eternal life, which he had in himſelf, as he ſhewed by his reſurrection from the dead, which he himſelf predicted, and thereby proved himſelf the greateſt of all the prophets: For tho' Moſes foretold his own death, yet neither he, nor any other prophet whatſoever but our Saviour, ſpake of his being raiſed up again. In which he may be thought to be like to Moſes, who was raiſed up by God to be a Saviour of his people out of that ark, which, without the ſpecial providence of God, had been his tomb. And unto this reſurrection of Chriſt doth the propriety of this phraſe, from the midſt of thee, agree: for this was done, as Dr. Jackſon well obſerves, in the midſt of Jeruſalem, the metropolis of Judæa, not without expreſs notice given of it to the rulers of the people; and ſuch a confirmation it was, that he was the prophet they ſhould all hear, that there could not be a greater; as all ſtrangers, both to their religion and ours, muſt agree, and they themſelves cannot deny: for Nachmanides (relating, in a letter of his to the Rabbins at Marſeilles, how there was a man in thoſe days, in the ſouthern countries, who pretended to be the fore-runner of the Meſſiah, unto whom great numbers of Jews and Arabs reſorted) tells us, that he being apprehended by the king of the country, and asked what miracle he ſhewed to confirm his commiſſion, anſwered boldly, "Cut off my head, and I will come "to life again." To which the king of the Arabs replied, "There is no ſign greater than this; which, if it "come to paſs, both I and the whole world will believe "thee." Whereupon his head was cut off, and there was an end of all his pretences; tho' ſome of the Jews were ſo infatuated, as Maimonides there obſerves, that they ſtill expected his return to life. Thus R. Gedaliah reports, in his Schalſhelet Hakkabalah.

Ver. 19. And it ſhall come to paſs, that whoſoever will not hearken unto my words, which he ſhall ſpeak in my name.] This is the proper character of a prophet, to deliver, in the name of God, what he received from God. This did Moſes: but Chriſt moſt eminently, as we before obſerved from John xii. 49, 50. where he ſaith, "I have "not ſpoken of my ſelf, but the Father which ſent me; he "gave me a commandment, what I ſhould ſay, and what "I ſhould ſpeak, &c. Whatſoever therefore I ſpeak, even "as the Father ſaid unto me, ſo I ſpeak." Which is a perfect commentary upon theſe words of Moſes, who here calls Chriſt a prophet, not a prieſt, or a king, (tho' he was to be both) becauſe he would not have the Jews miſtake, and expect to find in his perſon the worldly grandeur of a mighty prince, or the high honour and ſplendor of Aaron; but have the greateſt regard to the heavenly doctrine which he taught them, as he himſelf, he told them, was taught by the Father: "For I proceeded forth, ſaith "he, and came from God; neither came I of my ſelf, but "he ſent me; and I do nothing of my ſelf, but as my "father hath taught me, I ſpeak theſe things," John viii. 28, 42. This was the higheſt honour of all, to ſpeak God's words, ver. 47. in the name of God, ver. 42.

We conclude with the remarkable words of the Midraſch upon Eccleſiaſtes, who thus expreſſes the ſenſe of this propheſy, "As was the firſt redeemer, ſuch ſhall be "the laſt redeemer," which plainly determine the prophet here ſpoken of to be one ſingle perſon; and he no other but the Lord Chriſt.

——— I will require it of him.] Severely puniſh him, ſo as to deſtroy him from among his people, as St. Peter interprets it, Acts iii. 23. And ſo this phraſe is uſed, Gen. ix. 5. xlii. 22. And there was great reaſon for ſuch ſeverity, ſeeing they had ſo ſolemnly bound themſelves to hearken to this prophet, when they deſired God not to ſpeak any more to them by himſelf, but by a mediator, which God then promiſed. A mediator of a better covenant, who ſhould ſecure them from ſuch dreadful flames, as they then ſaw, if they would hearken to him, as they promiſed to do; otherwiſe what could they expect, "but a certain fearful looking for judgment, and fiery "indignation, to devour the adverſaries?" For ſince "he "that deſpited Moſes's law, died without mercy, under "two or three witneſſes, of how much ſorer puniſhment, "ſuppoſe ye, ſhall he be thought worthy, who hath trod-"den under foot the Son of God?" in the open face of all the world, Heb. x. 27, 28, 29. which is a full explication of theſe words, "Whoſoever will not hearken unto "my words, which he ſhall ſpeak in my name, I will re-"quire it of him:" Or, as Onkelos tranſlates it, "my "word ſhall require it of him:" where memra, word, can ſignify nothing but a divine perſon, diſtinct from him who ſpeaks theſe words, even that very perſon to whom the Apoſtle applies them.

Ver. 20. But the prophet which ſhall preſume to ſpeak a word in my name, &c.] Theſe words plainly ſuggeſt to us, that Moſes intended, in the foregoing diſcourſe, to admoniſh the Iſraelites to hearken diligently to all ſuch prophets as God ſhould at any time raiſe up among them; tho' it be moſt evident, if we examine the propriety of every word or clauſe in the whole context, they cannot be exactly accommodated to any prophet but Chriſt; unto whom the whole diſcourſe is as fully adapted, as a well-made garment to the body that wears it. They are the words of Dr. Jackſon, lib. iii. on the Creed, cap. 21. par. 1, 2.

—— Which I have not commanded him to ſpeak, or that ſhall ſpeak in the name of other gods.] It was a manifeſt indication of a falſe prophet, if he ſpake in the name of Baal, or any other god, but the God of Iſrael: or if he ſaid, Such a ſtar, by its ſpiritual influence coming upon me, ſaid, Worſhip me after this manner, or thus call upon me; as Maimonides (who gives an account of ſeveral ſorts of falſe prophets) ſpeaks, in his preface to Seder Zeraim. But how ſhould they know a man to be a falſe prophet, when he ſpeaks to them in the name of the Lord? For men might pretend, as ſome did, that God had ſent them, and given them a command, when he had not. To which he anſwers in the next verſes.

——— Even that prophet ſhall die.] He was to be ſtrangled, ſay the Jews, by the ſentence of the great Sanhedrin: For it is a tradition of their Rabbins, ſaith the Gemara Babylonica upon that title, that in the article of prophecy there are three ſorts of perſons, who are to be puniſhed by the judgment of men, and three by the ſentence of Heaven. He who propheſied what he did not hear from God, (an example of which we have in Zedekiah, 1 Kings xxii. 11.) or ſpake what was not ſaid to him, but to another, (an example of which they make in Hananiah, Jerem. xxviii. 11.) or propheſied in the name of an idol, (ſuppoſe Baal) all theſe were to be put to death by the ſentence of the court of judgment; but he that ſuppreſſed his propheſy, (like Jonah) or deſpiſed the words of a prophet, or did not obſerve his own words, was to be puniſhed by the hand of Heaven.

Ver. 21. And if thou ſay in thine heart, How ſhall we know the word which the Lord hath not ſpoken?] Which was but a reaſonable queſtion, there being as great care neceſſary, not to hearken to falſhood, as to be attentive unto truth. And this relates unto ſuch prophets, as came to them in the name of the Lord: For if a man came in the name of any other god, there needed no other mark to diſcover him to be an impoſtor.

Ver. 22. When a prophet ſpeaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to paſs, that is the thing which the Lord hath not ſpoken.] For if the Lord had ſent him, he would have accompliſhed what he gave as a ſign of his miſſion; which not coming to paſs, he was proved to be a falſe prophet, who ſpake out of his own heart, and not the word of the Lord. But here the Jews diſtinguiſhed between a prophet who predicts evil things, as famine or peſtilence, &c. and one that predicts good things, as rain, (when there is great need of it) and fruitful years, &c. Tho' the predictions of the former ſort did not come to paſs, he was not to be reputed preſently a falſe prophet, becauſe God is very merciful, and often repented him of the evil, as he did in the caſe of Nineveh: But in the latter caſe, if any one of the good things he foretold did not come to paſs, he was to be taken for a deceiver; which they underſtand alſo of the very time and place, when and where he ſaid the things he predicted would be fulfilled: And here they bring in the example of Hannaniah, the ſon of Azur, mentioned before, Jerem. xxviii. 11. and ſee ver. 8, 9. of that chapter. But this doth not give us the true difference: For both God's promiſes and threatnings many times depend upon a condition, as appears from that famous place in the prophet Jer. xviii. 7, 8, 9. So that the good things a prophet foretold might not come to paſs, and yet he might be a true prophet; becauſe the people proved unworthy of them, and God did not abſolutely intend them. Therefore the true meaning ſeems to be, that if a prophet foretold ſuch a thing as the power of nature cannot produce, and gave it as a ſign God ſent him, who would juſtify his miſſion by doing that wonder, and the thing did not come to paſs, he was to be looked upon not as a man of God: For example, when Moſes threw his rod on the ground, and ſaid it ſhould become a ſerpent; if it had not been transformed into that animal, he had been convicted of falſity: Or, a prophet ſaid, fire ſhould come down from heaven, and conſume the ſacrifice which lay before him, which was the caſe of Elijah; if it had not come down, he would have been no more owned for a true prophet, than the prophets of Baal. And, as Maimonides well obſerves, if a prophet's words were fulfilled in one or more things, he was not to be judged as a true prophet, unleſs every thing he ſpake in the name of God came to paſs; which he proves from thoſe words concerning Samuel, 1 Sam. iii. 19, 20. "The Lord "let none of his words fall to the ground: And all Iſrael "knew that Samuel was eſtabliſhed to be a prophet of the "Lord."

The Jews alſo made this addition to the fore-mentioned rule of trying prophets, as Mr. Selden obſerves, lib. iii. De Synedr. cap. 5. n. 3. "That whatſoever prophet had "the teſtimony of another undoubted prophet, was to "be taken for a true prophet." By which rule they might have known the great prophet whom God promiſed in the foregoing verſes: For John the Baptiſt, whom the whole nation took for a prophet, teſtified to them that Jeſus was the Chriſt. And beſide all other undoubted marks of his being ſent from God, his riſing from the dead, which he himſelf foretold, was enough to ſatisfy all men of the truth of what he ſaid: For though every prediction of what afterward comes to paſs, will not neceſſarily prove a man to be a true prophet; yet the fulfilling a great number of things, (not one of which fails, as we ſaid before of Samuel) eſpecially of ſuch a thing as this, which was impoſſible to be brought to paſs but by an Almighty power, is an uncontroulable evidence of a Divine Miſſion.

R. Solomon, upon this verſe, hath a note that is worth our obſervation, tho' it be not to the purpoſe of Moſes's words: "A prophet, ſaith he, that bids thee not obſerve "ſome of the precepts, is not to be heard, unleſs he be "known to be a man of eminent virtue, and upright life, "as Elijah was, who bid them build an altar on mount "Carmel, even when the ſacrifices upon high places were "forbidden. But there was a neceſſity for it, that he "might reſtore the true worſhip of God in Iſrael." Which ſhould have made them hearken to our bleſſed Saviour, better than they did, he being ſo perfectly holy and pure, that he challenged any of them to charge him with ſin; eſpecially when he only laid aſide ſome of their vain traditions, but conformed to all the rites of Moſes: So that if in concluſion we ſhould grant, that Moſes (in the 14th and 16th verſes, &c) ſpeaks of all the prophets that ſhould ſucceed him, (which it is certain he doth not prinprincipally intend) the Jews were impious in rejecting our Saviour, who came as a prophet to them, and had all the marks that teſtify a prophet's miſſion from God.

——— But the prophet hath ſpoken it preſumptuouſly: Thou ſhalt not be afraid of him.] Have no reverence or regard to him, tho' he be never ſo confident: Nor be afraid to lay hold on him, and endeavour to bring him to the Sanhedrim, to have their ſentence paſs upon him, (as the Jews underſtand it) tho' he have never ſo powerful an intereſt to ſupport him, and to preſerve him from puniſhment. Thus Maimonides, in the fore-named preface to Seder Zeraim, "Thou ſhalt not be terrified, or averted "from endeavouring to have him put to death, by his re- "ligion, goodneſs, or knowledge, ſince in his proud brags "he hath ſpoken falſe things of God." For to be afraid of ſuch a perſon, and of his partakers, was to diſtruſt God, who is the defender of thoſe that defend the cauſe of religion.

CHAP. XIX.

1 The cities of refuge. 4 The privilege thereof for the man ſlayer. 14 The land-mark is not to be removed. 15 Two witneſſes at the leaſt. 16 The puniſhment of a falſe witneſs.

WHEN the LORD thy God hath cut off the nations whoſe land the LORD thy God giveth thee, and thou ſucceedeſt them, and dwelleſt in their cities, and in their houſes;

2 Thou ſhalt ſeparate three cities for thee in the midſt of thy land which the LORD thy God giveth thee to poſſeſs it.

3 Thou ſhalt prepare thee a way, and divide the coaſts of thy land (which the LORD thy God giveth thee to inherit) into three parts, that every ſlayer may flee thither.

4 ¶ And this is the caſe of the ſlayer which ſhall flee thither, that he may live: Whoſo killeth his neighbour ignorantly, whom he hated not in time paſt.

5 As when a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour, to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a ſtroke with the ax to cut down the tree, and the head ſlippeth from the helve, and lighteth upon his neighbour, that he die: he ſhall flee unto one of thoſe cities, and live:

6 Leſt the avenger of the blood purſue the ſlayer, while his heart is hot, and overtake him, becauſe the way is long, and ſlay him, whereas he was not worthy of death, inaſmuch as he hated him not in time paſt.

7 Wherefore I command thee, ſaying, Thou ſhalt ſeparate three cities for thee.

8 And if the LORD thy God enlarge thy coaſt, (as he hath ſworn unto thy fathers) and give thee all the land which he promiſed to give unto thy fathers;

9 (If thou ſhalt keep all theſe commandments to do them, which I command thee this day, to love the LORD thy God, and to walk ever in his ways) then ſhalt thou add three cities more for thee, beſide theſe three:

10 That innocent blood be not ſhed in thy land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, and ſo blood be upon thee.

11 ¶ But if any man hate his neighbour, and lie in wait for him, and riſe up againſt him, and ſmite him mortally, that he die, and fleeth into one of theſe cities:

12 Then the elders of his city ſhall ſend, and fetch him thence, and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood, that he may die.

13 Thine eye ſhall not pity him, but thou ſhalt put away the guilt of innocent blood from Iſrael, that it may go well with thee.

14 ¶ Thou ſhalt not remove thy neighbours land-mark, which they of old time have ſet in thine inheritance which thou ſhalt inherit, in the land that the LORD thy God giveth thee to poſſeſs it.

15 ¶ One witneſs ſhall not riſe up againſt a man for any iniquity, or for any ſin, in any ſin that he ſinneth: at the mouth of two witneſſes, or at the mouth of three witneſſes ſhall the matter be eſtabliſhed.

16 ¶ If a falſe witneſs riſe up againſt any man, to teſtify againſt him that which is wrong:

17 Then both the men between whom the controverſy is, ſhall ſtand before the LORD, before the prieſts, and the judges which ſhall be in thoſe days.

18 And the judges ſhall make diligent inquiſition: and behold, if the witneſs be a falſe witneſs, and hath teſtified falſely againſt his brother:

19 Then ſhall ye do unto him as he had thought to have done unto his brother: ſo ſhalt thou put the evil away from among you.

20 And thoſe which remain ſhall hear, and fear, and ſhall henceforth commit no more any ſuch evil among you.

21 And thine eye ſhall not pity, but life ſhall go for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot.

Having ſufficiently preſſed upon the people the great commandment, of loving God with all their heart, and ſoul, and ſtrength, and him alone, Moſes now proceeds to remember them of other precepts belonging to the ſecond table, (as we now ſpeak) but not in an exact method, nor without interſperſing ſome ceremonial points.

Ver. 2. Thou ſhalt ſeparate three cities, &c.] The cities of refuge, together with the particular circumſtances of thoſe perſons who were intitled to protection in them, have have been ſufficiently deſcribed and illuſtrated in our annotations on the 11th verſe of the 35th chapter of Numbers, to which we refer our readers, it being unneceſſary to add any further remarks on thoſe articles.

Ver. 14. Thou ſhalt not remove thy neighbours land-mark, which they of old time have ſet in thine inheritance, &c.] The Jewiſh doctors think, that this hath reſpect to the holy land, as they call it, and to the terms or bounds which were ſet by Joſhua, in the diviſion of the country, which no man might take away; for that render'd him both guilty of theft, and alſo of the breach of this precept; and conſequently he incurr'd a double puniſhment, and was ſcourged twice as much as another offender. This was a law among the Greeks, as appears by Plato, lib.viii. de Legibus, Μὴ κινείτω γῆς ὅρια μηδεὶς, &c. νομίσας τὰ ἀκίνητα κινεῖν ἀληθῶς τοῦτο εἶναι, Let no man preſume to remove the bounds of land; looking upon this, as being truly to remove things immoveable, that is, to unſettle and overturn all things. Numa Pompilius therefore made this crime capital. Which makes Joſephus's explication of theſe words ſeem more reaſonable than that of the Talmudiſts, who extend this precept to the grounds of all their neighbouring nations, who were at peace with them, ὡς πολεμῶν ἐντεῦθεν σάσεων γενομένων, as being the occaſion of wars and inſurrections, which ariſe from the covetouſneſs of men, who would thus enlarge their territories, Archeol. lib. 4. cap. 8. which may be thought a reaſon why Moſes joins this to the foregoing precept, about puniſhing murder; and made this one of the curſes they were bound to pronounce, and conſent to, at their entrance into the land of Canaan, Deut. xxvii. 17.

—— Which they of old time have ſet in thine inheritance which thou ſhalt inherit, in the land that the Lord thy God giveth thee to poſſeſs it.] This may ſeem to determine this precept peculiarly to the preſerving the bounds in the land of Canaan; and by thoſe of old time, they underſtood Joſhua and the elders, who divided the land, and fixed every one's lot. But it was as neceſſary to be obſerved in all other countries, as that which was their proper inheritance. For, as Joſephus truly obſerves, they that remove the bounds of lands, are not very far from ſubverting all laws.

Ver. 15. One witneſs ſhall not riſe up.] They who gave their teſtimony in any cauſe always ſtood up.

—— Againſt a man for any iniquity, or for any ſin.] A ſingle witneſs was not to be admitted, as ſufficient to convict a man of any offence whatſoever, whether in civil or criminal matters. For an inquiſition into the fact, one was enough; but not for the condemnation of him who was accuſed. Yet in pecuniary matters, one witneſs was ſufficient to bring a man to purge himſelf by an oath, ch. xvii. 6.

Ver. 16. If a falſe witneſs riſe up againſt any man, to teſtify againſt him that which is wrong.] In any matter, whether againſt God, or againſt man. For tho' one witneſs could not condemn another, yet if it were proved he was a falſe witneſs, it was ſufficient to condemn himſelf.

Ver. 17. Then both the men between whom the controverſy is, ſhall ſtand before the Lord.] They were to come, in perplexed caſes, to the ſupreme court, where the ſanctuary was ſettled; who ſat, it is likely, at the door of the tabernacle, in the time of Moſes; ſee ch. xvii. 8, 22. and ſo might properly be ſaid to try them before the Lord.

——— Before the prieſts and the judges which ſhall be in thoſe days.] This they all underſtood of the higheſt court, which conſiſted partly of prieſts, and partly of other great perſons, whom he calls judges; under which name, the whole court is comprehended in the next verſe. See ch. xvii. 8.

Ver. 18. And the judges ſhall make diligent inquiſition.] For it was not eaſy to prove a man a falſe witneſs; and therefore the matter was brought before this ſupreme court.

——— And behold, if the witneſs be a falſe witneſs, and hath teſtified falſely againſt his brother.] If, upon ſtrict examination, he was found to have given a falſe evidence againſt his brother, in a matter which affected his eſtate, or his body, or his life.

Ver. 19. Then ſhall ye do unto him, as he had thought to have done unto his brother.] That is, ſaith Maimonides, if he deſigned to have taken away his brother's life, he was to loſe his own; if to have him ſcourged, he was to be laſhed himſelf; if to loſe a ſum of money, he was to be fined the very ſame ſum, More Nevochim, P. iii. cap. 41. But tho' in moſt caſes a falſe witneſs was to ſuffer the very ſame kind of puniſhment, which he intended to have brought upon another, if his teſtimony had not been diſproved; yet in ſome it was not exactly obſerved. As if any perſon falſly accuſed a prieſt's daughter of playing the harlot, he was not to be burnt, as ſhe ſhould have been, but to be ſtrangled as an adulterer. So J. Coch obſerves upon the title Maccoth, ad cap. 1. where the whole buſineſs of falſe teſtimonies is handled. But ſome fooliſh deciſions were made by the Rabbins in oppoſition to the Sadducees, as he obſerves in his annot. 20. ſect. 6.

Among the Athenians there was an action lay, not only againſt a falſe witneſs, but againſt the perſon who produced him; upon whom they ſet a fine, and they were made infamous. And if they were found thrice guilty of this crime, not only they, but their poſterity, were render'd infamous throughout all generations; as Sam. Petitus obſerves, out of Andocides and others, lib. 4. in Leges Atticas, tit. 7. p. 359. It is ſomewhat ſtrange, they were not more ſevere againſt ſuch offenders, many of their laws being plainly borrowed from Moſes. And among the ancient Romans, by the law of the twelve tables, falſe witneſſes were thrown down from the Tarpeian rock, as A. Gellius tells us, lib. xx. cap. 1. which was altered indeed, in latter times, for ſuch puniſhments as the judges thought they merited: But he there tells Phavorinus, that if the old puniſhment had continued to their days, they ſhould not have had ſo many falſe teſtimonies given, as they then ſaw.

CHAP. XX.

1 The prieſts exhortation to encourage the people to battle. 5 The officers proclamation who are to be diſmiſſed from the war. 10 How to uſe the cities that accept or refuſe the proclamation of peace. 16 What cities muſt be devoted. 19 Trees of mans meat muſt not be deſtroyed in the ſiege.

WHEN thou goeſt out to battle againſt thine enemies, and ſeeſt horſes, and chariots, and a people more than thou, be not afraid of them: for the LORD thy God is with thee, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

2 And it ſhall be when ye are come nigh unto the battle, that the prieſts ſhall approach, and ſpeak unto the people,

3 And ſhall ſay unto them, Hear, O Iſrael, you approach this day unto battle againſt your enemies: let not your hearts faint, fear not, and do not tremble, neither be ye terrified becauſe of them.

4 For the LORD your God is he that goeth with you, to fight for you againſt your enemies, to ſave you.

5 ¶ And the officers ſhall ſpeak unto the people, ſaying, What man is there that hath built a new houſe, and hath not dedicated it? let him go and return to his houſe, leſt he die in the battle, and another man dedicate it.

6 And what man is he that hath planted a vineyard, and hath not yet eaten of it? let him alſo go and return unto his houſe, leſt he die in the battle, and another man eat of it.

7 And

7 And what man is there that hath betrothed a wife, and hath not taken her? let him go and return unto his houſe, leſt he die in battle, and another man take her.

8 And the officers ſhall ſpeak further unto the people, and they ſhall ſay, What man is there that is fearful and faint-hearted? let him go and return unto his houſe, leſt his brethrens heart faint as well as his heart.

9 And it ſhall be when the officers have made an end of ſpeaking unto the people, that they ſhall make captains of the armies to lead the people.

10 ¶ When thou comeſt nigh unto a city to fight againſt it, then proclaim peace unto it.

11 And it ſhall be, if it make thee anſwer of peace, and open unto thee, then it ſhall be that all the people, that is found therein, ſhall be tributaries unto thee, and they ſhall ſerve thee.

12 And if it will make no peace with thee, but will make war againſt thee, then thou ſhalt beſiege it.

13 And when the LORD thy God hath delivered it into thine hands, thou ſhalt ſmite every male thereof with the edge of the ſword.

14 But the women, and the little ones, and the cattle, and all that is in the city, even all the ſpoil thereof, ſhalt thou take unto thyſelf: and thou ſhalt eat the ſpoil of thine enemies, which the LORD thy God hath given thee.

15 Thus ſhalt thou do unto all the cities which are very far off from thee, which are not of the cities of theſe nations.

16 But of the cities of theſe people which the LORD thy God doth give thee for an inheritance, thou ſhalt ſave alive nothing that breatheth:

17 But thou ſhalt utterly deſtroy them, namely, the Hittites, and the Amorites, the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebuſites, as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee:

18 That they teach you not to do after all their abominations, which they have done unto their gods, ſo ſhould ye ſin againſt the LORD your God.

19 ¶ When thou ſhalt beſiege a city a long time, in making war againſt it to take it, thou ſhalt not deſtroy the trees thereof by forcing an ax againſt them: for thou mayſt eat of them, and thou ſhalt not cut them down (for the tree of the field is mans life) to employ them in the ſiege.

20 Only the trees which thou knoweſt that they be not trees for meat, thou ſhalt deſtroy and cut them down; and thou ſhalt build bulwarks againſt the city that maketh war with thee, until it be ſubdued.

Ver. 1. When thou goeſt out to battle againſt thine enemies, and ſeeſt horſes, and chariots, and a people more than thou, be not afraid of them.] The Iſraelites were trained up to confide in God, and not in horſes (which their country did not afford, and conſequently they had no chariots) nor in multitude of ſoldiers: And we find remarkable inſtances of this, particularly in Jehoſaphat (2 Chron. xx. 6, &c. 17.) who followed the example of David, whoſe words are moſt remarkable, Pſalm xx. 7. Some truſt in chariots, and ſome in horſes, but we will remember the Lord our God. See alſo Prov. xxi. 21.

——— For the Lord thy God is with thee, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.] The tranſlation of Onkelos is here very remarkable; which is, The Lord thy God, his word is thy help: which plainly denotes another divine perſon, the ſame with Jehovah.

Ver. 2. And it ſhall be when ye are come nigh unto the battle, that the prieſt ſhall approach and ſpeak unto the people.] The Jews ſay there was a prieſt appointed for this very purpoſe, whom they call MASCHUACH MILCHAMA, anointed of war, he being ſet apart, as they ſay, to this office by an unction, and that with the ſame oil with which the king was anointed. His office was to blow the trumpet, to make the following ſpeech unto the army, when they were preparing to join battle; and when they firſt went out, to exhort all new builders, planters, and married men to return back; and when they were drawn up in battalia, to exhort all that were faint hearted to leave the army and go home.

Ver. 5. And the officers ſhall ſpeak unto the people ſaying.] This the Jews, particularly Abarbinel, think was ſpoken by the prieſt before mentioned, and then proclaimed by the officers, called Schoterim.

——— What man is there that hath built a new houſe, and hath not dedicated it.] That is, hath not yet dwelt in it. For at their firſt entrance to dwell in an houſe, they made a feaſt, which being the firſt meal they made there, was called Chanach, or Dedication.

——— Let him go and return to his houſe, leſt he die in the battle, and another man dedicate it.] This was allowed in thoſe wars only which they made voluntarily, but not of thoſe which were ex præcepto, by the divine commandment, againſt the ſeven nations of Canaan and Amaleck, in which every man was bound to engage. And ſo are the other caſes, which here follow, to be underſtood, as all the Jewiſh writers agree.

Ver. 6. And what man is he that hath planted a vineyard, and hath not yet eaten of it? Let him alſo go, and return to his houſe, leſt he die in the battle, and another man eat of it.] The ground both of this, and the foregoing proclamation, (and of the next alſo) ſeems to have been, that the minds of ſuch men were commonly very much diſturbed, to think of leaving what they had taken a great deal of pains about, and enjoy nothing of it; which would naturally make them fight with leſs courage.

Ver. 7. And what man is there that hath betrothed a wife, and hath not taken her, &c.] It muſt be confeſſed, that this is a law of great equity, founded on nature, that conjugal love ſhould not be diſturbed, but have ſome time to knit into a ſtrong and ſtable affection, by an uninterrupted converſation together in its beginning. The Jews were ſo favourable in this particular, that they ſay, if five brethren were in the war together, and one of them was ſlain, leaving a widow without iſſue, all the remaining four returned home, becauſe every one of them, in their order, in caſe thoſe before him refuſed, was to raiſe up ſeed to his dead brother.

Ver. 8. And the officers ſhall ſpeak further unto the people, and they ſhall ſay, what man is there that is fearful and faint hearted, let him go and return unto his houſe, leſt his brethrens hearts faint as well as his heart.] For the cowardice of ſome might intimidate the reſt. Yet all theſe who were thus diſmiſſed, were bound (if required) to furniſh the army with proviſions and water, they were likewiſe to clear the ways, and to take up their quarters. See Sota cap. viii. where Jo. Wagenſeil obſerves, that they who reſtrain theſe offices only to the fearful are miſtaken.

Ver. 19. When thou ſhalt beſiege a city a long time, in making war againſt it, to take it, thou ſhalt not deſtroy the trees thereof, by forcing an ax againſt them, for thou mayeſt eat of them, and thou ſhalt not cut them down.] It is very plain that Moſes ſpeaks of fruit-trees, ſuch as bear apples, olives, dates, &c. which were to be preſerved both in war and peace, except in a few caſes. In war, if the enemy made advantage of them, for their archers to lurk and ſhelter themſelves behind them, by which the Iſraelites were much annoyed, then they think they might be cut down, to ſhorten the ſiege. And in peace, if they did not bring forth fruit, or if the fruit would not be ſo profitable as the wood would be for building, and other uſes, or if they hindered the growth of better trees; in all theſe caſes they might be cut down, as the Jewiſh doctors reſolve; who, when they pleaſe, mind the reaſon of a law, and not the bare words; inſomuch, that they extend this law to many other things, which they ſay might not be deſtroyed, if they were uſeful and profitable. No houſes, for inſtance, nor garments, nor houſhold ſtuff; nor were they to ſtop up fountains, &c.

—— For the tree of the field is mans life.] The word life is not in the Hebrew text, but we add it to make out the ſenſe; in which we follow many good authors among the Jews, particularly Aben Ezra, who obſerves many ſuch elliptical, i. e. conciſe forms of ſpeech in ſcripture. As in 1 Sam. xvi. 20. where an aſs of bread, is an aſs loaded with bread: So here, the tree is a man, that is, the life, or ſupport of man. Juſt as xxiv. 6. it's ſaid, a man ſhould not take the upper or nether mill-ſtone to pledge, kinepheſhhu, becauſe it is his life, namely, that whereby he obtains his livelihood. But there are many who tranſlate the words by way of interrogation, (and the Hebrew will bear it) and joining them with theſe that follow, make this the ſenſe, Is the tree of the field a man, that it ſhould come againſt thee in a ſiege? So the vulgar, Greek, and the Arabic tranſlation, and the Chaldee paraphraſt, and Joſephus, as Mr. Selden obſerves, Lib. vi. de jure nat. & Gent. cap. 12. as much as to ſay, they need not fear any danger from the trees, as if they were ſoldiers that could fight againſt them. And if this ſenſe do not ſeem dilate (as ſome have cenſured it) there is no need of rendering the words by way of interrogation, but only of repeating the word not out of the foregoing words, in this manner, Thou ſhalt not cut them down, for the tree of the field is not a man, &c. of this there are many examples, as Glaſſius and our Gataker have ſhewn. And thus R. Bechai among the Jews expounds theſe words; and the famous Abarbinel, who thus gloſſes upon them, "It is not decent to make war againſt trees, who have no "hands to fight with thee; but againſt men only." And this ſenſe Grotius follows, Lib. iii. de jure belli & pacis, cap. xii. ſect. 2. where he produces Philo for this opinion, and Joſephus, who ſays, "if the trees could ſpeak, they "would cry out, that it was unjuſt, that they who were "no cauſe of the war, ſhould ſuffer the miſchiefs of it." And thus Onkelos tranſlates theſe words, and thoſe that follow, "for the tree of the field is not as man, that it "ſhould come againſt thee in a ſiege;" that is, they had no cauſe to fear trees, and therefore ſhould not hurt them. But this is a reaſon againſt cutting down any trees whatſoever, whereas Moſes ſpeaks only of fruit-trees; from whence Grotius thinks that ſaying of the Pythagoreans took its original ἥμερον φυτὸν ἔγκαρπον, &c. "Trees "which do not grow wild, but bear fruit, ought not to "be hurt, much leſs cut down." And yet it ſeems to be more agreeable to the Hebrew words, than our marginal tranſlation, which makes this ſenſe, "that there "are trees of the field ſufficient to be employed in the "ſiege;" ſo that they need not cut down fruit-trees to carry it on.

CHAP. XXI.

1 The expiation of an uncertain murder. 10 The uſage of a captive taken to wife. 15 The firſt-born is not to be diſinherited upon private affection. 18 A ſtubborn ſon is to be ſtoned to death. 22 The malefactor muſt not hang all night on a tree.

IF one be found ſlain in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee to poſſeſs it, lying in the field, and it be not known who hath ſlain him:

2 Then thy elders and thy judges ſhall come forth, and they ſhall meaſure unto the cities which are round about him that is ſlain.

3 And it ſhall be that the city which is next unto the ſlain man, even the elders of that city ſhall take an heifer which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke.

4 And the elders of that city ſhall bring down the heifer unto a rough valley, which is neither eared nor ſown, and ſhall ſtrike off the heifers neck there in the valley.

5 And the prieſts the ſons of Levi ſhall come near (for them the LORD thy God hath choſen to miniſter unto him, and to bleſs in the name of the LORD) and by their word ſhall every controverſy and every ſtroke be tried.

6 And all the elders of that city that are next unto the ſlain man, ſhall waſh their hands over the heifer that is beheaded in the valley.

7 And they ſhall anſwer and ſay, Our hands have not ſhed this blood, neither have our eyes ſeen it.

8 Be merciful, O LORD, unto thy people Iſrael, whom thou haſt redeemed, and lay not innocent blood unto thy people of Iſraels charge. And the blood ſhall be forgiven them.

9 So ſhalt thou put away the guilt of innocent blood from among you, when thou ſhalt do that which is right in the ſight of the LORD.

10 ¶ When thou goeſt forth to war againſt thine enemies, and the LORD thy God hath delivered them into thine hands, and thou haſt taken them captive.

11 And ſeeſt among the captives a beautiful woman, and haſt a deſire unto her, that thou wouldſt have her to thy wife:

12 Then thou ſhalt bring her home to thine houſe, and ſhe ſhall ſhave her head, and pare her nails.

13 And

13 And ſhe ſhall put the raiment of her captivity from off her, and ſhall remain in thine houſe, and bewail her father and her mother a full month: and after that, thou ſhalt go in unto her, and be her husband, and ſhe ſhall be thy wife.

14 And it ſhall be if thou have no delight in her, then thou ſhalt let her go whither ſhe will, but thou ſhalt not ſell her at all for money, thou ſhalt not make merchandiſe of her, becauſe thou haſt humbled her.

15 ¶ If a man have two wives, one beloved, and another hated, and they have born him children, both the beloved and the hated; and if the firſt-born ſon be hers that was hated:

16 Then it ſhall be, when he maketh his ſons to inherit that which he hath, that he may not make the ſon of the beloved, firſt-born, before the ſon of the hated, which is indeed the firſt-born:

17 But he ſhall acknowledge the ſon of the hated for the firſt-born, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath: for he is the beginning of his ſtrength, the right of the firſt-born is his.

18 ¶ If a man have a ſtubborn and rebellious ſon, which will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother, and that when they have chaſtened him, will not hearken unto them:

19 Then ſhall his father and his mother lay hold on him, and bring him out unto the elders of his city, and unto the gate of his place:

20 And they ſhall ſay unto the elders of his city, This our ſon is ſtubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice; he is a glutton, and a drunkard.

21 And all the men of his city ſhall ſtone him with ſtones, that he die: ſo ſhalt thou put evil away from among you, and all Iſrael ſhall hear, and fear.

22 ¶ And if a man have committed a ſin worthy of death, and he be to be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree:

23 His body ſhall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou ſhalt in any wiſe bury him that day (for he that is hanged, is accurſed of God) that thy land be not defiled, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

Ver. 1. If one be found ſlain in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee to poſſeſs it, lying in the field, and it be not known who hath ſlain him.] Or, in the city, or any place; only the field is named, as the place where ſuch murders are moſt commonly committed, and moſt eaſily concealed.

Ver. 2. Then thy elders and thy judges.] Thoſe of thy elders who are judges (for the latter word explains and reſtrains the former) that is, the judges or rulers of all the neighbouring cities, who were all concerned in this enquiry.

——— Shall come forth, and they ſhall meaſure unto the cities which are round about him that is ſlain.] Unleſs it be evident and confeſſed which city is neareſt, for then meaſuring was ſuperfluous.

Ver. 3. And it ſhall be that the city which is next unto the ſlain man, even the elders of that city ſhall take an heifer which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke.] A fit vicegerent and repreſentative of the murderer, in whoſe ſtead it was killed, who by this act hath ſhewn himſelf to be a ſon of Belial, who would not bear the yoke of God's law: A type alſo of Chriſt, who was obliged to no work, and under no yoke, but what he had voluntarily taken upon himſelf.

Ver. 4. And the elders of that city ſhall bring down the heifer unto a rough valley, which is neither eared nor ſown.] Partly to repreſent the hard and untutoured heart of the murderer; and partly that ſuch a deſert and horrid place might create an horror of murder and of murderers.

——— And ſhall ſtrike off the heifers neck there in the valley.] To ſhew what they would and ſhould have done to the murderer if they had found him.

Ver. 5. And the prieſts the ſons of Levi ſhall come near (for them the Lord thy God hath choſen to miniſter unto him, and to bleſs in the name of the Lord).] Both to direct them in all the circumſtances of action, and to ſee that the law was obſerved, and to bleſs them in God's name, by praying for them, and abſolving or pronouncing them guiltleſs in this manner.

——— And by their word ſhall every controverſy, and every ſtroke be tried.] Not abſolutely all manner of controverſies that could poſſibly ariſe, as if their word was to determine whether there were a God or providence or no; whether God ſhould be worſhipped, and his commands obſerved or no; whether Moſes was a true prophet, or an impoſtor; whether apoſtate and idolatrous Iſraelites ſhould be puniſhed or no; which is apparently abſurd and ridiculous; but every ſuch controverſy as might ariſe about the matter here ſpoken of; nothing being more uſual than to underſtand univerſal expreſſions in a limited ſenſe; and indeed this is limited and explained by the following words, and every ſtroke (the particle and being put expoſitively:) That is, every controverſy which ſhall ariſe about any ſtroke, whether ſuch a mortal ſtroke as is here ſpoken of; a murder, which may well be called a ſtroke, as to ſmite is oft uſed for to kill, as Gen. iv. 15. Levit. xxiv. 17, &c. or any other ſtroke or wound given by one man to another.

Ver. 6. And all the elders of that city that are next to the ſlain man, ſhall waſh their hands over the heifer that is beheaded in the valley.] In teſtimony of their innocency.

——— And they ſhall anſwer, and ſay.] To wit, to the prieſts who ſhall examine them, and determine this controverſy.

—Our hands have not ſhed this blood.] This blood, about which the preſent enquiry is made; or this which is here preſent; for it is thought the corps of the ſlain man was brought into the ſame place where the heifer was ſlain.

——— Neither have our eyes ſeen it.] Nor have we ſeen or underſtood how or by whom this was done.

Ver. 8. Be merciful, O Lord, unto thy people Iſrael whom thou haſt redeemed, and lay not innocent blood unto thy people of Iſraels charge: and the blood ſhall be forgiven them.] That is, not imputed to them, nor puniſhed in them: for God is ſometimes ſaid to forgive when he doth not puniſh, as Pſalm lxxviii. 38. Beſide, tho' there was no mortal guilt in this people, yet there was a ceremonial uncleanneſs in the land, which was to be expiated and forgiven.

Ver. 10. When thou goeſt forth to war againſt thine enemies, &c.] Theſe were to be enemies of other nations, and not of the Canaanites, for they might not ſpare their women, and much leſs marry them, Exod. xxxiv. 16.

Ver. 11. And ſeeſt among the captives a beautiful woman, and haſt a deſire unto her, &c.] Or haſt conceived an affection for her; or, taken delight in her.

Which may be a modeſt expreſſion for obtaining from her the gratification of his deſires, and ſeems ſeems probable, becauſe it is ſaid, ver. 14. that he had humbled her, to wit, by military inſolence when he took her captive, not after he had married her, for then he would have expreſſed it thus, "becauſe thou haſt married "her," which had been more emphatical than to ſay, "becauſe thou haſt humbled her". And here ſeems to be two caſes ſuppoſed, and direction given what to do in both of them; firſt, that he did deſire to marry her, of which Moſes ſpeaks, ver. 11, 12, 13. Secondly, that he did not deſire this, or not delight in her, of which he ſpeaks, ver. 14.

Ver. 12. Then thou ſhalt bring her home to thine houſe, &c.] Either firſt to take off his affections from her, by rendering her uncomely and deformed, but then the laſt words muſt not be rendered, ſhall pare her nails, but ſhall nouriſh them, or ſuffer them to grow, as the Chaldee, Arabic, and ſeveral of the learned Jews, and other interpreters, render it. Or, ſecondly, to expreſs her ſorrow for the loſs of her father and mother, as it follows, ver. 13. it being the ancient cuſtom of mourners in moſt nations to ſhave themſelves, and in ſome to pare their nails; in others to ſuffer them to grow; or rather, thirdly, in token of her renouncing her heatheniſh idolatry and ſuperſtition, and of her becoming a new woman, and embracing the true religion; which her captive condition and ſubjection to his will would make her inclinable to do in profeſſion.

Ver. 13. And he ſhall put the raiment of her captivity from off her.] That is, either firſt thoſe goodly raiments in which ſhe was when ſhe was taken captive; inſtead of which, ſhe was now to put on a ſervile habit, as this is generally underſtood; or rather, ſecondly, thoſe ſervile and ſordid raiments which were put upon her when ſhe was taken captive, agreeably to the manner of treating captives, as the phraſe it ſelf ſeems to intimate, as priſon garments, Jer. lii. 33. are ſuch garments as priſoners uſe to wear; and garments of praiſe are praiſe-worthy, or glorious garments; and it ſeems harſh to call thoſe garments of captivity, which are made for, and generally worn by free perſons only, and which are uſually taken away from perſons when they come into captivity; add, that this doth not ſeem to be any part or indication of her ſorrow, but rather a mending of her condition, and exchanging her ſervile habit for a better and more decent one, which might be, tho' this were a mourning attire.

—— And ſhall remain in thine houſe, and bewail her father and mother a full month.] Either their death, or, which was in effect the ſame, her final ſeparation from them. This likewiſe ſignified her alienation from them, or from their ſuperſtitions and idolatrous courſes, and her tranſlation of her love from all other perſons to her husband, and to the true religion.

—— And after that thou ſhalt go in unto her, and be her husband, and ſhe ſhall be thy wife.] Suppoſing what might very rationally be ſuppoſed of one in her circumſtances, and what ſhe ſignified by the foregoing rites, that ſhe ſhould ſubmit to her husband's religion, in which caſe the marriage might be tolerated: Or, this was a permiſſion and indulgence given to them for the hardneſs of their hearts, as in the caſe of divorce, Deut. xxiv. 1. Matthew xix. 8.

Ver. 14. And it ſhall be, if thou have no delight in her.] Either firſt after thou haſt married her; and ſo this is a permiſſion of divorce, which being indulged toward an Iſraelitiſh woman, was not likely to be denied to a ſtranger. Or rather, ſecondly, before thy marriage: for it is not probable, that God having given him competent time for the tryal of his affections to her before he was permitted to marry her, would ſuffer him, upon ſo ſlight an occaſion, within a day or two after ſuch a ſolemn contract, to ſend her away: nor is there a word ſpoken here of any divorce.

—— Then thou ſhalt let her go whither ſhe will; but thou ſhalt not ſell her at all for money, &c.] That is, make gain of her, either by uſing her to thy own ſervile works, or by proſtituting her to the luſt or the ſervice of others.

—— Becauſe thou haſt humbled her.] That is, haſt been admitted to her bed, as this phraſe is often uſed, Gen. xxxiv. 2. Deut. xxii. 24, 29. Judges xix. 24. Ezek. xxii. 10, 11.

Ver. 15. If a man have two wives, one beloved, and another hated.] That is, loved to a leſs degree, as the word hated ſometimes ſignifies, Gen. xxix. 31. Matt. vi. 24. R. Solomon thinks this caſe follows the other, becauſe it might ſo happen, that if a man ſuffered himſelf to be actuated by too violent a paſſion for ſuch a woman, as is before mentioned, it might turn into hatred, when he found her not agreeable to him.

—— And they have born him children, both the beloved and the hated.] Toward whom it was likely he would be affected very differently, as he was to his wives.

—— And if the firſt-born ſon be hers that was hated.] As it fell out in the caſe of Leah and Rachel.

Ver. 16. Then it ſhall be, when he maketh his ſons to inherit that which he hath, that he may not make the ſon of the beloved, firſt-born] It is not lawful, becauſe contrary to the rights and law of nature.

—— Before the ſon of the hated, which is indeed the firſt born.] Or, before the face of the ſon, that is, in his life-time, as this phraſe is underſtood, Gen. xi. 28. and xvi. 12. and xxv. 18. and when this phraſe is rendered before another, it ſignifies only in the preſence of another, but never intimates the preference of one perſon to another, which the Hebrews expreſs in a different manner. And this may be added to intimate, that if the eldeſt ſon were dead and had left a child, the father was free to give the right of his firſt-born unto his ſecond ſon, rather than to the child of the eldeſt: Or, this phraſe may be an aggravation of the fact, whereby his father did in a manner ſpit in his face, and faſten a reproach upon him in his very ſight and preſence.

Ver. 17. But he ſhall acknowledge the ſon of the hated for the firſt-born.] Which had his firſt love, and was to enjoy the effects of it.

—— By giving him a double portion of all that he hath.] Of all that he was in poſſeſſion of when he died, but not of that which was his in reverſion after his death, as Mr. Selden ſhews the opinion of the Jewiſh Lawyers is, Lib. de Succeſſ. cap. 6. p. 24.

—— For he is the beginning of his ſtrength; the right of the firſt-born is his.] By a very ancient cuſtom, antecedent to the law, which made the firſt-born the head of the family, and gave him as much more as any of his brethren of the eſtate belonging to it, that he might be able to maintain and ſupport the dignity of it, Gen. xxv. 31. But if there was no ſon, and the inheritance was to be divided among daughters, the eldeſt daughter had not a double ſhare of the eſtate, as Mr. Selden ſhews in the ſame book, cap. 8.

Ver. 18. If a man have a ſtubborn and rebellious ſon, &c.] By a ſtubborn ſon, the Jews underſtand one that will not do as he is bidden, and by a rebellious, one that doth what he is forbidden.

Ver. 19. Then ſhall his father and his mother lay hold of him.] The conſent of both is required to prevent the abuſe of this law to cruelty. And it cannot reaſonably be ſuppoſed that both would agree without manifeſt neceſſity, and the ſons abominable and incorrigible wickedneſs, in which caſe it ſeems a fit and righteous law, becauſe the crime of rebellion againſt his own parents was ſo high in itſelf, and did fully ſignify what a pernicious member he would prove in the common-wealth of Iſrael, who had diſſolved all his natural obligations. Yet the Jews ſay this law was never put in practice, and therefore it might be made for terror and prevention, and to render the authority of parents more ſacred and powerful.

—— And bring him out unto the elders of his city.] Which was a ſufficient caution to preſerve children from the malice of any hard hearted parents, becauſe theſe elders were firſt to examine the cauſe with all exactneſs, and then to pronounce the ſentence.

Ver. 20. And they ſhall ſay unto the elders of his city, this our ſon is ſtubborn and rebellious.] Adds incorrigibleneſs to all his wickedneſs.

—— He will not obey our voice: he is a glutton, and a drunkard.] Under which two offences others of a like or worſe nature are comprehended by a ſynechdoche.

Ver. 21. And all the men of his city ſhall ſtone him with ſtones that he die, &c.] Which was the puniſhment appointed for blaſphemers and idolaters; and if it ſeem ſevere, it is to be conſidered that parents are in God's ſtead, and entruſted in good meaſure with his authority over their children; and that families are the matter and foundation of the church and common-wealth, and they who are depraved members and rebellious children in them, them, commonly prove the bane and plague of theſe, and therefore no wonder if they are nipped in the bud.

Ver. 22. And if a man have committed a ſin worthy of death, and he be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree.] Which was done after the malefactor was put to death ſome other way; this publick ſhame being added to his former puniſhment. See Joſ. vii. 25. and viii. 29. and x. 26. 2 Sam. iv. 12.

Ver. 23. His body ſhall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou ſhalt in any wiſe bury him that day (for he that is hanged is accurſed of God.)] That is, he is in a ſingular manner curſed and puniſhed by God's appointment, with a moſt ſhameful kind of puniſhment, as this was held among the Jews and all nations; and therefore this puniſhment may ſuffice for him, and there ſhall not be added to it that of lying unburied, which was another great calamity, Jer. xvi. 4. And this curſe is here appropriated to thoſe that are hanged, partly becauſe this puniſhment was inflicted only upon the moſt notorious and publick offenders, and ſuch as brought the curſe of God upon the community, Numb. xxv. 4. 2 Sam. xxi. 6. and principally to fore ſignify that Chriſt ſhould undergo this execrable puniſhment, and be made a curſe for us, Gal. iii. 13. which tho' it was yet to come in reſpect to men, was preſent unto God; and in his eye at this time; and ſo this is delivered with reſpect to Chriſt, as many other paſſages of ſcripture manifeſtly are.

——That thy land be not defiled which the Lord thy God giveth thee, &c.] Namely, By the ſtench of the body after it is putrified, as Abarbinel expounds it, who obſerves, that the dead body of no creature corrupts and grows offenſive to the living ſooner than that of man. For which cauſe, ſaith he, the book of Siphre determines not only that all malefactors ſhould be buried as ſoon as the law here orders (that they might not imitate the manners of the Egyptians and Philiſtines, and ſuch like people, who ſuffered bodies to rot in the air after they were hanged up) but that every man ſhould bury his dead the ſame day he died, or be deemed to have tranſgreſſed a negative precept; which may paſs for a very good natural reaſon of it: But there is ſomething more in it, reſpecting a legal pollution, under which their whole country lay, as long as an accurſed thing hung openly among them; juſt as all that entered into a tent where a body lay, and all that was in it, were rendered unclean by it, Numb. xix. 14, 15. upon which ſcore St. Paul might well apply this paſſage to Chriſt crucified for us; not only becauſe he bare our ſins, and was put to death, and expoſed to ſuch ſhame as theſe ſinners were, who were accurſed of God; but was alſo taken down in the evening, as an indication that the guilt was then removed; as the curſe upon the man that was hanged ended at the going down of the ſun; and as the land of Iſrael was pure and clean, after the dead body was taken down and buried, with the tree upon which it was hanged. Joh. Coch. hath well explained this in his notes upon the Sanhedrim, cap. 6. ſect. 5. whoſe ſenſe in ſhort is this: "As our bleſſed Saviour, while he hung upon "the croſs, was made a curſe, and an execration; ſo when "according to the law, he was taken down and buried, "both he ceaſed to be a curſe, and all they that are "his."

CHAP. XXII.

1 Of humanity toward brethren. 5 The ſex is to be diſtinguiſhed by apparel. 6 The dam is not to be taken with her young ones. 8 The houſe muſt have battlements. 9 Confuſion is to be avoided. 12 Fringes upon the veſture. 13 The puniſhment of him that ſlandereth his wife. 20, 22 Of adultery. 25 Of rape. 28 And of fornication. 30 Inceſt.

THOU ſhalt not ſee thy brothers ox or his ſheep go aſtray, and hide thyſelf from them: thou ſhalt in any caſe bring them again unto thy brother.

2 And if thy brother be not nigh unto thee, or if thou know him not, then thou ſhalt bring it unto thine own houſe, and it ſhall be with thee until thy brother ſeek after it, and thou ſhalt reſtore it to him again.

3 In like manner ſhalt thou do with his aſs, and ſo ſhalt thou do with his raiment, and with all loſt thing of thy brothers, which he hath loſt, and thou haſt found, ſhalt thou do likewiſe: thou mayeſt not hide thyſelf.

4 ¶ Thou ſhalt not ſee thy brothers aſs, or his ox fall down by the way, and hide thyſelf from them: thou ſhalt ſurely help him to lift them up again.

5 ¶ The woman ſhall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither ſhall a man put on a womans garment: for all that do ſo are abomination unto the LORD thy God.

6 ¶ If a birds neſt chance to be before thee in the way in any tree, or on the ground, whether they be young ones, or eggs, and the dam ſitting upon the young, or upon the eggs, thou ſhalt not take the dam with the young.

7 But thou ſhalt in any wiſe let the dam go, and take the young to thee, that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayſt prolong thy days.

8 ¶ When thou buildeſt a new houſe, then thou ſhalt make a battlement for thy roof, that thou bring not blood upon thine houſe, if any man fall from thence.

9 ¶ Thou ſhalt not ſow thy vineyard with divers ſeeds: leſt the fruit of thy ſeed which thou haſt ſown, and the fruit of thy vineyard be defiled.

10 ¶ Thou ſhalt not plow with an ox and an aſs together.

11 ¶ Thou ſhalt not wear a garment of divers ſorts, as of woollen and linnen together.

12 ¶ Thou ſhalt make thee fringes upon the four quarters of thy veſture, wherewith thou covereſt thyſelf.

13 ¶ If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her,

14 And give occaſion of ſpeech againſt her, and bring up an evil name upon her, and ſay, I took this woman, and when I came to her, I found her not a maid:

15 Then ſhall the father of the damſel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damſels virginity, unto the elders of the city in the gate:

16 And the damſels father ſhall ſay unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her,

17 And lo, he hath given occaſions of ſpeech againſt her, ſaying, I found not thy daughter a maid: and yet theſe are the tokens of my daughters virginity: and they ſhall ſpread the cloth before the elders of the city.

18 And the elders of that city ſhall take that man and chaſtiſe him.

19 And they ſhall amerce him in an hundred ſhekels of ſilver, and give them unto the father of the damſel, becauſe he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Iſrael: and ſhe ſhall be his wife, he may not put her away all his days.

20 But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damſel:

21 Then they ſhall bring out the damſel to the door of her fathers houſe, and the men of her city ſhall ſtone her with ſtones that ſhe die: becauſe ſhe hath wrought folly in Iſrael, to play the whore in her fathers houſe: ſo ſhalt thou put evil away from among you.

22 ¶ If a man be found lying with a woman married to an husband, then they ſhall both of them die, both the man that lay with the woman, and the woman: ſo ſhalt thou put away evil from Iſrael.

23 ¶ If a damſel that is a virgin be betrothed unto a husband, and a man find her in the city, and lie with her:

24 Then ye ſhall bring them both out unto the gate of that city, and ye ſhall ſtone them with ſtones that they die; the damſel, becauſe ſhe cried not, being in the city; and the man, becauſe he hath humbled his neighbours wife: ſo thou ſhalt put away evil from among you.

25 ¶ But if a man find a betrothed damſel in the field, and the man force her, and lie with her: then the man only that lay with her, ſhall die.

26 But unto the damſel thou ſhalt do nothing, there is in the damſel no ſin worthy of death: for as when a man riſeth againſt his neighbour, and ſlayeth him, even ſo is this matter.

27 For he found her in the field, and the betrothed damſel cried, and there was none to ſave her.

28 ¶ If a man find a damſel that is a virgin, which is not betrothed, and lay hold on her, and lie with her, and they be found.

29 Then the man that lay with her ſhall give unto the damſels father fifty ſhekels of ſilver, and ſhe ſhall be his wife, becauſe he hath humbled her, he may not put her away all his days.

30 ¶ A man ſhall not take his fathers wife, nor diſcover his fathers skirt.

Ver. 5. The woman ſhall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither ſhall a man put on a womans garment: for all that do ſo are abomination unto the Lord thy God.] The laſt words of this place plainly indicate, that it was an idolatrous cuſtom, which is here prohibited. For it was cuſtomary for Moſes and the prophets to expreſs themſelves in theſe terms of utmoſt abhorrence, concerning ſuch matters. And nothing was more common among the heathens, than for men, in the worſhip of ſeveral of their gods, to put on the garments uſually worn by women, and women thoſe worn by men; particularly, in the worſhip of Venus, women appear'd before her in armour, and men in women's apparel. And thus the words literally run here in the Hebrew; "Women ſhall not put "on the armour of a man," (ſo the word celi frequently ſignifies armour, as well as other ſorts of inſtruments) nor a man (σκλην the LXX. tranſlate it) the ſtole of a woman. See Selden Syntag. 2. De Diis Syris, cap. 4. And Maimonides declares he found this precept in an old magical book, that men ought to ſtand before the ſtar of Venus in the flower'd garment of women, and women put on the armour of men before the ſtar of Mars, More Nevochim, cap. 37. Servius alſo, upon the ſecond book of the Æneis, mentions a ſtatue of Venus and Cyprus, (in which iſland were anciently many colonies of Phœnicians) to whom the women ſacrific'd in mens garments, and the men in womens. Many other nations did the ſame.

Ver. 6. If a bird's neſt chance to be before thee in the way in any tree, or on the ground, thou ſhalt not take the dam with the young.] R. Menachem, mentioned both by Druſius and Bochart, was of opinion, that it is not pity toward birds, which is deſigned in this law, but kindneſs to mankind, whom God intended, by this uſage of other creatures, to form to gentleneſs and commiſeration towards one another: But others, we think, have more truly determined, that this is a merciful conſtitution, with reſpect to birds as well as men, it being a ſufficient affliction, as Maimonides calls it, to the dam to loſe her young; it being unreaſonable alſo, that men ſhould conſider only their own preſent intereſt, without regard to poſterity; to whom the breed ought to be continued, by letting the parent bird go free. To which thoſe verſes, commonly aſcribed to Phocylides, have reſpect:

Μηδὲ τις ερνίθας καλιῆς ἅμα πάντας ἑλέσθω,
Μητέρα δ' ἐκπρολίπηις, ἵν ἔχηις πάλι τῆς τε νεότητος.

The ſignification of which is, "Let not man take all the "birds together out of a neſt, but let the mother go, "that thou mayſt have young ones again of her."

Ver. 7. But thou ſhalt in any wiſe let the dam go, and take the young to thee, that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayſt prolong thy days.] Some of the Jews, from theſe words, have fancied, that the obſervation of this ſingle precept was of ſuch great value, as to procure for them even forgiveneſs of ſins, and a long life, which is ſuch a fooliſh conceit, that it makes all other precepts unneceſſary. The plain meaning is, that God would reward them for their kind uſage even of brute creatures, if other virtues were not wanting, ſuch as charity toward their poor neighbours. And ſo the Miſchna, in the concluſion of the tract, called Cholin, diſcourſes very well; "If in a "light precept concerning a thing which is ſcarce worth "a farthing, the law ſays, That it may be well with thee, "and thou mayſt prolong thy days; how much more may "this be expected in the weightier things of the law?

Ver. 8. When thou buildeſt a new houſe, then thou ſhalt make a battlement for thy roof.] The Jews, we think, are a little too curious, in ſetting a mark upon the word thy, fancying Moſes means not ſimply the roof, but thy roof, to except the temple, and the ſynagogues, and ſchools, from this rule; which were no private man's houſe, but belonged to the whole congregation. They ſay, indeed, the the temple had battlements, but not for neceſſity, but ornament, becauſe the roof of the temple was not flat, like the roof of another houſe; for no perſon walked upon the temple, as they did upon their own habitations, to take the air, and diſcourſe together, or to meditate and pray, (in little cloſets they had there) which made it neceſſary to have theſe battlements raiſed three feet and a half high, as the Jews ſay, to prevent any man's falling down, when his attention was employed on other things.

That the roofs of their houſes were flat, which was the ground of this precept, we have many proofs in the Scripture. For hither Rahab brought the ſpies, and covered them with the ſtalks of flax, Joſh. ii. 6. Samuel likewiſe communed with Saul, on the top of the houſe, 1 Sam ix. 25. David alſo was walking on the top of his palace, when he ſaw Beerſheba bathing herſelf, 2 Sam. xi. 2. And in the ſame place Abſalom cauſed a tent to be ſpread, that he might go into his father's concubines, in the ſight of all Iſrael, chap. xvi. 22. See alſo Iſaiah xv. 3. xxii. 1. and in the New Teſtament, Acts x. 9. Nor was it the manner of the Hebrews only, but of the Greeks and Romans alſo, to make the roofs of their houſes level, that they might walk upon them, and ſtand there to ſee any publick ſhew, or take the air, as J. Caſaubon ſhews in a multitude of inſtances, in Athenæum, lib. 4. cap. 12. where he obſerves alſo, out of Pliny and Seneca, that the Roman houſes wanted theſe battlements, which Moſes here ordered in this law. By all which, we may eaſily underſtand thoſe places in the Goſpel, that ſpeak of proclaiming theſe things on the houſe top, &c. Matt. x. 27. Luke v. 19.

——— That thou bring not blood upon thine houſe, if any man fall from thence.] And be killed by the fall. For his neglect being the cauſe of his death, it made him guilty, before God, of his blood, and liable to be puniſhed by the judges for ſlighting ſo profitable an inſtitution as this is: Which the Jews extend to a ſtudious care about every thing, that might bring a man's life in danger. For example ſake, they might not keep a mad dog, nor ſet up a broken ladder in their houſe, &c. as l'Empereur obſerves upon Bava Kama, cap. 5.

Ver. 9. Thou ſhalt not ſow thy vineyard with divers ſeeds.] What he had ſaid concerning their fields, Levit. xix. 19. he now ſays concerning their vineyards, which they were not to ſow with ſeeds of different kind. For this was an idolatrous cuſtom, as the reaſon given againſt it plainly ſhews. This Maimonides declares, he found in the book of the Zabii, and in one Rabbi Joſiah, who taught, that theſe three things, wheat, barley, and grapes, dried in the ſun, ſhould be ſown together in the ground with one and the ſame caſt of the hand; which was ſo ſenſeleſs a thing, that he could not but think they learnt it from the ways of the Amorites, as his words are, that is, from the wicked idolaters of the country to which the Iſraelites were going. For wheat being ſown, properly, at one ſeaſon of the year, and barley at another, and the vineyard being an improper place for the growth of either of them, this cuſtom could not have its original either from God, or from man, but from the malignant author of confuſion, who taught them this uncouth rite in honour of Ceres, perhaps, and Bacchus, whom they joyned in the ſame act of worſhip.

——— Leſt the fruit of thy ſeed which thou haſt ſown, and the fruit of thy vineyard be defiled.] If the Iſraelites had follow'd this cuſtom, it would have made both the corn and the grapes, that ſprung up from ſuch ſeed, impure, becauſe polluted by idolatry; the very ſmell of which, God would not ſuffer among his Iſraelites, as Maimonides ſpeaks in his More Nevochim, P. 3. cap. 37. Every one alſo knows that it was unlawful for the Iſraelites to eat any of the fruits of the earth, till the firſt fruits of them had been offered unto God; which would not have been accepted by him of ſuch things as theſe, that were expreſsly forbidden by his law, and conſequently the whole crop became unclean to them, and might not be uſed by them.

Ver. 10 Thou ſhalt not plough with an ox and an aſs together.] Leſt that law ſhould be violated, which we read, Levit. xix. 19. "Thou ſhalt not let thy cattle gender with a divers kind." So ſome give the reaſon of it, even Maimonides, in the book before-mentioned, p. 3. cap. 49. But it ſeems alſo to have reſpect to the magical rites of the idolatrous nations in thoſe countries, who thought their fields would be more fruitful, if, according to ſome directions, that were given by their gods, they were ploughed: For one cannot well think, that men of themſelves would join together two creatures ſo different in their temper, and motions, to draw in the ſame yoke, if they had not been led to it by ſome ſuperſtition or other. For, their ſtrength is unequal, as Aben Ezra here obſerves, "The ſtrength of an aſs is not as the ſtrength of an ox." Whence it was that Ulyſſes, to make it be believed that he was mad, joined a horſe and an aſs to a plough. And Homer, Odyſſ 5. would have oxen ἰσοφόρους joined together; that is, ἴσην φέρουσας καὶ ἑλκούσας, equally bearing, and drawing, as Bochart obſerves the ſcholiaſt there gloſſes.

The Jews commonly think this law extends to all other creatures of different ſpecies, which might not be yoked together: But ſome underſtand it ſo, that they might join ſeveral kinds together: provided one was not unclean, and the other clean. Baal-Hatturim finds this myſtery in this prohibition; that the righteous ought to have no ſociety with the wicked. And there are thoſe who think the Apoſtle alludes to this, when he ſaith, 2 Cor. vi. 14. μὴ γίνεσθε ἑτεροζυγοῦντες ἀπίστοις, "Be not unequally yoked "with believers;" which Bochart himſelf thinks not improbable; ſee Hierozoicon, P. 1. B. 2. cap. 13. and cap. 40. P. 401.

Ver. 12. Thou ſhalt make thee fringes, &c.] Which they commonly were; and it ſeems to ſignify the uppermoſt garment, that cover'd the reſt, and was moſt ſeen, whereby, they were diſtinguiſhed from the people of other nations; for that was one end of theſe fringes, to be a diſtinctive mark, that they were of the Jewiſh religion. And therefore we cannot ſee any reaſon in the determination of their doctors, who ſay, Women-ſervants, and little children, were not bound to wear fringes: For though little children could not think of the commandments of God, yet it was fit they ſhould wear the badge of their religion. There is no reaſon, neither, in their reſolution, when they ſay, That if women and ſervants (who were bound as much as others to obſerve the laws of God) would wear fringes, tho' they were not obliged by their conſtitutions, yet they might not put them on with the common form of benediction, which they uſed. But we think they obſerve rightly enough, that theſe fringes were ſo peculiar to the Jews, that the Samaritans, though acquainted with the law, did not wear them. Nor do the Jews themſelves, at this day, uſe them upon their upper garments: For that being no longer four-corner'd (becauſe it made them a laughing-ſtock) they wear only under their other garments a ſquare kind of frock, with the aforeſaid taſſels or pendants faſtned to it; as Leo Modena relates in his hiſtory of the Jews, part 1. cap 5. Only in their ſynagogues or ſchools, at morning-prayer, every man puts over his head a ſquare woollen garment, with the taſſels faſtned at each corner, which they call Talith.

Ver. 22. If a man be found lying with a woman married to an husband, then they ſhall both of them die.] It is not ſaid what death, either here, or Lev. xx. 10. But the Jews ſay they were to be ſtrangled; which is an opinion too ſettled among them, that Buxtorf ſaith he never ſaw any Hebrew book that aſſigned any other puniſhment for adultery but this. Stoning indeed, was the puniſhment of her, who after her eſpouſals play'd the harlot between that time and her marriage; but after the marriage was compleated, if ſhe was guilty of this crime, ſtrangling was the only puniſhment according to their tradition. See Lev. xx. 10. and Buxtorf de Sponſal, and Divortius. p. 32, 33. and Grotius, in John viii. 5.

Ver. 30. A man ſhall not take his father's wife.] That is, ſhall not marry her.

——— Nor diſcover his father's ſkirts.] That is, he ſhall not take her to his bed. For this is a modeſt phraſe borrowed from the ancient cuſtom in thoſe countries; where the bridegroom, when he brought his bride into the chuppa, as they call the bridal chamber, ſpread the skirt of his robe over her, to ſignify his right to her, and power over her, and that he alone might lawfully poſſeſs her, Ruth iii. 9. Ezek. xvi. 18.

This verſe ſeems to be here inſerted, as a ſhort memorandum, that they ſhould be careful to obſerve all the laws laws which Moſes had delivered againſt inceſtuous marriages, in the 18th chap. of Lev. ver. viii, and xx. 11.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 Who may or may not enter into the congregation. 9 Uncleanneſs to be avoided in the heſt. 15 Of the fugitive ſervant. 17 Of filthineſs. 18 Of abominable ſacrifices. 19 Of uſury. 21 Of vows. 24 Of treſpaſſes.

HE that is wounded in the ſtones, or hath his privy member cut off, ſhall not enter into the congregation of the LORD.

2 A baſtard ſhall not enter into the congregation of the LORD: even to his tenth generation ſhall he not enter into the congregation of the LORD.

3 An Ammonite or Moabite ſhall not enter into the congregation of the LORD; even to their tenth generation ſhall they not enter into the congregation of the LORD for ever:

4 Becauſe they met you not with bread and with water in the way, when ye came forth out of Egypt; and becauſe they hired againſt thee Balaam the ſon of Beor of Pethor of Meſopotamia, to curſe thee.

5 Nevertheleſs, the LORD thy God would not hearken unto Balaam: but the LORD thy God turned the curſe into a bleſſing unto thee, becauſe the LORD thy God loved thee.

6 Thou ſhalt not ſeek their peace, nor their proſperity all thy days for ever.

7 ¶ Thou ſhalt not abhor an Edomite, for he is thy brother: thou ſhalt not abhor an Egyptian, becauſe thou waſt a ſtranger in his land.

8 The children that are begotten of them, ſhall enter into the congregation of the LORD, in their third generation.

9 ¶ When the hoſt goeth forth againſt thine enemies, then keep thee from every wicked thing.

10 ¶ If there be among you any man that is not clean, by reaſon of uncleanneſs that chanceth him by night, then ſhall he go abroad out of the camp, he ſhall not come within the camp.

11 But it ſhall be when evening cometh on, he ſhall waſh himſelf with water: and when the ſun is down, he ſhall come into the camp again.

12 ¶ Thou ſhalt have a place alſo without the camp, whither thou ſhalt go forth abroad.

13 And thou ſhalt have a paddle upon thy weapon, and it ſhall be when thou wilt eaſe thyſelf abroad, thou ſhalt dig therewith, and ſhalt turn back, and cover that which cometh from thee.

14 For the LORD thy God walketh in the midſt of thy camp, to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee: therefore ſhall thy camp be holy, that he ſee no unclean thing in thee, and turn away from thee.

15 ¶ Thou ſhalt not deliver unto his maſter, the ſervant which is eſcaped from his maſter unto thee.

16 He ſhall dwell with thee, even among you, in that place which he ſhall chuſe, in one of thy gates where it liketh him beſt: thou ſhalt not oppreſs him.

17 ¶ There ſhall be no whore of the daughters of Iſrael, nor a Sodomite of the ſons of Iſrael.

18 Thou ſhalt not bring the hire of a whore, or the price of a dog into the houſe of the LORD thy God for any vow: for even both theſe are abomination unto the LORD thy God.

19 ¶ Thou ſhalt not lend upon uſury to thy brother; uſury of money, uſury of victuals, uſury of any thing that is lent upon uſury.

20 Unto a ſtranger thou mayſt lend upon uſury, but unto thy brother thou ſhalt not lend upon uſury; that the LORD thy God may bleſs thee in all that thou ſetteſt thine hand to, in the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it.

21 ¶ When thou ſhalt vow a vow unto the LORD thy God, thou ſhalt not ſlack to pay it: for the LORD thy God will ſurely require it of thee; and it would be ſin in thee.

22 But if thou ſhalt forbear to vow, it ſhall be no ſin in thee.

23 That which is gone out of thy lips, thou ſhalt keep and perform; even a free-will-offering, according as thou haſt vowed unto the LORD thy God, which thou haſt promiſed with thy mouth.

24 ¶ When thou comeſt into thy neighbours vineyard, then thou mayſt eat grapes thy fill, at thine own pleaſure; but thou ſhalt not put any in thy veſſel.

25 When thou comeſt into the ſtanding-corn of thy neighbours, then thou mayſt pluck the ears with thine hand: but thou ſhalt not move a ſickle unto thy neighbours ſtanding-corn.

Ver. 2. A baſtard.] The Hebrews do not underſtand by the word mamzer, one that was begotten in ſimple fornication, out of the ſtate of marriage; but one that was begotten of ſuch perſons whom the law forbad to marry, under pain of being cut off, viz. thoſe mentioned in the xviith chapter of Leviticus. Wagenſeil obſerves, that Mamzer, whether male or female, was excluded from the congregation of the Lord. And they were Mamzers that were born of any woman, whom the law prohibited them to have any knowledge of, whether it was by violence, or conſent, by error, or adviſedly, it made no difference.

——— Shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord.] Nor marry with an Iſraelite: So all the doctors, none excepted expound it.

——— Even to their tenth generation ſhall he not enter into the congregation of the Lord.] That is, never, as the Hebrew doctors expound it. And Maimonides, More Nevochim, P. 3. cap. 49. gives this reaſon for it, that people might be deterred from ſuch marriages or conjunctions, which would leave an indelible blot upon their poſterity. And, indeed, ſome heathens anciently put ſuch a mark of infamy on mere baſtards, as to prohibit both males and females from being preſent at their ſacred offices. Such a law there was at Athens, mentioned by Iſæus, as Caſaubon obſerves upon Athenæus, lib. 6. cap. 6. p. 410.

There were ſome alſo of theſe Mamzers, who were not manifeſtly born of ſuch inceſtuous, or other forbidden mixtures, but were called dubious, becauſe their fathers were not known; or being expoſed, and found in the fields, or the ſtreets, neither father nor mother were known. Yet, it being uncertain whence they were deſcended, the Iſraelites might not marry with them, for fear they ſhould be polluted by thoſe, who, perhaps, were born of inceſtuous parents. But proſelytes of juſtice, they ſay, might marry with Mamzers; and, that they might not be for ever excluded from the congregation of the Lord, they contrived this remedy for the reſtitution of their blood. They might marry a ſlave (who was baptized, and become a Jew) whoſe children were not reputed Mamzers, but only ſlaves: Who being made Jews, and having their freedom given them, might lawfully marry with a Jewiſh woman; and then they were intirely incorporated into the congregation of the Lord: For, Proles ſequitur matrem, "the iſſue follows the mother;" and there was no regard had to the father.

Ver. 3. An Ammonite or Moabite ſhall not enter into the congregation of the Lord; even to their tenth generation, ſhall they not enter into the congregation of the Lord for ever.] Theſe laſt words, for ever, in this verſe, the Jews think warrant them to interpret thoſe words, to their tenth generation, in the foregoing verſe, as if Moſes had ſaid, never. It is certain, indeed, that this great law-giver intended to exclude the Moabites and Ammonites from marrying with the Jews for ever; for ſo Nehemiah underſtood him when he quoted this law, chap. xiii. 1. as a reaſon againſt the Iſraelites marriages with them in his time, when more than ten generations were paſt. But then theſe words, for ever, being omitted in the foregoing Verſe, where Moſes ſpeaks of Mamzers, it ſeems reaſonable that they ſhould not be ſo interpreted; but that after ten generations were paſt, all diſtinction between them and others ſhould be aboliſhed. This, one would have expected, ſhould have been the ſenſe of thoſe who examine every word ſo nicely as the Jews do: For there being mention made only of an Ammonite and Moabite, that is, of the males of theſe two nations, they will not have their women concerned in this law: But ſay, that an Iſraelite might take one of them to wife, if ſhe embraced their religion. For thus they expound this whole matter of marriages with proſelytes of juſtice, that is, ſuch of other nations as became intirely of the Jewiſh religion. With ſuch proſelytes of ſome nations, whether men or women, the Iſraelites were never to contract any marriages: With thoſe of ſome other nations, they were prohibited only to marry with their men: With others, they were forbidden only to marry for ſome generations; and there were others, with whom they might marry as ſoon as they were made perfect proſelytes. Of the firſt kind were the ſeven nations of Canaan, mentioned Deut. vii. 1. with the males or females, of which they might never contract an affinity. To the ſecond kind belong the Ammonites and Moabites, to whoſe males an Iſraelitiſh woman was forbidden, by this precept, to marry: But a man of Iſrael might marry any of their women, after they profeſſed the Jewiſh religion; otherwiſe, David, who deſcended from Ruth, a Moabiteſs, had been illegitimate. Of the third kind, were the Edomites and Egyptians; with whom, and with their children, the Iſraelites might not marry; but their grand-children might. And of the fourth kind, were all other nations, beſide theſe mentioned. This is an abridgment of what our great Selden hath more largely ſhewn to be the ſenſe of the Jews, in his fifth book, De Jure Nat. & Gent. &c. cap. 14.

Ver. 4. Becauſe they met you not with bread and with water, when you came forth out of Egypt.] This ſeems to belong to the Ammonites, who had no compaſſion toward the Iſraelites, when they were diſtreſſed in the wilderneſs, But tho' they were near a-kin to them, yet did not ſhew them that civility which is commonly expreſſed to mere ſtrangers in their travels, Gen. xiv. 18. xviii. 2, 31. xix. 1, 2. We do not find any mention of this barbarity of theirs in the foregoing hiſtory; but we read how kind God ordered the Iſraelites to conduct themſelves with reſpect to that people, in not meddling with them, much leſs diſtreſſing them, as they paſſed by their country, Deut. ii. 19. Which aggravated their inhumanity in not vouchſafing to the Iſraelites the common refreſhment of bread and water, as they paſſed by their borders.

——— And becauſe they hired againſt thee Balaam, the ſon of Beor of Pethor of Meſopotamia, to curſe thee.] As the foregoing paſſage peculiarly refers to the Ammonites, ſo this relates to the Moabites, who, with the aſſiſtance of the Midianites, invited Balaam, by the promiſes of a great reward, to come from the eaſtern country, and curſe the Iſraelites. See Numb. xxii. 5, 6, 7. For theſe two reaſons God laid this prohibition on his people; in which Maimonides obſerves the divine juſtice in proportioning puniſhments to offences. For Amalek coming out againſt the Iſraelites, ſoon after their departure from Egypt, to cut them off with the ſword, God commanded their memory to be blotted out, chap. xxv. 19. But the Ammonites being only covetous in a baſe degree, and the Moabites acting only againſt them by craft, and not by force, God inflicted no other puniſhment upon them, but this: that his people would avoid all affinity with them, and entertain no affection for them, More Nevochim, P. 3. cap. 41. And another author makes this the ground of the diſtinction mentioned before of the males and females of thoſe countries. Their males (ſaith he) might never marry with an Iſraelitiſh woman; but, by a tradition delivered down to us, by Moſes, from mount Sinai, we hold, that the women of thoſe countries (if they embraced the Jewiſh religion) might be married to a man of Iſrael. For the women muſt be thought, in all reaſon, not to have been guilty, as the men were, of that which was the reaſon of this law; it not being the cuſtom for that ſex to bring out bread and water to travellers; nor did they ſend ambaſſadors to hire Balaam, to come and curſe the Iſraelites. Accordingly we find Ruth, who was a Moabiteſs, married to Boaz, the anceſtor of David.

Ver. 7. Thou ſhalt not abhor an Edomite.] So as never to enter into the ſociety of marriage with them, they being a circumciſed people.

——— For he is thy brother.] Nearer of kin to them than the Ammonites or Moabites, Eſau, their father, being the twin-brother of Jacob: And ſo Moſes calls them, when he delivers God's command to the Iſraelites not to meddle with them, Deut. ii. 8 "We paſſed by from our "brethren, the children of Eſau, &c." Here it may be obſerved, that the word brother, comprehended more than the Iſraelites, as our bleſſed Saviour ſhews the word neighbour did, Luke x. 29, &c.

——— Thou ſhalt not abhor an Egyptian, becauſe thou waſt a ſtranger in his land.] That is, the Egyptians, in a dreadful famine, ſuſtained them, together with their children, flocks and herds, very kindly; the memory of which benefit God would not have forgotten, though in after-generations they were cruelly oppreſſed by that people.

Ver. 8. The children that are begotten of them, ſhall enter into the congregation of the Lord in their third generation.] When they had been proſelytes for three generations, it was lawful to marry with them. Nay, ſome of the Jews are ſo liberal of their kindneſs in this particular, as to underſtand by banim, not children in general, but ſons, with with whom, only, marriage is forbidden, till the third generation; marriage, with their daughters, being lawful, as they think, as ſoon as they became compleat proſelytes: Upon which account, Solomon eſpouſed the daughter of Pharaoh, ſee Selden, lib. 5. De Jure Nat. & Gent. cap. 14, 15. where he obſerves, that all this held good only to the captivity of Babylon, when, all theſe nations being confuſed, they might marry with any of them, if they became Jews. For wars, and colonies, and deportations, had occaſioned ſuch an intermixture of people, that one could not be known from another.

Ver. 9. When the hoſt goeth forth againſt thine enemy, then keep thee from every wicked thing.] This was a rule to be obſerved at all times; but then eſpecially, when they had the greateſt need for divine aſſiſtance, (for which wicked people could not reaſonably hope) and when there was the greateſt danger of being wicked, in a time of ſuch licence as ſoldiers commonly take. There is a ſentence very like this in Agathias (mentioned by Grotius toward the concluſion of his Prolegomena, to the book de Jure & Belli & Pacis) Ἀδικία γὰρ καὶ Θεοῦ ἀθεραπευσία φευκτὰ μᾶλλον ἀεὶ, καὶ ἀσύμφορα, μᾶλιστα δ' ἐν τῇ προσταξολεμεῖν καὶ παρατάττεσθαι. "Injuſtice and neglect of God's ſervice are "ever to be avoided, as moſt pernicious; but eſpecially "in a time of war, and when men are upon the point of "giving battle." Which he proves elſewhere, by the illuſtrious examples of Darius, Xerxes, and the Athenians in Sicily.

Ver. 15. Thou ſhalt not deliver unto his maſter, the ſervant which is eſcaped from his maſter unto thee.] The Hebrew doctors underſtand this of a ſervant of another nation, who was become a Jew. Whom, his maſter, if he went to dwell out of Judæa, might not carry along with him againſt his will; and if he fled from him, when he had carried him, he might not be delivered to him, but ſuffered to dwell in the land of Iſrael. Which they underſtand alſo of a ſervant that fled from his maſter out of any of the countries of the Gentiles into the land of Iſrael; which was to be a ſafe refuge to him.

Ver. 18. Thou ſhalt not bring the price of a whore.] If ſuch perſons, as are mentioned in the foregoing verſe, offered unto God what they had got by proſtituting their perſons, it was not to be accepted, but rejected as abominable. For this was a cuſtom among the idolatrous nations, as appears by many of their Writers; who tell us, it was uſual for ſuch women to dedicate ſome part of that which they received for proſtituting themſelves, in the temples of their pretended deities. Particularly, Herodotus mentions it, as practiſed among the ancient Babilonians, lib 1. p. 199. Which explains what we read in Baruch vi. 42, 43.

——— Nor the price of a dog into the houſe of the Lord thy God.] There was a peculiar reaſon for this, beſide the vileneſs of this creature (which Maimonides only mentions, More Nevochim, P. 3. cap. 46.) which was, as Bochart, and ſome other great men think, becauſe a dog was highly honoured among the Egyptians, from whom the Iſraelites were lately come. For the Nile was wont to overflow and enrich their country at the riſing of the dog-ſtar; and a dog was the ſymbol of one of their principal deities, called Anubis, who was repreſented with a head like that of a dog: See Hierozoicon, p. 1. lib. 2. cap. 56. p. 690, &c. If we can think this vile idolatry was ſo ancient as the days of Moſes, which it is certain prevailed afterward, this may paſs for a very likely reaſon, why God would not accept ſo much as the price for which a dog was ſold, or exchanged; for ſo the LXX. expound it: As for example, if a man exchanged a lamb for a fine dog, God would not have that lamb offered at his altar; as Maimonides explains it.

——— For any vow.] Men lay under the greateſt obligation to make good their vows, wherewith, upon any occaſion, they had bound themſelves; but God would have them diſcharged from ſuch vile obligations as theſe.

———For even both theſe are abomination unto the Lord thy God.] It is hard to give an account, why theſe two (the price of a harlot and of a dog) are aſſociated in the ſame law, unleſs it be in oppoſition to ſome ſuch rites as thoſe before-mentioned among the Egyptians. Who, in after-times, it is certain, had ſuch harlots ſacred to Iſis, as many think are ſpoken of in the beginning of this verſe; and a dog was no where elſe ſacred, as a ſymbol of Anubis or mercury. Though this may be ſaid with ſome probability, that theſe two are joined together, becauſe a whore and a dog are both alike impudent. Joſephus thinks that the price of a dog here mentioned, was money given, ἐπ ὀχεύσει κυνὸς, for the loan of a good dog to breed withal, as Mr. Selden obſerves, in his hiſtory of tithes, p. 57. Where he notes alſo, that the Jews would not admit the tenths of uſury or of war to be offered. But the Talmudiſts expound it quite otherwiſe, for the price of a dog, either ſold or exchanged for ſome other thing; which the ſame great man approves of, as the truer interpretation, lib. 5. de Jure Nat. & Gent. cap. 4. p. 557.

Ver. 19. Thou ſhalt not lend upon uſury to thy brother.] That is, unto an Iſraelite. See Exod. xxii. 25 Levit. xxv. 36.

——— Uſury of money, uſury of victuals, uſury of any thing that is lent upon uſury.] Here the word neſech is uſed for all ſorts of uſury; whether that which was made by the loan of money, called here neſech ceſeph, or that which was made by the loan of food, and ſuch like things, called neſech okel. But commonly there are two words uſed to expreſs this matter, viz. neſech, uſury, and tarbith, which we tranſlate, increaſe. Which are not two kinds of uſury, one more griping, the other more moderate, as ſome have conceived; for the ſame uſury is called neſech, with reſpect to the debtor, to whom it is grievous; and tarbith, to the creditor to whom it is beneficial. Yet there is ſome difference between neſech and tarbith; elſe one cannot tell why they are ſo often both mentioned in the ſame place. And neſech properly ſignifies the intereſt, as we ſpeak, which was paid for money; and tarbith, the intereſt of corn, and other fruits of the earth.

Ver. 20. Unto a ſtranger.] One that was not an Iſraelite, whether he dwelt out of their land, or in it; if he were not a proſelyte to the law; of whom they might not take any uſury, but were obliged to treat him as a brother.

——— Thou mayeſt lend upon uſury.] Some of the Jews would have this to be an affirmative precept, obliging them to make the uſury of a Gentile, if they lent him money. For this, Maimonides quotes a paſſage out of Siphri, which, others ſay, he miſtook: See J. Wagenſeil, in his annotations upon Lipman's Carmen Memoriale, p. 598. where he ſhews, that he was of this cruel opinion. But this is not the common ſenſe of the Jews; and their wiſe men have been ſo modeſt alſo as to decree, that tho' their law did here permit them to take uſury of a Gentile, yet they were not to practiſe it, unleſs it were that they might provide for themſelves, that they might live more ſafely among the Gentiles: And they add this reaſon for this limitation, leſt the Jews, by this way of commerce and traffick, ſhould grow too familiar with the Gentiles, and learn their manners: Only men who ſtudied the law, and thereby were out of danger of being enticed to their religion, might freely lend them money upon uſury, for this very end, as they think, that they might make a gain of it, and enrich themſelves. See Selden, lib. 6. de Jure Nat. & Gent. cap. 10. where he obſerves, that the Mohammedans forbid uſury only among themſelves, not to ſtrangers. Which Salmaſius ſhews is thus limited in the Koran by theſe words, in their own territories. That is, if Mohammedans live among Chriſtians, they may take uſury of them: but of Chriſtians, who live among them, they may not take any, no more than of a Muſſulman, as they call themſelves.

— But unto thy brother thou ſhalt not lend upon uſury.] Moſes repeats this again, that they might not fail to be kind one to another in this matter. And the author of Etz Hachajim, mentioned by Wagenſeil, ſaith, That, according to their ancient doctors, this is ſix times forbidden in the law, not to take uſury of their brethren, p. 601. upon Sota. And, indeed, as there was nothing more rational than this, that their neighbours making great gain by merchandize, (ſuch as the Sidonians, Tyrians, and thoſe who lived upon the coaſts of the Red-ſea, and the Egyptians) they ſhould not borrow money of the Iſraelites for nothing; ſo, it was no leſs reaſonable, that the Iſraelites themſelves, whoſe chiefeſt profit was by husbandry and breeding of cattle, ſhould have money lent them freely, by one another, without any intereſt, their land not being a country of traffick, whereby money might be improved, proved, as in other lands. For, by the laws of other nations, (as Grotius obſerves on Luke vi. 45.) that uſury was odious which was practis'd upon husbandmen. Abarbinel alſo is ſo tender in the point, as to ſay, that uſury hath in it ſomething ſo unequal (at leaſt as it is commonly practiſed) that God did not permit the Iſraelites to exerciſe it among all their neighbours, but only upon thoſe of the ſeven nations of Canaan. And thus far he is in the right, that every one who was not a Jew, was not to be deemed a ſtranger: an Edomite, for inſtance, is called their brother in the ſeventh verſe of this chapter; and therefore this precept, "thou ſhalt not lend upon uſury to "thy brother," is extended to the Edomites. In like manner, ſaith he, neither do the Iſhmaelites come under the name of ſtrangers, nor other people but thoſe of the ſeven nations. And this opinion Leo Modena follows in his hiſtory of the preſent Jews, part 2. cap. 5. where he ſaith, by the word ſtranger, in this place, none other can be meant, but only thoſe ſeven nations, from whom God commanded them to take away even their lives. And that it is only their preſent diſtreſs, in which they have no other way of livelihood left, that makes them think it lawful to lend upon uſury to thoſe among whom they live. In which, we think he is miſtaken, though this doctrine is tempered with more humanity than that of ſome of the Jews, who are ſo full of hatred to us Chriſtians, whom they call Edomites, that they deprive us (as Wagenſeil obſerves, in the place above-named) of the name of brethren, and think it lawful to oppreſs us with uſury. Of which number are R. Bechai, and the author of the Old Nitzacon, ſet forth by Wagenſeil, (ancienter than that of Lipman's, ſet forth by Theodorick Hackſpan) who was ſo full of malignity, that he ſhut his eyes againſt the light which he plainly ſaw. For he could not deny that the Edomites were their brethren; and conſequently that Moſes required the Jews not to take uſury of them; and that it was anciently unlawful. But then he pretends, that they forfeited this privilege, by not offering their aſſiſtance to preſerve Jeruſalem and the temple from being deſtroyed, yea, by rejoycing at their ruin. And fearing this would not ſatisfy, he hath deviſed this juſtification of their uſury, that the Edomites have made themſelves ſtrangers by the neglect of circumciſion.

—That the Lord thy God may bleſs thee in all that thou ſetteſt thine hands unto, in the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it.] Charity to their poor brethren had many promiſes of a great reward: And this law was made peculiarly for the relief of ſuch perſons, as appears by thoſe places above-mentioned, both in Exodus and Leviticus: It extended indeed to all, but chiefly was intended as a proviſion for the poor and needy; whom they were not to neglect: For God order'd them all to live together as brethren, children of the ſame father: And indeed, they were all, rich and poor, deſcended from the ſame original. And therefore he deſigned there ſhould be no indigent perſon unrelieved among this people, upon whom he had conferred ſo many bleſſings; and not only delivered them from the ſlavery of Egypt, but had likewiſe planted them in the good land promiſed to their fathers. To which purpoſe all thoſe precepts were given, which require them to lend gratuitouſly to their poor brother, to reſtore the pledge left with them, to leave the corners of their fields unreaped, not to gather the gleanings of the harveſt and vintage, to obſerve the year of releaſe and of jubilee, and ſuch like peculiar proviſions for the comfort of the poorer ſort, that they might ſhare in the happineſs which God beſtow'd upon his elect people.

Ver. 21. When thou ſhalt vow a vow unto the Lord thy God.] In a thing lawful and poſſible; and by a perſon who had power to make that vow, and was not ſubject to the authority of another, who had power to make it void. See Numb. xxx. 2.

—— Thou ſhalt not ſlack to pay it.] Leſt they ſhould prove leſs able, and ſo be unwilling to perform what they had vowed; or ſhould perhaps forget it. If they loſt the thing they vowed, while they delayed, they were bound to give the value of it. Which was one difference between a vow and a free-will offering; that in the latter caſe, as Maimonides obſerves, if that which he deſigned were ſtolen or dead, he was not bound to make reparation. The ſame author applies this to a vow a man made of giving an alms to a poor perſon, ſuppoſe a ſhekel, which he was to beſtow immediately, if any indigent object was at hand; if not, he was to ſeparate it, and lay it by till he met with one, &c. De Donis Pauperum, cap. 8. ſect. 1.

Ver. 22. But if thou ſhalt forbear to vow, it ſhall be no ſin in thee.] God was ſo very merciful, as Maimonides obſerves, that if a man was not able to offer him an ox or a lamb, he accepted of turtles and young pigeons, of which there was great plenty in that country. But if this was beyond his ability, and he yet had a deſire to teſtify his affection to God by a free-will offering, he was pleaſed to accept an oblation of bread, baked in an oven, or pan, or any other uſual way. And if this was too heavy, he accepted of bare flour, without putting him to the expence of baking it; for he would have men to be eaſy in his ſervice, and all their offerings to be free and cheerful; and therefore tells them here, that if they vowed nothing at all to him, he would not take it ill of them, nor impute it to them as a ſin, More Nevochim, P. iii. cap. 46.

Ver. 23. That which is gone out of thy lips, thou ſhalt keep and perform, even a free-will offering, according as thou haſt vowed, &c.] This was to make them conſider well before-hand, what their ability was, and not raſhly reſolve and promiſe any thing: for tho' they were not bound to vow the ſmalleſt matter, yet having once vowed, they were no longer free, but bound to make it good, though it proved very chargeable to them. Yet there is a traditional doctrine among them practiſed at this day, that if any man or woman make a vow which afterward they wiſh unmade, and it be not to the prejudice of any third perſon that it ſhould be broke, in this caſe they may go to a Rabbin, or to any other three men, who hearing their reaſons why they repent of having made ſuch a vow, and judging them good, they may free them from their obligation, ſaying to ſuch a perſon thrice, Be thou abſolved from this vow, &c. and ſo he is diſcharged. Thus Leo Modena, in his hiſtory of the preſent Jews, P. ii. cap. 4.

Ver. 24. When thou comeſt into thy neighbours vineyard, then thou mayſt eat grapes thy fill, at thine own pleaſure.] This the Hebrew doctors take to be a law made in favour of poor labourers, who were hired to work in their vineyards, in the time of the vintage; whom the owners might not hinder from eating as many grapes as they pleaſed, (and the ſame held good in olives, figs, dates, and all other fruit) as long as they were at work; but not after they had compleated their labour. And if their maſters would not ſuffer them ſo to do, they were to be ſcourged with forty ſtripes ſave one; for it was not reaſonable to deny them this liberty, when the very oxen were not to be muzzled, whilſt they trod out the corn. See Selden, lib. 6. de Jure Nat. & Gent. cap. 2. p. 670. which muſt be confeſſed to be as human a law, as that of Plato was harſh and unnatural, which enacted a ſervant ſhould receive as many ſtripes as he eat grapes or figs. See Euſebius, lib. xiii. Præpar. Evangel. cap. ult.

But we ſee no reaſon at all to reſtrain this indulgence only to hirelings, of whom there is no mention in this law; and therefore Joſephus ſeems to us to have juſtly enlarged this benefit (Archæol. lib. 4. cap. 8.) to all travellers on the high-way, tho' they were not Iſraelites (to whom, and to proſelytes of juſtice alone, the Jews confine this privilege) but meer ſtrangers of any other nation, who had occaſion to paſs by a vineyard, and needed a refreſhment. Which permiſſion may ſeem to have cauſed great inconvenience, if not miſchief in it, becauſe they might tread down the vines, and make great waſte among the grapes. Therefore, by "coming into their neighbours vineyard," is not meant going into every part of it, with a liberty to pick out the beſt grapes; but only ſtepping aſide out of their way, into the skirts of the vineyard, which lay near the road, and ſatisfying their hunger, without entering further into the vineyard. This made it no damage to the owners, conſidering the great plenty of fruit in that country.

—— But thou ſhalt not put any in thy veſſel.] They were only to eat for their preſent neceſſity or delight, but not to carry any away with them, for the benefit of others, or their own refreſhment at another time; and therefore might not put any in their pouches, or their garments, or boſoms, or ſo much as carry away in their hands what they could not eat.

Ver. 25. When thou comeſt into the ſtanding corn of thy neighbours, then thou mayſt pluck the ears with thine hand.]

As

As the diſciples of our bleſſed Saviour did, when they walked through the corn, Matth. xii. 1. which they might have juſtified by the ſtricteſt rules of the phariſaical doctors, who granted this privilege unto Jews, but not unto Gentiles.

——— But thou ſhalt not move a ſickle unto thy neighbours ſtanding corn.] They might not cut down any corn, but only pluck with their hands as much as was neceſſary to ſatisfy their hunger, or for their pleaſure.

CHAP. XXIV.

1 Of divorce. 5 A new married man goeth not to war. 10 Of pledges. 7 Of manſtealers. 8 Of leproſy. 14 The hire is to be given. 16 Of juſtice. 19 Of charity.

WHEN a man hath taken a wife and married her, and it come to paſs that ſhe find no favour in his eyes, becauſe he hath found ſome uncleanneſs in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and ſend her out of his houſe.

2 And when ſhe is departed out of his houſe, ſhe may go and be another mans wife.

3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it in her hand, and ſendeth her out of his houſe; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife;

4 Her former husband which ſent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that ſhe is defiled? for that is abomination before the LORD, and thou ſhalt not cauſe the land to ſin, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

5 ¶ When a man hath taken a new wife, he ſhall not go out to war, neither ſhall he be charged with any buſineſs: but he ſhall be free at home one year, and ſhall cheer up his wife which he hath taken.

6 ¶ No man ſhall take the nether or the upper milſtone to pledge: for he taketh a mans life to pledge.

7 ¶ If a man be found ſtealing any of his brethren of the children of Iſrael, and maketh merchandize of him, or ſelleth him; then that thief ſhall die, and thou ſhalt put evil away from among you.

8 ¶ Take heed in the plague of leproſy, that thou obſerve diligently, and do according to all that the prieſts the Levites, ſhall teach you: as I commanded them, ſo ye ſhall obſerve to do.

9 Remember what the LORD thy God did unto Miriam by the way, after that ye were come forth out of Egypt.

10 ¶ When thou doſt lend thy brother any thing, thou ſhalt not go into his houſe to fetch his pledge.

11 Thou ſhalt ſtand abroad, and the man to whom thou doſt lend ſhall bring out the pledge abroad unto thee.

12 And if the man be poor, thou ſhalt not ſleep with his pledge.

13 In any caſe thou ſhalt deliver him the pledge again when the ſun goeth down, that he may ſleep in his own raiment, and bleſs thee: and it ſhall be righteouſneſs unto thee before the LORD thy God.

14 ¶ Thou ſhalt not oppreſs an hired ſervant that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren, or of thy ſtrangers that are in thy land within thy gates.

25 At his day thou ſhalt give him his hire, neither ſhall the ſun go down upon it, for he is poor, and ſetteth his heart upon it: leſt he cry againſt thee unto the LORD, and it be ſin unto thee.

16 The fathers ſhall not be put to death for the children, neither ſhall the children be put to death for the fathers: every man ſhall be put to death for his own ſin.

17 ¶ Thou ſhalt not pervert the judgment of the ſtranger, nor of the fatherleſs, nor take the widow's raiment to pledge.

18 But thou ſhalt remember that thou waſt a bondman in Egypt, and the LORD thy God redeemed thee thence: therefore I command thee to do this thing.

19 ¶ When thou cutteſt down thine harveſt in thy field, and haſt forgot a ſheaf in the field, thou ſhalt not go again to fetch it: it ſhall be for the ſtranger, for the fatherleſs, and for the widow: that the LORD thy God may bleſs thee in all the work of thine hands.

20 When thou beateſt thine olive-tree, thou ſhalt not go over the boughs again: it ſhall be for the ſtranger, for the fatherleſs, and for the widow.

21 When thou gathereſt the grapes of thy vineyard, thou ſhalt not glean it afterward: it ſhall be for the ſtranger, for the fatherleſs, and for the widow.

22 And thou ſhalt remember that thou waſt a bond-man in the land of Egypt: therefore I command thee to do this thing.

Ver. 1. When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to paſs that ſhe find no favour in his eyes,] That is, if he diſlike and loath her, for the expreſſion is ſoftned by a figure of ſpeech, wherein more is underſtood, than is expreſſed, as Prov. x. 2. and xvii. 21. and xxiv. 23.

——— Becauſe he hath found ſome uncleanneſs in her.] Some odious diſagreeableneſs, or ſome loathſome diſtemper of body, or ill quality of mind, not obſerved before the marriage; or ſome light and wanton carriage, as this, or the like phraſe, commonly ſignifies; but not amounting to adultery, which was puniſhable not by divorce, but death.

—Then

——— Then let him write her a bill of divorcement, &c.] Which is not a command to divorce her, as ſome of the Jews underſtood it, nor an allowance and approbation of that practice, as plainly appears, not only from the New Teſtament, Matth. v. 31, 32. and xix. 8, 9. but alſo from the Old Teſtament, Gen. ii. 24 Mal. ii. 16. but merely a permiſſion or toleration of that practice for prevention of greater miſchief and cruelties of that hard-hearted people toward their wives; and this only for a ſeaſon, even until the time of reformation, as it is called Heb. ix. 10. that is, till the coming of the Meſſiah, when things were to return to their firſt inſtitution, and pureſt condition. The husband is not here commanded to put her away, but if he do put her away, he is commanded to "write, and "give her a bill of divorcement, before he ſend her out of "his houſe." And though it be true, as our Saviour obſerves, that Moſes did ſuffer theſe divorces, without puniſhing them, which alſo is here implyed, yet it muſt be acknowledged, that we if conſult the Hebrew words, theſe three firſt verſes may ſeem to be only a ſuppoſition, and the words rendered, "then let him write her," in the Hebrew runs thus: "and hath written her;" and ſo it follows, ver. 2. "and ſhe be departed out of his houſe, "and be gone, and become another mans wife;" then follows, ver. 3. which even according to our tranſlation, carries on the ſuppoſition; "and if the latter husband "hate her, &c." Then follows the poſition or prohibition, ver. 4.

Ver. 2. And when ſhe is departed out of his houſe, ſhe may go and be another mans wife.] For tho' he could not cauſeleſsly put her away without ſin, yet ſhe being put away and forſaken by her husband, might marry another without ſin, as is determined in the ſame or the like caſe, 1 Cor. vii. 15.

Ver. 3. And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it in her hand, and ſendeth her out of his houſe.] This ſhews that no other diſmiſſion of a wife was allowed, but only this. For, as Maimonides well obſerves, More Nevochim, p. iii. cap. 49. If it had been lawful to do it by bare words, or ſimply ſending her out of his houſe, any woman might have left her husband, and ſaid ſhe was put away; both ſhe, and he that committed adultery with her, pretending a divorce, when her husband had given her none. Therefore the law wiſely provided none ſhould be put away, but by ſuch a bill as is before-mentioned, whereby an authentick teſtimony was given of it.

—— Or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife.] Whereby ſhe became free again, as the apoſtle hath obſerved, Rom. vii. 2.

Ver. 4. Her former husband which ſent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that ſhe is defiled.] This is the puniſhment of his levity and injuſtice in putting her away without ſufficient cauſe, which by this offer he now acknowledgeth.

—— For that is abomination before the Lord.] Not ſimply and abſolutely, as if her ſecond marriage were a ſin, but reſpectively, or as to her firſt husband, to whom ſhe is as a defiled or unclean woman, that is, forbidden; for things forbidden, are accounted and called unclean, Judg. xiii. 7. becauſe they may no more be touched or uſed than an unclean thing.

——— And thou ſhalt not cauſe the land to ſin, &c.] That is, thou ſhalt not ſuffer ſuch abominable lightneſs and lewdneſs to be practiſed, leſt the people be polluted, and the land defiled and accurſed by thoſe means.

Ver. 5. When a man hath taken a new wife, he ſhall not go out to war, neither ſhall he be charged with any buſineſs.] That is, any publick office or employment, which may cauſe an abſence from, or neglect of, his wife.

——— But he ſhall be free at home one year.] That their affections, newly engaged, may be firmly ſettled, ſo as there may be no occaſion for the divorces laſt mentioned.

Ver. 6. No man ſhall take the nether or the upper millſtone to pledge.] Uſed in their hand-mills; of which ſee Exod. xi. 5. Numb. xi. 28. Jer. xxv. 10. Under this one kind, he underſtands all other things neceſſary for obtaining a livelihood, the taking away whereof is againſt the laws both of charity and prudence, ſeeing by thoſe things alone he can be enabled both to ſubſiſt, and to pay his debts.

——— For he taketh a man's life to pledge.] That is, his livelihood, or the neceſſary ſupport of his life.

Ver. 7. If a man be found ſtealing any of his brethren of the children of Iſrael, and maketh merchandiſe of him, &c.] This was the end of man-ſtealing, to make a gain of him, either by exchanging him for ſome commodity, or ſelling him for money.

——— Then that thief ſhall die.] This crime was puniſhed with death, tho' ſtealing of beaſts, or other things, was not; ſee Exod. xxi. 16. becauſe it was very heinous on a double account, both by depriving the community of one of its members, and making him a ſlave in another country.

Ver. 8. Take heed, in the plague of leproſy that thou obſerve diligently, and do according to all that the prieſts the Levites ſhall teach you.] By which words he plainly intimates, that they were not only to have an eye to the Levites inſtructions, but alſo and eſpecially unto the word and command of God; and that if the Levites ſentence were manifeſtly contrary to the command of God, it were not to be obeyed. As if a Levite or prieſt ſhould, for fear, or favour, or gain, pronounce a perſon to be clean, who was really and manifeſtly unclean, and had the unqueſtionable marks of leproſy upon him, we ſuppoſe no man in his wits will queſtion, but every perſon, who ſaw and knew this, was bound to avoid the touching of him, and that if he did touch him, he ſhould be defiled by it.

Ver. 9. Remember what the Lord thy God did unto Miriam by the way, after that ye were come forth out of Egypt.] Whom God ſmote with leproſy for her contempt of Moſes, and therefore thou mayſt expect the ſame or like puniſhment, if thou doſt deſpiſe the counſel and direction of the Levites, which I have ſet over thee, and command thee to obſerve in this and the like matters.

Ver. 10. When thou doſt lend thy brother any thing, thou ſhalt not go into his houſe to fetch his pledge.] To prevent both the poor man's reproach, by having his wants expoſed to view, and the creditor's inſolence and greedineſs, which might be occaſioned by the ſight of ſomething which he deſired, and the debtor could not ſpare.

Ver. 11. Thou ſhalt ſtand abroad, and the man to whom thou doſt lend ſhall bring out the pledge, &c.] He ſhall chuſe what pledge he pleaſe, provided only it be ſufficient for the purpoſe.

Ver. 12. And if the man be poor, thou ſhalt not ſleep with his pledge.] But reſtore it before night, which intimates, that he ſhould take no ſuch thing for pledge, without which a man cannot ſleep, ſince it were an idle thing to fetch and carry it every day; ſee Exod. xxii. 26, 27.

Ver. 13. In any caſe thou ſhalt deliver him the pledge again when the ſun goeth down, that he may ſleep in his own raiment, and bleſs thee.] Inſtrumentally, as miniſters are ſaid to convert and ſave ſinners, to wit, bring down the bleſſing of God upon thee by his prayers: for tho' his prayers, if he be not a good man, ſhall not avail for his own behalf, yet they will avail for thy benefit.

——— And it ſhall be righteouſneſs unto thee before the Lord thy God.] That is, it ſhall be eſteemed and accepted by God as a work of righteouſneſs, or holineſs, or goodneſs and mercy, which is frequently called righteouſneſs; as Pſalm cxii. 9. Prov. x. 2. Dan. iv. 27.

Ver. 14. Thou ſhalt not oppreſs an hired ſervant that is poor and needy.] Either by laying too grievous burdens of work upon him, or by with-holding his wages from him, as it follows.

Ver. 15. At his day thou ſhalt give him his hire.] At the time appointed, weekly or daily.

——— Neither ſhall the ſun go down upon it.] Namely, after the day upon which it is due, and deſired or demanded by him; for juſtice muſt not be denied or delayed.

——— For he is poor, and ſetteth his heart upon it.] In the Hebrew, lifteth up his ſoul to it, which notes his great deſire and hope of it, and his dependance upon it; ſee Pſalm xxiv. 4. Jer. xii. 27.

Ver. 16. The fathers ſhall not be put to death for the children, neither ſhall the children be put to death for the fathers.] Underſtand it thus, if the one be free from the guilt of the other's ſin, and except in thoſe caſes where the ſovereign Lord of life and death, before whom none is innocent, hath commanded it, Deut. xiii. Joſ. vii. 24. For this law is given to men, not to God, and tho' God do viſit the father's ſins upon the children, Exod. xx. yet he will not ſuffer men to do ſo.

——— Every man ſhall be put to death for his own ſin. Underſtand only, and not for any other man's ſin.

Ver. 17. Thou ſhalt not pervert the judgment of the ſtranger, nor of the fatherleſs.] Nor of the widow, which is to be ſupplied out of the laſt member; nor indeed, of any other perſon, but he particularly mentions theſe, partly, becauſe men are moſt apt to wrong ſuch helpleſs perſons, and partly, becauſe God is pleaſed eſpecially to charge himſelf, and ſo to charge others, with the care of thoſe who have no other refuge; ſee Iſa. i. 23. Jer. v. 28.

——— Nor take the widows raiment to pledge.] That is, ſuch a one as he hath daily and neceſſary uſe of, as being poor, as may appear by comparing this with ver. 12, 13. and with other places. But this concerns not rich perſons, nor ſuperfluous raiment.

Ver. 18. But thou ſhalt remember that thou waſt a bondman in Egypt.] Thou ſhalt remember this affectionately, and practically; and by the compaſſionate ſenſe of others miſeries, thou ſhalt make it evident, that thou haſt not forgotten thy own diſtreſſes and deliverances.

——— And the Lord thy God redeemed thee thence: therefore I command thee to do this thing.] I having thereby authority to command thee, and thou having obligations on that account, both to obey me, and to pity others in the ſame calamities which thou haſt ſuſtained.

CHAP. XXV.

1 Stripes muſt not exceed forty. 4 The ox is not to be muſſled. 5 Of raiſing ſeed unto a brother. 11 Of the immodeſt woman. 13 Of unjuſt weights. 17 The memory of Amalek is to be blotted out.

IF there be a controverſy between men, and they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them, then they ſhall juſtify the righteous, and condemn the wicked.

2 And it ſhall be, if the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, that the judge ſhall cauſe him to lie down, and be beaten before his face, according to his fault, by a certain number.

3 Forty ſtripes he may give him, and not exceed: leſt if he ſhould exceed, and beat him above theſe with many ſtripes, then thy brother ſhould ſeem vile unto thee.

4 ¶ Thou ſhalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn.

5 ¶ If brethren dwell together, and one of them die, and have no child, the wife of the dead ſhall not marry without unto a ſtranger: her husbands brother ſhall go into her, and take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of an husbands brother unto her.

6 And it ſhall be, that the firſt-born which ſhe beareth, ſhall ſucceed in the name of his brother which is dead, that his name be not put out of Iſrael.

7 And if the man like not to take his brothers wife, then let his brothers wife go up to the gate unto the elders, and ſay, My husbands brother refuſeth to raiſe up unto his brother a name in Iſrael, he will not perform the duty of my husbands brother.

8 Then the elders of this city ſhall call him, and ſpeak unto him: and if he ſtand to it, and ſay, I like not to take her:

9 Then ſhall his brothers wife come unto him in the preſence of the elders, and looſe his ſhoe from off his foot, and ſpit in his face, and ſhall anſwer and ſay, So ſhall it be done unto that man that will not build up his brothers houſe.

10 And his name ſhall be called in Iſrael, The houſe of him that hath his ſhoe looſed.

11 ¶ When men ſtrive together one with another, and the wife of the one draweth near for to deliver her husband out of the hand of him that ſmiteth him, and putteth forth her hand, and taketh him by the ſecrets:

12 Then thou ſhalt cut off her hand, thine eye ſhall not pity her.

13 ¶ Thou ſhalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and a ſmall.

14 Thou ſhalt not have in thine houſe divers meaſures, a great and a ſmall.

15 But thou ſhalt have a perfect and juſt weight, a perfect and juſt meaſure ſhalt thou have: that thy days may be lengthned in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

16 For all that do ſuch things, and all that do unrighteouſly, are an abomination unto the LORD thy God.

17 ¶ Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt:

18 How he met thee by the way, and ſmote the hindmoſt of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou waſt faint and weary; and he feared not God.

19 Therefore it ſhall be, when the LORD thy God hath given thee reſt from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to poſſeſs it, that thou ſhalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou ſhalt not forget it.

Ver. 1. If there be a controverſy between men.] About criminal matters, as it follows.

—— And they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them, then they ſhall juſtify the righteous.] That is, acquit him from guilt, and falſe accuſations, and free him from puniſhment.

—— And condemn the wicked.] Declare him guilty, and paſs ſentence of condemnation to ſuitable puniſhments upon him.

Ver. 2. And it ſhall be, if the wicked man be worthy to be beaten.] Which the Jews ſay was the caſe of all thoſe crimes.

crimes which the law commands to be puniſhed, without expreſſing the kind or degree of the puniſhment.

—— That the judge ſhall cauſe him to lie down, and be beaten before his face, &c.] That the puniſhment might be duly inflicted, without exceſs or defect, which otherwiſe might eaſily happen through the executioner's paſſion or partiality.

Ver. 3. Forty ſtripes he may give him, and not exceed.] It ſeems not ſuperſtition, but prudent caution, when the Jews would not exceed thirty-nine ſtripes, 2 Cor. xi. 24. leſt thro' miſtake or forgetfulneſs, or eagerneſs, they ſhould go beyond their bounds, which they were commanded to keep, but they were not obliged to go to the utmoſt extent of them.

—— And beat him above theſe, with many ſtripes, then thy brother.] Who tho' faulty, and chaſtiſed, yet ſtill is thy brother by nation, and probably by religion too.

——Should ſeem vile unto thee.] Should be rendered contemptible to his brethren, either by this cruel uſage of him, as if he were a ſlave or a brute beaſt; or by the deformity or infirmity of body which exceſſive beating might produce.

Ver. 4. Thou ſhalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn.] As the Gentiles uſed to do, having divers devices to keep them from eating when they trod out the corn, which they did in thoſe parts and times by oxen, Hoſ. x. 11. either immediately by their hoofs, Iſa. xxviii. 28. Mich. iv. 13. or by drawing carts, or other inſtruments, over the corn, Iſa. xxv. 10. and xxviii. 27. and xli. 15. Amos i. 3. Hereby God taught them humanity and kindneſs even to their beaſts that ſerved them, Prov. xii. 10. and much more to their ſervants or other men, who laboured for them, and eſpecially to their miniſters, 1 Cor. ix. 9.

Ver. 5. If brethren.] Strictly ſo called, as is evident from ver. 7. Gen. xxxviii. 8. Ruth i. 15. Matth. xxii. 24, 25.

—— Dwell together.] Either firſt, ſtrictly, in the ſame houſe or family; which is not probable, becauſe the married brother may be preſumed to have left his father's houſe, and ſet up a family of his own; or, ſecondly, more largely, in the ſame town or city, or country. This is added for a relief of their conſciences, that if the next brother had removed his habitation into remote parts, or were carried thither into captivity, which God foreſaw would be their caſe, then the wife of the dead had her liberty to marry to the next kinſman that lived in the ſame place with her.

——— And one of them die.] Either the firſt and eldeſt of them, as it was practiſed, Gen. xxxviii. 6. &c. and expounded, Matt. xxii. 5. one being oft put for the firſt, as Gen. i. 5. and ii. 11. Hag. i. 1. Mark xvi. 2. and the chief care was about the firſt-born, who were inveſted with ſingular privileges, and were types of Chriſt. Or, ſecondly, any of them, for the words are general, and ſo the practice may ſeem to have been, Ruth iii. and the reaſon of the law may ſeem to be in a great meaſure the ſame, which was to keep up the diſtinction as of tribes and families, that ſo the Meſſiah might be diſcovered by the family from which he was appointed to proceed, ſo alſo of inheritances, which were divided among all the brethren, the firſt-born having only a double portion.

——— And have no child.] In the Hebrew, no ſon. But ſon is oft put for any child, male or female, both in ſcripture and other authors; and therefore the Hebrew, no ſon, is rendered no child here, as it is, in effect, Mat. xxii. 24. Mark xii. 19. Luke xx. 28. And indeed this caution was not neceſſary, when there was a daughter, whoſe child might be adopted into the name and family of its grandfather.

—— The wife of the dead ſhall not marry without, unto a ſtranger.] That is, to one of another family, as that word is frequently uſed.

—— Her husbands brother ſhall go into her, &c.] Except he was married himſelf, as may appear by other places in ſcripture, and by the reaſon of the thing, and, as ſome add, from the phraſe of, dwelling together, to wit, in their father's family.

Ver. 6. And it ſhall be, that the firſt-born which ſhe beareth, ſhall ſucceed in the name of his brother which is dead.] Shall be called and reputed his ſon, ſee Ruth iv. 17.

—— That his name be not put out of Iſrael.] That a family be not loſt. So this was a proviſion that the number of their families might not be diminiſhed.

Ver. 7. And if the man like not to take his brothers wife, &c.] If he ſhould have no inclination to revive his brother's name and memory.

Ver. 8. Then the elders of his city ſhall call him, and ſpeak unto him.] To convince him of his duty, and perſwade him to the performance of it.

———And if he ſtand to it, and ſay, I like not to take her.] If he obſtinately refuſe it.

Ver. 9. Then ſhall his brothers wife come unto him in the preſence of the elders, and looſe his ſhoe from off his foot.] Partly, as a ſign of his reſignation of all his right to the woman, and to her husband's inheritance; for as the ſhoe was a ſign of one's power and right, Pſalm lx. 8 and cviii. 9. ſo the parting with the ſhoe was a token of the alienation of ſuch right, and that he would not, and thenceforth might not, enter upon his brother's land; and partly as a note of infamy, to ſignify, that by this unnatural and diſingenuous action, he was unworthy to be among freemen, and fit to be reduced to the condition of the meaneſt ſervants or captives, who uſed to go barefoot, Iſa. xx. 2, 4.

——— And ſpit in his face.] As a return of his contempt upon himſelf. See Numb. xii. 14. Iſa. l. 6. Matth. xxvi. 67. and xxvii. 30. This was not done, Ruth iv. either becauſe her relation was not a brother, but a remote kinſman, and ſo deſerved leſs ſhame; or, becauſe Ruth did not proſecute him to the utmoſt, but freely conſented to this exchange.

———And ſhall anſwer, and ſay, ſo ſhall it be done unto that man, that will not build up his brothers houſe.] A phraſe frequently uſed for the procreation of children, and the encreaſe of a family. See Gen. xvi. 2. Exod. i. 21. 1 Kings xi. 38. 1 Chron. xvii. 25.

Ver. 10. And his name ſhall be called in Iſrael, The houſe of him that hath his ſhoe looſed.] By name, may be meant, his perſon, names being often put for perſons, and his poſterity alſo: So it was a laſting blot.

Ver. 17. Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt.] Which circumſtance greatly aggravates their ſin, that they ſhould do thus to a people, who had been long exerciſed with great afflictions, to whom pity and help was due by the laws of nature and humanity, and for whoſe reſcue God had in ſo glorious a manner appeared, which they could not be ignorant of. So this was barbarity to Iſrael, and ſetting the great Jehovah at defiance.

Ver. 18. How he met thee by the way, and ſmote the hindermoſt of thee, &c.] Which God permitted, both for the puniſhment of Iſrael's ſin, and to harden and prepare them for the difficulties of their expedition.

Ver. 19. Therefore it ſhall be, when the Lord thy God hath given the reſt from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to poſſeſs it; that thou ſhalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven.] Which was in great meaſure accompliſhed afterward. See 1 Sam. xv. and xxvii. 8. and xxx. 1, 17. 1 Chron. iv. 43. Eſther ix. 12, 13.

CHAP. XXVI.

1 The confeſſion of him that offereth the basket of firſt-fruits. 12 The prayer of him that giveth his third year tithes. 16 The covenant between God and the people.

AND it ſhall be when thou art come in unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, and poſſeſſeſt it, and dwelleſt therein:

2 That thou ſhalt take of the firſt of all the fruit of the earth, which thou ſhalt bring of thy land that the LORD thy God giveth thee, and ſhalt put it in a basket, and ſhalt go unto the place which the

LORD

LORD thy God ſhall chuſe to place his name there.

3 And thou ſhalt go unto the prieſt that ſhall be in thoſe days, and ſay unto him, I profeſs this day unto the LORD thy God, that I am come unto the country which the LORD ſware unto our fathers for to give us.

4 And the prieſt ſhall take the basket out of thine hand, and ſet it down before the altar of the LORD thy God.

5 And thou ſhalt ſpeak and ſay before the LORD thy God, A Syrian ready to periſh was my father, and he went down into Egypt, and ſojourned there with a few, and became there a nation great, mighty, and populous.

6 And the Egyptians evil intreated us, and afflicted us, and laid upon us hard bondage.

7 And when we cried unto the LORD God of our fathers, the LORD heard our voice, and looked on our affliction, and our labour, and our oppreſſion.

8 And the LORD brought us forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand, and with an out-ſtretched arm, and with great terribleneſs, and with ſigns, and with wonders.

9 And he hath brought us into this place, and hath given us this land, even a land that floweth with milk and honey.

10 And now behold, I have brought the firſt-fruits of the land, which thou, O LORD haſt given me: and thou ſhalt ſet it before the LORD thy God, and worſhip before the LORD thy God.

11 And thou ſhalt rejoice in every good thing which the LORD thy God hath given unto thee, and unto thine houſe, thou and the Levite, and the ſtranger that is among you.

12 ¶ When thou haſt made an end of tithing all the tithes of thine increaſe, the third year, which is the year of tithing, and haſt given it unto the Levite, the ſtranger, the fatherleſs and the widow, that they may eat within thy gates, and be filled:

13 Then thou ſhalt ſay before the LORD thy God, I have brought away the hallowed things out of mine houſe, and alſo have given them unto the Levite, and unto the ſtranger, to the fatherleſs, and to the widow, according to all thy commandments, which thou haſt commanded me: I have not tranſgreſſed thy commandments, neither have I forgotten them.

14 I have not eaten thereof in my mourning, neither have I taken away ought thereof for any unclean uſe, nor given ought thereof for the dead: but I have hearkned to the voice of the LORD my God, and have done according to all that thou haſt commanded me.

15 Look down from thy holy habitation, from heaven, and bleſs thy people Iſrael, and the land which thou haſt given us, as thou ſwareſt unto our fathers, a land that floweth with milk and honey.

16 ¶ This day the LORD thy God hath commanded thee to do theſe ſtatutes and judgments: thou ſhalt therefore keep and do them with all thine heart, and with all thy ſoul.

17 Thou haſt avouched the LORD this day to be thy God, and to walk in his ways, and to keep his ſtatutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and to hearken unto his voice.

18 And the LORD hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, as he hath promiſed thee, and that thou ſhouldeſt keep all his commandments.

19 And to make thee high above all nations which he hath made, in praiſe, and in name, and in honour, and that thou mayſt be an holy people unto the LORD thy God as he hath ſpoken.

Ver. 1. And it ſhall be when thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, and poſſeſſeſt it, and dwelleſt therein.] When they had a ſettled poſſeſſion of the ſeveral inheritances, which fell to their ſhare in the land of Canaan.

Ver. 2. That thou ſhalt take of the firſt of all the fruit of the earth.] This is not meant meerly of the firſt-fruits they ſhould have after they were ſettled in Canaan, but of the firſt-fruits they ſhould have every year; which being the moſt deſirable of all other, and coveted by every one, with a greater appetite than ordinary, nature it ſelf directed men to offer them to God, the giver of all good things: And theſe were diſtinct from that mentioned, Levit. xxiii. 10. being of all the fruits of the earth. The principal of which being ſeven, the Jews commonly ſay, theſe only were to be preſented to God, viz. wheat, barley, grapes, figs, pomegranates, olives, and dates. Some of the doctors ſay, the firſt-fruits of all kind of things whatſoever were due; and a queſtion being raiſed, whether a ſtranger was bound to pay them, or not; ſome of them ſay, no; becauſe they could not uſe the proteſtation mentioned, ver. 3. But the more common opinion is, that they might both bring firſt-fruits, and uſe the proteſtation, becauſe Abraham was alſo the father of ſtrangers, Gen. xvii. 5. And it may be, ſaith R. Bechai, that is pointed at ver. 11. of this chapter; where it is ſaid, "Thou and the Levite, and the ſtranger that is "among you."

——— Which thou ſhalt bring of thy land, that the Lord thy God giveth thee] In order to which, they ſay, every owner of land, when he went into his ground, and found any fig, or bunch of grapes, or a pomegranate, more forward than the reſt, he was to tie a ruſh about it, and write upon it, theſe are firſt-fruits. So Wagenſeil, and many others, have obſerved out of the title Biccurim, cap. 3.

—And

—— And ſhalt put it in a basket.] The quantity of each, they ſay, was to be at leaſt a ſixtieth part; and they might be all put into the ſame basket, provided they were not mingled, but preſerved diſtinct; barley being laid at the bottom, and then wheat, and next olives, and above them dates, and then pomegranates; and laſt of all, figs and grapes, being hung on the outſide; and leaves of palm, or other trees, put between every kind of firſt-fruits.

R. Bechai ſaith, that the rich brought theſe fruits in baskets of gold and ſilver, that is, covered with gold or ſilver, (as Maimonides ſpeaks;) and we read of the like golden baskets carried by virgins, in the feaſt of Bacchus, at Athens. See Ezek. Spanhemius, on the hymn of Callimachus to Ceres, p. 733. Now if the basket, here mentioned, was made of theſe, or any other metal, the Jews ſay, the prieſt was to reſtore it to the owner, when he had emptied it: But if it was a wicker basket, or ſuch like, the prieſt had it, together with the firſt-fruits.

——And ſhalt go unto the place which the Lord thy God ſhall chooſe, to place his name there.] The man himſelf was to go, as the Jews ſay, with the basket upon his ſhoulder: and a great company were wont to go together, who met at the chief city of their province. The time of going was at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, Exod. xxiii. 16. not before, but at any time after, till the feaſt of Dedication, which was in our November; after which, they were not accepted.

And here we cannot but obſerve, that the heathens, in all probability, from hence derived the cuſtom of carrying their firſt-fruits, as a tithe every year, unto the iſland Delos, where Apollo was ſuppoſed to have his ſpecial reſidence. And this, not only from the iſlands thereabouts, and the neighbouring countries, but from all parts of the world; as the Jews, we find, every where ſent, from the countries where they dwelt, a ſum of money every year inſtead of firſt-fruits and tithes, unto Jeruſalem; which privilege the Romans allowed them, after they had conquered them, as Joſephus tells us, lib. vii. de Bello Jud. cap. xiii. The heathen cuſtom, now mentioned, is expreſſed by Callimachus, in his hymn upon Delos, in theſe remarkable words, ver. 278, 279, &c.

Ἀλλά τοι ἀμφιέλιξ δεκαλοφόροι αἶψα δπαρχαὶ
Ἵξονται πᾶσαι ὅ χερὸς ἀν ἀγυιὰς πόλιος
Αἵτε πρὸς ἠοῦς, αἵ δ' ἑσπέραν, αἵ τ' ἀνὰ μέσσην
Κλῖμα ἐσάσαντο, καὶ οἱ καθύπερθε Βορέαο.

The ſenſe of which is this: That firſt-fruits were ſent for tithes every year from all countries, not only from the eaſt and weſt, and ſouth, but from the north alſo. And they were ſent with ſuch joy, as the Jews expreſſed on this occaſion; for all cities, he ſaith, did χερὸς ἀνάγειν, &c. and ſo we read in ſeveral authors, that there were θεωρίαι, as they called them, ſolemn embaſſies, ſent from ſeveral people, by choſen perſons, unto Delos, to celebrate there the feaſt of Apollo with muſick and dancing, &c. particularly the Athenians, Peloponneſians, and Meſſenians, &c. And, which is moſt ſtrange, the Hyperboreans, a very northerly people, ſent frugum primitias, to this iſland, as Pliny, and many other authors, teſtify. Only what he calls the firſt-fruits of their corn, and ſuch like things, they call the firſt-fruits of their holy things: which was done to teſtify their honour to this god, and for the maintenance of his prieſts and other miniſters, who attended on him there; for Delos, of it ſelf, was but a barren iſle, the ſoil being dry and ſtony; and called therefore, (Callimachus, ver. 208.) ὀυσήεσσα.

There are other footſteps of this among the heathens; the Myſtica vannus Iacchi, mentioned by Virgil in his Georgics, being nothing elſe (according to Servius) but vas vimineum, a wicker basket, in which their firſt-fruits were carried.

Ver. 3. And thou ſhalt go unto the prieſt that ſhall be in thoſe days.] Who was then in attendance at the ſanctuary, and particularly appointed to wait for their coming. When they entered the gates of the city, they ſung the ſecond verſe of Pſalm cxxii. "Our feet ſhall ſtand in thy gates, "O Jeruſalem:" and then they went to the mountain of the temple, and ſung the whole hundred and fiftieth Pſalm; and as ſoon as they entered the court of Iſrael, the Levites began to ſing Pſalm xxx. 1. "I will extol thee, O Lord my "God," &c.

—— And ſay unto him.] The following confeſſion, in this verſe, was made by them, with the baskets on their ſhoulders, to ſtir them up to humility, as Maimonides interprets it. His words are theſe, "While they were "compelled to carry their baskets on their ſhoulders, "and in that manner to proclaim the divine benefits, it "ſignified that it was a conſiderable part of God's wor"ſhip and ſervice, for a man to be mindful of his afflic"tions and tribulations, when God had given him caſe "and reſt from them. This the law takes care of, in "ſeveral places; as when it ſaith, Thou ſhalt remember "that thou waſt a ſervant, &c. with this intention, that "he who lived in riches and pleaſure, might be ſecured "from the vices which ſpring from thence, ſuch as pride, "haughtineſs, apoſtacy, and the like; according to what "is ſaid in this book, ch. viii. 12. Leſt thou eat and art full, "and chap. xxxii. 15. Jeſurun waxed fat, and kicked, &c. "To prevent which, God commanded the firſt-fruits to "be thus offered every year to his Divine Majeſty," More Nevochim, P. iii. cap. 39.

—— I profeſs this day unto the Lord thy God, that I am come unto the country, which the Lord ſware unto our fathers for to give us.] This is a thankful acknowledgment of God's faithfulneſs to his promiſe, whereby they were put in mind to be faithful unto him, of whom they held this good land, by his gracious and free gift, and held it by this tenure, of paying to him this yearly rent.

Ver. 4. And the prieſt ſhall take the basket out of thine hand, and ſet it before the altar of the Lord thy God.] After the foregoing words were ſaid, the basket was taken down from their ſhoulders, and every one holding his basket by the handle, or the rim of it, the prieſt put his hands under it, and waved it about, according to the preſcription of the law, while the men recited the following words, ver. 5, 6, &c. This waving was a manifeſt token that it was offered to the Lord of the world, as an acknowledgment, that he was in a peculiar manner their Lord and Sovereign, of whom they held this land.

Ver. 5. And thou ſhalt ſpeak and ſay before the Lord thy God, a Syrian ready to periſh was my father.] Their father Jacob was not a Syrian by birth, for he was born in the land of Canaan. But one and the ſame perſon may be ſaid to be of divers countries, (as Bochart hath obſerved) with regard either to the place of his nativity, or of his education, or of his life and converſation; which occaſioned three countries to be aſcribed to our bleſſed Saviour, viz. Bethlehem, Nazareth, and Capernaum. Thus Jacob, who was born and bred in Canaan, is notwithſtanding called a Syrian, becauſe he lived twenty years with his uncle Laban, who was a Syrian, Gen. xxv. 20. and conſequently Jacob's mother was ſo, as were both his wives, and all his children, who were born there, except Benjamin. But he is more particularly here called a Syrian, to put them in mind of his poverty, when he went firſt into that country, and there lived as a ſervant, under a hard maſter; which is expreſſed in theſe words, ready to periſh; that is, very poor, and reduced to great ſtraits; being forced to flee from the fury of his brother Eſau, and to travel on foot to Padan Aram, (which was comprehended anciently under the name of Syria, Gen. xxxii. 10.) where he was ſo cruelly uſed by his uncle Laban, chap. xxxi. 7, 39, 40, 41. that Onkelos takes theſe words, which we tranſlate, ready to periſh, in an active ſenſe, for him that deſtroys another. For, by the Syrian here, he underſtands Laban, (who is ſo called, as we obſerved before, Gen. xxviii. 5.) as if the meaning were, the Syrian, (that is, Laban) "ſought to deſtroy my father." For as he uſed him barbarouſly when he was with him, ſo he followed after him, when he went away, with an intention to ruin him. And thus Menaſſeh Ben Iſrael underſtands it, and many others, mentioned by Feſſelius; which is the ſenſe alſo of the vulgar Latin, Syrus perſequebatur patrem meum.

—— And he went down into Egypt.] Though God brought him from Laban with great ſubſtance, yet as he was ſtill but a ſojourner in the land of Canaan, ſo he was forced by famine to go down into Egypt for ſuſtenance.

——And ſojourned there with a few.] They were but ſeventy perſons, and lived there as ſtrangers. All which they were now bound to commemorate, for their humiliation before God, which might move them the more to exalt and magnify the mercy of God to them, who had made them (as it follows) a mighty nation. For this confeſſion conſiſts of theſe two parts, their own unworthineſs, and God's great goodneſs.

Ver. 6. And the Egyptians evil entreated us, and afflicted us, and laid upon us hard bondage.] The goodneſs of God unto them, in making them ſo numerous, was the occaſion of greater affliction, than either they or their fathers had endured, ſee Exod. i. 9, 10, &c. The remembrance of this was exceeding uſeful, to exerciſe their gratitude to God: not only for their deliverance from the Egyptian ſlavery, but for conducting them into a country of their own, but moſt plentifully ſtored with all manner of good things.

Ver. 7. And when we cried unto the Lord God of our fathers, the Lord heard our voice, and looked on our affliction, &c.] Having acknowledged their low and diſtreſſed condition, now they proceed to an acknowledgment of God's wonderful goodneſs; which appeared the more in relieving them, when they were utterly helpleſs. See Exod. ii. 23, 24, 22. iii. 7, 8.

Ver. 8. And the Law brought us forth out of Egypt, with a mighty hand, and with an out-ſtretched arm, and with great terribleneſs, &c.] This is ſo vehemently inculcated upon them, that they ſhould "remember the day "they came out of Egypt" all the days of their life. chap. xvi. 3. Exod. x. 2. which it became them eſpecially to remember at this time, that they might demonſtrate the truth of prophecy, both concerning puniſhments and rewards.

Ver. 9. And he hath brought us into this place, and hath given us this land, even a land flowing with milk and honey.] As they remember the terrible plagues upon Egypt in the foregoing verſe, ſo they commemorate the ſingular bleſſings beſtowed upon them in this.

Ver. 10. And now, behold, I have brought the firſt-fruits of the land, which thou, O Lord, haſt given me.] Thus they concluded this ſolemn rite, as they began it, ver. 3. with an acknowledgment that they held this land of God, as the ſupream Lord; and that by his free gift.

——— And thou ſhalt ſet it before the Lord thy God.] Having ſaid theſe words, they left the basket by the altar, as the Jews ſay, where it had been placed (ver. 4.) and then the prieſt ſet it before the ſanctuary; where God dwelt by his ſpecial preſence.

——— And worſhip before the Lord thy God.] They made a profound reverence toward the holy place, by bowing their bodies as low as they could, and ſo went out of the temple: This the Hebrew word imports. And this outward act of worſhip, was undoubtedly accompanied, in all good men, with humble thanks to God for his benefits, and prayer for the continuance of them.

Ver. 12. When thou haſt made an end of tithing all the tithes of thine increaſe, the third year, which is the year of tithing, and haſt given it to the Levite, &c.] According to the commandment, chap. xiv. 29.

Ver. 13. Then thou ſhalt ſay———I have not tranſgreſſed thy commandments, neither have I forgotten them.] Neither done contrary to God's precepts, nor forgotten to perform them; either by keeping theſe tithes to themſelves, or by beſtowing them otherwiſe than God appointed.

Ver. 14. I have not eaten thereof in my mourning.] After the general profeſſion, mentioned in the foregoing verſe, that they had brought all hallowed things out of their houſes, and employed them as God directed, they were to make three particular profeſſions, which are mentioned in this verſe. And it is probable they have reſpect to ſome idolatrous cuſtoms which were in thoſe days. The firſt of them is, "That they had not eaten thereof in mourning, "or in lamentation." For ſo the Hebrew word oni, ſignifies, very bitter grief, and ſore mourning. Such the Egyptians made in harveſt-time, when they offered the firſt fruits of the earth, and kept the feaſt of Iſis, with doleful lamentations. So Diodorus Siculus, and other authors, tell us, particularly Julius Firmicus, who ſeverely reproves their folly, or madneſs rather, ſaying, Cur plangitis fruges terræ, &c. "Why do you bewail the fruits of the earth? "Why weep ye at the growth of your ſeed? &c. You "ſhould rather give thanks for theſe things to the moſt "high God, whoſe bounty is not to be lamented; but be-"wail rather your own error," &c. If there was ſuch a cuſtom in the world, when Moſes lived, it may very well be thought that he taught the Iſraelites to diſclaim ſuch ſenſeleſs and impious practices. And as the Egyptians, by this mourning acknowledged iſis, that is, the earth, to be the giver of all theſe good things; ſo he required God's people to bring in their harveſt with the greateſt joy and thanks unto the moſt high: For there was no joy ſo great, as that of harveſt and vintage; directly oppoſite to the Heathen who kept the feaſt of Bacchus alſo with lamentations.

——— Neither have I taken away ought thereof for any unclean uſe.] As was cuſtomary with ſome of the old idolators, who ſeparated ſome part of the firſt fruits for magical purpoſes, and ſometimes for thoſe that were carnal and impure. So Julius Firmicus informs us, who immediately after the mention of their lamentations, when they gathered the firſt-fruits of the earth, asks this queſtion, Quid addis incenſum & adulterium? Which ſhews that there were unclean rites which accompanied their offerings; and that they made them miniſters unto Venus.

—Nor given ought thereof for the dead.] If this be the right tranſlation of the laſt words, "for the dead," St. Auſtin hath given us a likely reaſon of this clauſe, which was to profeſs they had not imitated the Gentiles, who were wont to ſet meat and drink upon the graves of the dead, as he tells us, Serm. 15. de Sanctis. But it doth not appear that they ſet any part of their tithe, or firſt-fruits upon them, nor that they did it only in harveſt-time; But rather common bread and wine, which at all times they placed upon their graves when they were interred: And therefore it may be tranſlated "to the dead," and ſo it is a profeſſion, that they had not offered any of the fruits of the earth to heroes, (after the manner of the Gentiles,) particularly to Oſiris. For that they honoured them with their firſt-fruits, appears by a paſſage in Porphyry, lib. iv. περὶ Ἀποχῆς, ſect. 22. where he mentions three laws made by Triptolemus, an ancient law-giver among the Athenians: One of which is this Θεὸς καρποῖς ἀγλάλλειν, "to worſhip the gods with the fruits of the earth.' Which Draco thus expounds, as he ſhews in the concluſion of that book: Θεὸς τιμᾶν κ᾽ ἡρῶας ἐγχωρίους ὡς νόμῳ ἑπομένους νόμοις πατρίοις ἰδίᾳ κ᾽ δημοσίᾳ σὺν δίκῃ κ᾽ ἀπαρχὰς καρπῶν, &c. "To honour the gods, and the he-"roes of their own country publickly, according to the "laws of the nation; and privately, as much as they "were able, with ſpeaking well of them, and with the "firſt-fruits, and with the annual offerings." See Meurſius, in his Themis Attica, lib. i. cap. 1. But however we take this, the giving any part of tithe, "either for the dead, or, to the dead," ſhews there was ſuch a ſuperſtitious cuſtom: Unto which this clauſe having a manifeſt reſpect, we have reaſon to think the two former have ſo likewiſe.

——— But I have hearkened to the voice of the Lord my God, and have done according to all that thou haſt commanded me.] I have performed all that God required, and done nothing contrary to it. All theſe words from ver. 13. to this place, were to be ſpoken with a low and humble voice, becauſe they are a ſort of commendation of themſelves, and of their own integrity; which is not to be proclaimed aloud. But when they made the foregoing profeſſion, at the preſenting of the firſt-fruits, (ver. 5, 6, &c.) they being an acknowledgment of their own meanneſs and poor beginnings, and of God's infinite goodneſs in their advancement, they were to lift up their voice, and ſay aloud, "My father was a Sprian ready to periſh," &c. Thus the doctors reſolve in the Gemara of Miſchna Sota, cap. vii. in the beginning.

Ver. 15. Look down from thy holy habitation, from Heaven, and bleſs thy people Iſrael, and the land which thou haſt given us, &c.] Having performed their duty, they had the greater confidence to beg the continuance of God's mercies to them, and to their country; which it had been preſumption to expect, if they had not acknowledged him to be the donor of all the bleſſings they enjoyed, in the manner before appointed. For this was the end of all the obligations, both of this tithe, and of the firſt-fruits, and any other, to acknowledge God to be the Lord, "of "whom all things come, (as David ſpeaks) and of whoſe "own we give unto him," 1 Chron. xxix. 11, 12, 13, &c.

Ver. 16. This day the Lord thy God hath commanded thee to do theſe ſtatutes and judgments.] Theſe words com-comprehend the precepts in the foregoing chapters: Some of which concern matters of religion, and others of civil government.

Ver. 17. Thou haſt avouched the Lord this day to be thy God.] Then they owned him to be their king and governor. For ſo the name of ELOHIM, properly ſignifies, dignity, empire, and authority, as Grotius obſerves upon Exod. xx. Fortunatus Scacchus, before him, expounds theſe very words. Which, ſaith he, "have reſpect to God "as their emperor, who had the ſupreme government of the "commonwealth of Iſrael, with a right and authority of "conſtituting laws, and giving mandates for the eſtabliſh-"ing of that government."

Ver. 18. And the Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, &c.] At the ſame time, (for the word this is not in the Hebrew,) the Lord aſſured the Iſraelites that they ſhould be his people, in a ſpecial manner, provided they made good their promiſe of keeping his commandments: For the covenant was mutual. See Exod. xxiv. 3, 7. xix. 5, 6. It is obſervable that the Jeruſalem Targum paraphraſes theſe two verſes in this manner: "Ye "have taken the word of the Lord to reign over you to "day, that he may be your God, &c. And the word of "the Lord reigneth over you, a people dedicated to his "name as his peculiar," &c. where MEMRA, the word, cannot be underſtood otherwiſe than of the ſecond perſon in the Deity.

Ver. 19. And to make thee high above all nations, which he hath made, in praiſe, and in name, and in honour.] All this Moſes called to their mind, that it might prepare and diſpoſe them to renew the ſame covenant with God, before he left them; which he preſſes upon them, in the twenty-ninth chapter of this book, after he had given them ſome other admonitions, and laid before them the bleſſings and curſes that would come upon them according to their fidelity or falſeneſs in that holy covenant. Which is the ſubject of the two following chapters.

CHAP. XXVII.

1 The people are commanded to write the law upon ſtones, 5 And to build an altar of whole ſtones. 11 The tribes divided on Gerizzim and Ebal. 14 The curſes pronounced on mount Ebal.

AND Moſes, with the elders of Iſrael, commanded the people, ſaying, Keep all the commandments which I command you this day.

2 And it ſhall be on the day when you ſhall paſs over Jordan unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, that thou ſhalt ſet thee up great ſtones, and plaiſter them with plaiſter.

3 And thou ſhalt write upon them all the words of this law when thou art paſſed over, that thou mayſt go in unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, a land that floweth with milk and honey: as the LORD God of thy fathers hath promiſed thee.

4 Therefore it ſhall be when ye be gone over Jordan, that ye ſhall ſet up theſe ſtones which I command you this day, in mount Ebal, and thou ſhalt plaiſter them with plaiſter.

5 And there ſhalt thou build an altar unto the LORD thy God, an altar of ſtones: thou ſhalt not lift up any iron tool upon them.

6 Thou ſhalt build the altar of the LORD thy God of whole ſtones: and thou ſhalt offer burnt-offerings thereon unto the LORD thy God.

7 And thou ſhalt offer peace-offerings, and ſhalt eat there, and rejoice before the LORD thy God.

8 And thou ſhalt write upon the ſtones all the words of this law very plainly.

9 ¶ And Moſes, and the prieſts the Levites ſpake unto all Iſrael, ſaying, Take heed, and hearken, O Iſrael, this day thou art become the people of the LORD thy God.

10 Thou ſhalt therefore obey the voice of the LORD thy God, and do his commandments and his ſtatutes which I command thee this day.

11 ¶ And Moſes charged the people the ſame day, ſaying,

12 Theſe ſhall ſtand upon mount Gerizzim to bleſs the people, when ye are come over Jordan; Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Iſſachar, and Joſeph, and Benjamin.

13 And theſe ſhall ſtand upon mount Ebal to curſe; Reuben, Gad, and Aſher, and Zebulun, Dan, and Naphtali.

14 ¶ And the Levites ſhall ſpeak, and ſay unto all the men of Iſrael with a loud voice.

15 Curſed be the man that maketh any graven or molten image, an abomination unto the LORD, the work of the hands of the craftſman, and putteth it in a ſecret place: and all the people ſhall anſwer and ſay, Amen.

16 Curſed be he that ſetteth light by his father, or his mother: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

17 Curſed be he that removeth his neighbours land-mark: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

18 Curſed be he that maketh the blind to wander out of the way: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

19 Curſed be he that perverteth the judgment of the ſtranger, fatherleſs, and widow: and all the people ſhall ſay Amen.

20 Curſed be he that lieth with his fathers wife; becauſe he uncovereth his fathers ſkirt: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

21 Curſed be he that lieth with any manner of beaſt: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

22 Curſed

22 Curſed be he that lieth with his ſiſter, the daughter of his father, or the daughter of his mother: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

23 Curſed be he that lieth with his mother in law: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

24 Curſed be he that ſmiteth his neighbour ſecretly: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

25 Curſed be he that taketh reward to ſlay an innocent perſon: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

26 Curſed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

Ver. 2. And it ſhall be on the day when you ſhall paſs over Jordan.] Here, it is evident, the word day doth not ſignify preciſely the very ſame day they paſſed over, but not long after, aſſoon as they were come to mount Ebal, ver. 4. after the taking of Jericho and Ai; as appears from Joſhua viii. 30. for they were to paſs over Jordan, unto the land which the Lord their God gave them, (as it here follows) before they were obliged to do what is here required.

——— That thou ſhalt ſet thee up great ſtones.] It is not ſaid how many; but ſome fancy they were twelve, according to the number of pillars which Moſes employed, Exod. xxiv. 4. when he made the covenant between God and his people. But unleſs we could certainly determine, how much of the law was to be written upon theſe ſtones, we cannot give a near gueſs at their number. For if only the ten commandments, fewer than twelve would ſerve; if the whole book of Deuteronomy, ſo many are not ſufficient. As for the marginal reference in our Bibles, unto Joſhua iv. 1. it can have no reſpect to this place; for thoſe twelve ſtones were order'd to be taken out of Jordan, and left there where they lodged that night, which was at Gilgal. See ver. 3, 8, 20.

——— And plaiſter them with plaiſter.] That, being plain and ſmooth, they might write what is here commanded upon them, which they could not do while they were rough and uneven.

Ver. 3. And thou ſhalt write upon them all the words of this law.] Many think he means the whole book of Deuteronomy, which becauſe it is long, great ſtones are order'd to be provided for that purpoſe. Others think, only the commandments are here intended, which were the principal words of the covenant, as Moſes calls this law, chap. xxix. 1. But Joſephus, lib. iv. Archæol. cap. ult. is of opinion, that he means the curſings which here follow, from ver. 15. to the end of the chapter. Which is no improbable opinion, they containing ſeveral ſelect precepts, and the laſt of them ſeems to reſpect the whole law of Moſes, ver. 26.

But however we underſtand this, it is certain, that before the uſe of paper was found out, the ancients, particularly the Phœnicians and Egyptians, were wont to write their minds upon ſtones, as is teſtified by many authors, mentioned by Huetius, who obſerves, that this cuſtom continued long after the invention of paper, eſpecially if they deſired any thing ſhould be vulgarly known and conveyed down to poſterity. See Demonſt. Evang. propoſ. iv. cap. 2. n. 15. where he obſerves, that Moſes order'd the book of Deuteronomy to be inſcribed upon ſtones. We ſuppoſe he means all the laws contained in this book, not all the exhortations and hiſtorical paſſages; which agrees very well with this injunction, that they ſhould write on the ſtones all the words of this law.

— When thou art paſſed over, that thou mayeſt go in unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.] When they were gone over Jordan, to take poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, and were come to the place where he directed theſe ſtones to be ſet up, and this inſcription made upon them. Which place is particularly named in the next verſe. And from theſe words Fortunatus Scacchus thinks he hath reaſon to aſſert, that none of the things beforementioned are meant by "the words of this law," here commanded to be written; but that upon the very top of theſe ſtones (or the altar made of them, as he would have it underſtood) were written only the words of this covenant, whereby the people of Iſrael confeſſed themſelves to have received the land of Canaan from God, and to hold it on condition of their obedience to him. For to he interprets the words, "write unto them, in ſumma ſuperficie." And to make us know what he means by "the "words of this law," he thinks the following words are added, "that thou mayeſt go in unto the land which the "Lord thy God giveth thee," &c. that is, thou ſhalt declare who brought thee hither, and gave thee poſſeſſion of this country, and upon what condition, namely, that thou ſhouldſt keep the commands given to thee by God in Horeb. And therefore Moſes doth not bid them write on the ſtones the law of the Lord, nor the law abſolutely, but the words of this law. Where the demonſtrative particle hazoth limits the ſenſe to the preſent matter of which he is ſpeaking. Thus he, Myrothec. 2. Sacror. Elæochriſm, cap. 57. where he endeavours to ſtrengthen this interpretation, by obſerving, that after the command for writing this law upon the ſtones, Moſes, and the prieſts, and Levites, ſpake unto all Iſrael, ſaying, Take heed, and hearken, O Iſrael, this day thou art become the people of the Lord thy God, &c. ver. 9, 10.

Ver. 5. And there ſhalt thou build an altar unto the Lord thy God, an altar of ſtones.] Upon which, Joſephus himſelf fancies, the forenamed inſcription was to be made; and ſo the Talmudiſts alſo, in Miſchna Sota, cap. 7. But it is plain, the ſtones deſigned for that uſe were to be ſet up before the altar was built; the intention of it being, that they might promiſe to obſerve the words which were there written.

Ver. 6. Thou ſhalt build the altar of the Lord thy God of whole ſtones.] Not hewn, nor poliſhed; whereby all manner of imagery was avoided. Such ruſtic altars of rough ſtone, piled one upon another, were in uſe among the heathens, who ſeem to have imitated this pattern. The form of one of them Fortunatus Scacchus hath given us out of ſome ancient monuments at Brixia, related by Octavius Roſcius. Such altars the Iſraelites were permitted to build upon ſome ſpecial occaſion, as Gideon and Manoah did, Judges vi. 24, 26. xiii. 19. and Samuel, 1 Sam. vii. 17. and Saul, 1 Sam. xiv. 35. and David, 2 Sam. xxiv. 25. And ſuch a one Moſes himſelf built, Exod. xxiv. 4. And as Moſes there ſet up twelve pillars, according to the number of the tribes of Iſrael, when they enter'd into covenant with God at Horeb, ſo the fore-mentioned author thinks, at the confirmation of it, when they came into Canaan, they built not twelve altars, but heaped up twelve ſtones, which made one altar, without any coſt at all beſtowed upon it. And thus Elijah took twelve ſtones, and on a ſudden built an altar with them, when he endeavoured to bring the Iſraelites back again into the covenant of God, 1 Kings xviii. 31, 32.

Ver. 8. And thou ſhalt write upon the ſtones all the words of this law, very plainly.] So that they might be read eaſily. How the Talmudiſts came to fancy they were written in ſeventy languages, we cannot imagine; but ſuch a conceit there is among them, as Mr. Selden obſerves, Lib. ii. de Synedr. cap. 9. p. 396. for ſo many languages they think there were in the world. And Bartenora ſaith, God would have every-body that came into their country learn theſe truths, if he pleaſed; and no pagan be able to excuſe his ignorace, by ſaying, he had no means to know them.

Ver. 11. And Moſes charged the people the ſame day, ſaying.] Which charge, we ſuppoſe, the elders, with the aſſiſtance of the prieſts and Levites, delivered throughout the whole camp of Iſrael, ver. 1, 9.

Ver. 12. Theſe ſhall ſtand upon mount Gerizim, to bleſs the people, when ye are come over Jordan, Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Iſſachar, and Joſeph, and Benjamin.] Theſe ſix tribes, who ſtood upon mount Gerizim, (that is, upon the top, and on the deſcent of it down to the bottom) were all deſcended from the ſons of free women, Leah and Rachel; and therefore many think appointed to bleſs, which was more honourable than to curſe.

Ver.

Ver. 13. And theſe ſhall ſtand upon mount Ebal to curſe.] This was a mountain oppoſite to the other; and there lay a valley between them. Abimelech ſeems to have been made king upon this mountain, when he had killed all the ſons of Gideon, but Jotham; for it was done in the plain (or by the oak) of the pillar, which was in Sechem, that is, by this pillar, on which the curſes of the law were written, Judges ix. 6. Whereupon Jotham got upon mount Gerizim, and then curſed the men of Shechem. Which ſhews, that the tops of theſe mountains were not ſo far diſtant one from another, but what was ſaid upon the one, might be heard by thoſe who were on the top and the ſides of the other. And yet there was ſuch a valley between them, that they could not preſently come at Jotham to apprehend him, but he had time to make his eſcape, after he had ſpoken his apologue.

——— Reuben, Gad, and Aſher, and Zebulun, Dan, and Naphtali.] Four of theſe were children of the handmaids; and Reuben had loſt his dignity by going up to his fathers bed; and Zebulun was the youngeſt of Leah's ſons, who was therefore choſen, rather than any of the other, for this leſs honourable employment; for otherwiſe there would not have been an equal number of tribes upon each mountain.

Ver. 14, And the Levites ſhall ſpeak, and ſay unto all the men of Iſrael, with a loud voice.] That every one who ſtood on the ſide or top of the mountains, might hear what they ſaid, the prieſts being placed ſo in ſeveral parts of the valley, that their voice might reach them all. For which end they were advanced, perhaps, upon a pulpit (as Ezra afterwards was, Nehem. viii. 4.) and a ſignal likewiſe given when they ſhould ſay, Amen.

Ver. 15. Curſed be he that maketh any graven or molten image, &c.] The people upon the mountains being to bleſs as well as curſe, the Miſchna, in the title Sota, cap. 7. ſect. 5. rightly explains this; that firſt the prieſts, turning their faces toward mount Gerizim, proclaimed with a loud voice; "Bleſſed be the man that maketh not "any graven, &c." Unto which all the people that ſtood there, anſwered Amen; and then turning their faces toward mount Ebal, they ſaid theſe words, "Curſed be "the man that maketh, &c." to which they that ſtood there made the ſame anſwer.

——— And all the people ſhall anſwer, and ſay, Amen.] Expreſs their conſent to it; for the word Amen, as the Talmudiſts ſay in Schebuoth, hath ſometimes the force of an oath, ſometimes only declares conſent and approbation, and ſometimes is uſed for the confirmation of any thing. An example of the firſt they think there is in Numb. v. 22. and they alledge this place for an example of the ſecond, and for the third, Jer. xxviii. 6.

Ver. 16. Curſed be he that ſetteth light by his father or his mother, and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.] But, before this curſe was pronounced, they had ſaid, Amen, to the bleſſing oppoſite to it, "Bleſſed is he that ſetteth not "lightly by his father and mother." And the ſame is to be obſerved concerning the following curſes, which were preceded with a bleſſing, till they were all ended.

Ver. 25. Curſed be he that taketh reward to ſlay an innocent perſon, &c.] This ſeems to have reſpect to the judges, who for money not only gave wrong judgment in other cauſes, but condemned thoſe that were not guilty, to death. See Exod. xxiii. 7, 8. and in this book, chap. x. 17. xvi. 19.

Ver. 26. Curſed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law, to do them.] The word we here tranſlate, confirm, is more plainly tranſlated, perform, 1 Sam. xv. 11. and ſo it certainly ſignifies here; the performing of what God commands, being a kind of eſtabliſhment of the law, as diſobedience is a ſubverſion of it, and, as far as lies in the offenders power, an aboliſhing it, and taking it away. Therefore the Apoſtle exactly tranſlates the ſenſe of theſe words, Gal. iii. 10. "Curſed is every one that continueth "not in all things, &c." where the apoſtle adds the word all, (as the LXX. and the Samaritan did, even in St. Jerom's time) to expound, "the words of this law," to ſignify not meerly all that is contained in theſe bleſſings and curſes, "but all things which are written in the book "of the law." So that whether this whole book, (that is, all the laws contained in it) written upon the pillars, or only theſe bleſſings and curſings, the matter comes to the ſame iſſue; becauſe all that is contained in this book, is comprehended in this laſt curſe, yea, all that is contained in the whole law of Moſes. Therefore it is not very material neither, whether only theſe curſes and bleſſings were recited upon mount Gerizim and Ebal, or the whole law of Moſes, from one end to the other, about which, the Jews themſelves differ. But they, who are of the latter opinion, think it well grounded upon Joſh. viii. 33. where we read how Joſhua carefully performed what Moſes here enjoyned. And that his words might not be forgotten, Moſes ſeems to have ordered the continuance of this ſolemnity every ſeventh year, in the 29th chapter of this book, ver. 10, 11, &c.

The Miſchna, in Sota, concludes this matter with the following words, "When the bleſſings and curſings were "ended, they brought ſtones, and built an altar, which "they plaiſtered over, and wrote upon them all the "words of this law in ſeventy languages." But we have ſhewn before, that the ſtones on which the law was written, were different from the altar, and were erected before the building of the altar. The Gemara there adds, cap. 7. ſect. 24. that every one of the Iſraelites there preſent ſtood bound one for another, (that is, for the whole company) that they would obſerve theſe laws. Which we know not how they extract out of Moſes's words; but their doctors frequently mention it in their books, and make this pious uſe of it, that by virtue of this ſecurity which they gave for each other, every man was bound to reprove his neighbour, if he ſaw him offend, unleſs he was content to undergo the puniſhment which was threatned unto the breach of God's laws, and come under the curſe, Levit. xix. 17. And unto this they apply theſe words, "they ſhall fall one upon another," (as we truly tranſlate, Levit. xxvi. 37.) as if they ſignified, every one ſhall fall by his brother, that is, by his brother's crimes; for we all promiſed, ſay they, (in the Gemara Sanhedrim, cap. 3. ſect. 6.) and engaged one for another; and ſo from that time were puniſhed one for another.

CHAP. XXVIII.

1 The bleſſings for obedience. 15 The curſes for diſobedience.

AND it ſhall come to paſs, if thou ſhalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to obſerve and to do all his commandments which I command thee this day; that the LORD thy God will ſet thee on high above all nations of the earth.

2 And all theſe bleſſings ſhall come on thee, and overtake thee, if thou ſhalt hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God.

3 Bleſſed ſhalt thou be in the city, and bleſſed ſhalt thou be in the field.

4 Bleſſed ſhall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy ground, and the fruit of thy cattle, the increaſe of thy kine, and the flocks of thy ſheep.

5 Bleſſed ſhall be thy basket and thy ſtore.

6 Bleſſed ſhalt thou be when thou comeſt in, and bleſſed ſhalt thou be when thou goeſt out.

7 The LORD ſhall cauſe thine enemies that riſe up againſt thee to be ſmitten before thy face: they ſhall come out againſt thee one way, and flee before thee ſeven ways.

8 The LORD ſhall command the bleſſings upon thee in thy ſtore-houſes, and in all that thou ſetteſt thine hand unto: and he ſhall bleſs thee in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

9 The LORD ſhall eſtabliſh thee an holy people unto himſelf, as he hath ſworn unto thee, if thou ſhalt keep the commandments of the LORD thy God, and walk in his ways.

10 And all people of the earth ſhall ſee that thou art called by the name of the LORD, and they ſhall be afraid of thee.

11 And the LORD ſhall make thee plenteous in goods, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy ground, in the land which the LORD ſware unto thy fathers to give thee.

12 The LORD ſhall open unto thee his good treaſure, the heaven to give thee rain unto thy land in his ſeaſon, and to bleſs all the work of thine hand: and thou ſhalt lend unto many nations, and thou ſhalt not borrow.

13 And the LORD ſhall make thee the head and not the tail; and thou ſhalt be above only, and thou ſhalt not be beneath: if that thou hearken unto the commandments of the LORD thy God, which I command thee this day to obſerve and to do them:

14 And thou ſhalt not go aſide from any of the words which I command thee this day, to the right hand or to the left, to go after other gods to ſerve them.
